For Reference

Not to be taken from this room

238170

Every person who maliciously cuts, defaces, breaks or injures any book, map, chart, picture, engraving, statue, coin, model, apparatus, or other work of literature, art, mechanics or object of curiosity, deposited in any public library, gallery, museum or collection is guilty of a misdemeanor.

Penal Code of California, 1915, Section 623.

dies' Home

The Magazine Women Believe In

January, 1949 • 25c

JOURNAL

238170

BURLINGAME PUBLIC LIBRARY
Burlingame, Calif.

CHEAPER BY THE DOZEN

Condensed Book-in-One-Issue

STORIES ND ARTICLES BY

Gertrude Schu… …ohn P. Marquand,
Laurie H… …oosevelt,
A…

DO YOU KN…

By Barbar…

PUBLIC LIBRARY
BURLINGAME
CALIF.

MAGAZINE BINDER
Manufactured by
GAYLORD BROS. Inc.
Syracuse, N. Y.
Stockton, Calif.

Journal Contents

THOMAS K. PECK PACH BROS.

FRANK B. GILBRETH, JR., and ERNESTINE GILBRETH CAREY

Cheaper by the Dozen (page 34) was written by two of the twelve children of the amazing Gilbreth family. Although Ernestine was No. 3 in the line-up and Frank was No. 5, their association stayed close. As small children they were partners in a family fresh-egg concession, the Teeny Bunk Hen Co. Later they served on the staff of the Gilbreth house organ, the Ambidextrous Magazine. (The name was selected by the children, since "all Gilbreth hands contributed.")

GEORGE ABBATE

COBY WHITMORE

Artist Whitmore says he likes "smart clothes on good-looking American girls," which shows how an artist differs from ordinary men who merely like good-looking girls. He was born in 1913 in Dayton, Ohio, attended art school there and married Virginia Comer, of that city. They now live in Briarcliff Manor, New York, and have three children, two boys and a girl. His illustration for Anything But Love, page 36, must have been a tough assignment if the title means anything.

LAURIE HILLYER

"That's me (you wouldn't say 'that's I,' would you?) with my flier son, Malcom Armstrong. If he sees this, he will be surprised. When our children were growing up we never raided their desks or read their letters. 'Ma believes in the sanctity of the desk,' said my son when he was high-school age, 'but once I misplaced a letter and the next time I saw it was in the LADIES' HOME JOURNAL.' The biggest problem for a grandmother at the typewriter is not ideas (life provides plenty), but time." (A Change Within, page 40.)

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ January, 1949

Vol. LXVI, No. 1

Book Condensation Complete in This Issue

34 Cheaper by the Dozen, Frank B. Gilbreth, Jr., and Ernestine Gilbreth Carey

Fiction

36 Anything But Love, Gertrude Schweitzer
38 Dinner for Two, Anne Homer Warner
40 A Change Within, Laurie Hillyer
42 Point of No Return (Second part of five), John P. Marquand
54 Kinfolk (Fourth part of five), Pearl S. Buck

Special Features

11 The Untilled Acre, Dorothy Thompson
11 Workers With Ten Eyes
23 If You Ask Me, Eleanor Roosevelt
44 People are People the World Over, John Godfrey Morris
52 Do You Know Your Children?, Barbara Benson
99 How America Lives: Wyoming Lawyer, Struthers Burt
106 Let's be Practical About Sex Education, Leslie B. Hohman, M.D.

General Features

5 Our Readers Write Us
14 Under-Cover Stuff, Bernardine Kielty
24 Diary of Domesticity, Gladys Taber
26 Making Marriage Work, Clifford R. Adams
28 What's Your P. Q.? (The Sub-Deb), Edited by Maureen Daly
33 Fifty Years Ago in the Journal • Journal About Town
141 Ask Any Woman, Marcelene Cox
147 Fight Measles the New Way, Dr. Herman N. Bundesen
148 This is a Snow-Cheat, Munro Leaf

Fashions

46 So Right . . . , Wilhela Cushman
48 The Personality Clothes, Wilhela Cushman
50 This is the Pattern . . . These are Your Dresses, Nora O'Leary
92 Sleepy-Time Clothes, Nora O'Leary

Food and Homemaking

56 Soup for Supper, Ann Batchelder
58 Line a Day, Ann Batchelder
75 Kitchen in a Nutshell, Gladys Taber
110 Are You Light Minded?, Margaret Davidson
112 Quick, Easy and Fairly Frugal, Louella G. Shouer

Interior Decoration

108 Day and Night Room, Henrietta Murdock

Poetry

12 Simplicity, Elizabeth-Ellen Long
63 Country Boy Sliding, Robert P. Tristram Coffin
66 Midnight Moment, Ethel Barnett de Vito
73 Vermont Farmer, Eleanor Alletta Chaffee
85 I Love to Loll, Jessie Heckman Hirschl
89 The Lostling, Helen Thankful Siems
107 Home-Coming, Laura Benét
118 Portrait of Mother and Child, Margaret Fishback
127 Song of Thanks, Eleanor Graham Vance
132 Shopping List for Alison, Marjorie Lederer Lee
142 Sassafras, Jesse Stuart

Cover Design by Dawn Crowell Norman
Photographed by Francesco Scavullo

LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, copyright 1948 by The Curtis Publishing Company in U. S. and Great Britain. All rights reserved. Title registered in U. S. Patent Office and foreign countries. Published on last Friday of month preceding date by The Curtis Publishing Company, Independence Square, Philadelphia 5, Pa. Entered as Second Class Matter May 6, 1911, at the Post Office at Philadelphia under the Act of March 3, 1879. Entered as Second Class Matter at the Post Office Department, Ottawa, Canada, by Curtis Distributing Company, Ltd., Toronto, Ont., Canada. SUBSCRIPTION PRICES: U. S. and Possessions, Canada, Newfoundland, Labrador, Costa Rica, Cuba, Nicaragua, Dominican Republic, Guatemala, Haiti, Mexico, Panama, Philippine Islands, Republic of Honduras, Salvador, Spain and South America except the Guianas, 1 yr., $3; 2 yrs., $5; 3 yrs., $7; 4 yrs., $9. Other countries 1 yr., $6. Remit by money order or draft on a bank in the U. S. payable in U. S. funds. All prices subject to change without notice. All subscriptions must be paid for in advance. UNCONDITIONAL GUARANTY. We agree, upon request direct from subscribers to the Philadelphia office, to refund the full amount paid for any copies of Curtis publications not previously mailed. The Curtis Publishing Company, Walter D. Fuller, President; Arthur W. Kohler, Vice-President and Advertising Director; Mary Curtis Zimbalist, Vice-President; Cary W. Bok, Vice-President and Treasurer; Lewis W. Trayser, Vice-President and Director of Manufacturing; Benjamin Allen, Vice-President and Director of Circulation; Robert E. MacNeal, Secretary; Richard Ziesing, Jr., Manager of Ladies' Home Journal. The Company also publishes The Saturday Evening Post, Country Gentleman, Jack and Jill, and Holiday.

Change of address: Send your Journal change of address to LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, Independence Square, Philadelphia 5, Pa.

at least 30 days before the date of the issue with which it is to take effect. Send old address with the new, enclosing if possible your address label. The post office will not forward copies unless you provide extra postage. Duplicate copies cannot be sent. The names of characters in all stories are fictitious. Any resemblance to living persons is a coincidence.

Mother, do you know that Listerine Antiseptic alleviates irritating minor rashes from which babies suffer?

that Listerine Antiseptic freshens, sweetens and cools baby's skin when used as a sponge bath? The same applies for adults bedridden by illness.

that Listerine Antiseptic often alleviates milk-crust when applied to baby's scalp?

Listerine Antiseptic

FOR ORAL HYGIENE

Soft as old linen...
ScotTissue
REG. U. S. PAT. OFF. MARCA REGISTRADA absorbent soft white toilet tissue SHEETS CHESTER, PA.
"There is always one leader by which others are judged"

Our Readers Write us

We Love Our Husbands, But ——

Parsons, West Virginia.

Dear Editors: For lack of a better term, we call ourselves the We Love Our Husbands, BUT —— group, and meet frequently to discuss our erring spouses out of their hearing, for a change. Several weeks ago the group selected me to write a letter to Dr. Clifford Adams (and I thought them loyal friends) and, emboldened by the success of the Kinsey report, to submit a copy to you.

We are not especially aggrieved at our lots, but we do feel that as individuals we would be happier in our marriages if our husbands were happier, and that their happiness depends on participation. Marriage is a state of mind, mostly, and like a double bed, almost too big for one person.

Very truly yours,
(Name Withheld.)

The letter to Doctor Adams follows.—ED.

My dear Doctor Adams: Of course, it's a man's world and it's a women's magazine, but for pity's sake, you don't believe in the inequality of the sexes, do you? Your articles seem clinically fair enough, but they have an undertone which hammers away at women to accept an inferior position in marriage.

Very few women expect the glamorous courtship to continue, but most of us expect something to develop to replace it, a time for growth of companionship and common effort. These do not slip into place with the wedding ring. We expect to be respected for our abilities and to respect a husband for his. This breaks down over washtubs and babies and company dinners unless we are given some recognition for our earnest efforts. Women like to be praised too. Supposing that no amount of talking it over remedies an unsatisfactory sex life, why does a man ignore his wife's reactions? I'm no second Kinsey, but ever since I first heard discussions of the subject, the proportion of unsatisfied wives has seemed too great. Why aren't men informed about the emotional side of sex along with the hygienic aspects?

Couldn't you write a page for husbands, and husbands-to-be, in which they could find some helpful advice? Can't you do something toward making marriage work for both the husband and wife?

Very truly yours,
The "We Love Our Husbands, But ——" Club.

Are You a Bathroom Messy?

Knoxville, Tennessee.

Dear Editors: The housing situation having caused our household to become crowded with female relations of varying ages and dispositions, my mother racked her brain to find a way to keep our bathroom in a condition that did not look as though a tornado had just struck.

The following little notice tacked up on our bathroom wall brought noticeable improvement:

ATTENTION

The management of this hotel feels compelled to make some rules concerning bathing, as we are filled to capacity and the help situation is very bad.

It will be absolutely necessary for everyone to cleanse the tub after bathing. In the closet you will find a rag for said purpose, and a can of cleanser.

Now let's begin. Moisten the rag and sprinkle cleanser liberally in the tub. Hey! No fair stopping at the watermark. Caught you, didn't I?

Now! Bend over the tub and scrub. That's good for your waistline too. While you're bent over the tub, why don't you shake your hips a little and make with a rumba? This is optional. It won't do a darn thing for the tub, but it'll take inches off your derriere.

There! It's nice and shiny now—the tub, silly. Now, that didn't hurt you a bit, did it? Hey! What's that dirty towel doing in the middle of the bedroom floor? (You could take your robe to the bathroom with you, you know. Who do you think you are, anyway—Nature Boy?)

There, now. We're all through, and that body-building routine would cost you a fortune at some swanky health resort. If it doesn't help your spine, think nothing of it. Maybe it'll help mine. I'm not getting any younger, you know.

Signed,
Mother
ELIZABETH GOSSETT.

Solves Dishwashing Problem

Rawlins, Wyoming.

Dear Editors: I have four children and I have solved the dishwashing problem. Each one has his own colored pottery dishes and silver. Each one washes his dishes and one extra at mealtime and puts dishes and silverware away.

MRS. C. S. AHL.

High Cost of Good Health

Yorktown Heights, New York.

Dear Editors: I agree thoroughly with the authors of How Well Are You? in the JOURNAL: that the science of preventive medicine has reached the stage where a person may be labeled stupid and negligent if he allows himself to become a liability to society through preventable disease.

There's a hitch in this rosy picture of abundant health, however; namely, money. Neither my husband nor I have ever had a truly thorough examination such as Doctor Bundesen describes in his article, yet the specter of serious illness and the financial disaster it would bring looms constantly in the backs of our minds. We belong to that vast, long-neglected "white collar" group, and I'm sure there must be thousands of others like us, intelligent enough to realize the need of adequate preventive medicine and eager to take advantage of its benefits, but financially unable to do so.

I enjoy the JOURNAL every month and think it does a wonderful job of keeping women informed and abreast of our times.

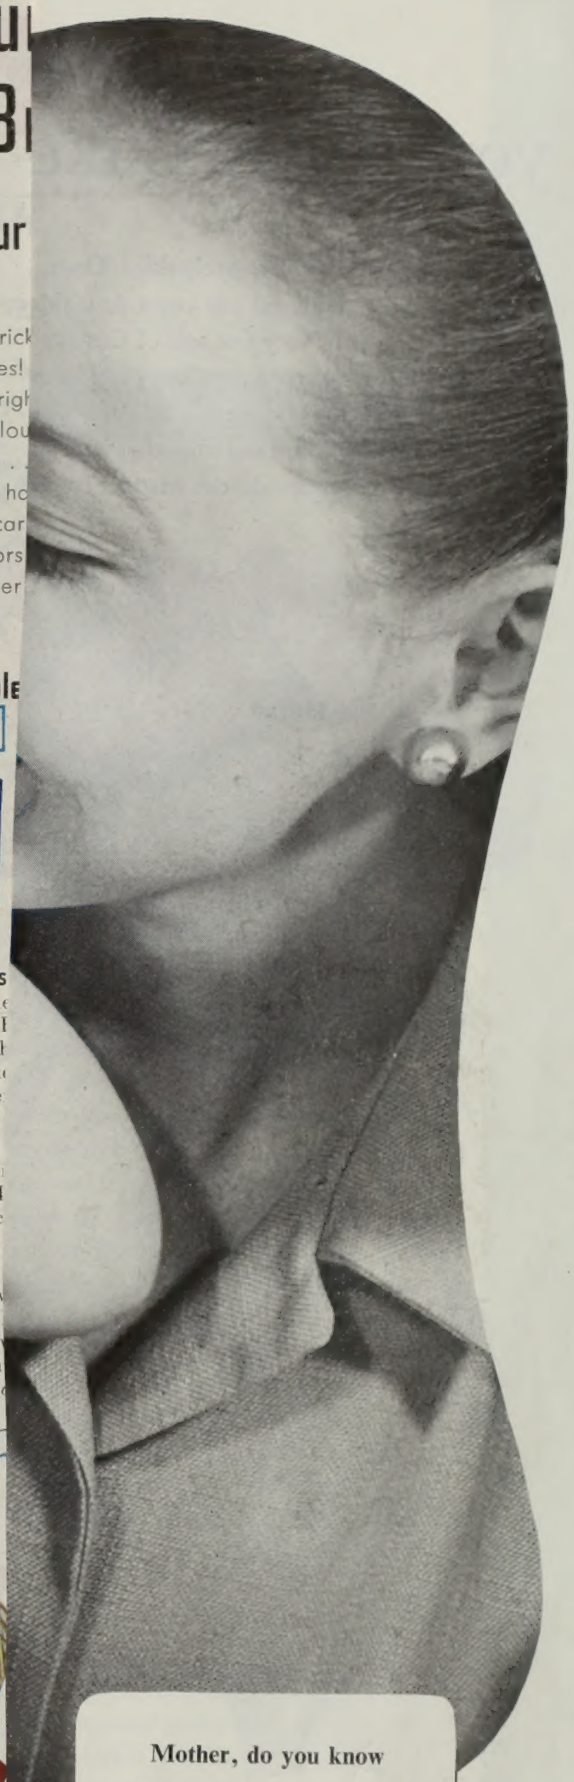
Sincerely yours,
(Name Withheld.)

Editors should take their own medicine, Mr. and Mrs. Gould believe. So, following the JOURNAL's advice, they flew out to the Mayo Clinic, in Rochester, Minnesota, for a thorough checkup. Taken in hand by Dr. H. R. Hartman, they were quickly steered through a maze of tests which ordinarily take 8 or 9 days to complete. Their condition, it appears, is excellent. They should live to be 80 or 90 years old—the age to which their ancestors have customarily lived. They were told the easiest way to assure living a long time is to



Your Futu
Looks Bi

If you play your

No smart girl misses a trick taking care of her clothes!
washing can fade her brigh her soft wool and silk blou her nice washables safe . .
strong soaps and rough ha gives them the best of car Ivory Flakes. Result: colors up . . . clothes wear longer

Keep your washable with this special

QUILTED COTTON SUITS have a gay old-fashione And pure, mild Ivory I protect and preserve th brightness! Ivory Flak soap that fashion expe for all fine washables!

PLAID PETTICOATS keep the swish when you use Ivory I
No soap is kinder to your c
Ivory Flakes are 99 44/100%

NYLONS need nightly and the gentlest care!
Flakes will help them wear . . . and keep tha fresh look up to twice

BLOUSE WARDROBES make s look new with every change Ivory Flakes care for the bl keep them looking like new bright . . . fitting right.

.s e-our souri

Mother, do you know

that Listerine Antiseptic alleviates irritating minor rashes from which babies suffer?

that Listerine Antiseptic freshens, sweetens and cools baby's skin when used as a sponge bath? The same applies for adults bedridden by illness.

that Listerine Antiseptic often alleviates milk-crust when applied to baby's scalp?

Listerine Antiseptic
FOR ORAL HYGIENE

choose parents and grandparents who have—an awkward precaution to anticipate.

The Mayo Clinic, a nonprofit institution connected with the University of Minnesota, bases its charge entirely on the size of the patient's income. It is necessary to make appointment a month to six weeks in advance—emergencies, of course, are handled immediately.

There are other institutions which also give complete checkups. Your doctor can tell you about them. ED.

Contrast

SZASZ

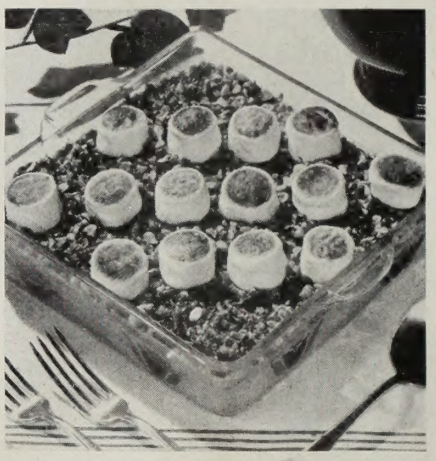
Outlook on life at the combined age of eight . . .

. . . and at a hundred and eighty.

Cherub of Light

The Duke's Cottage,
Rudgwick, England.

My dear Bruce and Beatrice: Through the general gloom and depression over the political situation, we have, meantime one bright star just rising. It is Princess Elizabeth's baby! Like a cherub of light, the boy already gives us something cheerful to talk about, that is entirely normal and natural.



Meantime, all about us the billows roar, and it is no good pretending they don't. In villages, ominous notices have appeared calling a meeting of the old Home Guards, and the sinister words Civil Defense have once more appeared.

Daughter Mary, in all this hubbub, is calmly packing to join her husband in Singapore, with all the beautiful hopefulness of youth, that is so often justified in the end. The general impression over here is that Singapore is the last place on earth to go to, at the moment, with a sniper lurking behind every plumbago bush, or nestling up every toddy palm.

Later: From Norfolk comes news of a sudden and astounding increase in the sale of hair bleach. Reason: the American boys are back. It is nice to see them around again in their familiar uniforms. Bunches of them were looking at Roosevelt's statue in Grosvenor Square Gardens the other day, no doubt a little astonished at the change that has taken place there. Where sausage balloons lurked amongst trees in a sea of mud, there are now spacious lawns, wide footpaths and flower beds.

(Continued on Page 8)

Marcia Camp's
All American Treat
Sweet Potatoes
WITH PEANUTS AND MARSHMALLOWS

It's Simple · It's Good · It's Different!
PEANUT-CRUNCH SWEET POTATO CASSEROLE

- 3 cups riced sweet potatoes (fresh cooked or canned)
- 2 tablespoons butter
- ½ cup warm milk (approx.)
- ½ to ¾ teaspoon salt
- Campfire, Angelus or Recipe Marshmallows
- ½ to ¾ cup chopped salted peanuts

Add butter and salt to milk. When butter is melted blend with potatoes. Beat until light and fluffy. Add more milk, if needed. Pile lightly into greased casserole. Heat in 375° oven about 20 to 25 minutes. Then top generously with marshmallows, sprinkle with chopped peanuts. Return to oven, heat until marshmallows brown lightly. About 6 to 8 servings.

THE CRACKER JACK CO.
ALSO MAKERS OF CHUMS (Caramel Corn)
CRACKER JACK • CHECKERS • POPIT

EASY EATIN'

(Easy Heatin')

It's mighty easy on the taster when you munch those milk-sweet, tender kernels of Niblets Brand Corn. And easy does it on the stove. Heat 'em quick, just long enough to melt a pat of butter, and serve 'em hot. It's fresh corn-on-the-cob without the cob.

Listen to the Fred Waring Show on NBC every Friday morning for the Green Giant.

Minnesota Valley Canning Co., headquarters, Le Sueur, Minn.; Fine F

iblets" and "Green Giant" Brands Reg. U. S. Pat. Off. © MVCCo.

rinse the mouth with Listerine Antiseptic r breath is fresher, sweeter, less likely to s that way, too, for hours usually.

Be at Your Best

yourself, your family and your friends to ıth on the agreeable side. Don't rely on ways call on Listerine Antiseptic with its
ct. Use it night and morning, and espeıy date where you want to be at your you big dividends in popularity.

RMACAL COMPANY, St. Louis, Missouri

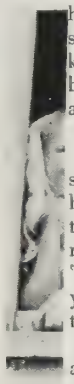
Mother, do you know that Listerine Antiseptic alleviates irritating minor rashes from which babies suffer?

that Listerine Antiseptic freshens, sweetens and cools baby's skin when used as a sponge bath? The same applies for adults bedridden by illness.

that Listerine Antiseptic often alleviates milk-crust when applied to baby's scalp?

Listerine Antiseptic

FOR ORAL HYGIENE



(Continued from Page 6)

choose who h to anti
The stitutio versity charge tient's make a weeks course.
There also gi doctor

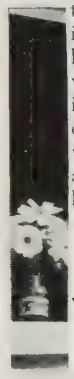
With a royal baby on hand, maternity wear is become very chic. The population of this country is going to get quite a boost, and what a good thing. I recently stayed in a hotel where I swear no one save myself was a day under eighty.

Later: I have just had a sad moan from one of the "lucky" housewives, who has at last been allotted a new, all-electric laborsaving house. It is everything that was promised, with all the de luxe gadgets. There is only one snag. She can't afford to live in it as things are, and electricity is to go up still further, and so, I hear, coal.

Contra



My strength and support who has kept house for me for almost a year announced she is going to be married! One might have known, because not only is she clever but she is pretty as a picture, and men aren't all that dumb.

Later: Daughter Mary and I have the same stars, and never do I have my right hand in a sling, or nearly cut my left thumb off, than she does also. We are now both accustomed to friends saying, "What a funny thing. I have just met your mother (daughter) and she appears to have had an accident too."

We are being told not to dismantle our air-raid shelters here after all. So the lawn roller and the mowing machine look like being homeless once more, and numbers of agreeable field mice will have to go squatting in the fields again. I suppose those frightful snouted affairs called civilian gas masks will shortly emerge too. I have a very superior one, transport-driver version, with a kind of tin cobra coiled in its insides. It all seems very sinister, doesn't it, but personally I can't believe a word of it. If mankind is as plumb dumb as to start all that over again, he had best go off pop and be done with it!

With love to you all,
DOROTHY BLACK.

Ou
bir

World Without Men

Jackson, Wyoming.

Dear Bruce: Your remark that "Men didn't make good editors of women's magazines," although charming and very winning, isn't true.

. . . ar

You know very well that a male editor is practically a necessity on a woman's magazine. Man has only two functions; one is to worship God in his off moments, and the other is to leaven the feminine world and keep it sweet and sensible, and, above all, humorous.

Cherul

My d
the gene political one brig
Elizabet
the boy ful to ta and nat

A purely feminine world has the texture of an electrically heated Persian rug. One smothers in an atmosphere of perfervid concentration on unnecessary adornment and moral issues. See any woman's magazine run exclusively by and for women.

Mean
and it is

Unless occasionally a man enters with a humorous remark, letting in a trace of sunshine, in the heated air, orchids, hyenas, alligators and other tropical flora and fauna reach gigantic growth.

In villa peared c Guards,
fense ha

Daugl calmly Singapo
ness of the end.
is that S

A subheading of man's second function is perpetually to remind women that in the world there is such a thing as a sense of proportion.

You know very well that it takes at least ten years of married life for a humorous man to give the average woman the faintest sense of humor. And that from a well-wisher, too, who thinks that in most respects woman is a much more fundamental creature than man, and a darn sight more ornamental.

to go to lurking nestling

Later: sudden sale of h boys are around Bunches velt's st
dents the tomished place. Th lurked there ar paths ar

You better read this essay to your staff and put them in their place.

Best wishes,
STRUTHERS BURT.

JOURNAL Staff's reaction was that a magazine should have both a man and a woman as editorial heads. It was pointed out that Reader's Digest, edited by DeWitt and Lila Wallace, is also a good magazine. ED.

Your loveliness is Doubly Safe

because

Veto gives you Double Protection!

So effective . . . Veto guards your loveliness night and day—safely protects your clothes and you. For Veto not only neutralizes perspiration odor, it checks perspiration, too! Yes, Veto gives you Double Protection! And Veto disappears instantly to protect you from the moment you apply it!

So gentle . . . Always creamy and smooth, Veto is lovely to use and keeps you lovely. And Veto is gentle, safe for normal skin, safe for clothes. Doubly Safe! Veto alone contains Duratex, Colgate's exclusive ingredient to make Veto safer. Let Veto give your loveliness double protection!

Veto COLGATE'S
NEW DEODORANT

Veto lasts and lasts from bath to bath

HE'S definitely crossed her off his list today as you can see by the picture. If he could talk he'd tell her why, too. A baby resents bad breath (halitosis) just as much as anyone else. Even a mother can't get away with it. In fact, nobody can get away with it.

Are You Immune?

Don't risk offending others. There's no excuse for it when you keep Listerine Antiseptic handy. In literally millions of fastidious households this trustworthy and delightful antiseptic is the ever-ready, extra-careful precaution against simple cases of halitosis (unpleasant breath) of non-systemic origin.

You simply rinse the mouth with Listerine Antiseptic and, lo!—your breath is fresher, sweeter, less likely to offend . . . stays that way, too, for hours usually.

Be at Your Best

You owe it to yourself, your family and your friends to keep your breath on the agreeable side. Don't rely on makeshifts. Always call on Listerine Antiseptic with its long-lasting effect. Use it night and morning, and especially before any date where you want to be at your best. It can pay you big dividends in popularity.

LAMBERT PHARMACAL COMPANY, St. Louis, Missouri

Mother, do you know that Listerine Antiseptic alleviates irritating minor rashes from which babies suffer?

that Listerine Antiseptic freshens, sweetens and cools baby's skin when used as a sponge bath? The same applies for adults bedridden by illness.

that Listerine Antiseptic often alleviates milk-crust when applied to baby's scalp?

Listerine Antiseptic

FOR ORAL HYGIENE

Watch your Skin Grow Lovelier with your First Cake of Camay!

Charm can begin with a lovely skin! Charm and good looks, dates and romance! And did you know your skin can be softer, lovelier, with your very first cake of Camay? It can—if you'll give up careless cleansing—go on the Camay Mild-Soap Diet. Doctors tested regular, mild Camay care on scores of women—found most complexions grew softer and smoother with just one cake of Camay! Follow directions on the wrapper for a lovelier skin!

MRS. BENJAMIN MOATS, JR.
the former Marjorie Lehmann of Haverhill, N. H. bridal portrait painted by Wm Rose

READ ABOUT A ROMANCE!

Marjorie met Ben in Saratoga Springs. She was at Skidmore College there. He'd come to call with some Dartmouth classmates. It was love from the start. They were married five days after graduation.

Complexions like Marjorie's invite romance! Wherever she goes, people admire her fresh, soft skin. She thanks Camay—says "My very first cake of Camay resulted in a lovelier look!"

Honeymooning at Sea Island, bride and groom rode the rolling ocean without a tumble. But Ben's "gone overboard" about Marjorie's complexion. Wise wife—she'll stay on the Camay Mild-Soap Diet!

Camay THE SOAP OF BEAUTIFUL WOMEN

Ladies' Home Journal

Bruce Gould and Beatrice Blackmar Gould, Editors

Workers With Ten Eyes

IN a large baking plant in Chicago, a line of girls packs cookies from an automatic conveyor in continuous operation. Each girl picks up as many cookies as she can. Mary Morris, a slim young blonde, holds the record in number of boxes packed and consistently earns more than her co-workers. She is never absent or late for work. Everybody likes her, for she always has a smile, and those who work beside her know she cannot help being more attentive and conscientious than they. Mary Morris is blind.

She is one of many handicapped men and women the Illinois Division of Vocational Rehabilitation has trained and placed in industry. This service is not a charity, because it provides for the handicapped merely what all nonhandicapped citizens are provided—training for employment. These people will pay back to the state in taxes on their increased earnings much more than the state expended on them. Last year 3037 handicapped persons in Illinois were placed in remunerative employment. Other states have similar services. The Pennsylvania State Employment Service places about 90 a month.

Cooky packing is one of the least complicated jobs a blind person can do. Some learn to take letters from dictation machines and are accurate typists. Others work on assembly lines, operate kick presses, reamers, drills and other kinds of machine tools. Some like to do heavy work. One man, happily employed with a gang unloading freight cars, was able to tell how to place the skids for heavy material by feeling the grain of the wood. He complained later when he was put on a production line capping bottles. "It's girl's work," he said.

Disabled workers prove the number of things they can do far exceeds the things they cannot do. Employers have found that people with every variety of handicap can become productive and reliable workers. The blind have ten eyes. The crippled or maimed have still an agile brain. All have human dignity, sometimes the more magnificent because of physical handicap. There is immense social value in changing dependent and discouraged people into self-supporting citizens who can lead normal lives. Every community is a better place to live in when its citizens are all proud co-workers in the community.

The Untilled Acre

By DOROTHY THOMPSON

A FEW years ago a farm boy of my acquaintance had a miraculous break. He lived on his father's farm in the neighborhood of a rather famous summer theater. He was eager, intelligent and drawn toward art and literature, so one day he put in an appearance at the theater, which took a limited number of student apprentices, and asked to be enrolled. He had no money to pay tuition, but he was, like most farm boys, clever and ingenious with his hands, and so was enrolled free in return for work in set building and other forms of theatrical construction and maintenance. He proved to be a born actor, and was given minor roles during several successive seasons. One day in New York a producer told the manager of this summer theater that he was at his wits' end to find a juvenile actor for a role in a forthcoming production. It required someone with a childish face, old-fashioned and definitely not twentieth-century sophisticated. The director thought of her talented apprentice and sent him to New York for an audition. (In order to get there he had to sell a heifer that he raised from his father's stock, and which had taken a 4-H prize.) He got the role and opened on Broadway in one of the hits of this generation, which ran for years. He was "made."

But this is not the end of what would otherwise be a trite "success" story. Our farm boy stepped out of the role in response to a Hollywood offer, and made a film, which was also successful. Then he was called into the Army and fought two years. During those two years he did a lot of thinking, as well as fighting, and asked himself, "Do I really want to be an actor? Do I want to spend the rest of my days on the stage, living in New York boarding-houses or in Hollywood? What is it I really want out of life, if my life is spared me, after this dreadful war?"

And his mind ran like this: "No, I do not want to be an actor, even with every opportunity open to me. I was attracted to the near-by theater, because it offered me contact with interesting people and opened new vistas in my life. But I would rather write plays than act them. I hate New York, where I feel unable to breathe in the confinements of its streets, and I feel utterly lost in Hollywood. Out on this Pacific island, I am never homesick for the scenes of my success; I am homesick for the New England community where I grew up. I want to have a farm of my own, and marry the small-town girl I've had a crush on ever since I was ten years old. I want to have cows, and heifers as good as the one I sold to get to Broadway. I want a home with lawns around it, and four or five children growing up as I grew up."

Executive Editor, Mary Bass ● Managing Editor, Laura Lou Brookman ● Associate Editors: Hugh MacNair Kahler, Bernardine Kielty, Ann Batchelder, Wilhela Cushman, William E. Fink, Alice Blinn, Richard Pratt, Henrietta Murdock, Louella G. Shouer, Mary Lea Page, Maureen Daly, Dawn Crowell Norman, John Godfrey Morris, Joan Younger, Lonnie Coleman, Margaret Davidson, Nora O'Leary ● Contributing Editors: Gladys Taber, Louise Paine Benjamin, Gladys Denny Shultz, Barbara Benson, Margaret Hickey ● Assistant Editors: John Werner, Charlotte Johnson, Donald Stuart, Ruth Mary Packard, Ruth Matthews, Alice Conkling, June Torrey, Lily Glendinning, Dorothy Counselman Selby, Joseph Di Pietro, Anne Einselen, Glenn Matthew White, Betty Niles Gray, Jan Weyl, Jeanne Scribner ● Editorial Assistants: Alice Kastberg, Iris Wilken, Betty Coe, Jeanne Lenton Tracey, Cynthia McAdoo, Eleanor Pownall Simmons, Adrina Casparian, Virginia Price, Marion Plummer, Lois Witherspoon, Philippa Herman, Jeanne Stiles, Elizabeth McFarland, Polly Toland, Leone Seastrom.

So, when my young acquaintance was demobilized, he threw telegrams from his New York agent into the wastebasket, took what he had thriftily saved from his two successful ventures, on Broadway and in Hollywood, and went back home. He bought 100 acres of first-class land, half a dozen good cows, and good secondhand machinery. He also bought himself a cement mixer and several sets of power tools. He then proposed to his childhood sweetheart, who accepted, in a glow of joy, the only boy she had ever cared a hang for, and who, she had been sure, would never return to the old neighborhood.

Dick, as I shall call him, built his own house, without one solitary bit of other labor, except for an electrician, to wire it, and a plumber. He shopped cannily for materials, seeking out local sawmills, which he knew were not doing too well and would shave the price for a good order. He built a pretty big house, with a design that would permit easy further expansion. He built a barn and a tool shed, entirely with his own hands. And all this took him a year. Then he married his girl and moved in.

Dick reckoned that he would need some supplementary income until the farm got really going, and hearing that there was an opening on the newspaper in the nearest small town, applied for it. He writes editorials mostly, on local subjects, and they are witty, pointed, and exceptionally literate. He has a library consisting exclusively of classics and the best modern literature. He has written three plays, and the last one, when I saw him in July, was being seriously considered by two producers. If the play is accepted, he will drop the editorial job and devote himself to the farm, which is flourishing, and to independent writing. He has a beautiful baby son and his wife is expecting another baby soon. He will never have a tiled swimming pool, but he will also never know the agony of glamour's fall from fame. He knows everybody in the community, and everybody respects him. He is immensely happy, because he knew what he wanted, and what he wanted was to be at home.

I could tell a score of stories of this kind, but none quite so dramatic.

A YOUNG friend of mine who comes from a small town in the Middle West won a scholarship in the Art Students' League in New York. She met a young lawyer, who holds a minor position in a quite famous New York firm, and they married. Her husband, if he stays with the firm, has every prospect for a brilliant and prosperous future. But this is years away, and meanwhile his salary permits them to live in a poky three-room flat in one of the slummier parts of the great metropolis. They want children, but have realized that under present conditions they will have to postpone that happiness for a long time. The young wife loves to paint, but being exceptionally honest with herself, does not measure her talent alongside that of Rouault, Picasso, or even the lesser but good contemporary painters who regularly exhibit in the great shows.

Out of a very small salary, this couple, by choosing to live in a tenement, have saved some money. Since the husband was raised in the East, and the wife, though she never expects to be famous, wants to be able to get into 57th Street occasionally and see th picture shows, which are her greatest ae thetic pleasure, they have bought a 40-ac farm a long way out on Long Island, with small house; and next spring the husban will hang out his shingle in the nearest vi lage, where, he thinks, another lawyer ca make a fair living. They know what the want. It is not the competition of a gre city, with its distant and probably ephen eral satisfactions of ambition, and its pre ent inadequacy to a decent life. They wan stability and independence.

I THINK I discern in America today som thing of a movement, unorganized, bu arising out of a most healthy instinct. As move around the country, on speakin tours, spending a day or two in mediun sized American cities and the larger sma towns, I constantly meet young men women whose acquaintance I had mad some years before in lecture dates at un versities—Yale and Dartmouth, Vassa and Smith, and the great coeducational in stitutions. Many of them were brilliant students, who a generation ago would hav tracked it with their diplomas to the grea centers of population, industry and ar Today I find them just where they can from, running commenting on l cal radio station editing or reportin on local newspaper active in civic a fairs, organizing l cal forums, buildin up local librarie They are physician and surgeons on th staffs of small ho pitals; they are jun ior members of o law firms. They d not live in tin apartments whe the rent, neverth less, takes at least quarter of their sa aries, wishing the could go to th Metropolitan Oper but having to co tent themselves wit the Metropolita Museum; longing t see the Broadwa hits, but having only a movie income; an hoping against hope for that miraculo break which will put them out in front several million others. They have brough their good minds, their ambitions and the superior educations back home. They li in apartments, but in houses with law around them, or in little houses on tre lined streets. They re-establish old frien ships with childhood playmates, who ha also, in the meantime, been away, an learned something of the world—in college in the Pacific, in Europe, and often in bru struggles with life in New York, Chica or Detroit. All these experiences ha deepened their knowledge, broadened the minds, and sometimes heightened their di contents. But even their discontents are fermenting and stimulating influence in th smaller communities to which they ha returned. They do not so often gnaw inte nally, changing discontent into disillusio ment and bitterness.

I am writing this article in Sioux Cit Iowa. This very morning I had a convers tion on this theme with a brilliant woma who lives here, but has been nearly ever where.

"If you boil it all down," she remarke "what has any place got that Sioux Ci has not? There isn't a town of any size this country that does not have a fairly lar proportion of very civilized people. W don't see much theater, but neither do pe ple in Chicago, and we can see Lawren Olivier's Hamlet. Our clubs bring excelle speakers here every year. And everybo who is interested in art, or politics, or civ affairs, or ideas in general, knows where

(Continued on Page 116)

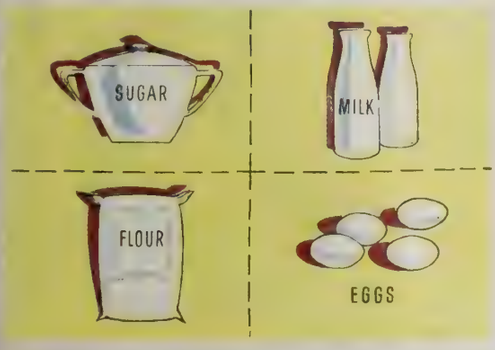
★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Simplicity

By Elizabeth-Ellen Long

Happy, indeed, are they, and wise,
Whose unspoiled senses recognize
The uncorrupted state of grace
Of the good and commonplace:
Clean clothes to wear, a decent bed,
A simple meal, neatly spread,
Four sturdy walls, a roof above,
And work and play with those they love;
For they not only are content
With truths which need no ornament
But spare their God, as well, the rude
Affront of their ingratitude!

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★



Toast made from enriched bread (the kind a baker bakes) gives you the energy you need to start the day off right.

Copyright, American Bakers Association, 1948, Chicago

YOU NEED SOMETHING THAT A BAKER MAKES

to make each meal complete

You are eating a delicious combination of these good foods when you eat bakery foods. That's why you need something that a baker makes to make each meal completely satisfying; completely nourishing!

THE BREAD that helps balance your diet helps balance your budget, too!

Penny for penny, it gives you more of the things your body needs—more generously—than any other food you eat at every meal.

And bread is no more fattening, according to nutritionists, than any other food that gives you equal energy.

So—eat more bread! Eat it for energy. Eat it for economy. Eat it for enjoyment—the enjoyment that you get from all the good things that a baker bakes for you.

Buy it Baked!

THE BAKERS OF AMERICA
. . . who do your baking for you with the same high quality ingredients you would use; bake fresh daily with the same care you would take.

Doughnuts, Sweet Rolls and Coffee Cake are other wholesome, nourishing breakfast treats that start your day the energy way! Enjoy them often. And to double your enjoyment—to treat yourself to leisure time as well as wonderfully good eating—buy them baked!

HERE'S THAT Bigger MIRRO-MATIC YOU'VE BEEN WANTING!

The Wonderful, New 8-quart
MIRRO-MATIC "8"
PRESSURE PAN AND CANNER

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping
REPLACEMENT OR REFUND OF MONEY IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN
UL
GUARANTEED BY PARENTS' MAGAZINE

PRESSURE COOKS
8 lb. Pot Roast, Ham, or Fowl...in MINUTES!
PRESSURE CANS
4 Quart-jars or 7 Pint-jars at a Time!

How often have you said to yourself, "I do wish I could have a bigger MIRRO-MATIC?" Thousands of you have said it to us, through salespeople, and by mail.

The new MIRRO-MATIC "8" is our answer, to cook BIG full-family meals quick as a wink . . . to do your canning easily and efficiently, whether you prefer quart-jars, pint-jars, or cans.

Aside from its welcome, country-kitchen size, and a sturdy handgrip on the side for easier handling, this new MIRRO-MATIC "8" is just like the familiar 4-quart MIRRO-MATIC "4." Both have the simple, selective control that you can hear. This exclusive MIRRO-MATIC Control gives you "Cooking without looking," since it automatically prevents pressure from going higher than your recipe requires . . . 5, 10, or 15 lbs.

Both have roomy, domed covers that let you use their full capacities. Both open and close with utmost ease, simply by sliding handles apart or together. Both have ALL of the easy-to-use features you expect with the name, "MIRRO-MATIC."

See the new MIRRO-MATIC "8" soon. You'll find it the ideal all-around pressure pan and canner . . . a perfect companion to your MIRRO-MATIC "4," to do the big jobs, better.

Get MIRRO-MATIC at department, house-furnishing, and hardware stores, wherever dealers sell the finest aluminum. The new "8" with rack and recipe book, $17.95 (West, $18.95); The familiar "4" with rack and recipe book, $12.95 (West, $13.95).

MIRRO
THE FINEST ALUMINUM

WESTINGHOUSE, FRIGIDAIRE, NORGE, GIBSON, and ESTATE RANGES [illegible]
MIRRO-MATIC Deep Well Pressure Cookers.

ALUMINUM GOODS MANUFACTURING COMPANY • MANITOWOC, WIS.
World's Largest Manufacturer of Aluminum Cooking Utensils

"GRIN AND BEAR IT" FROM THE NEWARK EVENING NEWS

"People don't seem to regard atomic energy seriously—due, no doubt, to their experiences with sensational world-of-tomorrow products on the market."

Under-Cover Stuff

By BERNARDINE KIELTY

SOMEHOW it is hard to focus on the atom bomb. Just as it is hard to visualize hell. But there is a book which will startle you into realization, not because of horrors described, for it has none of those, but because of its straightforwardness and simplicity and comprehensibility. It is a doctor's log of the Bikini tests—NO PLACE TO HIDE, by David Bradley.

●

In response to a piece in this column about twins, the Clarks, of Huntington, Indiana, write in that their family has four sets of twins—three sets of boys, 26, 24 and 22; and one set of girls, 18. And speaking of children, do not miss Cheaper by the Dozen, in this issue of the JOURNAL.

●

SWEET AND SOUR, by Joseph Wechsberg, is just as amusing and of the same rare European flavor as his earlier success, LOOKING FOR A BLUEBIRD. He was the ship's fiddler, you may remember, the member of the Vienna opera claque, the Czechoslovakian counterpart of Bemelmans. Like Bemelmans, Wechsberg is always a familiar behind the scenes, and his stories of waiters and cab drivers and obscure obocists are as homey as Schinken and as tasty as goulash.

One of the best character sketches in Sweet and Sour is that of Nusterer, the janitor—the portier—of the Vienna opera house, tall, mustachioed, gloomy and dressed always in an admiral's uniform. Nusterer's ambition was to speak English, and because of certain idiosyncracies of the Staatsoper he frequently had an opportunity. Regularly the rich Americans and English staying at the big Ringstrasse hotels would come to the opera house to buy their tickets, find the box office closed, and end up at the portier's lodge. This was Nusterer's chance. (He had learned English all by himself from a book called Learning English—A Pleasure.)

"Dös iss simpel. Jöst nomadize over the Operngasse and takens the firsht street for your lefft. Net right, net gradaus, böt lefft. Jöst promenade. Porsue the Augustinerstrassen ontil the Josefplatz. Dös iss a tulli platz, the Josefplatz. Firsht house for your right and firsht house for your lefft—and da sa ma."

●

Gum chewers, all is forgiven! It was the explorers in Yucatan who were there in search of chicle to be used in the manufacture of chewing gum, who located eleven Mayan temples dating back to about 1000 B. C.

REPRINTED COURTESY THE SATURDAY EVENING POST

Lo, the poor English! everybody says. But we just heard about an English party that had all the old-time glamour. It was a dance given last summer by the Duke and

(Continued on Page 16)

Honey-Glazed Ham Slice

A slice of Swift's Premium Ham, with its matchless mild flavor from Swift's Brown Sugar Cure, makes a de luxe main dish with no special fixing whatsoever. But when you want to be extra glamorous, try this: Get a 1½" thick center slice of Swift's Premium Ham. (To be sure it is Swift's Premium—the ham America prefers so far above all others—look for the name SWIFT on the slice.) Cut gashes in fat. Mix together ¼ cup honey and ½ cup juice drained from canned pears. Slowly pour over ham. Bake in a slow oven (325° F.) about 1½ hours, basting every half hour. Garnish with pear halves filled with cranberry sauce, and serve with perfect confidence. For you can count on unvarying quality when you buy Swift's Premium Ham—America's traditional favorite. You know every slice will be delicious down to the last nourishing bite!

Your family, too, will prefer
America's traditional favorite.... mild, matchless
Swift's Premium Ham

2 STYLES! For easy cooking at home, look for the Swift's Premium Blue Label. The Red Label brings you ham that's fully cooked and ready to eat. Both kinds are Brown Sugar-Cured and smoked Swift's special

(Continued from Page 14)

Duchess of Norfolk in ancient Arundel Castle—one of England's oldest and noblest families and fortresses. In the courtyard where Britons of old fought the invading Romans, ladies in new-look off-shoulder gowns strolled between dances with knights in tails and melting white collars, and a thousand at a time danced in the old baronial hall while an orchestra in the minstrels' gallery played rumbas and sambas and the conga. (The first Earl of Arundel was a relative of William the Conqueror. His descendant, Field Marshal Viscount Montgomery, drove the Germans out of Africa in 1943.)

●

Once this column made the mistake of waxing enthusiastic over certain out-of-the-way New York eating places. Letters poured in asking for exact addresses. Now there is a book that covers the field: WHERE TO EAT IN NEW YORK, by Robert W. Dana, published by A. A. Wyn, 23 W. 47th St., New York 19. You'd have to live in New York to do justice to the restaurants his book mentions. But actually one could plan a day around any one of them—a day of sight-seeing, or a night's gala. When you're visiting New York the restaurant should never be an afterthought, or merely a place to eat. It should be the basis of the expedition. New York restaurants are good. They have to be, because of the competition. And if they're not, it is the fault of all of us.

REPRINTED COURTESY THE SATURDAY EVENING POST

"May I have a napkin, please?"

If a dish is poor, send it back. Never be satisfied with "good enough." That's how the French arrived at their culinary eminence. The customer—from centuries back—insisted.

●

THE LETTERS OF MARCEL PROUST will be devoured by every Proust enthusiast. Here in person is the hero of REMEMBRANCE OF THINGS PAST. The elegance, the formality, the felicitous phrase are all here, the delicate analysis of personalities, the penetrating clarity of vision with its attendant literary complications toward the expression of exact truth. These letters are Proust—the essence of an aristocratic mind. They are magnificently edited and translated by Mina Curtiss.

●

Maybe you read about Faith, "the bravest cat in the world." She was the church cat of St. Paul's in London for twelve years, and died in September, 1948. A plaque on the walls of the church now records the story of her bravery: on September 9, 1940, Faith shielded her litter in a corner of the church through bombing and fire. "Roofs and masonry exploded. Four floors fell through in front of Faith; fire, water and ruin were all around her. Yet she stayed calm and steadfast and waited for help." Of Faith's early life, The Times in its obituary notice said simply that "she was a London stray."

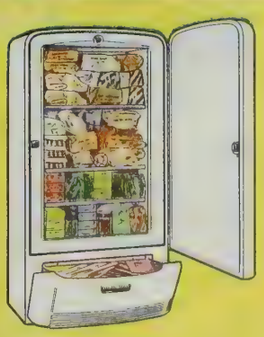
(Continued on Page 18)

The Great New Gibson DOUBLE FEATURE Electric Refrigerator

WITH Cold Modulation

See the new GIBSON, and you'll agree. There's no other refrigerator that compares feature-for-feature with the great new Gibson. First to originate the Freez'r Locker and Fresh'ner Locker, Gibson is ahead again—with Cold Modulation . . . just the blend of cold and moisture needed by the foods usually kept in each compartment.

FREEZ'R LOCKER—Specially designed for freezing and storing all kinds of frozen foods. Keeps them farm-fresh so you can enjoy your favorite foods the year 'round—in or out of season.



FRESH'NER LOCKER—Specially designed for keeping fresh meats, fruits, and vegetables fresh, flavorful. Designed to provide the ideal combination of cold and moisture to retain vitamins and flavors—prevents wilting and drying out.

ALL NEW MODELS

GIBSON HOME FREEZER—Upright design. For freezing and keeping over 250 pounds of frozen foods. 4 seeable, easy-reach compartments—no fumbling for packages. Efficient, economical, practical!

GIBSON AUTOMATIC ELECTRIC RANGE—with UPS-A-DAISY—cooks every meal every day automatically. Provides super-speed cooking. 2 complete, balanced-heat, insulated ovens—Waist-high smokeless broiler—Concealed oven vent—7 speed surface units—Minute Watchman.

In addition, your New Gibson gives you faster freezing, greater ice cube capacity, unobstructed shelves, Dew-Temp Vegetable Fresh'ner, and an extra large storage bin for crackers and cereals. Be sure to see the Gibson before you decide on a refrigerator.

Copyright 1949 Gibson Refrigerator Co.

GIBSON REFRIGERATOR COMPANY
GREENVILLE, MICHIGAN

• Actual delivery room scene: Nurse puts special protective drops in baby's eyes.

From the moment your baby is born...

The doctor smiles, as he looks down at the tiny puckered face.

"A fine baby," he says proudly, "perfect in every way!"

Steps are then taken to safeguard the baby's eyes... protect his tender skin. What kind of protection? Listen to this!

Today there's news in infant skin care. More and more hospitals are changing to new Johnson's Baby Lotion . . . the smooth, snow-white Lotion that promises your baby amazing protection against skin rashes!

Scientific hospital tests prove that Johnson's Baby Lotion care cuts down cases of heat rash and other minor skin irritations — by dramatic percentages!

Give your baby this modern care at home! Use Johnson's Baby Lotion exactly like baby oil...after bath, at diaper changes. Such a difference! Lotion is so velvety-pleasant...protects so surely...leaves baby skin so soft and sweet. Have modern Johnson's Baby Lotion on your baby's tray!

Gives Amazing Protection From Rashes!

JOHNSON'S BABY LOTION

Johnson & Johnson

(Continued from Page 16)

The English do take their animals seriously. On the feast day of St. Francis of Assisi, all the animals came to church (in Hereford) and were solemnly told that they have a very good chance of getting to heaven. Dozens of cats and kittens in starched ribbons were there; ducks, chickens and guinea pigs; a lamb; white mice; and dogs of all kinds, from a bull mastiff to a tiny Pekingese. The twenty horses that turned up were found too big for the pews, and were obliged, by the head usher, to wait outside. "Animals and birds are a part of God's creation," the minister told the animals and the beaming children who accompanied them, "and there is nothing contrary to our Christian religion in the belief that our pets will live hereafter. There are animals and birds in heaven as well as human beings and angels."

Gladys Taber fans will soon, if they do not already, include the youngest fry. DAISY AND DOBBIN is her tale of Two Little Seahorses, and a most engaging book it is, with illustrations by Kurt Wiese.

It is hard to remember, in the midst of daily dishwashing and going to the office and putting a new tire on the car and hoeing the potatoes, that we are characters today in one of the purple passages in history. The '30's and the '40's will go down in the book with the Fall of the Roman Empire, with the Industrial Revolution and with (we hope, we hope) the Renaissance. No school child of the future will be able to skip these chapters. But the remarkable fact is that we are in a position to read much of that history now, on the very morning after it happened, as it were. It is that way with Churchill's memoirs. Here is the vital record of the world at war in the rich, sonorous tones of the greatest living historian.

Of equal interest, and complementing the Churchill point of view, is Eisenhower's CRUSADE IN EUROPE— a close, honest, full, understandable explanation of the forces that made necessary the sacrifice of our own boys and men. Here is the full story of those hush-hush controversies that kept us on tenterhooks during the war, the when and why of the North African invasion, the "deal" with Darlan, the details of Italy and Sicily, the Patton incident, the Battle of the Bulge—the war as our first American general saw it. And who, may we ask, got a better view?

WIDE WORLD

Ike gets tied.

History can without doubt be a fascinating hobby. All it takes is a good bump of curiosity, and a certain amount of perseverance. Otto Eisenschiml, who wrote THE AMERICAN ILIAD (epic of the Civil War), is what we'd call a first-class amateur historian—a businessman who goes in for

(Continued on Page 21)

The amazing new

Thayer®

PRES-TOE-PEN

Folds with a touch of the toe on the foot pedal!

Transforms the clumsy old-fashioned play-yard into wonderful convenience. Mother can fold it and move it in and out of the house with effortless ease!

See it at your dealer's—or send 10¢ for your copy of "PRIMER FOR PARENTS" to Thayer, Inc. Dept. LH-4, Gardner, Massachusetts.

Thayer® "TOPS FOR TOTS"

Get The Best—Ask For Evenflo!

Papas Go For Evenflo!

Feeding baby with an Evenflo Nurser is duck soup for dads! They are intrigued by Evenflo's easy "nipple-down for sealing and nipple-up for feeding" feature. They admire Evenflo's engineering—nipple valves that keep normal air pressure inside bottle and help babies nurse easier. Get Evenflo Nursers and Evenflo Cleanser, (cleans baby bottles like magic without brushing) at baby shops, drug and dept. stores.

Evenflo* America's Most Popular Nurser 25c

*Patented

"IT BREATHES AS IT FEEDS"

In white, and your choice of 5 most flattering "personality colors"—vat-dyed for lovely, even color!

"Such Very Practical Luxuries!"

Choose your favorite of the two fine Pepperell Percales! Choose Pepperell regular percales, woven 182 sturdy threads per square inch, for marvelous value in the durability of firmly woven texture! Pepperell Peeress Percales are even longer lasting, woven 204 threads per square inch . . . the very top grade of percale!

Choose Pepperell Peeress Percales because you can buy no more finely woven, longer lasting, full-combed-yarn percales at any price! And every thread is superfine-combed for extra smoothness, extra wear. In white and "personality colors."

Choose either of the famous Pepperell Percales . . . the beautiful sheets with the wear woven in.

PEPPERELL MANUFACTURING COMPANY, BOSTON, MASSACHUSETTS

PEPPERELL FABRICS®

PEPPERELL Percale Sheets

New! Exciting Discoveries in Skin Care

Woodbury De Luxe Face Creams ...Never before such Beauty for YOU!

Introducing PENATEN New Skin Beautifier in

Your skin . . . ravishing! . . . with these new-formula Woodbury De Luxe Face Creams! Science's newest secrets . . . in six exquisite beauty aids. Incomparable cleaner cleansing! Superb richer softening! Veil-of-flattery finishing creams! Each of unsurpassed quality. Jars come dressed in pink-and-gold elegance, at welcome moderate prices.

Woodbury De Luxe Cold Cream cleanses skin the cleanest ever.

Truly, Penaten is a miracle cleansing aid! Penaten penetrates—reaches deeper into pore openings. Quickly seeps through make-up tints. Amazingly thorough—thoroughly gentle. Your skin looks clearer, because it's cleaner. Your first jar will prove, Woodbury De Luxe Cold Cream—with Penaten—truly glorifies your skin!

Woodbury De Luxe Dry Skin Cream smooths skin the softest ever!

Magically, Penaten aids the penetration of smoothing emollients. Carries lanolin's rich benefits deeper, softening tiny dry lines. Smooths flaky roughness—on the instant. Skin looks fresher, younger . . . lovely to see!

From trial jars 20¢, to luxury jars $1.39. Plus tax.

Woodbury De Luxe Liquefying Cleansing Cream—with Penaten! Very effective for cleansing oily or normal skin. Melts instantly. Loosens clinging grime, make-up, surface oil. Night and morning use helps keep skin clearer, fresher, younger looking.

Woodbury De Luxe Vanishing Facial Cream—For Glamorous Make-Up: Greaseless, disappearing. A thin veil flatters...even oily skin looks dewy fresh. For a Beauty Pick-up: Apply lavishly to soften skin particles. Tissue off. Skin looks fresher, softer, younger.

Woodbury De Luxe Powder Base Foundation Cream—Petal Tinted: Adds glow to any powder shade. Veils dry or normal skin in satin-textured base that clings, holds make-up. Helps conceal tiny blemishes. Apply sparingly in dots—smooth over face, throat.

Woodbury De Luxe Complete Beauty All-Purpose Cream—Pink-Tinted: Penaten makes this All-Purpose Cream more effective—for complete skin care, day and night. Cleanses deeper. Softens superbly. Provides a clinging make-up base.

Don't take chances with

TUMS

acid indigestion

Take TUMS wherever you go!

Whenever you travel—by car, by plane, by bus, by train — buy Tums first! Tums relieve acid indigestion and heartburn almost instantly. You feel better fast! With Tums, nothing to mix or stir. And Tums contain no baking soda (bicarbonate). So, no danger of overalkalizing — no acid rebound. Travel in comfort. Travel with Tums! Night and day, at home or away, always carry TUMS. Quick relief for acid indigestion.

To feel better, try one or two TUMS after breakfast.

for the tummy

Buy 1 Hair Net and get 1 Free!

hand made of human hair

VENIDA
The Guaranteed HAIR NETS

We make this special offer as a token of appreciation to old friends and to introduce Venida Hair Nets to new users.

CUT OUT THIS AD!
Any department or drug store will redeem it for 1 Venida Hair Net FREE when you purchase 1 at regular price and present coupon.

CHOICE OF ANY COLOR 20c
WHITE, GREY or PURPLE 25c

CAP, BOB OR ADJUSTYLE FRINGE
SINGLE OR DOUBLE MESH WITH OR WITHOUT ELASTIC

Purchaser_____
Address_____
City_____ State_____

RIESER CO., INC., 119 W. 40th St., N. Y. 18

(Continued from Page 18)

research and investigation into the past in his off hours, instead of, say, golf. He loves it. He even has the school children in his neighborhood looking into the past: how did the streets they live on get their names? when was their city first settled? from what country did their own forebears come, no matter how long ago? It's a good historical game.

●

Did you know that Connecticut has a lake named Chargoggagaugmanchaugagoggchaubunagungamaugg? Mr. H. L. Mencken dug that one up for SUPPLEMENT TWO: THE AMERICAN LANGUAGE.

●

There is a further note on alcoholics—in addition to the illuminating article in the November JOURNAL by Francis T. Chambers, Jr.,—in THE BELLEVUE STORY, by Page Cooper, the impressive story of New York's great free hospital. It is a resumé of the findings of Dr. Alexander Lambert in his study of alcoholism some years back. At that time more than 30 percent of all admissions to the hospital were alcoholics. The greatest number of women patients were between the ages of 28 and 32, and of men, between 32 and 37. The sexes were about even in numbers admitted, but in youth and old age the women predominated. The greatest number of women were actresses and telegraph and telephone operators, who together accounted for more than half the total. Doctor Lambert found that women are far more difficult to manage than men; that they are more violent and abusive, and more profane. Nearly twice as many young women die of alcoholism as young men. (We'd wager that women with husbands and children and homes to take care of rank pretty nearly zero in the alcoholic wards.)

●

For those who want a romantic love story with a Humphrey Bogart-type hero, an exotic background made magnificently real, and a situation of extreme danger that involves flight and pursuit, THE JACARANDA TREE, by H. E. Bates, is their book. (Remember FAIR STOOD THE WIND FOR FRANCE and THE PURPLE PLAIN?) It is Kipling out of Hemingway and Maugham. These are not light words. The length of this report is in no way commensurate with the pleasure that the book afforded the reviewer.

●

How much water do you think is wasted daily in New York City? 200,000,000 gallons! Stickers are now being distributed to all landlords: "Stop wasting water . . . A dripping tap can drain a river off the map."

CHICAGO TRIBUNE-NEW YORK NEWS SYNDICATE

"I still wonder if I turned off that shower before we left home."

"Soaping" dulls hair— Halo glorifies it!

✓ Not a soap, not a cream—cannot leave dulling film!

✓ Quickly, effectively removes dandruff from both hair and scalp!

✓ Gives fragrant, soft-water lather even in hardest water!

✓ Leaves hair lustrously soft, easy to manage—with colorful natural highlights!

Yes, "soaping" your hair with even finest liquid or cream shampoos hides its natural lustre with dulling soap film

✓ Halo—not a soap, not a cream—contains no sticky oils, nothing to hide your hair's natural lustre with dulling film. Made with a new patented ingredient, Halo brings out glossy, shimmering highlights the very first time you use it! Its delightfully fragrant lather rinses away quickly, completely in any kind of water—needs no lemon or vinegar rinse. For hair that's naturally colorful, lustrously soft, easy to manage—use Halo Shampoo! At any drug or cosmetic counter.

Halo reveals the hidden beauty of your hair!

Modess .... because

If you ask me

By Eleanor Roosevelt

In Bernardine Kielty's column in the JOURNAL she wrote that when Madame Chiang visited the White House she insisted on having the linen sheets of her bed changed several times a day. These sheets cost $7 each to launder. This story has been rehashed several times in my presence. Surely, the First Lady of China is not so lacking in common decency as to make a nuisance of herself on any occasion. What is the real truth about this?

Madame Chiang never used linen sheets when she was in the White House. She brought her own crepe de Chine sheets. I have no idea what linen sheets cost to launder. Certainly nothing like $7 each. That is pure exaggeration. No guest in the White House, to my knowledge, ever insisted on anything. Madame Chiang, however, did have trained nurses when she first came and it may be they asked for certain things, and of course anything necessary would have been provided. Madame Chiang was always a most considerate and delightful guest.

You have three big, strong American men as sons. Why do they not horsewhip Westbrook Pegler?

I have four, not three "big, strong American men as sons." Why should they bother, however, to horsewhip a poor little creature like Westbrook Pegler? They would probably go to jail for attacking someone who was physically older and perhaps unable to defend himself. After all, he is such a little gnat on the horizon. He cannot touch my husband's memory. Deeds, not words, count in this world, and thousands of American citizens answer such attacks as Mr. Pegler's out of their own experience with love and loyalty in their hearts which remain untouched by Mr. Pegler's diatribes.

I have found out that a man and woman who are my friends are active communists. They have a store. Knowing their sympathies, I have stopped patronizing them. However, the rest of the neighborhood continue to shop there, knowing they are communists. Am I doing wrong mixing business with politics?

Communists have a right to earn a living in the United States as long as we permit them to be here. We have an obligation to allow people to think and peacefully communicate their thoughts to others as long as they do not attempt to overthrow the Government by force. For that reason the fact that people who run stores and gain a livelihood believe in certain theories which we do not believe in is no reason, from my point of view, for not associating with them. It may, however, become disagreeable to have contacts with them because you feel you are helping them to promote something in which you do not believe. In that case, you will naturally not continue your contacts. That will be for personal reasons and not because of their political views only.

Letters should be addressed to Mrs. Roosevelt, c/o the LADIES' HOME JOURNAL. It should be understood that Mrs. Roosevelt's answers reflect only her own opinions, and are not necessarily the opinions of the Editors of the JOURNAL.

I am a college girl and belong to a well-to-do family, but I am extremely unattractive. I have never had suitors and realize my chances are very slim. With this in view, what attitude should I adopt toward life?

For heaven's sake, my dear child, do not make up your mind because you are in college and haven't had any suitors that you are unattractive. Looks alone do not make one attractive. I do not know you, so I do not know just how to answer your question, but remember that one can do a great deal to improve one's personal appearance. The most important thing is what comes from the inside out. If you cultivate your mind and your spirit, you can have charm, which is far more important than looks. You may not have suitors today, but do not try too hard to have them. If you become an interesting and charming person, that will appeal to people and draw them to you when you are out of college and have a chance to make your place in the world.

REPRINTED COURTESY THE SATURDAY EVENING POST

"All this effort just to find a mate; hardly seems worth the trouble."

I would like to know what basis you have for the statement, "In fact, the government has already lifted its ban on the various religions and allows them complete freedom in Russia today."

The promise was given by Mr. Litvinov and his government when Russia was recognized, that there would be freedom for the various religious groups to worship within Russia. I have heard since from a number of people coming out of Russia that though the church representatives must very carefully eschew the discussion of politics, they are allowed freedom of worship, and I think this is generally accepted by all those who have visited Russia of late.

The Townsend Pension Plan is making headlines again. Do you think it is a good movement to follow?

No. I have never thought it a practical movement and I do not think it practical now.

My husband died three months ago. Although I am only twenty-nine, I have no intention of remarrying. My husband and I loved children, but were unfortunate enough not to have been blessed with any. I would like to adopt a little girl four or five years old. I am making my home with my parents and a younger brother who will go to college soon. I have corresponded with a chaplain in an orphanage who says he may be able to arrange for me to adopt a child. In adopting her I would take away from her the chance of being adopted by "parents." Do you think I could be both a father and mother to her and not feel I was cheating her? Financially I am more than capable of taking care of her.

Not knowing you, it is very hard for me to tell whether you could be both father and mother to your little adopted daughter, but if you care enough about her to adopt her I am sure you will make every effort to fill her life with the kind of affection and companionship which would make her feel that she had both parents. You are only twenty-nine and even if you do not intend to remarry, none of us knows what the future may hold; and if you adopt a little girl and give her the best that you have to give, someday you may find that you will want to give her a father. In any case, your young brother who will soon be going to college will furnish her with the kind of male companionship which is valuable for any youngster.

A Special Sweet for Your Extra Special "Sweet"!

"Sweet 'n' Luscious" Pie

LESS THAN 9c A SERVING*

⅓ cup Ann Page Creamy-Smooth Peanut Butter
¼ cup sugar
1 cup (about 12 crackers) finely crushed graham crackers
1 tblsp. margarine
1 package Sparkle Vanilla Pudding
1½ cups milk
½ to ¾ cup Ann Page Preserve or Jam

Combine peanut butter, sugar, crackers and margarine in bowl: mix until well blended. Press on side and bottom of 8-inch pie plate. Bake in moderate oven, 375°F., about 10 minutes. Chill.

Prepare Sparkle Vanilla Mixture for Pudding according to package directions, using 1½ cups milk. When cool pour into pie shell. Chill thoroughly. When ready to serve top with ½ to ¾ cup Ann Page Preserve, and whipped cream, if desired. 6 servings.

*Recipe cost based on average prices of ingredients in A&P Super Markets at press time.

Here's a heavenly-light, extra-flaky peanut butter crust that melts in your mouth . . . filled with a creamy-rich pudding . . . and topped off with luscious, red raspberry preserve. Yummmmeeee!

But in making this recipe, be sure you use Ann Page Creamy-Smooth Peanut Butter, Ann Page Preserves and Ann Page Sparkle Pudding. For Ann Page products are your guarantee of fine quality.

And they're thriftily priced! That's because they're made in A&P's own modern Ann Page food factories and brought directly to you. This eliminates many unnecessary in-between expenses and savings are made and shared with you.

ANN PAGE FOODS

A&P

A&P's Finest

Among the quality Ann Page Foods are such favorites as Beans, Spaghetti, Noodles, Prepared Spaghetti, Sandwich Spread (Tartar Sauce), Vinegar, etc.

Black-and-white Hildegarde is teacher's pet, but Irish setter Maeve hates to do her homework.

Diary of Domesticity

By GLADYS TABER

NEW ENGLAND cooking is the thing for deep winter. The kind of food our forefathers invented out of the simple fare the rock-bound coast afforded was hearty and comforting. It still is.

Take beans, for instance, and molasses and salt pork, and you get those big brown crocks bubbling over with crusty brown goodness for Saturday night.

The Indians taught the early settlers the uses of maize, but it took the pioneer women to make Indian pudding, corncake, muffins, crackling bread, and my favorite, Spider Corn Bread.

I use 1 cup corn meal, ⅓ cup flour, and 2 tablespoons sugar, 1 teaspoon salt, 2 teaspoons baking powder sifted together. Then I beat an egg, add 1 cup milk (or half milk and half water). I mix all together, turn it into an 8-inch spider that has melted butter or margarine in it. Over this I pour ¾ cup milk and water (half of each will do), but I do not stir it at all. I bake it in a moderate oven, 350°F., about 30 minutes, cut into pie-shaped pieces and serve it with Winter Night Supper Bake. I use a black iron spider, but if you haven't one, a spider with a removable handle will do.

The Supper Bake I invented down on Cape Cod when we had to use up a lot of flounder fillets or we couldn't go out to catch any more. Into a greased rectangular glass baking dish I alternately sliced potatoes and onions, well salted and peppered. I almost covered them with milk, then baked them, covered, until the potatoes were nearly tender. Then I laid the flounder fillets gently on top, added a layer of buttered cracker crumbs and 2 slices bacon, added more milk and baked until the fish was done (20 minutes).

For a special party dish, I like the traditional chicken smothered in oysters. For this, you sauté quarters of young chickens in butter or margarine, lay them in a baking dish, pour ½ cup milk over each, bake, covered, for an hour, basting frequently. Then add 1 pint oysters and 1 cup cream for each chicken and bake 20 minutes longer. Serve on a hot platter and pour oysters and cream over the chicken. This is more than two hundred years old, I am told, and of course now we may not have the cream—or the young chickens—but older chickens will do if you cook them longer, and a can of condensed mushroom soup thinned to the consistency of cream will do.

Now we have four Stillmeadow cockers with their Companion Dog degrees, and a line of ribbons and Hildegarde's proud silver platters—but I sometimes think Jill and I ought to have a few personal awards for valor outside the line of duty. For after all, every paw that moved forward on training was right beside a walking pair of trudging human feet belonging to us! But if anything could match the dizzy excitement I felt when Little Sister took second place over a Doberman and a couple of shepherds and a few other assorted dogs, I cannot imagine what it would be.

The cockers go happily along on their regular lessons; not so Maeve, the temperamental Irisher. Plain heeling bores her stiff. She wants to do the most advanced work, not bother with elementary stuff. She is always reading ahead in her schoolwork, and skipping her homework. The dumbbell is just her dish, but to Sit Stay is a nuisance.

Here in the country we celebrate the New Year without any wild celebrations. I think it is because we are attuned to the changing seasons, and in the midst of winter we are looking to spring. So we never get that curious panic that time has gone by and we should drown our old year out and racket the new in. George comes over on one morning and says, "Happy New Year," and goes out to shovel his way to the kennel. We plow about gathering eggs

(Continued on Page 31)

A HEARTY MEAL IN JUST 21 MINUTES

(and at only 47¢ a serving*)

RANCH HOUSE SUPPER

Tomato Soup
Bean and Beefburgers
Sweet Potatoes Corn
Tossed Green Salad
Canned Peaches

BEAN AND BEEFBURGERS

Add 1 teaspoon salt to 1 cup chopped beef; saute with 1 onion, finely chopped. Add 1 can red kidney beans. Cut very thin slice off tops of 6 English Muffins. Place mixture on muffins. Top with 1 cup grated American cheese. Broil until lightly browned. 6 servings.

*Menu and recipe tested and priced by A&P Test Kitchen. Cost based on average prices in A&P Super Markets at time of going to press.

A&P TESTED

PLEASE TELL US!

Have you an idea or suggestion you think will help us improve our service? If so, please write us. We welcome criticism, too. You see, we believe we owe it to our customers to make our food stores the best possible places in which to shop.

ADDRESS: Customers' Relations Department, A&P, 420 Lexington Ave., New York 17, N. Y.

Like to save time, trouble and money?

The modern way to shop for food is the easy A&P Super Market way. You serve yourself in most departments . . . get satisfying service from willing A&P people in others. And you do all your shopping in just one place, in a complete food department store. You save time and trouble . . . because it is unnecessary to go from store to store the old-fashioned way.

Too, A&P has really pleasing values in every department of its Super Markets . . . attractive prices for famous name brands that stand for the finest foods produced . . . and the choicest of truly fresh things like meats, fish, poultry, fruits and vegetables, bakery products and dairy foods. Yes, we believe no food store offers more values more days of the week than A&P.

Making Marriage Work

By CLIFFORD R. ADAMS

Ph.D., The Pennsylvania State College, Department of Psychology

What men emphasize as a reason for marriage is the leading cause for wives' unhappiness.

What Makes Wives Unhappy

MANY and complex are the forces which determine the degree of happiness a husband and wife find in marriage. In our continuous-research project, we are learning more about these forces—what they are, and how they operate.

From the testimony of more than a thousand married couples participating, we have selected the replies of the one hundred unhappiest wives on a basic question: the most important causes of dissatisfaction in their marriages. Their replies are discussed in order of importance—that is, in order of the number of wives who mentioned each problem.

Lack of companionship. Single men emphasize the desire for companionship as a reason for marriage; single girls do not. Yet the lack of companionship heads the list of causes of married dissatisfaction of these unhappy wives. It is significant that in every case the wife blamed her husband; either his job, his working hours, or his preoccupation with work, or his friends, his hobbies, or his outside recreation. Not one mentioned the possibility that she might be a more rewarding companion if she tried to share his interest in his work or in his outside activities.

Lack of money. About half the wives blame the high cost of living; the other half blame their husbands, either for not making enough, or for spending too much. In only one of these homes is there any attempt to budget.

Sexual incompatibility ranks third as a cause of dissatisfaction. Though the specific complaints vary, nowhere does any wife suggest that her own attitude may be involved.

"In-law trouble" and husband's criticisms come next, and after that:

Objections to housework. Yet few people would deny that homemaking is a wife's responsibility. In most families, this means that the wife does most of the actual housework; even in wealthy households staffed by servants, the wife is still expected to take charge. Granted, a housewife's tasks are varied, exacting and often tedious. Yet a man's job, too, involves many irksome chores. At least a wife can usually see the tangible results of her efforts—which is not always the case for her husband.

Children are a source of dissatisfaction to some wives, but the complaints usually center around the confining and fatiguing "round of bottles and diapers"—a situation which will improve with time. However, some wives do feel that they have too many children, or that they came too soon and too fast.

Lack of social life, as discussed by these wives, is not a matter of lack of freedom to enjoy social life, but a lack of any social life to enjoy.

The husband's personal traits, ranging from major flaws like selfishness to such comparatively minor irritations as untidiness, make other wives unhappy.

Lack of affection. Though the love between husband and wife often deepens as the years go by, too many husbands expect their wives to take their devotion for granted, without any little gestures of reminder. In this important respect, I agree that most husbands are negligent.

Religious differences end the list of unhappy wives' major sources of dissatisfaction, though there is a long series of miscellaneous specialized problems.

Note that, despite the variety of the difficulties, almost all these problems have an underlying attitude in common—the wife's tendency to blame the husband or circumstances, rather than to assume a share of the responsibility herself.

It is undoubtedly true that some of these husbands are directly responsible for their wives' unhappiness, and that many others with a little effort could make their wives happier. Nevertheless, it is almost invariably the wife who must take the initiative in any effort to increase the happiness of the marriage.

Most of these difficulties, in greater or less degree, are present in most marriages. If other wives can overcome them to find happiness, perhaps you can too. The first step is to realize that it is your job to try.

The Man Who Stalls

AFTER a young couple have gone together steadily for as long as a year, the girl is likely to assume that the man is thinking of marriage. If nothing has been said to the contrary, she is justified in feeling this way, especially if the man has asked her not to have other dates.

But sometimes the man avoids any specific discussion of marriage. If the girl wants to marry, she is placed in an embarrassing and painful position. She does not know whether to continue dating him, in the hope of eventual engagement, or to give him up and cultivate other men.

In analyzing her problem, there are several possibilities to consider:

Is there another girl? Be sure about this. Don't assume that there isn't, simply because he hasn't mentioned her. And don't assume that he will eventually make up his mind—in your favor.

Does he want to marry? Some men, even though they are in a position to marry, are unready or unwilling to accept the responsibilities that marriage entails. Such a man may be aware that he is monopolizing a girl's time under false pretenses; but he may honestly (though perhaps thoughtlessly) assume that the girl, like himself, is interested in temporary fun and companionship rather than in a permanent relationship. Better find out whether you two are thinking in the same terms.

Is there an obstacle in the way? Even though he seems prosperous, a man may have debts, or dependent relatives, or an insecure job, which makes it financially difficult for him to marry. Or his parents may disapprove the match. If he loves you and is honest, he should discuss the problem with you frankly. Nonetheless, diffidence and pride may restrain him. Give him a chance to tell you.

Is he a wolf? Some men deliberately exploit any human relationship, seeking without offering, taking without giving. Sometimes this attitude shows up in stinginess about money, but some men who are lavish with money are emotional dead beats. Do you know a man who rides in your car without offering to buy gas, who dines frequently in your home but rarely suggests taking you out, who accepts your attention but promises nothing in return? Better forget him. Such a man is not likely to propose marriage—but if he does, you don't want him.

Does he love you? This is the most fundamental question of all. Don't confuse liking, or the easy companionship born of habit, for the kind of love that leads to marriage. A man may enjoy your company, value your friendship and sincerely admire you—and fall head over heels in love with somebody else.

- Whatever the cause, you must still decide what to do. If you can see no insurmountable obstacle to your marriage, you may be wise to force the issue. But do it indirectly, without seeming to corner him. Many a girl defeats her chances of matrimony through overeagerness.
- But you can lead the conversation around to a discussion of his future; you can ask his opinion of a new job for you; you can remind him in various ways that time is not standing still.
- Finally, you can cut down on the dates you give him. Without explanation or unfriendliness, let him see that you are not so available as you have been. This takes courage; while it may lead to a proposal, it may lead to the discovery that he is not really interested in you. But if there is no future in your relationship, it is better to find it out now, while you are young enough to have other prospects.

Does He Love You?

Not even a psychologist can determine if a man loves you. But if you will be absolutely honest with yourself—and about him—perhaps your "Yes" and "No" answers will help you decide for yourself.

1. Has he dated you steadily for one year or longer?
2. Do your friends think he loves you?
3. Is he really interested in the things you do?
4. Does he regard you as a dependable person?
5. Has he introduced his friends and parents to you?
6. Does he try hard to win your good opinion?
7. Has he told you repeatedly that he loves you?
8. Does he abide by your standards and ideals?
9. Is he willing to make sacrifices for you?
10. Does he always keep your confidence?
11. Is he free from unselfishness?
12. Does he enjoy your parents (and your friends)?
13. Is his spare time largely spent with you?
14. Does he say "we" in discussing his future plans?
15. Will he forgo his own wishes to please you?
16. Does he neglect his work just to be with you?
17. Is he extremely jealous of you?
18. Do you have frequent doubts about his love?
19. Is his interest in you mostly physical?
20. Does he make efforts to "reform" you?

Add your yes answers to the first 15 questions to your no answers to the last 5 items. With a score of 17 or more, he is certainly trying to make you think he loves you—and maybe he does. If you have any doubts left, take more time to be sure.

Do You Agree?

How can I make my husband, from whom I have been separated one year, pay the expense incurred in divorcing him?

You can't. In the eyes of the law a divorce is a luxury almost always paid for by the person who obtains it.

You've got the sweetest little

Angel Face

by POND'S

IT'S NEW—the little-girl glow that's making you look so much lovelier! New—the touchable, velvety smoothness of your face. And very new—the secret of the whole delightful transformation. It's Pond's sensational new make-up—Angel Face!

EASIER! FOUNDATION AND POWDER—ALL IN ONE! Angel Face smooths on with its puff—and stays. No wet sponge, no greasy fingers. Gives a soft, natural finish. Never drying or shiny.

CAN'T SPILL OVER YOUR HANDBAG OR CLOTHES! Tuck an Angel Face in your handbag, and you have the complete, neat makings of a superb, quick make-up at your fingertips anytime . . . anywhere!

ASK THE WOMAN WHO USES ONE! Rafaelle, Duchess of Leinster, says, "Pond's Angel Face always looks fresh and natural, and is so easy to use! I carry mine with me everywhere!" And Mrs. Ellen Tuck Astor says, "Every day I use it, I'm more enchanted with Angel Face. It goes on so smoothly and stays on so well!"

Pond's Angel Face is the newest kind of new make-up! Foundation and powder all in one! Your choice of five perfect complexion tones. Complete with puff, eighty-nine cents, plus tax.

What's your P.Q.*?

Learning your ABC's can rate a high I.Q.—but what about your *Personality Quotient?

Are You Fun to be With?

1. Have you ever been asked to a boxing match, a splash party or a bike hike?

2. Can you hum or sing the first chorus of the current No. 1 scorer on the Hit Parade?

3. Do you know the difference between a "third out" and a "fourth down"; a "pitcher's balk" and a "spot pass"?

4. Does the thought of being alone for an evening with nothing but a good book and the radio conjure up bogies of boredom?

5. Can you get in a "party mood" with last year's best dress for this year's big date?

6. When the girl with whom you're double-dating turns out to be a poised Hedy Lamarr, j.g., can you keep in mind the fact that boys like your type too?

7. When your best friend gets stuck in an argument do you always feel you must agree with her?

8. Can you play 3 out of the 5 games given here: table tennis, volleyball, bridge, golf and parchesi?

9. If you are of age, can you drive or are you learning to drive the family car?

10. Do you ever spend a serious ten minutes with a best gal pal or boy friend hashing over world affairs?

11. Do you prefer only special foods at parties and picnics, such as sandwiches without dressing, salt on your watermelon and hot drinks heated to exactly so many degrees?

12. Can you feel at ease when there is a slight pause in the conversation?

13. When you're alone with small fry, either at home or out baby sitting, can you improvise for ten minutes on "and then what happened to Goldilocks"?

14. Can you come up with a title or two when someone pulls the oldie, "Read any good books lately?"

15. Would you rather be at a movie on a winter afternoon than out learning to ice skate with the crowd?

16. Can you hold your own—in enthusiasm, at least—in a round-the-piano or a round-the-campfire chorus of Take Me Out to the Ball Game?

17. When your steady stuff is having this dance with another girl, can you smile and make conversation with the boy nearest at hand?

18. Can you overlook twinges from that old green-eyed monster when you or your team loses anything from a bridge trick to a basketball game?

19. "After the ball is over," are you quick to volunteer for a cleanup squad?

20. Can you explain a "double whammy"?

SCORING KEY: Numbers 4-7-11-15 should be answered "No." All the rest should be answered "Yes." Give yourself one point for each correct answer to determine score.

17-20. You are poised, self-confident and mature for your age.

13-16. Shows a slight inferiority complex; score can be improved by more social experience and a greater interest in other people.

Below 13. An inferiority complex now—but it doesn't have to be permanent! Work hard on personal appearance, particularly don't neglect ability to get along with other people—that complex should disappear long before you reach voting age!

Do You Have an Inferiority Complex?

1. In shopping bouts, when it's a tossup, do you always drop the final deciding in mother's lap?

2. Is it comparatively easy for you to ask friends to return anything of yours they have borrowed?

3. In making new friends, do you look unconsciously for price tag first and personality second?

4. Do you have one or more bright-colored dresses in your wardrobe?

5. Would you cross the street or walk home by another route rather than have to pass a group of boys from school?

6. Have you ever said, "I hope you're going to like East Side High" to a new and bewildered stude?

7. Do you consider it a social stigma to accept blind dates?

8. Would you be secretly ashamed to admit it if you rated straight A's on semester exams?

9. After a dull evening—either a party that fell flat or a date with Johnnie that ended on a blue note—do you usually feel "It's all my fault"?

10. Does your own bedroom mirror always give back a prettier picture than any mirror in town?

11. Are you honestly convinced that one of your teachers has a personal dislike for you?

12. When you and Janie are walking down the streets, do you always think the boys are whistling at her?

13. Can you express your views clearly round the lunch table or when reciting in class?

14. Do you feel self-conscious when wearing a new dress, even though you're sure it is in style and good taste?

15. Do you usually start a conversation, instead of waiting for someone else to say the first good word?

16. Would you pass up a good movie on Saturday night rather than risk having the crowd see you "dating" mother and dad?

17. Does the whole bus turn to stare at you when you get on?

18. Would you take rumba lessons if someone offered to teach you, sans charge?

19. Do you join freely in the shouting and school cheers when your team makes a touchdown?

20. Can you use a new word or an occasional slang phrase without feeling self-conscious?

SCORING KEY: Numbers 1-4-6-13-15-18-19-20 should be answered "Yes." All the rest should be answered "No." Give yourself one point for each correct answer to determine score.

17-20. You are poised, self-confident and mature for your age.

13-16. Shows a slight inferiority complex; score can be improved by more social experience and a greater interest in other people.

Below 13. An inferiority complex now—but it doesn't have to be permanent! Work hard on personal appearance, particularly don't neglect ability to get along with other people—that complex should disappear long before you reach voting age!

Do You Have What it Takes to be Popular?

1. Do you belong to one or more school organizations?

2. Can you feel as relaxed (well, almost) in a black net formal or party dress as in a skirt and blue jeans?

3. Are you willing to try to learn new things like dance steps or gin rummy on first invitation?

4. Do you write at least one letter a month?

5. Of the first six girls who come to your mind can you say "I like ——" about four of them?

6. Has a friend, boy or gal, ever introduced you with these words: "This is Susie Sub-Deb, the girl I was telling you about"?

7. Do you secretly hold grudges even when you've officially "forgiven and forgotten"?

8. Are you prompt about social obligations—in writing thank-you notes, returning invitations, being on time for dates with everyone?

9. Do you sometimes cry a little at sad movies?

10. When Nancy leaves you alone with her mother, do you immediately run short of conversation?

11. If the crowd outvotes you on a movie-versus-bowling evening, can you give in gracefully?

12. Do you sometimes allow yourself to date-dream about an evening with Peter Lawford, Guy Madison or some local glamour boy?

13. Do you like doggie roasts?

14. Are you as good-natured and as much fun at home with your family as you are out on a date?

15. If passing along a catty story gets you attention, do you think gossip is worth spreading?

16. Do you make it a point never to speak or nod to a casual acquaintance till he or she has recognized you first?

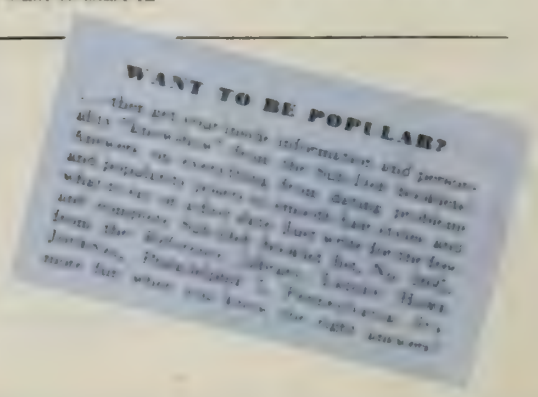
17. At the dinner table, do you find it fun to talk over the day's happenings with the family?

18. If double-feature Saturday matinees are your favorite sport, do you get bored and yawny when Joe wants to discuss pro football?

19. Can you recover from a social blunder easily enough so you and the company you're keeping won't be chilled for the evening?

20. Do you have a good disposition most of the time—with few hours wasted on brooding, depressions or fits of the blues?

SCORING KEY: Numbers 7-10-15-16-18 should be answered "No." All the rest rate a hearty "Yes" as the correct answer. Give yourself one point for every right answer given to determine score.



17-20. Indicates an even temperament, a balanced personality and an active interest in other people.

13-16. You're not a No. 1 dream girl at this scoring, but you're on the right track. Your rating should improve gradually as you learn more about making friends.

Below 14. Not only is your score low—it almost looks as if you're not trying! Even at her worst, Joe gal must begin to realize that she is a great big world and she is in it to help her by trying to like the other people in it. You'll have to start hoping to make the fun if you want to share it.

Check Personality Quotient:

Now total your three scores as recommended by the three quizzes above. The result is your Personality Quotient, rating plus (over 50), Satisfactory (41-50), Good. Below 40, Just Average.

DIARY OF DOMESTICITY

(Continued from Page 24)

warm and new. Maeve whisks her tail in the drifts. The house smells sweet with the holiday greens and the big country ham a-baking. Jill gets up more of our own wild-cranberry sauce. I put the fat acorn squash in to bake. The children are home.

There is the usual difficulty about the cat Sidney, who always comes with Dorothy and Val. In summer he lives in the studio, but now he is pent in the middle bathroom, safe from Esmé's horrendous screeching attacks.

There is the usual argument about Don not wanting to help with the dishes until he finishes his latest murder mystery. It is all so much, suddenly, as it used to be when they were not grown and leading their own lives, that I feel I could wake up and find myself back in time.

It seems even more likely when they haul out the old sled and go off to slide down the snowy hill. Dorothy and Val have been married going on three years, but they look like children in their woolly ski suits and big flapping mittens.

In winter, the fire on the hearth is the center of the life at Stillmeadow. In summer, life flows outward. Someone is in the barbecue typing, someone else is in the Quiet Garden reading Tales of the South Seas or Running of the Tide. The girls are out in their own summerhouse; Don and Val, with the new gun, are blasting away at a tomato can nailed to an old apple tree. Someone else is up in the studio, and Jill is down the meadow with Maeve "seeking back" an old glove. I, of course, am in the kitchen.

Sometimes our casual spreading around causes trouble. There was the day last August when our friend Johannes got locked in the studio. The studio is the old haymow, and the old double doors have a way of swinging back in a breeze and locking. Johannes went up to Be Alone and finish his book, and alone he really was, for the doors swung back and when he tried to come out, he found he was tightly shut up.

At first he was not worried. He leaned out the window and called mildly. Nobody paid the least attention except a couple of spaniels who were after squirrels below. They barked loudly. He raised his voice. So did they. The kennel took it up and a thunderous racket ensued, with Johannes yelling. Then he worked at the door, the nice heavy old chestnut door. Nothing gave except Johannes. So he went back and called again. But he had asked for an uninterrupted time to work and he got it.

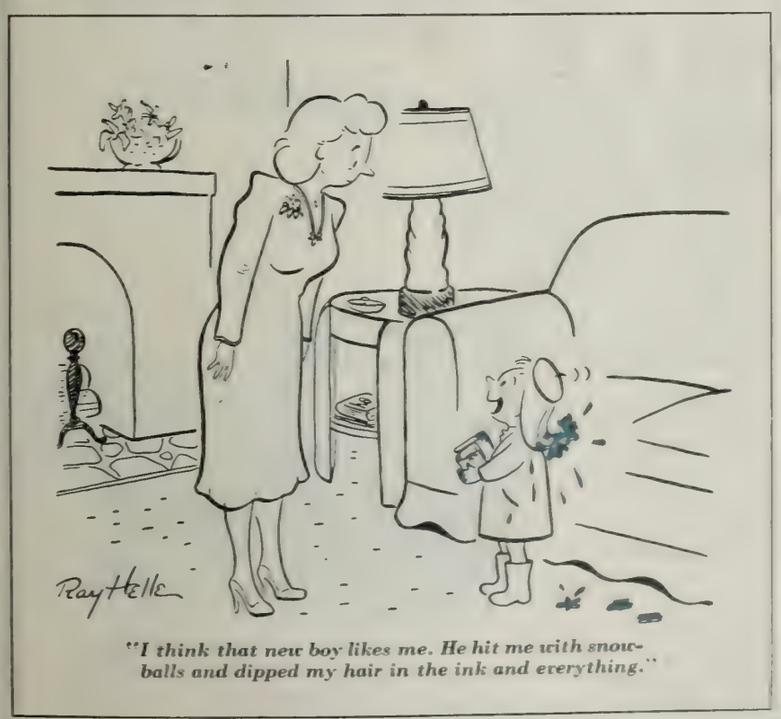
Finally it came to him that not even for lunch would the family interrupt art. Who would intrude on a love scene with crab salad? He had a new idea. Being a Viennese, he is a fine yodeler. Or perhaps not all Viennese can yodel, but he is our only friend who can. So he yodeled. He yodeled with the very best yodel.

But the cockers had never heard anybody yodel before, and when they heard that sound from up above, they made noise enough to drown a bombing attack. They went really wild. Yodeling and barking went on for as long as Johannes could breathe, and then he gave up and resigned himself to a life in the studio, starving and helpless but with his manuscript beside him. He mopped his brow and eventually located a coat hanger. This he wrenched into a kind of bar, with which he managed to pick the latch and escape.

We were serenely stringing beans for the freezer when he appeared. I thought he must have been working very hard, he looked so hot and tired.

Jill looked up. "I hope the dogs didn't bother you," she said. "For some reason, they have been making an awful racket this morning."

The color of winter is pure and lovely, the long, darkly blue shadows, the purple stalks of the briary bushes, the glistening white of clean snow, the pale amber of shell ice where the little brooks walk in summer. The meadow is latticed now with the pattern of dark branches and the great timeless trees lift intricate patterns against a still sky.



Yes, lovely is this world of ours, I think, as I look up at the pearl-clear light over the snowy valley. Surely all we need for the new year is peace over the world so men can lift their eyes to the sky and know that death will not hover over.

Honey pads along with her own thoughts, which have rabbits in them, and all her yesterdays, and being a loved companion, and the memory of tonight's snack, and maybe an idea as to tomorrow's leftover waffle with a smidgen of wild-flower honey on it. For she has reached the age when she can have just about anything she wants, and no nonsense about it.

As I turn back toward the little white house on New Year's evening, I wish with all my heart that the serenity of woods and hills and valleys could be shared with the whole restless and uneasy world.

"Happy New Year," I say softly, and the wind in the leafless hazel bush picks up my words and carries them on, far away, toward tomorrow!

THE END

"I think that new boy likes me. He hit me with snowballs and dipped my hair in the ink and everything."

Who needs three guesses?

You picked these

"... But darling, of course I know these make Holmes & Edwards silverplate finer than 'just extra plated' kinds..."

"... Unhuh! ... I know Holmes & Edwards stays lovelier longer thanks to these "

"Certainly I know what these are! They're the two blocks of sterling inlaid at backs of bowls and handles of most used spoons and forks in Holmes & Edwards silverplate."

"... Remember me? I'm the girl who bought Holmes & Edwards and told you about it in the first place!"

Danish Princess Love's Lady Youth

3 LOVELY PATTERNS! Danish Princess, Love's Lady, Youth are among the loveliest ever made ... made by The International Silver Co. in U. S. A.

GOOD NEWS! The price of Holmes & Edwards has not gone up ... the beautiful 52-piece service for 8 is only $68.50 with chest.

SEE AND ORDER your Holmes & Edwards at your jewelry or department store today.

HOLMES & EDWARDS
STERLING INLAID
SILVERPLATE

HERE AND HERE
It's Sterling Inlaid

MADE BY THE INTERNATIONAL SILVER CO

Copyright 1949 The International Silver Co. Holmes & Edwards Div. Meriden, Conn. Sold in Canada by The T. Eaton Co. Ltd. ®Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

Great Health Discovery found right in your DISHPAN

How you wash dishes . . . and the kind of suds you use . . . can mean the difference between sickness and health. Every thoughtful housewife should read these startling facts.

HOW TO FIGHT COLDS, SICKNESS IN YOUR HOME

DREFT helps protect your family's health

as no suds ever could before!

Perhaps you didn't know that danger lurks in your dishpan. But it's there! Even glasses and dishes that look clean may actually carry sickness to the very ones you wish to protect.

This is a proved fact. For doctors have found that germs breed in dishwater film. Even dishes that you've scrubbed hard, and polished carefully often carry this germ-breeding film.

Dreft Ends Germ-Breeding Film. With this amazing dishwashing discovery—DREFT—the menace of dishwater film is gone—DREFT leaves no film—it actually helps protect your family's health.

And this new way of dishwashing, made practical by DREFT, not only helps you safeguard those you care for—it is actually an easier, quicker, happier way of doing dishes!

New, Quick, Dreft Way. Wash your dishes in Dreft's abundant lasting suds. Give them a hot rinse (the hotter the better). Then let them drain dry. It's just as easy as that!

Dreft suds leave your dishes and glasses shining bright . . . even without wiping. Healthfully clean . . . film free—as no suds before Dreft ever got them!

Heed the warning of Public Health authorities . . . help protect your family's health.

DREFT WASHES DISHES SO CLEAN THEY SHINE EVEN WITHOUT WIPING!

Fifty Years Ago In The Journal

THE year 1899 ushered in the Florodora Girl, the U.S. war in the Philippines, and Teddy Roosevelt as governor of New York. Every Broadway shoeshine boy was whistling Tell Me, Pretty Maiden. Chauncey Depew became a senator, and only four states allowed women to vote.

"Rush and haste are too much upon us in America," chided Editor Bok in the January, 1899, issue of the LADIES' HOME JOURNAL. "Women are trying to crowd too much into their lives. Housekeeping is a profession which requires tact, skill and brains, and, generally speaking, running a house is about all the average woman can do well."

"I do wish," remarks a* JOURNAL *author, "that when I visit Philadelphia the people there would talk of something else than their churchyards and genealogies."

Serving asparagus: "You may use what is known as an asparagus fork, a sort of scissor arrangement, with a fork on one side and a spoon on the other."

"I must enter a plea for simpler living," exclaims cooking expert Mrs. Rorer. "The ten to fourteen course dinner is no longer considered refined."

"The carving of a young pig is not commonly done well," Mrs. Rorer continues. "It should be served on a deep bed of cress with a red apple in its mouth. First remove the head, then the legs, turn the pig over and cut directly down the center."

Cost of living: "The table expenses for eight grown persons and two maids in Brooklyn should be about $17 a week. The allowance of butter will be one half pound a person."

"Women's stockings which cost under twenty-five cents cannot be recommended for wear," believes Emma Hooper, "but millions are sold for ten cents."

"Pictures suitable for a hall should be unpretentious," writes the JOURNAL art editor, "such as architectural subjects and classical heads."

Journal about Town

© WALT DISNEY PRODUCTIONS

"Nostalgic" will be a word much used by critics about So Dear to My Heart.

Gossip about people you know, editors you like and what goes on in New York.

JUST in time to tell you about it in this issue, we were invited downstairs with Bruce and Beatrice Gould for a specially arranged preview of the one and only Walt Disney's new full-length feature film in Technicolor, So Dear to My Heart. Each one of us came out of the projection room kind of caught up in the scenes of our childhood, as "fond recollection presents them to view." So will millions of other Americans when the picture appears sometime early this year. This is the kind of movie Disney does to perfection. It begins by bewitching you with a memory book whose characters start carrying on as only they can when Walt waves his animated wand, then suddenly you're seeing yourself on the screen at the age of ten. The old home town is wonderful, and while the people are only human, the animals, as usual, are out of this world.

•

The mother-and-daughter idea may be as old as humanity, but Al Parker's famous covers have certainly helped in many ways to make the idea popular. For instance, Leone Seastrom finds that mothers and daughters can now start the day brushing and combing their hair with brushes and combs identical except for size; likewise houseclean with similar dust mops and vacuum cleaners; dress alike from hats to shoes; carry matching handbags, scarfs and handkerchiefs; get identical hair-do's. They can have large and small umbrellas alike, and if they need them, eyeglasses. And at bedtime, as you can see, they now have mother-and-daughter curlers to put up their hair.

Like mother, like daughter, is the new idea—even in boudoirs.

•

The diamond horseshoe tucked in model Clare Kelly's pretty ermine muff on this month's cover is not just an ordinary diamond horseshoe. It once belonged to the Prince of Wales who was later King Edward VII, who presented it to John Watts, famous international jockey, as a gift for winning the Epsom Downs Derby in 1897. When Dawn Crowell Norman was searching for a sparkling touch to complete the picture, Johnnie, now major domo of the JOURNAL messenger room, came to the rescue with his treasured horseshoe stickpin.

•

Henrietta Murdock, who is so fond of ribbon that she once bought 1000 yards of it which she still has, and who right now has a pure silk Army-surplus parachute in her office waiting for an inspiration, has been dying for a chance to win the $2000 prize on a "secret sound" radio contest over at CBS. "But how can you be so sure it's the sound of a bear growling?" we asked her. "Well," she explained, "when I was out in Wyoming at the Schwartzes', of this month's How America Lives, the only table I could find big enough to cut out the window drapes on was a picnic table in the park; and right beside the table was a cage full of bears. Got to be good friends, and learned every sound they make by heart. Oh, it's a bear all right!"

•

As it can be a tedious elevator ride from the top-floor Workshop down to the street if there are many stops, we asked an operator if anybody rated a nonstop ride. "Not even Mr. Rockefeller," he told us. "But there is one person we always take right through, and that's Mrs. Roosevelt*—the last person in the world who'd ever ask us to."*

•

In 1820 each farm worker produced enough food for 4½ people; in 1900, enough food for 8 people; and today, enough food for 14½ people. . . . In Oregon, a mother-in-law cannot be legally charged for room and board. . . . An average of 25 cents for each dollar a motorist spends on gasoline goes for state and Federal taxes. Missouri has the lowest gasoline tax: 2 cents a gallon. Louisiana's 9 cents a gallon is the highest state tax. . . . When Andre Kostelanetz was five years old, he gave a concert for the Czar of Russia. . . . Never Underestimate Department: A Detroit lady walked into the whirling propeller of an airplane. She suffered a few minor bruises—but the propeller was wrecked. . . . The average height of the American man is 5 feet, 7¼ inches in bare feet. . . . A whale's heart weighs roughly 800 pounds. . . . Bob Feller earns about $25 for every ball he pitches, Sid Luckman makes more than $60 for every pass he throws for football's Chicago Bears, and Babe Didrikson averages something like $100 for every stroke she takes in a golf tourney.

•

The January morning when the man comes to her Jersey farm to do the butchering, Ruth Mills Teague retires to her bedroom and types as loudly as she can on the Conversation Piece that's being readied for the JOURNAL; emerging only when she's been told it's safe for her to come down and superintend the preparation of her many specialties of beef and pork: her year's supply of succulent sausages, frankfurters, liver pâté in jars, liverwurst, scrapple and pork in aspic, which locally is known less elegantly as headcheese or souse—the major cuts of meat being wrapped meanwhile for the freezer. Ruth prides herself on the fact that nothing gets wasted for what she herself doesn't need; an ingenious refugee friend comes out from town to pickle and smoke for sending to Europe.

Mrs. Teague getting one of her Conversation Pieces under way.

Cheaper by the Dozen

On his honeymoon,

Frank Gilbreth decided to have twelve children, and he always stuck to his word.

By FRANK B. GILBRETH, JR., and ERNESTINE GILBRETH CAREY

ILLUSTRATED BY ANDREW LOOMIS

MOTHER and dad, Lillian Moller Gilbreth and Frank Bunker Gilbreth, were industrial engineers. They were among the first in the scientific-management field and the very first in motion study. From 1910 to 1924 their firm of Gilbreth, Inc., was employed as "efficiency expert" by many of the major industrial plants in the United States, Britain and Germany.

Dad died in 1924. After that, mother carried the load by herself and became perhaps the foremost woman industrial engineer. She is still active today after rearing twelve children. But this story is about the Gilbreth family before dad died.

Dad believed that what would work in the factory would work in the home. He was management, and we were labor.

DAD was a tall man, with a large head, jowls, and a Herbert Hoover collar. He had passed the two-hundred-pound mark during his early thirties, and left it far behind. But he carried himself with the self-assurance of a successful gentleman who was proud of his wife, proud of his family, and proud of his business accomplishments.

Dad had enough gall to be divided into three parts, and the ability and poise to backstop the front he placed before the world. He'd walk into a factory like the Zeiss works in Germany or the Pierce Arrow plant in this country and announce that he could speed up production by one fourth. He'd do it too.

One reason he had so many children—there were twelve of us—was that he was convinced anything he and mother teamed up on was sure to be a success.

Dad always practiced what he preached, and it was just about impossible to tell where his scientific-management company ended and his family life began. His office was always full of children, and he often took two or three of us, and sometimes all twelve, on business trips.

On the other hand, our house at Montclair, New Jersey, was a sort of school for scientific management and the elimination of wasted motions—or "motion study," as dad and mother named it. Dad installed process and work charts in the bathrooms. Every child old enough to write—and dad expected his offspring to start writing at a tender age—was required to initial the charts in the morning after he had brushed his teeth, taken a bath, combed his hair and made his bed. At night, each child had to weigh himself, plot the figure on a graph, and initial the process charts again after he had done his homework, washed his hands and face and brushed his teeth. It was regimentation, all right. But bear in mind the trouble most parents have in getting just one child off to school, and multiply it by twelve. Some regimentation was necessary to prevent bedlam. Of course there were times when a child would initial the charts without actually having fulfilled the requirements. However, dad had a gimlet eye and a terrible swift sword. The combined effect was that truth usually went marching on.

Yes, at home or on the job, dad was always the efficiency expert. He buttoned his vest from the bottom up, instead of from the top down, because the bottom-to-top process took him only three seconds, while the top-to-bottom took seven. He even used two shaving brushes to lather his face, because he found that by so doing he could cut seventeen seconds off his shaving time. For a while he tried (Continued on Page 76)

★ Copyright, 1948, by Frank B. Gilbreth, Jr., and Ernestine Gilbreth Carey. This is a condensation of the book soon to be published by the Thomas Y. Crowell Co. ★

Bill tried to understand.
"We love each other,
so we don't meet again.
Is that what you said?"

Anything but Love

They were made for each other . . . it was the one thing that kept them apart.

By GERTRUDE SCHWEITZER

BILL stood looking unhappily out the window at the East River. He had expected the party to be dull, but not like this. Even at the dullest of parties he was never alone, never out of things. In fact, this was the first time in his well-adjusted, extroverted life that he could ever remember being out of anything.

Behind him, people milled and talked, unnoticing. A dozen different languages were tossed carelessly back and forth around the room, and he understood none of them.

"You'll get along all right," Dwight had told him. "You've had six years of French, haven't you? Most of them speak either French or English."

But he couldn't find anyone who spoke English. He couldn't, after the first few minutes, find Dwight, whom he had seen going out the door with a statuesque redhead, murmuring to her in one of the nine languages he spoke fluently. And when Bill tried his French on a short, bald gentleman with a tricolor ribbon across his expansive front, he was rewarded with a rapid-fire gabble out of which he could distinguish only one word, "magnifique," repeated several times.

"Oui," Bill said, nodding brightly. "Magnifique, indeed." And escaped to his post by the window, to brood on six wasted years of French irregular verbs, and a wasted evening at this U.N. party.

He could not remember now how Dwight had persuaded him to come in the first place, but persuasion was Dwight's stock in trade. That, and his peculiar talent for languages, had secured him his job with the Secretariat. He was only a kind of minor clerk, but he went around acting like a delegate, and most people thought he was somebody important. Bill, who had gone all through school with him, and Ella, Dwight's wife, were about the only ones who knew different, but they were both very fond of him in spite of his airs.

At the moment, however, Bill was not fond of Dwight at all; on the contrary, he felt that there was no one whom he hated so intensely. Dwight had left him alone in this Tower of Babel, after borrowing his last ten bucks, so that now it was impossible for him to leave unless he rising costs ?

(Continued on Page 133)

ECONOMICS ?
SAVE ?
Inflation ?

Ninth of a JOURNAL series

PEOPLE ARE PEOPLE THE WORLD OVER

ENGLAND: The Hiatts read and sew on winter evenings. They subscribe to several magazines, read Edgar Wallace mysteries and Western stories. Occasionally they listen to BBC variety programs and the nine o'clock news. Peter plays with a Christmas game.

CHINA: As head of the house, Ho Fu-yuan enjoys the special privilege of relaxation in a comfortable cane chair at the end of the day. The Hos have neither radio nor books nor magazines nor newspapers; their pleasure is in the simple things they do themselves.

FRANCE: The Redoums make the most of their limited leisure time. M. Redoum follows the news in the daily paper and Madame subscribes to a women's weekly, Petit Echo de la Mode. For the boys there is homework and for Sylviane a doll which must be put to bed.

ITALY: A big family, the Guercinis of Tuscany are apt to spend their leisure hours outdoors when the weather is pleasant, for the house is gloomy and has no electricity. Here they sit under an olive tree, the women sewing, the men and boys talking and making jokes about having their picture taken.

EGYPT: The el Gamels spend e nings "at home" in the livi room, from which the childr are barred (they have a sort

THIS IS THE

WHEN day is done, and twilight warns that night is near, a hush settles over the homes of the world. On the farm, chickens go drowsily to roost and lambs lie down in the pasture. Dew falls impartially on field and forest, and the voice of the cricket is suddenly loud.

The brief, delicious interlude between work and slumber is a time for patching the worn fabric of the day. Sitting by the fire in the English farmhouse, Tom Hiatt reads the morning paper at last, while Mrs. Hiatt darns socks for the children. In Pakistan, the villagers set their charpoys (cots) out under the Evening Star, and tell tall stories in the welcome chill of dusk. In Germany, the Stieglitzes spend the evening in the parlor, father reading the paper, mother mending, son Richard doing his homework, grandfather listening to Radio Frankfurt. In his African village, Zamba Aluma smokes his evening pipe. In Japan, there is a game of "go" between the Okamoto brothers, for a family championship which will probably never be decided. And in their Egyptian home, the el Gamels enjoy the shy companionship of Moslem man and wife.

GERMANY: In their old-fashioned parlor, the Stieglitzes enjoy an evening's peace. Herr Stieglitz settles down with the Wiesbadener Kurier or the daily paper. Frau Stieglitz mends and patches old clothes—rationing does not often permit buying new ones. Richard works on his geography lesson.

JAPAN: In the busy Okam household there are work play for everyone. Mother
ters an old kimono (left), gra

PHOTOGRAPHS for the Journal by Horace Bristol (Japan and China), Larry Burrows (England), Robert Capa (United States and Czechoslovakia), Marie Hansen (Italy), George Rodger (Egypt, Pakistan and Equatorial Africa), Phil Schultz (Mexico), David Seymour (France and Germany).

lay room downstairs). Mrs. el amel sews until the light fades, hile her husband figures his rm accounts and his taxes.

EQUATORIAL AFRICA: The large Aluma family live in a cluster of five reed huts, but their hours awake are largely spent outside. On a typical sultry evening you will find the boys playing soro (a kind of checkers) in the sand, while Zamba puffs on his pipe and the women beautify themselves.

UNITED STATES: Now that Arleen is taking piano lessons, evenings in the Pratt household are not so quiet as they once were. Still, it is a good time for father to go over the feed bills and butterfat records, for mother to sew on the machine, for the boys to read comics.

- Germany
- Japan
- Czechoslovakia
- France
- China
- Italy

by JOHN GODFREY MORRIS

WORLD AT HOME

"Humble" is the word for most of these farm homes. The Gonzalezes of Mexico live between windowless adobe walls. Reeds are the roof for the Usmans of Pakistan. Dirt is the floor for the Hos in China, the Zamba Alumas in Africa, the Baloghs in Czechoslovakia. Except in the Pratt house in Iowa, central heating is unknown. Only there, and in the French and German and Japanese homes, does incandescent light prolong the day. Elsewhere, an early curfew is imposed by the setting sun—broken only by lanternlight. The Aluma house is valued at $20 and the Hos' at $20,000,000 (Chinese), yet both are without radio, telephone, newspapers, magazines and books, and mail is by courtesy of passing travelers. The only public utilities common to all the world are the ancient elements—earth, air, fire and water.

Nevertheless, home is more than housing. It is a comfortable chair, a favorite thimble, a battered doll, a travel calendar, a black dog scratching himself, a kitchen clock, an unfinished serial story, a framed diploma, a Teddy bear. By such small tokens these twelve families, strangers in a baffling world, are familiar to one another.

PAKISTAN: After the oxen are fed and tethered for the night, the Usmans and their neighbors gather around for a session of the langar gup, the gossip hour. It is said that "in the hour before the sun goes down one half of India is whispering to the other half."

her figures on his abacus ht), the brothers play a game "go" (foreground) and grand-ther reads story to baby Naoo.

MEXICO: The Gonzalezes gather after supper in the entrance of their simple adobe home. Señora Gonzalez is content to sit and do some quiet mending. Baby Maria plays with her father before going to bed, and the boys shuck kernels of corn off the cob. The dog searches for fleas.

CZECHOSLOVAKIA: Sunday afternoon, in Europe as in America, is a time for doing nothing in the pleasantest way possible. Here the children sun-bathe while the older boys get ready to cycle to the village. The Balogh farmhouse looks larger than it really is.

PHOTOGRAPHS BY WILHELA CUSHMAN

SO RIGHT...

The simple, clean-edged fashions that are coming in, going South, forecasting summer.

The hand-knit sweater and flannel skirt, the spectator pump in brown-and-white and navy-and-white, the hand-sewn slip-on glove, the lighter stocking, the short-handled bag and the tailored envelope, the panama cloche.

Shorter 14-inch skirts, the length that everybody loves.

The almost-classics: the white sharkskin or linen suit, the flat-pleated white crepe dress, the gabardine coat-dress, dressmaker shirtwaist dresses for any hour.

Boxy squared-off jackets, often in tweed, often in red; the midrib bolero, covering bare or sleeveless tops, making a two-purpose costume.

The return of Chinese raw silks, jacquard silk, shirtings, silk serge, crepe de Chine, chiffon.

Checks, large and small, in suits and little coats, polka dots, pin-to-coin size, in blouses, scarves, hatbands, jacket linings.

The rightness of white and tricolor schemes: white with scarlet and navy. Beige and gray also with red and blue.

BY WILHELA CUSHMAN
Fashion Editor of the Journal

Cruise coat, right in fleecy wool, off-white, red or navy, belted or free, with small hug-the-head fur-felt hat, spectator pump, wool travel bag. Coat by Nathan Bader, hat by Mr. Joel white and color

Checks and terry cloth—young short shorts and bra with a boxy beach coat. Carolyn Schnurer.

Short hand-knit white cardigan with beautiful long-lasting doeskin skirt, for now and years to come. By Clare Potter.

Silk shantung with easy-to-wear slim lines, frog closing. By Ben Barrack. Straw visor by Dorothy Dickerson.

Shoulder-strap dress and bolero in polka-dot surah for day and night. By Adele Simpson.

little jackets

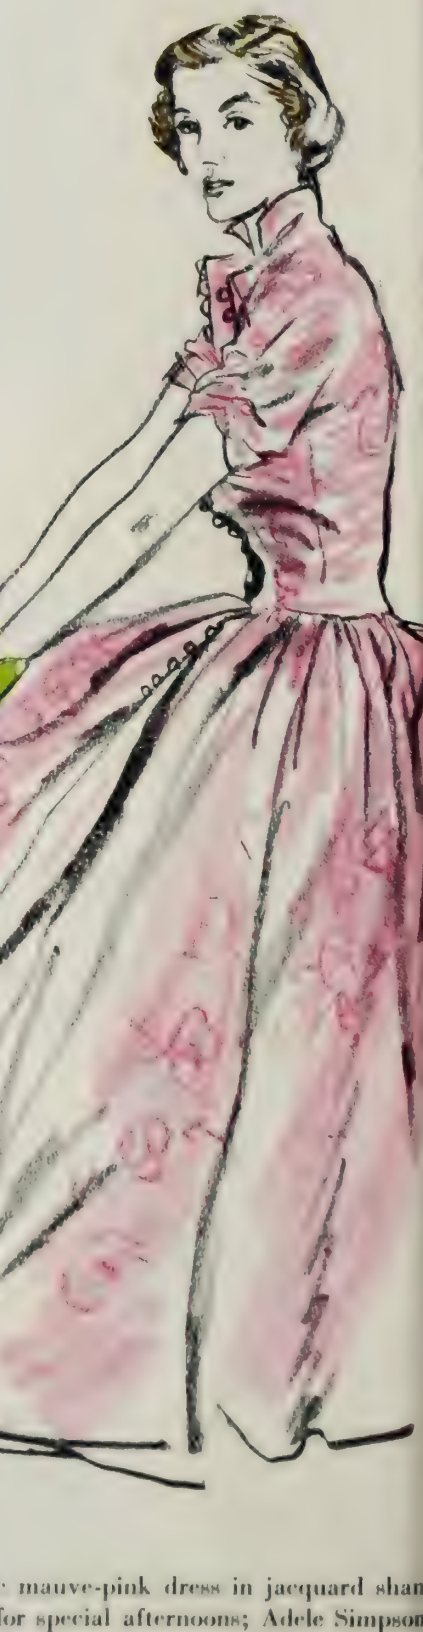
White and navy: the strapless pleated crepe dress with a crepe bolero, noon-to-dinner resort dress.

Classic white tailleur with a die-straight skirt, by Alvin Handmacher. Crocheted cloche, silk scarf.

The slim box-jacket suit in gray jersey with navy polka-dot blouse and jacket lining. By Clare Potter. Piqué beret.

night and day

The



By WILHELA CUSHMAN
Fashion Editor of the Journal

For the young and slim: a Portuguese shepherd's jacket is made in terry cloth, back-buttoned with cork, by Carolyn Schnurer.

Flame-red cotton damask high-midriff dress, Mexican cotton bolero, by Brigance. Shantung accessories by Tina Leser.

Exotic mauve-pink dress in jacquard shantung for special afternoons; Adele Simpson.

PHOTOGRAPHS BY WILHELA CUSHMAN

Costume in jersey: high-waistline skirt and long stole over a strapless two-piece bathing suit. By Claire McCardell.

Personality Clothes.

One in a wardrobe—Directoire dinner dress of polka-dot silk with a stole, by Adele Simpson.

Bravado checks—Bruno's short tweed jacket worn with enormous chic over white linen.

Mexican rebozo, in citron-yellow cotton, personality touch for simple knitted swim suit by Brigance.

Beauty on the beach: strapless bra, full skirt in cotton checks (comes with shirt), by Brigance.

PHOTOGRAPHS BY FRANCESCO SCAVULLO

MODEL, STARLET. Katherine Cassidy sees our pattern in soft mauve wool. Long sleeves, patch pockets. Sally Victor's tangerine color side-swept beret.

This is the pattern . . . these are your dresses

We think it's a good idea, when you have found a pattern that is particularly becoming, to take advantage of that basic line. This does not mean that all your dresses will look alike by any means, but it does assure you of a becoming dress. Of the many ways of changing the effect, our pattern shows you several necklines . . . ways of varying the skirt, and three different sleeve lengths. We think this is an ageless pattern . . . that if you are 15 or 50 it will look well on you. We have tried it in wool, silk, rayon, lace and cotton and liked the results in each fabric. Each dress has a personality of its own . . . and best of all, they are all easy to make. To order the pattern, No. 2547, send 50¢ to JOURNAL Reference Library, Philadelphia 5, Pa. Sizes 12 to 20. ★ BY NORA O'LEARY

BUSY MATRONS find pure silk twill with back interest, velvet collar, braid trim, perfect for afternoon.

If you're a CAREER GIRL you will appreciate this comfortable wool jersey; self-facing, push-up sleeves.

Our EVENING version uses border lace for a pretty finish. Rhinestone buttons and velvet sash.

DRAWINGS BY MARGARET SOMMERFELD

YOUNG (or old) MOTHERS find a pretty bow neckline flattering. Unpressed pleats in the skirt.

For summer or cruise, the YOUNGER SET goes for white piqué. Stand-up collar. Polka-dot scarf, belt.

In a SUBURB or a CITY you will look cool and pretty in gray cotton. Nice, too, it cost less than $4.

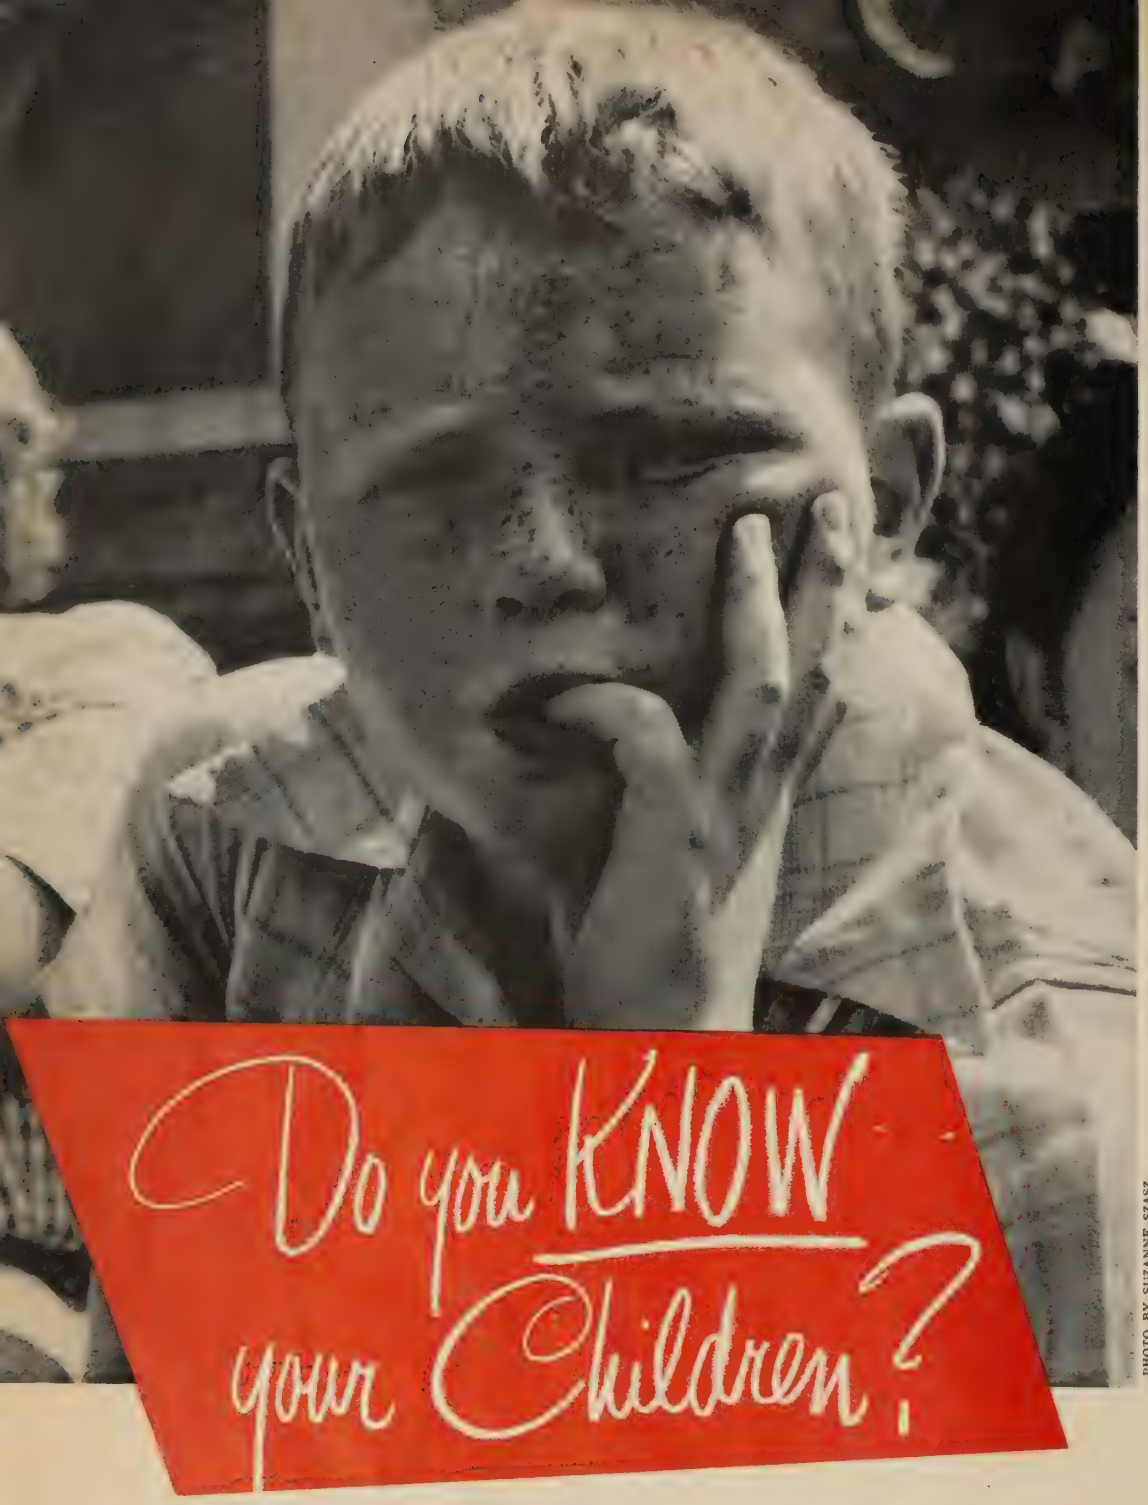


PHOTO BY SUZANNE SZASZ

Laughter and perpetual surprise are only the minor rewards of getting acquainted with children.

By BARBARA BENSON

WHAT do your children worry about? Are they happy? What days have been high points in their lives?

You probably know their favorite foods, their favorite games, and you can hardly avoid knowing their favorite radio programs. Undoubtedly you know their most effective ways of annoying you—but are you equally sure what you do that "makes them mad" at you? Just what do you know about your child?

In a recent and novel inquiry, JOURNAL interviewers throughout the country talked to a representative group of youngsters older than ten, younger than fifteen, asking them these questions and many others.

Their answers, like their behavior, are sometimes funny, sometimes touching; they range from just what you'd expect to completely unpredictable.

For example: Boys think they have more fun than girls. Girls think so too. . . . Boys think their fathers have more fun than their mothers. Girls think so too. . . . More mothers than fathers do things that make the youngsters mad. . . . And arithmetic heads the list of "least liked" subjects in school. . . . You don't find that surprising? In that case, what subject do you suppose is most often mentioned as "best liked"? That's arithmetic too.

In fact, if this piece has a moral, this is it: Unless you're an expert, it's dangerous to generalize about more than one child at a time. And by "expert" we don't mean parent. About the only thing you can count on your children to do is to surprise you, and their method of surprising you may be to do just what you expected! Contradictory? So are children.

Worries. Though the youngster who really worries a lot is rare, most children do worry some. Among the eleven-through-fourteen-year-olds interviewed,

7 per cent say they worry a lot;
26 per cent say they worry a fair amount;
52 per cent say they worry a little;
15 per cent say they don't worry at all.

So that 85 per cent admit to some worrying. Perhaps you wonder what a carefree youngster can find to worry about. Half their worrying is done under one of these three headings:

School
War
Sickness or death in the family

If you think of school as a youngster's business or occupation, the list may be very much like your own!

Incidentally, have you ever been annoyed by your husband's preoccupation with the newspaper when you want to talk to him about Jane's tonsils? The same divergence of interest may show up between your son and daughter. School is the No. 1 worry of both boys and girls, but more boys worry about war and the atom bomb than about their families, more girls worry about their families than about war.

About 6 per cent worry about their future, usually in such immediate terms as vacation plans or earning money outside school; 4 per cent about their own character traits, and 3 per cent about being injured or ill.

But from this point on, handy classifications cannot describe the children's worries; they cover a wide range, from such childish woes as flat tires on a bicycle, a broken window and teeth straightening to dawning boy-and-girl trouble among the fourteen-year-olds: "Who will my next girl be?" . . . "Does a certain boy like me—and do I like him?"

Several hint of family discord: "I worry about pleasing mother"; "Getting along with my brothers and sisters"; "Who's going to get mad at me next?"; "Seeing people get nervous"; and "My father coming home drunk." Some suggest insecurity, either financial or emotional: "Where the family is when I get home and the house is empty"; "Whether the house will be there when I get home from camp"; "Whether my daddy will get his crop"; and "Whether my father will get the job he wants."

And one thirteen-year-old boy speaks for many when he says, "It depends on what I've done wrong."

What are they most afraid of? Snakes and animals (usually some particular kind of animal—bulls, or dogs, or rats) top the list for both boys and girls. After that, their lists differ: boys name a particular individual (usually a parent or a teacher), war, fire, drowning and accidents. Girls list "the dark," individuals, storms, fire and accidents.

Note that fears and worries don't overlap very much. School, the No. 1 source of worry, is far down the list of fears. And one fifth of the youngsters, more of them boys than girls, say they are afraid of nothing at all!

What are some of the things they like? It's time to turn our attention from worries and fears to things the youngsters enjoy, for their lives are far from gloomy. In fact, 62 per cent say they are "very happy." (Among adults, an earlier JOURNAL inquiry found that 43 per cent consider themselves "very happy.")

They like to collect things. Three out of four have hobbies, commonly centering around some kind of collecting. The single pursuit which attracts the greatest number of boys is stamp collecting, with building airplane models second. The commonest hobby among girls is collecting pictures of movie stars.

But the most interesting aspect of these hobbies is that, despite youngsters' love of doing what "the other kids" are doing, no one fad dominates the field. The list of items collected, aside from stamps, pictures of movie stars and match-book covers, is long, diversified and, to an adult, sometimes baffling. Like the kids themselves, their hobbies defy quick summary.

Here are a few unusual ones, which are representative only in that they reflect youngsters' flair for the individual:

Boys collect: post cards, bottle tops, rubber, Army insignia, keys, actor dolls, 1943 pennies, model plastic planes and white objects. (Take care, the next time you turn out your son's pockets—that lethal bit of broken glass may be the prize of his "pieces-shaped-like-a-map" collection.)

Girls collect: Christmas cards, gum wrappers, salt and pepper shakers, little vases, perfume bottles, glass animals and Burma Shave jingles.

They like the radio, and typically claim they listen about two hours a day. They like the movies, and three out of four say they go at least once a week.

Boys' favorite pastimes are baseball, swimming, reading and football; but girls, being more indoor-minded, put reading first, and add swimming, bicycling and going to the movies.

Notice that reading ranks among the favorite pastimes of both boys and girls. What do they read? Yes, comic books—but not exclusively. One third of the youngsters were reading a book at the time of the inquiry, or had

PICKOW

Rapture is a thing children willingly share. They have so much of it.

RAY RUSSELL

Probably these boys are flying through the air. They just appear to be reading.

finished one in the week preceding; a few of these had read two.

You knew children read comic books, but do you know how many? The child who says he reads only one comic book a week is an exception; two thirds say they read at least three, and one third say eight or more! Incidentally, most of the youngsters who had read books had also read comics.

Try it on your own children. You might find it fun, sometime, to ask your youngster one of our questions: "What day in your life would you most like to live over?" The answer won't necessarily be Christmas. Though the days chosen are usually marked by a departure from routine, the actual incidents which make the day memorable are often, to an adult, quite commonplace.

By way of example: "The day we all went to my cousin's and got home late at night!" was a high spot for one youngster, and another remembered with affection a day marked by nothing more startling than a pillow fight!

In our inquiry, one child in ten said Christmas, 7 per cent "my birthday," and another 7 per cent named the day they received some longed-for possession, usually a pet or a bicycle.

Beyond that, the answers defy easy classification, except on one basis—"I had fun!" That's the reason most often given for choosing one day above all others as one to live over. "Having fun," though, may mean the drama and excitement of some special event: ("the day my sister got married"); the pride of achievement ("the day I . . . rode a stubborn horse—caught a big fish—drove the car"); or it may mean some more obvious treat, like a party or a trip to the zoo. Sometimes the basis is simply remembrance of a mood of sheer glee, as in the case of a girl who would like again to live through "the time my bunch of girls went on a laughing spree!"

Unexpectedly, several youngsters chose the day of some physical mishap! It's startling to find that the day a boy would most like to live over is the day he broke his leg; or a girl, the day she was in an automobile accident. The explanation? It's given by an eleven-year-old girl who chose the day she had her tonsils out: "It was exciting and different, and I had all the attention. Besides, it didn't really hurt much till the next day."

But one girl chose, not a day of fun, but a day that apparently marked a turning point in her life—the day before her father died in the hospital.

The bottom boy is also having fun.

EWING GALLOWAY

If you want to know how the quiz kids in your family compare with our national cross section, here are a few facts and figures. Of the youngsters we interviewed,

- 97 per cent correctly identified Dick Tracy, the comic-strip sleuth;
- 95 per cent correctly identified Bing Crosby;
- 93 per cent correctly identified President Truman;
- 52 per cent correctly named the mayor of their community;
- 50 per cent correctly named the governor of their state.

And about six in ten, more of them boys than girls, claim to know their parents' political preference.

"What does your mother do that makes you maddest?" Ask your own youngster if you like, but don't count on a candid answer. For when a few of our interviewers tried it on their own children, they drew polite blanks. Yet in the inquiry, only one youngster in eight said mother does nothing to make him (or her) mad. (But one in four could think of nothing father did to make him mad.)

Here are the commonest complaints against mothers: Restraint ("Not being allowed to do what I want to"); "She makes me do the chores"; too much direction; nagging.

And here is the bill of particulars against father: Restraint; chores; severe physical punishment; nagging.

Perhaps this inquiry reveals something about parents, as well as about children. The first two items on both lists reflect no more serious problem than the necessity of growing up. Banning fountain-pen filling from the living room, or taffy apples from the car, may be self-preservation to an adult, but restraint to a youngster. As for chores, who wouldn't rather go swimming than mow the lawn or wash the dishes? But nagging, too much direction and severe physical punishment require a little more explaining—on the part of parents.

Here again, the summary tells the story inadequately. Let's look at some of the specific and hard-to-classify complaints, first against fathers: "He reads his paper when I want to play with him." . . . "He walks from base to base when we play ball." . . . "He calls me 'pretty boy'!" . . . "He snores on Saturday afternoon." . . . "He never changes his mind." . . . "He says, 'We didn't do that when we were your age!'" And here are some of the particular charges against mothers: "She says, 'We'll see' instead of yes or no." . . . "She looks messy when my boy friend comes." . . . "She tells what I've done wrong in front of people." . . . "She calls me 'sweet' in public." . . . "She brings up something I've done wrong, when I've forgotten it, or tried to."

Though more mothers than fathers do things to make their children mad, 61 per cent of these boys and girls think their fathers have more fun than their mothers. Why? Because father goes out more and sees more people, he has more leisure and more freedom: "He goes out to work, but mother has to stay home and do the housework"; and "Mother has to take care of us kids!"

As the youngsters see it, the advantage of being a male is even greater in youth: 92 per cent of the boys, and 58 per cent of the girls think boys have more fun than girls.

Boys say they have more fun than girls largely because of the things they can do for amusement. They can "play rougher," take part in more active sports, climb trees and get dirty. Girls, they say, just sit around home and don't do anything: "They just talk on the telephone"; "They aren't much interested in the world"; and, alas, "Girls have to do the housework!"

Though a good many girls concede the appeal of boys' sports, the prerogative they envy most is—greater freedom.

If you quiz your kids about their plans for the future, don't expect them to have given the matter much thought. Most of the youngsters told us glibly enough what they want to be when they grow up, but their choices are influenced by glamour as often as by serious interest or talent. Still, some of their ideas are realistic and practical. As a group, these children display a puzzling blend of maturity and childishness—just as does an individual child.

Here are the leading choices of boys: Professional athlete, farmer, aviator, doctor.

And here are the votes of girls: Nurse, stenographer, teacher, housewife.

Though only 14 per cent of the girls said they want to be housewives, 85 per cent said they want to get married! Have they chosen occupations merely to fill the gap between school and marriage, do they plan to be career wives—or have they, like the youngsters they are, simply answered the questions without attempting to be consistent?

Chances are this last is the explanation; since our inquiry wasn't intended to produce conclusions, we made no systematic attempt to find out.

But an occasional girl is already thinking in terms of marriage and career. One eleven-year-old said she wanted to be either a writer or a teacher, because "a writer can work at home, and a teacher has her week ends and summers free. Either way, I'd have plenty of time to play with my kids!" She planned, incidentally, to have four.

This woman—which was more dangerous:
to love or to forget her?

KINFOLK

By PEARL S. BUCK

IV

IN the alley she was frightened, but waved to a passing ricksha, and directed the puller to the house of Doctor and Mrs. Su.

In the hospital nearly everyone knew that Dr. James Liang's younger sister was meeting an American who had returned to Peking after his discharge as a soldier because he had been in love with a Chinese girl who had died in the hospital after giving birth to a boy who was now a hospital foundling. But Louise thought her secret safe with Mrs. Su. No one had told James or Mary, and no one told Doctor Su. The Chinese gossiped prudently. Where it did not matter all was discussed, but beyond prudence no one went.

It was Mrs. Su who came out to meet her when the servant had announced her.

"My brother and sister know," Louise whispered.

At this moment Doctor Su came to the door. "Miss Liang!" he called with the bantering smile that was his approach to all young and pretty women. "Have you run away from home?"

Louise tried to laugh. "I am really only on my way somewhere else," she said. "I just stopped to see if Mrs. Su would come with me."

"Where?" Doctor Su asked with ready curiosity.

"Some foreign friends."

"Don't go, don't go," Doctor Su exclaimed. "Stay here with us."

"Then I must telephone," Louise said.

Mrs. Su was immediately helpful. "Su," she said to her husband, "please return to our other guests."

Mrs. Su led Louise into the small study where the telephone stood on the desk and she closed the door.

"Now," she whispered, "what will you do? Your brother will be angry with my husband if he finds that I have let you meet Alec here. You know I like to help you, Louise, but I must think of my relations with my husband."

Louise felt her heart grow hard toward Mrs. Su and all Chinese women. "May I telephone?"

"Certainly that."

"Then please—may I be alone?"

Mrs. Su hesitated. "I ought better to stay here," she said, "but I will stand outside the door."

So saying, she went out, and Louise called the hotel where Alec Wetherston was living. His voice answered, a pleasant tenor at whose sound her lips quivered.

"Alec, it's me—Louise."

"Why, darling!" His voice took on depth. "Where are you?"

"At the Su house. Alec, my brother and sister know."

His voice was somewhat breathless. "What will they do?"

"I don't know, but I've got to see you."

"Shall I come over there?"

"Mrs. Su is afraid."

"I could meet you at the hotel door and we could walk."

(Continued on Page 121)

★ Copyright, 1948, by Pearl S. Buck ★

ILLUSTRATED BY AL PARKER

Soup for Supper

By

ANN BATCHELDER

FIRST thing, I want to wish all of you a Happy New Year. I mean a wish that rides right through the coming year. New Year means three hundred and sixty-five days. And for each one of those days, a satisfying, a peaceful and prosperous New Year! If things go right and straighten out and we have faith and make the most of what's best, I guess it will be all right for almost everyone. And if you wish your wishes hard enough, so it will be. Or so they say.

Going partying. It doesn't seem possible that it was only a week ago that folks were all involved in a welter of tissue and tinsel and twine and Christmas greens and ribbon, does it? One can only turn around twice and it's New Year's. You can't beat the calendar. First there's Thanksgiving, and right on its heels come these two party days. Why, you hardly get the dishes done from Thanksgiving dinner, before the tree has to be set up and the Christmas goose hangs high. And even after the open house for New Year's there still will be parties for young and old all through (Continued on Page 96)

Menu
(Planned for 6)
Petite Marmite
With Grated Cheese
Homemade French Bread
Pickled-Peach Salad
Pepper-and-Onion Dressing
Royal Rice Custard
Coffee
PHOTO BY STUART-POWLER

Line a Day

By ANN BATCHELDER

1 Now we have started another year. Pretty soon you—and I—can begin sweeping up the fragments of those resolutions we're always thinking about and settle back and be comfortable. As between resolutions and comfort, I'll take comfort. Every single time.

2 An eggplant is probably the most beautiful vegetable grown. And one of the best to eat. Always slice it, peel the slices and salt them well. Put them in a deep plate, one on top of another, put a plate on top and a weight on top of the plate (I borrow the flatiron for this). Let it stand an hour, drain off the evil-tasting juice, wash the slices in cold water, dry between towels and you're ready for business.

3 Now to get a new and different flavor to the fruit of the eggplant, marinate the slices in French dressing for fifteen minutes. Then broil them under a good heat until they're tender, not soft.

4 Crystallized ginger is a fine idea. Mince a quarter of a cup very fine, and add it to your sugar-cooky mixture. Quite a treat, and with tea such cookies are one of those surprise items.

5 When you fry oysters next time, do them this way: dip them in lemon juice, then in crumbs, then in a mixture of beaten egg, a little oyster liquor and a touch of grated lemon rind. A last dip in crumbs, and then into deep fat.

6 Many folks must like cabbage more than I do or cabbage would be as rare as hen's teeth. Anyway, put a few slices of lemon in the water when you cook it. Lemon does improve so many things—even cabbage.

7 From an old cookbook: "To carve a fowl, after removing the usual limbs, wings, legs, etc., plunge the knife into the breast and cut under the merry thought." This is something to think about, Miss Leslie.

8 No one knows what an oyster considers good treatment. Out of the shell, an oyster is strictly not on his own. His destiny rests in more or less experienced or imaginative hands. And now to one more receipt that takes in both.

9 Sauté in a little butter or margarine as many oysters as you need. When the edges curl they are done. Chop them fine. Mix them with a few minced peeled mushroom caps and an onion. Season with lemon juice, salt and pepper.

10 Second canto: Now add this to a cream sauce thick enough to make a mixture that, having cooled, you can shape into small croquettes. Dip in beaten egg, in fine cracker crumbs, again in egg and crumbs and fry in deep fat. Serve with a rich, creamy cream sauce.

11 Some of you have asked me about hearts of palm. Split each "heart" and arrange on a bed of water cress or lettuce. French dressing is your dish. Chill well. Another salad for the salad file. I tried to French fry them once. Only once.

12 Everything gets grilled, from grapefruit to partridges. Nothing very radical about an hors d'oeuvre of little pork sausages, wrapped like a gift package, without tulle and ribbons, in very thin pastry and grilled—or baked in the oven if that's more convenient.

13 Remembered-blessings dept.: Hot chocolate, rich and creamy from its final beating, each cup topped with whipped cream. Made by adding a cup of strong coffee to the chocolate while in the double boiler. And that unforgettable flavor of vanilla and almond in the cream.

14 Somehow onions belong to winter and roast pork. Parboil large Bermuda onions and drain them well. Scoop out the centers and save them. Chop them fine, mix with chopped crisp bacon, a little minced celery, cream to make a nice soft mixture, season, and stuff the onions. Cover with buttered crumbs. Set in a pan and bake until the onions are tender. These are glorified onions, if such can be.

15 When you brown your meat for braising or for stews—you do brown first, don't you?—sauté some sliced onions with the meat. That's enough for onions this time.

16 Afterthought: Marinate today's steak in a French dressing made with lemon juice, cut onion and a tiny piece of garlic, for several hours. Overnight is better. What it does to a steak is wonderful. You'll see.

17 Regarding a lemon pie, don't forget to add the grated rind of a lemon along with the fresh lemon juice. Grate and squeeze and you'll get a lemon pie. The best part of it, anyway.

18 When a spicecake asks for raisins, have you ever tried chopping those elegant black figs and using them for a change?

19 Bananas baked are fruit and vegetable in one, proper in a dozen different ways. Baked in honey, butter and lemon juice, basted while baking, they come out pink. At least they do for me. And they're delicious, but definitely.

20 Shrimp- or crab-meat fish balls (not balls, exactly, but the dropped-from-a-spoon kind) made like codfish cakes are very fine eating indeed. I've meant to tell you this before but haven't—add to your codfish-and-potato mixture some chopped crisp bacon. What a flavor.

JANUARY THAW

When I see the snow come down,
I don't go to town,
Just sit home and read a book;
And the first thing that I know
There is no longer any snow,
But water dripping everywhere,
Then I take the air.

21 There are chicken soups and, like summer guests, "Some are, some are not." A small smattering of curry in a cream of chicken brings you smack up against the Taj Mahal. Try it.

22 A favored dish in my house is stuffed potatoes. One particular way I admire is a baked Idaho stuffed with tuna fish, fixed up with lemon juice, salt and pepper, paprika and minced onion. Put these together with hot cream and butter or margarine, mix with the scooped-out potato insides and cover with buttered crumbs. Bake in an oven at 350° F. until crisp and brown on top.

23 Answer to query: In answer to your question as to how the British bake on a girdle when you thought a girdle was something to hold you in and your nylons up, I can only say that to them a girdle is what a griddle is to us.

24 Ever make pea soup, old-time split-pea soup? And the ham bone did more than its share of salting? It will, sometimes. Well, put in a peeled potato. When the potato is done, take it out. It will gobble up the salty taste.

25 Duck can be more than dead duck. Or duck-soup material. Beautifully cooked and brown and crackly without, delicate and delicious within. Parboil orange peel cut fine and add to the sauce. Sautéed orange sections also go in. Between duck and orange there is an affinity and never a divorce.

26 I am yet to be convinced that oatmeal or corn meal improves the stuffing for chicken or turkey. What's wrong with nice day-old white bread? Keep the meals where they belong, do.

27 A quick and delicious bite when next you need an appetizer. Split small rolls, butter, spread with tomato paste, then sprinkle thickly with grated cheese. Broil until the cheese melts and the rolls are hot.

28 Orange shells (you know what I mean, the shells). Save them and fill with mashed seasoned sweet potatoes, little bits of butter on top and set in a hot oven for a "hetting up." A lovely garnish, especially with ham or fried chicken.

29 And I guess you know that now we can get those marvelous guava and orange shells to fill with cheese mixtures to ride along with the salad. They come in sirup. They are divine. For full dress they are perfect in every way.

30 One more choice bit and I have done. Well, then, cut up pineapple—or use the "chunks"—with apple, pear or peach and banana, cover with Melba sauce and serve as a macédoine or on hot cooked rice. Don't spare the sauce—it's raspberry, you recall.

31 Author advertises. Would you be surprised if you found I was writing a book? I have the title, out of my latest contest conducted by poll and canvass, selected by a competent judge of what would hit the public. It is Forever Hamburger. Until then or sooner, yours forever.

DRAWING BY ROBERT L. TAYLOR

Campbell's BEEF NOODLE SOUP···ONE OF THE NEWEST! ONE OF THE FINEST!

BEEF STOCK...

slow-simmered from rich, flavorful beef

NOODLES...

golden and tender, add their hearty nourishment

PIECES OF BEEF...

generously ladled in, to make this soup extra-good eating

...and one of the best-liked!

No sooner was Campbell's Beef Noodle Soup introduced than people took to it—made it a family favorite wherever it was tried.

Women discovered that this good soup holds a lot of helpful mealtime answers. Husbands enjoy the rich, full flavor of its beef stock . . . the generous pieces of beef. Children like its grand taste of beef, and the golden egg noodles that make it extra-hearty. So mothers serve it often, thankful for its beef-nourishment in these days of meat-short meals.

Campbell's

BEEF NOODLE SOUP

LOOK FOR THE RED-AND-WHITE LABEL

I coil a loop
And give a fling
Round this good soup—
Then Boy! I sing!

POINT OF NO RETURN

(Continued from Page 42)

"John, don't you think the idea's worth while? I mean—quoting from those letters?"

His father put his hands in his pockets and leaned against the parlor mantel. "This puts me in an embarrassing position. I know your veneration for Miss Lyte and how your family have always felt about her. I have said she was a dear old lady. As a human being she was fascinating because, given an ego and the industry to drive a feeble talent to the limit, she contrived to make something out of nothing. It all goes to show what can be done if only you have a deep belief in self. That's what I would say if I were writing the paper. Think of her as a determined, industrious human being with charming intentions, but don't quote a line of her poetry. It would be unfair to her memory. She wrote like the sweet singer of Michigan."

"But, John, they published her poems in Harper's Magazine."

"And in the Youth's Companion," his father said. "Don't forget that mentor of our childhood, Esther."

"John," Esther Gray said, "what am I going to do about that paper?"

John Gray crossed the room to where she was sitting and put his hands on her shoulders. "We'll go through with it. We can't let the Historical Society down, can we? You children go into the other room and close the door and you read me what you've written, Esther."

Every evening for a week they all ate supper in strained silence, and directly after supper the parlor door would close. His mother began to look pale and sleepless.

One evening after supper, his father rubbed his hands. "Tonight mother has a little surprise for us," he said. "Come into the parlor and sit down and listen."

"John," his mother said, when Dorothea and Sam and Charles sat in the parlor, "I feel so awfully silly."

"Of course you do," John Gray said. "Now remember what I told you. Stand up and look around, and don't keep looking at the pages. Look up at the audience."

His mother looked red and hot and worried. "Are you going to introduce me, John? Are you going to pretend to be Mr. Lovell?"

"I could if I wanted, but I don't want to be like Laurence Lovell, even in the realm of fantasy."

"Well." His mother looked at them over the top of her papers and began to read. "Every one of us here has seen a certain gray stone house with a mansard roof, known as Lyte's Castle. It does not in the least resemble a castle." She looked up. "I still don't see why you put that in, John. Everybody knows it."

"Everybody will know all the rest of it too," John Gray said, "and it has to last for half an hour. Now you've spoiled it. Start over."

One thing was gained by all that preparation. All the Grays would always remember Alice Ruskin Lyte. Charles could see his mother standing straight and alone in the flowing dress of the period, looking like a full-length Sargent canvas. Her auburn hair was coiled at the nape of her neck. Her thin, eager face and her wide brown eyes were stamped with honest anxiety, because she wanted everyone to like her and that paper.

On his way to the Webster Grammar School, Charles always walked past the building of the Clyde Historical Society. He knew that the Historical Society had once been the Gow house, left to the Society by old Mr. Francis Gow. He knew that the brick ell which had been added had been built by a contribution of Mr. Francis Stanley, president of the Wright-Sherwin Company. He also knew that the Historical Society was the repository of many valuable things left to it in wills.

"Charley," his Aunt Jane said, when they reached the corner of Spruce and Johnson streets, "remember not to touch anything." She reminded him not to touch anything again as they crossed Fanning Street.

"My," Dorothea said, "isn't there an awful crowd? Poor mother."

There was, indeed, an unusual number of people about the old Gow house.

It was one of those hot afternoons when the leaves on the trees were almost motionless and when everyone in Clyde hoped that a sudden east wind off the ocean might change the weather.

As Charles, his aunt and Dorothea neared the path leading to the front door, three members of the clergy were standing on the lawn, each surrounded by loyal members of his congregation. Dr. Morton Berry, from the Smith Square Baptist Church, stood in the shade of a catalpa tree, fanning himself with his straw hat. The Episcopal clergyman, the Rev. Gerald Pond, looked better fed and more professional in his lightweight black suit and reversed collar. Miss Lovell stood near him with her niece Jessica, a thin little girl in a white party dress, white socks and patent-leather shoes. Standing nearer the doorway were the ladies of the Unitarian Women's Alliance, supporting their pastor, Mr. Henry Crewe.

"Well, this is a real occasion for you, Miss Gray," Mr. Crewe said. "Alice Ruskin Lyte. What a tempting subject for Mrs. Gray, and one I am sure she will handle beautifully."

"Well, we won't know till it's over," Aunt Jane said. "Charley, aren't you going to shake hands with Mr. Crewe?"

"How Charley's growing," someone said. "And Charley won the fifty-yard dash at the picnic, didn't you?" Mr. Crewe said. "What did you do with the prize?"

"I ate it," Charles said. He was stricken, because his answer made everyone laugh, and he edged furtively away from the little group. Then, while no one was looking, he walked alone into the Historical Society.

The rooms were so crowded that he was allowed to wander unmolested from room to room and to encounter their confusion undisturbed. His aunt found him gazing at a suit of Japanese samurai armor.

"Charley, where have you been?" she whispered, just as though they were in church. "We'll lose our places if we don't hurry." They moved into the auditorium. There was a buzz of voices and the slapping sound of folding chairs, and the warm air smelled of cologne and talcum powder. "We're sitting in front," Aunt Jane whispered. "There's your father. Move in beside your father."

His father raised his eyebrows slightly and patted the chair beside him. "Look at your mother," he said, and then Charles saw that his mother was seated on a platform between Doctor Pond and Mr. Lovell.

To Charles' way of thinking, Mr. Lovell was peculiarly dressed, in a blue coat and white flannel trousers and a soft shirt, and he especially noticed the mourning band on Mr. Lovell's sleeve—a sign that Mrs. Lovell was dead. Mr. Lovell was smiling in a faint, embarrassed way and looking at his watch. Finally he put away his watch, rose, and walked over to a podium at the edge of the platform. As Mr. Lovell stood up, the voices in the room died down.

"If we are all here," he said, in a somewhat high but pleasant voice, "will the meeting come to order. We will begin with a prayer from Doctor Pond."

The prayer was long and Charles lost the thread of it. There was a creaking of chairs and Mr. Lovell stepped forward again.

"This," Mr. Lovell said, "is the twenty-seventh of our historical afternoons, and judging by the number present they are becoming increasingly successful. Our speaker is not an imported speaker. She is what we might call local talent." He paused and smiled. "Not that I do not mean local talent is not very good talent. This entire building is local talent, from its fine cornices, carved by our shipwrights, down to the stone arrowheads, made by our first inhabitants. Now I imagine that all of us know the Grays. For generations a Gray has always appeared when he or she was needed. On the little monument by the First Landing Place, you will see the name of a Gray. A Gray was in the Civil War, and most of us here remember our late friend, Judge Vernon Gray. Now we have another Gray with us, Mrs. John Gray. She, too, answers our call in our time of need, and she will speak to us on The Clyde of Alice Ruskin Lyte. Mrs. Gray."

His mother stood up, and Charles felt his heart beat faster. "Every one of us here," she began, "I am sure, has seen a certain gray stone house with a mansard roof . . ."

Charles saw his father draw a handkerchief from his breast pocket and mop his forehead. She was getting near the end of it now. She was coming to the part that had a poem in it. . . . Now his mother's voice stopped.

"Thank you," she said. "Thank you very much for listening."

Then he heard the applause around him.

"Clap, Charley," his father said. "It's over."

Charles and his father walked to the edge of the platform.

"That was magnificent, Esther," John Gray said, "perfectly magnificent."

"It was," Mr. Lovell said. "It was a most interesting paper. Any time I want a good paper, I know where to go, John."

"Let's go out on the lawn," his father said to Charles and his mother. "Someone will bring us tea."

When they were standing on the lawn, Charles heard her say to his father, "You shouldn't have been so sarcastic, John. But perhaps he didn't notice. Here he comes. He's bringing us some tea."

"Oh, there you are," Mr. Lovell called. "I've been looking for you everywhere."

"Why, thanks, Laurence," John Gray said. "You keep that cup and stay with Esther. I'll get some."

"Why, don't think of it, John," Mr. Lovell said. "It's a pleasure. Here."

More ladies, all holding teacups, were appearing on the lawn. "Here they come," John Gray said. "Here's your public, Esther."

Then Charles saw Miss Lovell and Jessica, and Mr. Lovell saw them too.

"Why, Jessie darling," Mr. Lovell said, and he knelt on the grass and threw his arms around her. "How's my little girl?"

It did not seem right that Mr. Lovell should make such an abandoned gesture of affection right on the lawn of the Historical Society. No one, however, seemed to feel it was in bad taste. Instead of being embarrassed, everyone stood watching the little scene with understanding sympathy.

"Isn't it sweet?" Charles heard someone say. "It's as pretty as a picture."

"Pa," Jessica said, "can't we go home now, please?"

"Yes," Mr. Lovell answered, "in just a few minutes, Jessie."

The way to learn about Clyde was to be brought up there. One learned who the Lovells were imperceptibly by a word here and there, and one grew up knowing that the Lovells could say what they wanted and do what they wanted and that they would always be right no matter what they said or did. One learned that there was a living plan in Clyde. Everyone had a place in that plan and everyone instinctively seemed to know where he belonged.

You began to learn quite early that certain people who lived on Johnson Street were not Johnson Street people, and hence, because you knew, their living on Johnson Street did not disturb the plan. For example, the Stanleys lived on Johnson Street. They had bought the old Holt house, and it was still called the Holt house though the Stanleys lived in it. Mr. Stanley, everyone knew, was richer than the Lovells or the Thomases. Yet the Stanleys' prosperity was without the same face value as that of others. They lived on Johnson Street, but they did not belong there.

You came to understand that the Holts, who had sold their house to the Stanleys and had moved to the North End, still belonged to Johnson Street. Miss Sarah Hewitt's house needed painting and Mr. Fogarty, who worked for her and for the Lovells, too, gave her only one day a week, but Miss Sarah Hewitt belonged on Johnson Street. The same was true with the Lovells. Mr. Lovell was not rich, but his money somehow had the dignity of age. You heard it spoken of as the Lovell money. He was a director of the Dock Street Savings Bank and a trustee of the West India Insurance Company, which were both partially founded on Lovell money. He was a trustee of the public library. You came to understand that Mr. Stanley could do more generous things because he was richer, but his contribution did not have the same value as a Lovell or a Hewitt contribution.

The same was true with Spruce Street. The Grays belonged on Spruce Street and so, too, did the Masons, who lived next door; but when Vincent Sullivan, who was in the contracting business, bought the house on the corner of Spruce and Chestnut, he still did not belong on Spruce Street.

There were no secrets in a town like Clyde and so, of course, everyone knew all about the Grays. Everyone knew that John Gray was harder to place than some people because he was different from other people.

(Continued on Page 63)

Mrs Anthony J. Drexel, III

Back of beautiful distinction like Mrs. Drexel's is always perfect grooming

Her Lovely Face shows you the gracious charm that is her Inner Self Famous for her vivid starry beauty, the world responds to Mrs. Drexel's loveliness wherever she goes. The minute that you see her, you are aware of her inner serenity, of the cultured, friendly charm that is the keynote of her exquisite self.

Your face* is the only You that others actually see. It is the You they first take to their hearts. It is the You that they remember best. Do, then, help your face to say only pleasing, lovely things about you. Its loveliness, its charm, rest very much with *what you do for it.

She uses Pond's!

"I think it's a superb cream—the best I know," Mrs. Drexel says

Let your face show you to others as the delightful person you really are. Care enough to keep your face softly lovely with the immaculate cream-cleansings that do so much for skin. Always at bedtime (for day cleansings, too) give your skin Pond's "Outside-Inside" Face Treatment. This is the way:

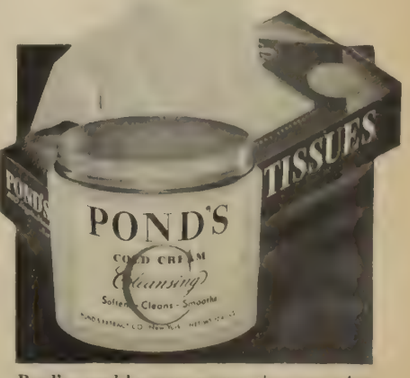
Hot Stimulation—splash your face with hot water.



Cream Cleanse—swirl Pond's Cold Cream—lots of it—all over your face. This will soften and sweep dirt and make-up from pore-openings. Tissue off well.

Cream Rinse—swirl on a second Pond's creaming. This rinses off last traces of dirt, leaves skin lubricated, immaculate. Tissue off.

Cold Stimulation—give your face a tonic cold water splash. Now look at You! Your face seems re-made!

This "Outside-Inside" Face Treatment literally acts on both sides of your skin. From the Outside—Pond's Cold Cream softens and sweeps away surface dirt and make-up as you massage. From the Inside—every step of this treatment stimulates beauty-giving circulation.

Never feel it is merely vanity to develop the beauty of your own face. When you look lovely, it spreads out from you to all who see you. It gives you a charming air of happy confidence that makes you seem a lovelier person to be with. It brings the real Inner You closer to others.

Pond's—used by more women than any other face creams. Today—get this favorite big, dressing-table size of Pond's Cold Cream.

PARTY-PRETTY!

And so easy with

JELL-O
BRAND
A GELATIN DESSERT
SIX DELICIOUS FLAVORS

CALIFORNIA APRICOT MOLD . . . Don't wait for a special occasion to try this Jell-O charmer! Serve it any time—for the family, or Important Guests. It's a shimmering beauty that's a certain success, made with real, genuine Jell-O. And it's this easy to turn out . . . Just dissolve 1 package Jell-O (Strawberry, Raspberry, or Cherry) in 2 cups hot canned apricot juice and water. Turn into mold and chill until firm. Unmold. Garnish with canned apricots, whipped cream, and sprigs of mint. Note: For a large mold, double above recipe.

- 1 package Jell-O (any red flavor)
- 2 cups hot canned apricot juice and water
- Canned apricots

CANDY STICK SPECIAL . . . A children's party treat that's Jack-in-the-box quick to make! So luscious... with two grand Jell-O flavors in one dish! Prepare two* or more of your favorite Jell-O flavors as directed on the package. Turn into separate bowls and chill. (Use flavors such as Orange and Strawberry Jell-O, Raspberry and Lemon Jell-O, or Lime and Orange Jell-O.) When firm, break up Jell-O into small flakes with a fork, or by forcing through a potato ricer. Arrange flakes of two flavors in sherbet glasses. Insert 3 striped candy sticks in each glass.

- 2 (or more) packages Jell-O
- Candy sticks

Two packages make 8 servings. For 12 servings, use 3 packages. For 16 servings, use 4 packages.*

JEWEL SALAD SUPREME . . . It's a topaz-and-ruby delight to the eye—and heavenly-perfect to taste! Sunny pineapple and bright red cherries combine with tangy Lemon Jell-O to make this sparkling party salad. Dissolve Jell-O and salt in hot water. Add fruit juices. Chill until slightly thickened. Then fold in pineapple and cherries. Turn into large mold or individual molds. Chill until firm. Unmold on crisp salad greens. Serve with whipped cream dressing. Makes 5 or 6 servings. Note: For extra-large mold, double recipe.

- 1 package Lemon Jell-O
- ¼ teaspoon salt
- 1 cup hot water
- ¾ cup canned pineapple juice
- 4 teaspoons lemon juice
- ¾ cup drained canned pineapple wedges
- ⅓ cup well-drained quick-frozen or canned pitted red cherries

JELL-O IS A REGISTERED TRADE MARK — THE PROPERTY OF GENERAL FOODS

(Continued from Page 60)

and Charles must have always been aware of that unspoken difference. No matter what his father did or said, he had a right to be different because he was the Judge's son. He had always been a wild boy and had given the Judge a hard time. He was not lazy, but he never stuck to anything. He and Laurence Lovell had started out in Harvard together and they might have been friends, but he didn't even bother to go with the right people. It was all right for him, though it would not have been for Virgil Mason or Melville Summers, to join the Pine Tree Fire Company and to help man the Pine Tree machine at firemen's musters and to play poker at the Pine Tree firehouse, because everyone understood that Johnny Gray was different. The trouble was, he was the only boy and he had always been made too much of. Everything was too easy for Johnny Gray. He never got into a college scrape, but he had not liked it there, and after a year and a half the Judge had taken him out.

The Grays had always been solid people, not shipowners or warehouse owners but solid people, and the Judge owned stock in the Crawford Mill. When Johnny Gray was tired of Harvard, it was natural for the Judge to put him in the mill and wait for him to settle down. It looked as if he would do it, too, when he began calling on Esther Marchby, old Doctor Marchby's daughter. Perhaps the Judge was never sure. He had tied up Johnny Gray's share of the mill stock in trust when he died, though he let the girls own theirs outright.

It was not the fashion in Clyde for parents to discuss each other before their children, but it was possible to hear bits of talk.

"It never does any good to nag John," Charles heard his Aunt Jane say once. "Father always said so."

"I never do nag at John," his mother answered. "I wouldn't dream of doing it."

"You mustn't ever let him see you're disappointed," Aunt Jane said. "It's just as bad as nagging and it only makes him sullen."

"I'm not disappointed," his mother said. "I don't see why you say I am."

"Well, I never could have married anyone like John," his Aunt Jane said. "I couldn't have stood it."

"Well, I can stand it, Jane," his mother said, and she laughed in an exasperated way. "You wait, John will do something someday. Of course they don't understand him at the mill."

"What's he planning to do?"

"Why, I haven't any idea," his mother answered, and then she laughed again. "And if he never does do anything, Jane, I shan't mind. I love him just the way he is."

His father was the type of person whom women always loved. His mother was right, too, when Charles came to think of it later. John Gray finally did do something, and everyone was very much surprised.

Malcolm Bryant had called Clyde a ghost town, as though it were like an abandoned Colorado mining settlement. It was true that Clyde had not changed much since the sailing days, because its harbor was now useless for heavy shipping. It had no water power like the mill towns farther up the river and it had little to attract summer tourists. It was a place to be born in and a place to leave, but it was not a ghost town. There was a curtain, translucent but not transparent, between the present and the past.

When you were young you did not bother about it; you accepted the older people and their deaths very easily, because you were so occupied with living. Charles knew that Aunt Mathilda was going to die and everyone said it was a mercy and so much easier for her poor sister Jane.

All one's ideas about everything underwent perpetual change when one was growing up, such as ideas of God and immortality and of wealth and poverty, and even one's family was not a constant quantity.

That was the way it was with Sam and his father and with Dorothea and all the rest of them. The scene Charles remembered most clearly, the one that changed his ideas about them most, must have occurred when he was twelve and when Sam was seventeen. It was obviously some months after his Aunt Mathilda's death, but the scene was unique and too vital to be confused with this or that.

His father had been in Boston all that day, and Charles had been aware for some time that certain things happened, or were apt to happen, when his father went to Boston. It was a summer afternoon again, and except for Mrs. Murphy in the kitchen no one else was in the house. Charles was reading The House of the Seven Gables in the parlor. He heard the front door slam and then the sound of his father whistling in the hall. When his father entered the parlor, he was carrying a copy of the Boston Evening Transcript, a box of cigars and a box of candy.

"Well, well," he said. "Where's mother?"

"She's out," Charles said. "I think she's at the Women's Club."

"Well," his father said, "have you a knife in your pocket, Charley? I think I'll open this cigar box."

He sat down in the wing chair and lighted a cigar, and the smell of the cigar smoke mingled with his words.

"I think it's time, Charley, that we had a talk about your education. I'm afraid you're having a wretched education; not that I'm against our public-school system, but it is a school of life, not letters. I wonder how it would be if you went to Groton next year? You'd be old enough to enter the first or second form. Then a year at Harvard—and perhaps a year at Oxford." He flipped the ash from his cigar into the empty fireplace. "I wish we could all go abroad, but it's difficult with the war, even with Wilson keeping us out of it." He paused and looked at the smoke cloud above him. "If we can't go abroad, it might be a good idea for you to see a little of this country. We might take a trip in a week or two—Chicago, the Great Lakes, the Rocky Mountains, San Francisco." He paused again, but his thoughts were moving in a swift, agreeable stream. "China. I don't see why it wouldn't be possible to consider a little trip to China. You've never read Huc and Gabet, have you? Or Lafcadio Hearn?" He stood up and began pacing about the room, waving his cigar in broad arcs. Then they heard the front door open. "That must be your mother. Hello, Esther."

"John," his mother asked, "did you have a good day in Boston?" Charles always remembered her expression, both pleased and doubtful.

John Gray said, "You know, Esther, I was thinking coming back on the train that it's time we got away from the heat. How would it be if we went for two weeks to Poland Spring?"

"You know how it would be," his mother said. "What would they say at the mill?"

Groton school and China were gone, but Poland Spring was there.

"Never mind the mill," John Gray said. "We could go there and sit quietly and drink Poland water. Rocking chairs, soft music, a little golf."

"But I can't play golf, and you can't play it very well."

"That's just it," John Gray said, and his mind had moved from Poland Spring. "There isn't a golf course here, but there's the Shore Club."

"But we don't belong to it," his mother said, "and if we did it's twelve miles away."

"We ought to belong to it," John Gray said, "and we ought to have a car. Then we could drive to the Shore Club. And why shouldn't we play golf? Sam ought to learn a few skills before he goes to Dartmouth. It's nice of Jane to do this for us, but I don't know why she insists on Dartmouth."

"Well, as long as Jane's doing it," his mother said.

John Gray stared at the end of his cigar. "Dartmouth," he said. "It is, sirs, a small college, and yet there are those who love it. His marks are bad enough and he likes football, but if he can't get into Harvard or Yale, why not Amherst or Brown?"

"I'd better help Mrs. Murphy set the table," his mother said.

John Gray began to laugh. "All right, we can talk about the Shore Club later. Dear me, I'd better get washed."

After his father left the room, his mother still lingered. "Charley," she said, and she lowered her voice, "did he promise you anything?"

"No," Charles answered, "he didn't exactly promise anything."

"What were you talking about?"

"About a lot of things; school, and I guess about China."

"Oh, dear. Did he get as far as China?" She did not want him to answer and she had something else to say. "Charley, we both love him very much, don't we? I want to tell you something about him, dear, something I think you're old enough to understand. You mustn't feel hurt when he promises you something and then forgets. When he makes a promise and doesn't keep it, it means that he wants us to have the things that he wants us to have. Do you see what I mean?"

"Yes, I guess I see."

It was the first time that his mother had ever spoken to him in that way about John Gray or had ever admitted that in any way his father was different from other people. It was not a bad apology, either, for John Gray. Yet there was one thing that Charles could not understand then or later. Why should anyone promise something unless the means were there for making that promise good? That was the weakness behind it all, the insidious, deceptive plank which destroyed all the rest of the structure.

"You see we've got to believe in him," his mother said. "It would hurt him so if we didn't." John Gray was always escaping

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Country Boy Sliding

By Robert P. Tristram Coffin

On all the white miles of fine snow
Between high spruce woods and the bay
There was only one living thing,
A farm boy at his winter play.

He pulled his new sled up the hill,
Lifted it without a smile,
Ran and threw himself on it
And soberly hurtled half a mile.

He rose and dusted diamonds off
His scarf and breeches, took the rope
And drew his sled with lonely eyes
Up the long hill's lonely slope.

The slider took his pleasure deep,
As quiet country people do;
Without lost motion or a sound
Through sober loveliness he flew.

In crystal beauty like a trance
This was all there was of joy
To point the world-wide stillness up,
A rapt unsmiling little boy.

The rabbits sat along the swamp,
Each on his cushion there behind,
They watched with grave approval this Pleasure so of their own kind.

The little boy made an intense
Business of his winter fun
Until the spruces swallowed up
The golden cart wheel of the sun.

Then on short legs he took home,
Without a whistle, by deep starlight,
A joy as deep in him for good
As a strong man's wedding night.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

There's a word for good Peanuts ...and Peanut Candy

YES, only the world's peanut experts can roast and salt peanuts the way PLANTERS do. And only PLANTERS can make those big Jumbo Blocks taste so good.

You'll love those big, Virginia peanuts, roasted and salted to crisp perfection. In the cellophane bag, they're famous as America's Nickel Lunch. More energy than in meat, fish or eggs.

And PLANTERS famous Jumbo Block is pure peanut candy at its very best. They're both only 5c each —both Planterrific!

These PLANTERS products are also made in Toronto, and sold everywhere in Canada.

PLANTERS is the word for PEANUTS

Now You Can Enjoy

America's Premium Peas and Corn

PICTSWEET

From the Wonder Gardens of the Golden West

Here's a happy combination for your table. PictSweet Peas and Corn, right from the West. Where gentle rays from the western sun smile on fertile valleys . . . where peas grow best and corn grows sweet as honey . . . that's where America's Premium Peas and Corn are grown. And now they are brought to YOU, with pride, by PICTSWEET! Serve them tonight!

VEGETABLE PLATTER WITH PEAS AND CORN

by Barbara Quinn

PictSweet Home Economist

BUTTERED PICTSWEET PEAS

1 can PictSweet Peas
2 tablespoons butter
¼ teaspoon salt
Dash pepper

Drain liquid from peas and reduce by boiling, to about ⅓ cup. Add peas, butter and seasonings. Heat, but do not overcook. . . four servings.

BUTTERED PICTSWEET CORN

1 can PictSweet Whole Kernel Corn
¼ teaspoon salt
Dash pepper
2 tablespoons butter

Drain liquid from corn and reduce by boiling, to about ⅓ cup. Add corn, butter and seasonings. Heat, but do not overcook . . . four servings.

SUCH A TREAT . . . SO BUTTER SWEET

SO TENDER—SO SWEET SO GOOD TO EAT!

Watch for it!

ASK YOUR GROCER FOR PICTSWEET FRESH FROZEN FOODS

from hurts, he was expert at it. "My, it's getting late. I'd better set the table."

"Do you want me to help you?"

"Oh, no," she said, "your fingers are all thumbs, Charley. And here's Sam. Sam always knows when it's mealtime."

Sam had attained his full growth when he was seventeen and he already had the build of an athlete. Instead of working that summer, Sam had been playing ball in the Twilight League, on a team made up of employees from Wright-Sherwin and boys who hung around the news store. He had barely passed his college-board examinations and Charles had heard his father say that at least Sam might have done a few hours of daily reading instead of fishing or taking girls to the movies or lining out flies. Yet when Sam came in that evening he was like a younger and slightly larger replica of John Gray. He had the same swinging walk, the same quick smile, the same sharply defined features and the same brown hair.

"Why, Sam," Esther Gray said, "where have you been?"

"Oh, over at the Masons'."

"Oh. Seeing May?"

"That's right. I wouldn't be seeing Jackie or Old Man Mason, would I?"

"Well, I think that's very nice," Esther Gray said.

"What's there for supper?" Sam asked. "Fish?"

"Cold roast beef, and we have ice cream."

Sam sat down in the wing chair. "Hi, kid," he said.

"Hi," Charles answered.

"What you reading?"

"The House of the Seven Gables."

Sam said, "You're always boning up on books, aren't you, just like the Old Man?"

"I can read if I want to."

"Sure you can if you want to, but where does it get you? Look at the Old Man." Sam yawned and pointed at the ceiling. "Up there reading Boswell. Is the Old Man back from Boston yet?"

"Yes, he's upstairs."

"How's he acting? Is he happy or is he sad?"

"He's happy, I guess."

"Oh, he's happy, is he? Well."

"Well, what?"

"Well, nothing," Sam answered. "Listen, kid, you ought not to be sitting here alone pounding books. Get around and know people. There are a lot of snooty people in this town and there are a lot of guys driving dump carts and clamming who are just as good as anybody else and nobody's going to tell me different."

"Who's been telling you?"

"Never mind who's been telling me. I stick by my friends."

"Has May Mason been telling you?"

"LISTEN, kid, there are lots of other girls around besides May Mason."

"Did you and she have a fight?"

"Who said May Mason and I had a fight?"

"You just act mad about something," Charles said. "That's why I asked you."

"Well, it would be nice if you and Jackie Mason didn't hang around and listen so much. I'm not mad. I'm feeling fine. And the next time you go over to the Masons' and you see May, tell her if she wants someone in lace drawers it's all right with me."

"So you did have a fight with her."

Sam pushed himself out of his chair. "Listen, kid, don't knock yourself out talking. That's all everybody does around here, talk, talk, talk."

"What do you think you're doing now?" Sam said, "You think you're funny, don't you? I'm not going to sit around here all my life. I might go up to Canada."

"What would you do in Canada?"

"I'll tell you what I'll do," Sam said. "I'll join the British army and go overseas. You don't know there's a war, do you?"

Everyone knew there was a war in Europe and that Pancho Villa had been making trouble in Texas, but Charles knew that Sam was only angry about something May Mason had said.

Neither of them went on, because they heard their father on the stairs.

"Hello, Sammy," John Gray said, and then he raised his voice. "Esther, is supper nearly ready?"

Supper would be ready now in just a minute.

"What are you two boys talking about?" John Gray asked.

"Nothing much," Sam answered. "Just talking."

"It seemed to me that I heard your voices raised in some sort of altercation. There's nothing more futile than shouting in an argument, Sam. It betrays a lack of intellectual resource."

"All right," Sam said, "maybe I haven't got any intellectual resource."

"That's the awkward thing about being seventeen," John Gray said. "Now when I was seventeen—well, I suppose I was like you. Well, it doesn't seem possible, Sammy, but I suppose I was."

CHARLES saw Sam's face grow red.

"I was madly in love when I was seventeen," John Gray went on, "and that may have made me worry about my personal appearance. Sam, that suit you're wearing—it's time we began thinking about your clothes. I'll have to take you in to Boston, and get you something new."

"When?"

"When?" John Gray repeated. "Oh, almost any time. We've got to get you looking right for college, Sammy. I don't know exactly what the well-dressed young man wears at Dartmouth, but we ought to be able to inquire."

Then Charles heard his mother calling. Supper was on the table.

Charles wanted to say something that would break the sense of strain around him. He wished that his father would understand that Sam was hurt about something and that it was no time to make fun of him or to call him Sammy; but his father was in no mood, then, to notice anything but his own swiftly running thoughts. Sam sat down quietly at the table and every now and then Charles stole a glance at his face. Sam was looking stolidly at his plate.

John Gray was talking about the Poland Spring House again. He was saying that everyone was getting too much in a rut, and that was the trouble with Clyde. At the same time, his mind was back again on what had happened to him when he was seventeen. They used to have two horses then, and one of them was a dappled gray named Skip. It was a pity they had no horses now, but it was about time he bought the boys a boat.

"Well, why don't you get one?" Sam said. "Joe Stevens' catboat is for sale."

"Is it?" John Gray asked. "How much do they want for it?"

"I don't know. Around three hundred dollars."

"Well, Sammy," John Gray said, "you might go around and look at her and if she looks all right find what they're asking."

"You mean you'll buy her?"

"I don't see why I shouldn't."

"John," Esther Gray said, "three hundred dollars is a lot of money. Let's get the house painted first."

John Gray said, "I don't know whether it's worth while painting the house. We ought to have a larger house. Dorothea needs a place to see the boys, and Sammy will be bringing friends from college, and Charley ought to have a pony. He ought to learn how to ride."

"Oh, John," Esther Gray said, and she laughed, "let's try not to think of everything at once."

Then Charles heard Sam make a choking sound.

"What's the matter, Sammy?" John Gray asked.

"Nothing. I was just thinking about the pony."

"What about the pony?"

Sam looked carefully at his plate, but his voice was hoarser. "Nothing, except it's the same old pony I was going to get."

"Sam," his mother said. "Sam."

No one spoke for a moment. John Gray was looking thoughtfully at Sam, and something made Charles sit taut and motionless

"I know," John Gray said slowly. "I'm ry about that, Sammy."
Sam looked slowly up from his plate. "If u're sorry, why do you go on with it?" he ked.
"Sam," Esther Gray said sharply. "Sam."
It was all new to Charles, new and ungettable. Sam was not the person he ought he was, and neither was his father, they sat there gazing at each other.
"Just exactly what do you mean," John ay asked, "by going on with it?"
"The same old guff," Sam said. "That's
."
"I think it might be just as well"—his her spoke very carefully—"if you were to ve the table, Sam."
In the silence that followed, Sam pushed ck his chair and rose. "Sure I'll leave the ole."
"Sam," his mother called, "come back e and apologize to your father."
"Oh, never mind," John Gray said.
eave him alone, Esther," and before he l finished speaking the front door slammed.
They were both intensely embarrassed.
ere was nothing left but the family re-nsibility for smoothing things ver, for tending that nothing had happened.
"Charley, do you know whether Sam is ubled about anything?" his mother asked.
wonder whether he's been having some uble with May Mason. Charles, will you out and get the ice cream?" But before arles could move, his father spoke.
"Esther, I think if it's all the same to you go upstairs and read awhile. It's been a supper, but Charley will eat my ice am for me, won't you, Charley?" and he ped Charles on the shoulder.
"Oh, John," his mother
gan. "Sam didn't an——"
"Oh, never mind it, her." John Gray walked her end of the table
bent down and kissed
"There are some things
ant to figure out upstairs and I can do it er without ice cream."
The house on Spruce Street was one of se two-and-a-half-story oblong dwellings ch Charles came later to associate with v England seaport towns. It was plainer n anything on Johnson Street, but with same architectural plan—the hallways ning from front to back, the staircase n its landing, the spacious rooms on the nd story and the lower-studded, smaller ns above, hot in summer, cold in winter.
rles and Sam slept on the top floor.
When Charles went to bed that night, the n was rising and the moon was large and w, almost full. From the shadow where ay he could see the rest of the room, ing not the least as it did in daylight but finite and larger, as though there were valls. This must have been why, when woke suddenly, he had the unpleasant ation of not knowing where he was until aw the windows and the trees outside.
n he saw a shadow and heard Sam's
e.
"Charley, I didn't mean to wake you up."
"What is it?" Charles asked. "Is any-g the matter?"
"I just looked in," Sam said, and he sat n on the edge of the bed.
"Where've you been?"
"Out, around," Sam told him. "Walking nd, thinking."
Neither of them spoke for a while and rles knew that Sam did not want to be e.

"If he hadn't shot his mush off," Sam said,
"I wouldn't have shot off mine. It's always same thing. First he shoots off his mush then he ends by walking around his n like a squirrel, and it's never his fault n he's licked. Whenever he get his hands oney, he goes up to Boston and loses it."
Charles did not know that Sam was disng the eccentricities of a profit system at it was his own first contact with a ent of living that he was later to know ell.
"How does he lose it?" he asked.

"You wouldn't understand it. Never mind how he does."

There were a great many things about life that Charles did not understand, but he could start with the assumption that his father was a highly intelligent man and that he must have known perfectly what the odds were. There was something which prevented men like him from stopping, something beyond the realms of ordinary reason.

"Listen, kid," Sam said, "if you're over at the Masons' tomorrow and you should happen to see May, I wish you'd give her this." He was holding out a folded piece of paper.

"Why don't you give it to her yourself?"

"You give it to her. That's a good kid, Charley." Then Sam was gone and Charles lay staring at the moonlight, still wondering why his father acted as he did in Boston.

CHARLES always thought of the Masons when things went wrong at home. He found himself wishing that Mr. Virgil Mason were his father and that the Grays could be happy like the Masons, living in a well-painted house with everything in order, even if Mr. Virgil Mason was not as bright as his father and never read much or talked about books. Mr. Mason was in the insurance business. Mrs. Mason must once have been as pretty as May, but she was too stout and did not worry any longer about her looks.

His own mother was much prettier, but he was sure she was not so happy as Mrs. Mason. May was pretty but she was not stuck up about it and she did not correct him the way Dorothea did, and Jack was his best friend.

Charles could never discover why Jack was discontented too. He used to think that Mr. Mason was the best sort of father one could imagine, but Jackie said he wished his father were more like Charles' father.

> Go often to the house of thy friend, for weeds choke the unused path. —EMERSON.

"I don't see what's the matter with him," Charles had said; but Jack had said there was plenty the matter with him. He was always in his shirt sleeves doing work that other people should do for him.

"Besides," Jackie said, "my father never wants to do anything but sit around the house. He doesn't know the right people, and almost everybody likes your father."

Charles agreed with Jackie Mason that they were both going to be very different from their fathers. They were going to make more money when they grew up, and they weren't going to live on Spruce Street. Yet Charles could never understand why Jack worried because his grandfather had been a druggist and why he was always complaining about the Mason house and the furniture. Jack had won the composition prize in the seventh grade by writing a composition on the boyhood of Andrew Carnegie, and his mind was always on success.

It was Saturday afternoon when Charles went over to the Mason house with Sam's note in his pocket. He opened the front door without knocking because he was Jack's best friend, Mrs. Mason had said, and he could go out and come in any time he wanted. He heard Mr. and Mrs. Mason talking in the front parlor.

Mrs. Mason said, "Why, hello, Charley."

"Hello," Charles said. "Is May around?"

"Why, May's in the back room practicing, dear," Mrs. Mason said, and then Charles could hear the notes of the Masons' old upright piano, "and Jack's out in the shed, splitting kindling, and there's some lemonade in the kitchen."

That was the way it always was at the Masons': lemonade, and everyone was happy. As he moved toward the back room, he heard May playing a waltz from The Pink Lady. May's yellow hair was gathered up in a knot and she was wearing what Charles knew was her third-best dress, but still she looked very pretty. Though her head was turned away from him, he already had an impression of her blue eyes and her red, half-parted lips.

"Why, Charley," she said, "I didn't know you were there. You sneaked in like an Indian."

"GET BETTER CAKES THIS EASY WAY— use Spry with Cake-Improver!"

SAYS AUNT JENNY

"ARE there any chocolate lovers in your house? Surprise them with this Chocolate Rhapsody Cake. They'll say it's wonderful, you're wonderful! Such rich, chocolaty flavor. So lovely and light and tender. Yes, that special Cake-Improver ingredient in Spry sure lives up to its name. And remember, no other type shortening has it! For better cakes, better pies, better fried foods, that are so digestible—use Spry!"

"Try my Chocolate Rhapsody Cake

"RICH . . . CHOCOLATY . . . DELICIOUS!"

1¾ cups sifted cake flour
1½ cups sugar
¾ teaspoon salt
½ teaspoon baking powder (or 1 teaspoon tartrate baking powder)
⅜ teaspoon soda
½ cup Spry
3 ounces chocolate, melted
1 cup buttermilk or thick sour milk
1 teaspoon vanilla
2 eggs, unbeaten

Sift flour, sugar, salt, baking powder and soda into mixing bowl. . . . Drop in Spry . . . Add melted chocolate, buttermilk and vanilla, and beat 200 strokes (2 minutes by hand or on mixer at low speed) . . . Scrape bowl and spoon or beater . . . Add eggs and beat 200 strokes (2 minutes on mixer at low speed). . . . Bake in 2 deep 8-inch Sprycoated layer pans in moderate oven (350° F.) 30–40 minutes. Spread Chocolate Harmony Frosting on top and sides of layers and garnish with thin slices of Brazil nuts which have been softened in hot water before slicing.

Chocolate Harmony Frosting—Put 2 egg whites, unbeaten, 1½ cups sugar, 5 tablespoons water, 1 teaspoon light corn syrup and ⅛ teaspoon salt in top of double boiler; mix thoroughly. Place over rapidly boiling water; beat constantly with rotary egg beater until mixture holds a peak (about 7 minutes). Remove from hot water, add 1 teaspoon vanilla; beat until cool and thick enough to spread. Before spreading on cake, fold in 2 squares chocolate, melted and cooled, carefully and thoroughly into frosting.

Save money—get Spry in the economical 3-lb. can

ANOTHER FINE LEVER PRODUCT

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

with CAKE-IMPROVER

"I was making a lot of noise, but you were making more."

"It isn't nice to call it noise. I wish I played as well as Dorothea."

"You play better. I like it a lot better. Sam wanted me to give you this." He pulled the note out of his pocket.

"Oh," May said, and she snatched it out of his hand and tore open the envelope, and then she put her hand on his arm. "Don't go away, Charley. Please stay while I read it."

As she read it, with her head turned away from him, he felt the warm grasp of her fingers on his arm and he wished she were his sister. Standing there beside her, so close that her shoulder touched his, he could have read the note if he had wanted, but he never knew what Sam had written. He only knew that May was crying. She had dropped the note. She had drawn him toward her as she still sat there on the piano stool. Her head was pressed against him and she was crying. He was still very shy with girls, particularly with girls of May's age.

"May," he said, "don't cry."

"Oh, Charley, I'm just crying because I'm so happy. Tell Sam"—she held him closer—"tell Sam it's all right."

He was relieved when May stopped crying and found her handkerchief and wiped her eyes. "I guess I'd better go and see Jackie," he said.

"All right." Before he knew what she was going to do, her arms were around his neck and she had kissed him. "Charley," she said, "you didn't mind it, did you?"

He never knew what Sam had written or why any note of Sam's should have made May Mason cry. He felt proud and pleased. He knew she was Sam's girl, and he always thought of her afterward as Sam's girl. She was still Sam's girl when she finally married Jeffrey Meader. It was a secret which they always held in common. He knew and she knew that she would have married Sam if Sam had lived.

He always associated Sam with the end of childhood. When the music of World War I played, Sam was always there. It was a long way to Tipperary, and while you had a lucifer to light your fag, smile, boys, that's the style, I didn't raise my boy to be a soldier to shoot some other mother's boy. Sam always came back with those tunes. Sam had enlisted in the National Guard.

CHARLES was through Dartmouth and working in Wright-Sherwin before he began to realize that no human problems are unique. He must always, though he only half knew it, have shared his father's discontent with what he had. He was very sure that success and happiness were the same thing, when he was twenty-three, yet he could already see that different people had different ideas of success. It was a subject which he and Jack Mason discussed often. Jack had gone to work in Wright-Sherwin, too, after he had graduated from Amherst. Naturally, they each would bring up personal examples. Charles, who knew Mr. Lovell only academically then, did not consider Mr. Lovell a successful person, but Jackie said he was the most successful man in Clyde. Mr. Lovell knew the right people, not only in Clyde but along the North Shore and in Boston, and that was what success meant, but Charles said Mr. Lovell could not run Wright-Sherwin.

"That's exactly what I mean," Jack said. "He doesn't have to. He has everything that running Wright-Sherwin could give him."

There was a blind spot, Charles realized later, in everyone's line of reasoning. He could see that living on Johnson Street was not the end of everything and his nebulous ambitions were already larger than Jack Mason's. If you wanted to pick a successful man in Clyde, you could take Old Man Stanley, who ran Wright-Sherwin. Then you could go on to Mr. Thomas, who was president of the Dock Street Savings Bank. Or you could take Mr. Sullivan, who ran his contracting business and owned shares in a dozen small enterprises.

From this gallery of Clyde's great men, Charles could turn to his own father, who, by contrast, was a habitual failure, though actually there were many like him in Clyde who were much worse off. If John Gray did not know when to stop when he started, at least he had his own ideas of when not to start; and there was no use starting, he wanted Charles to understand, unless you had some capital. In the summer of 1916 and the next winter, when he had inherited his share of Aunt Mathilda's estate, he would have succeeded if Hugh Blashfield had not doled out the money by degrees, a thousand dollars at a time. If Hugh Blashfield had let him have the whole twenty-five thousand dollars as he had asked, instead of handing it to him in driblets, the whole story might have been different, because you had to have capital. He had tried it once with the five thousand that was left him out of trust at the time of the Judge's death and he had tried it again with the thirty thousand which had come to the family from Doctor Marchby, but this was something that Charles had learned only from his mother. Then he had tried it again with Aunt Mathilda's legacy. If Hugh Blashfield had not tried to stop it, it would have been a different story, but Hugh Blashfield had no imagination. Hugh was nothing but a small-town lawyer.

John Gray's appearance had changed very little since his reversals of 1916. His hair was shot with gray and so was his mustache, but he had retained his posture and he had not put on weight. He could still read without glasses and he still had the appealing smile of a younger man. As Aunt Jane used to say, John had matured beautifully, and Charles had even heard his Uncle Gerald Marchby admit it once, on one of those rare occasions when he and Aunt Ruth Marchby came to call. It meant a good deal when the doctor, for Uncle Gerald was a doctor, too, like Charles' maternal grandfather, had a kind word to say about his brother-in-law. He said he did not know what John had done to keep so young.

John Gray answered that if he looked young it was because he had not worried for years. He had no financial worries, and Jane had paid for Charles' education, such as it was—he could never understand why Jane had wanted first Sam and then Charles to go to Dartmouth. He did not have to worry about the children. Charles was in Wright-Sherwin making twenty-five dollars a week, and Dorothea, who never could seem to find anyone suitable for a husband, although she had tried, was comfortably established in the public library. She still had someone keeping company with her. It was Elbridge Sterne, who had come from Kansas City and was doing something about metallurgy in Wright-Sherwin. No, he had no financial worries. If anybody worried about the mill, it ought to be Gerald and Hugh Blashfield. He had suggested that they sell the family's holdings, as cotton mills in New England were on the downgrade, but that was their responsibility, since they were trustees for the Judge's estate. It was their blood pressure that ought to rise, not his.

BESIDES, he did not gamble. He was pained to see that Gerald and Ruth looked surprised but it was true, he did not gamble. He had attempted some investments occasionally in Boston, of a speculative nature, on the rare occasions when he had been allowed a little capital, but that was all over, now that Gerald and Hugh saw to it that he had no cash but pocket money. He could not understand why certain people looked on him as a black sheep just because he had attempted to make a few speculative investments. He was faithful to his wife, and that was more than could be said of certain individuals on Johnson Street and on other streets in Clyde—but the trouble with Clyde was that Clyde never forgot.

Everyone knew that John Gray had run through money, thousands and thousands of dollars of it. Everyone knew that Mrs. Gray and Dorothea would not have been able to afford even a part-time maid or a cleaning woman and that Charles could not have gone to college if Miss Jane had not helped out. If you were in the family you were always conscious of this, and though his father always treated those matters lightly when he mentioned them, John Gray was bitterly ashamed of his failures; but Esther Gray always understood his sensitivity, and Dorothea and Aunt Jane, and if the subject of poverty came up in the family it was always slurred over with great speed.

Charles first fully understood this family feeling through the fact that his father was not put on the committee of the Clyde Fund after Mr. Finch had died.

Charles had been working for more than a year at Wright-Sherwin. He had recently been moved into the accounting department under Mr. Richard Howell, one of those assiduous slaves of detail so useful in an office. The man whose place Charles had filled had been fired by Mr. Howell, who used to say that things were either right or wrong and that there was no excuse for not doing them right. When things were done right he accepted them without a word, but he always blew up when there was a mistake. Charles had been checking over an inventory that afternoon and he felt tired and uncertain.

It was a dull September day and the wind was so high that he thought it was blowing up for a storm. As he walked into the square at Dock Street, he hoped that for once the family would not ask him how he was getting on with Mr. Howell. This was a question which his father invariably asked each evening. John Gray, it seemed, had been in Sunday school with Dickie Howell.

"I used to kick Dickie Howell's shins in Sunday school," John Gray said. "I never dreamed that he would be kicking your son, Charley."

Dorothea and his mother were in the parlor when he got home, reading the Clyde Herald. "I think it would be just as well not to speak of it at all," his mother was saying

(Continued on Page 68)

Midnight Moment

By Ethel Barnett de Vito

Wakeful, he turned to look at her and trace
The stripe of moonlight on her sleeping face
And felt once more the old emotion flare
Until he stretched a hand to touch her hair.
He never saw her but he felt the stir,
The tide outflowing from himself to her
As though the surge of love was nothing other Than urge to blindly lose self in another
Like time outgoing to eternity
Or compulsion of the river toward the sea.

And in the end, he thought, each might well chart
How he became the one he loved in part:
Time passed could not be gathered back with sole
Or single minutes winnowed from the whole;
At length the river turned into the sea
With none to mark its watered boundary,
And in his heart and mind she reigned so well
That if that part was his, he could not tell—
He took her hand, and feeling so complete,
Contentedly he drifted off to sleep.

Each crispy bite proves it's America's Luxury Bacon!

Happy choice for Holiday breakfasts!

our first bite tells you this smoky-rich bacon belongs at the ost festive breakfast tables! And that's right. For Armour acon is made only from the "heart of the bacon"—the choicest nter portion of selected bacon sides. And it's dry-sugar-cured as luxury bacon should be—for less shrinkage, more flavor.

The easy way to cook an extra large amount of bacon for holiday breakfast . . . is to bake it. Just lay strips on a rack any shallow pan—with fat edges overlapping lean—and ke for 12 to 15 minutes in 400° oven.

For other delicious ways to use bacon, write: Marie Gifford, ept. 347, Box 2053, Chicago 9, Ill.

The best and nothing but the best is labeled ARMOUR

Tune in HINT HUNT — CBS Monday through Friday afternoons

IF YOUR HAIR LOOKS LIKE THIS →

WHEN IT SHOULD LOOK LIKE THIS ←

don't use greasy pomades, brittle lacquer or sticky hair oil...

"Suave" your hair

Your beautician will tell you there's nothing else like Suave to make hair miraculously obedient . . . whisper-soft, kissable . . . starry-bright . . . Keeps every tress perfectly in place, and safe from parching sunlight. Rinses out instantly. It's the amazing, new cosmetic for hair that outsells ALL women's hairdressings! Greaseless—not a hair oil. No alcohol! For the whole family. At beauty shops, drug and department stores 50c and $1

"The cosmetic for hair"

Helene Curtis Suave

(Continued from Page 66)

"Charley, the Clyde Fund didn't take your father."

The Clyde Fund was one of those generous bequests which so many New England citizens have left for the benefit of towns in which they lived. It had started with a bequest of five thousand dollars in 1820 by a Mr. Clarence Fanning, the principal to be held for a term of years at compound interest and then the income to be expended on shade trees and other street improvements, under the direction of five representative citizens, to be named by the Dock Street Savings Bank. Charles' grandfather, the Judge, had been one of the first trustees.

"Why should they have taken him?" Charles asked.

"Oh, Charley," his mother said, "don't say that."

"That's just the sort of thing Charley would say about father," Dorothea said.

"Well," Charles said, "you might as well mention it, because he'll find out."

Just at that moment John Gray came in from his work at the mill. "Well," he said, "the wind's getting into the northeast. How's Dickie Howell, Charley?"

"Don't tease him, John," Esther Gray said.

"Now, Esther," John Gray said, "Charley and I have our own brand of humor—acrid, but it's humor. Well, so you're all reading the Clyde Herald."

"John"—Charles' mother smiled brightly—"you didn't tell us that the Pine Trees were going to go to another muster."

"Are they?" John Gray answered. "I didn't see that, but I saw about the Clyde Fund. Don't look disappointed, Esther. I'm hardly the type. What would I do in a savings bank talking about shade trees?"

Supper was the time in the day when the family was always drawn closest together, and Charles' pleasantest memories, as well as memories of quarrels and crises, all began with the supper table at Spruce Street. Even if they were gossiping over the most humdrum events of the day, John Gray was always entertaining. He began that evening by touching lightly on the Clyde Fund. The Fund, he said, had a definite effect on the mental processes of all its trustees, and being a trustee was a great responsibility. Should the income be spent to sprinkle Johnson Street in the summer or should it be spent for public hitching posts on Dock Street? It was still to dawn, he said, on a Clyde Fund trustee, that it was more important to regulate motor traffic. Or should the money be spent in erecting a suitable drinking fountain for horses at the southwest corner of Dock and Johnson streets, and, if so, how high should the fountain be? These were problems, John Gray said, that needed Clyde's best minds, and how could the birds be kept from the head of George Washington near the courthouse without discouraging the birds? He was sorry, very sorry, that he could not be there to help.

USUALLY after supper he went alone to his room to read, and it surprised Charles when he asked him to come up too. "That is, if you have time, Charley," John Gray said, "or have you a round of engagements?"

The room where his father spent his evenings was almost square, with two deep windows with window seats. A battered sofa stood in front of the fireplace, and a table behind it held a student lamp and the books and paper in which John Gray was currently interested. The bookcases were filled with brown leather volumes from the Judge's library and others which John Gray had purchased. Among these were, of course, the works of Samuel Johnson and all sorts of other volumes of the period. The bookcases were far from adequate. Books stood in heaps on top of them and in piles on the floor near the table.

As Charles followed his father up the stairs, he could hear the wind outside and a sharp spatter on the windows, showing that a northeaster was starting.

"You stand here by the door, Charley," John Gray said, "until I light the lamp. I don't want you tipping over books."

There was a pungent smell of moldering leather and old wood and stale tobacco smoke as John Gray moved into the dusky room.

"Close the door, Charley," he said. "It's always better in here with the door closed." He had lighted the student lamp and had replaced the chimney and now he was turning up the wick and putting back the green glass shade. "Sit down in that Morris chair. Did I ever tell you that's the chair your Grandfather Marchby died in?"

"No," Charles said, "I don't think you ever did."

John Gray smiled and walked over to the fireplace and stood looking down at him. "Well, don't look worried. He couldn't help it. There are a great many things we can't help, Charley, or do you think we can?"

"I don't suppose we could help dying, if that's what you mean," Charles said, and he was uneasy as always when he was alone with his father.

"YOU'RE at an age, I suppose, when you feel you can help anything by power of will," John Gray said. "How would you like a glass of port?"

"Why, thanks, if you want one."

"Open the decanter box, and hand me the right-hand bottle, filled with a purplish-red liquid, and take out two glasses."

His father took the stopper from the decanter and filled two antique wineglasses. Nothing in his manner indicated that the occasion was in the least unusual, but Charles could not help wondering what he wanted. It was not a part of family custom to be sitting in his father's room. If his father wanted to talk he always came downstairs to the parlor.

His father had half turned his head toward the window. "Listen to the rain," he said. "'Neither coat nor cloak will hold out upon rain upon rain.' Do you know who said that, Charley?"

"No, sir, I'm afraid I don't."

"Oh, dear. Thomas Fuller said it in his Gnomologia, and I don't suppose you know what gnomologia is, either."

"What does 'gnomologia' mean?"

"Oh, dear, didn't they tell you at Dartmouth?"

"I don't see why you keep picking on Dartmouth," Charles said. "It's a pretty good school."

He saw his father raise his heavy, dark eyebrows. "I can't say it hasn't developed your mind. It seems to me that you have a retentive mind, neither receptive nor curiosity seeking, but retentive. Roughly, 'gnomologia' means a collection of sayings or proverbs. The word is obsolete."

"Then I don't suppose it will do any good to know it."

"That's an interesting way to put it," John Gray said slowly. "I suppose you mean that all knowledge should be useful, because someone has told you that knowledge is power."

"Well, I don't see any use in learning a lot of things that don't do you any good." He stopped and he felt annoyed at himself and his father. It did not help when John Gray laughed.

"Why, of course," he said. "Naturally, Charley. I'm not criticizing you. You're only saying that you want to get on or get ahead. It's a very common objective."

John Gray leaned more comfortably back against the corner of the sofa. Perhaps it was the room or the rain on the windows or the wine or his uneasy annoyance that made Charles say what he said next.

"Didn't you ever want to get on?" he asked. Then he realized that the question was too personal and his father was no longer comfortable.

"Why, yes, Charley," he said. "Yes, I've wanted to get on, but I suppose you think it was a silly way I tried, and I don't blame you. You'd be following a convention."

"Well, I don't know much about it."

"Do you remember what Jonathan Swift said? 'Ambition often puts men upon doing the meanest offices: so climbing is performed in the same posture with creeping.'" Suddenly John Gray laughed and stood up. "I've never liked creeping. I suppose I could have crept, and if I had I might be on the Clyde Fund."

He said it without much emphasis, and for the first time Charles felt sorry about it. He wanted to say something, to tell him it did not matter, but he could think of no way in which to say it.

His father stood with his head tilted to one side, listening to the hissing rhythm of the rain against the window. "I'm hardly in a position to give you any sound advice, Charley," he said suddenly. "But I would like you to know that I've made what I consider several intelligent and rather vigorous efforts to get on, considering the handicaps, and without creeping, always without creeping—but I couldn't beat the system. The system is not fluid, and it's hard to beat."

"What system?"

"Why, the system under which we live. There's always the bundle of hay out ahead, for anyone who wants to get on, and they make it look like a very pleasant bundle."

"Who are 'they'?"

"That's an intelligent question. They are the people who own the hay. They are the people who run the system, and they have to toss out a little hay now and then to make the system work; and the curious thing about it is that they don't realize in the least that they are running the system. They are only acting through a series of rather blind instincts and that's about all there is to anything, Charley, instinct. They'll tell you there's plenty of hay for anyone who can get it, but the main thing is that they don't really want you to get it. It might be some of their hay."

Charles could follow his father's metaphor and he could tell from the bright look on John Gray's face that he was delighted with it. Voltaire had the same brilliant bitterness, the same cynicism, and a similar painful undercurrent of truth—and John Gray was still speaking.

Love and a cough cannot be concealed. —LATIN PROVERB.

"You can get so far by effort, Charley. You will find you can obtain a little hay, but if you reach for more you'll get a sharp rap on the muzzle. I know I'm right because I've tried to get some of that hay. It's all over now. I won't try again. If I were you, I wouldn't try too hard for the hay. You might be disappointed."

It sounded like Candide, and Charles was thinking that if everyone followed John Gray's philosophy nothing would happen anywhere, and yet he could think of no reasonable ground for argument.

"Well," he said, "if you call it hay it seems to me that you've had a lot more hay than most people and more than I'll ever have."

That was where it ended. He did not think that he was speaking out of resentment until he saw the light leave his father's face.

"That's a detail, Charley," John Gray said, "and it doesn't alter the general picture."

"Maybe it doesn't for you, but it does for all the rest of us."

John Gray was silent for a moment. He picked up his empty glass and stared at it and put it back on the table. "Don't be so hard on me, Charley. I told you I wasn't going to do it again. It's like liquor: I can take it or leave it alone; and besides"—he looked apologetic, but at the same time he looked as though a cheerful thought had struck him—"it was a wretchedly small amount of hay."

SOMEHOW after their talk that evening, Charles and his father arrived at a basis for friendship which prevented either of them from offending the other, though it was a little like the friendship between two lawyers who argued in court and sat down to dinner afterward. It was diverting when his father spoke about hay to remind him that there was still a little hay, in the shape of the mill stock left in trust under Uncle Gerald and Mr. Blashfield. They would not be able to live on Spruce Street if it were not for that hay.

"But it's getting moldy," John Gray said. "Mill stocks aren't what they used to be."

"So it's just as well it's in trust, isn't it?" Charles asked.

Somehow after that evening he could be as frank as that, and John Gray even seemed to enjoy it.

"But it ought not to be handled in Clyde, Charley. Not by a small-minded lawyer in a small-minded town."

"I'll bet if you got your hands on some more money," Charles said, "you'd try it all over again."

HIS father was amazed, and not hurt at all. "You know I never bet, Charley. But it isn't so. I'm completely, magnificently aware of my deficiencies. I've learned my little lesson, and that's all over now."

His mother, too, was sure that father would never do it again. Aunt Jane was sure about it too. Once she had harbored doubts, but lately she was sure that John had turned the corner. She had deep faith in John Gray. She knew that he had been the spoiled baby of the family, twelve years younger than she and fourteen years younger than Mathilda—and at least he did not have what she called the Gray heart. The Judge had suffered with it and so had Mathilda and now she had it too.

It was because of the Gray heart and because he was deeply fond of her that Charles stopped to call on his aunt nearly every afternoon after leaving the office at Wright-Sherwin. Those calls at the Judge's house on Gow Street were difficult to distinguish one from another, except for one on an afternoon not long after that talk with his father. When Charles opened the front door his aunt was seated in her favorite banister-back armchair in the Judge's study. Aunt Jane had on her spectacles and was reading from a piece of foolscap written in the Spencerian penmanship which she had learned long ago at the female academy. Charles knew it was one of those lists of personal effects she was always making. For the last two years she had been arranging for their distribution, but the arrangements were never final.

Aunt Jane said, "Charley, I'm going to give Mary the Sheffield teapot and a thousand dollars."

There was no use trying to deflect her from this subject because she liked it, and he had learned it was best to fall in with her mood. "I thought you were going to let her have the tray," Charles told her.

"I know, but I asked her this morning. She thinks Dorothea ought to have the tray. Charley, do you think Dorothea's going to marry that factory man she brought in here?"

"Elbridge Sterne?"

"Yes. He knows all about brass. Is Dorothea going to marry him or isn't she?"

"I don't know," Charles said. "She's never taken it up with me. She'll probably get discouraged with him. You know—after a certain time she always gets discouraged."

"She's only particular, like me," Aunt Jane said. "Esther thinks she's going to marry him."

"Mother always thinks she's going to marry someone."

"If she does, she can have the tea tray and the dining-room chairs besides the five thousand dollars."

The cannel coal snapped viciously and a piece of it fell on the carpet. Charles rose hastily and kicked it back on the hearth.

"Charley," Aunt Jane said, "I've been thinking about your father. I'm worried about his self-respect."

"His self-respect?"

"Yes, and I'm not going to leave the rest to him in trust. It will hurt his self-respect."

The cannel coal snapped again with a sound that was like a punctuation mark.

"I think it's a mistake, Aunt Jane," Charles said.

"I'm not asking your opinion," she answered, but of course she was asking his opinion. "We have to trust him. He's your father, Charley." Then there was a quaver in

(Continued on Page 71)

WATCH OUT FOR WINTER AILMENTS

COLDS should be treated promptly! They often occur when body resistance is low, due perhaps to insufficient sleep, lack of fresh air, improper nutrition, or exposure to changes in weather. The cold may lower resistance still further and, if neglected, may lead to influenza, pneumonia or other infections.

INFLUENZA, while more serious than a cold, is not usually dangerous in itself. It may, however, weaken the system and pave the way for other illnesses. Fortunately, there is a new vaccine which has been used with considerable success against certain types of influenza. The doctor may recommend this vaccine if an epidemic threatens, if a person suffers from frequent colds, or if poor physical condition makes influenza a special danger.

PNEUMONIA is still a serious disease that calls for prompt diagnosis and treatment. The sulfa drugs and penicillin are highly effective in most cases, but they must be given early for best results. Your doctor now has a vaccine which provides protection against many of the most common types of pneumonia. One type of this disease, virus pneumonia, does not respond to the vaccine, sulfa drugs or penicillin. Although seldom fatal, it should have immediate medical attention.

The best protection against winter ailments is keeping in good physical condition. If you catch a cold, try to get all the rest you can, eat lightly, drink plenty of liquids, and cover your coughs and sneezes so that you will not infect others.

IF FEVER ACCOMPANIES A COLD, CALL A DOCTOR IMMEDIATELY!

COPYRIGHT 1949—METROPOLITAN LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY

Metropolitan Life Insurance Company

(A MUTUAL COMPANY)

1 MADISON AVENUE, NEW YORK 10, N.Y.

For more helpful information about winter ailments, send for Metropolitan's free booklet, 19-J, "Respiratory Diseases."

Metropolitan Life Insurance Company
1 Madison Avenue, New York 10, N. Y.

Please send me the free booklet, 19-J, "Respiratory Diseases."

Name_____

Street_____

City_____ State_____

TO VETERANS—IF YOU HAVE NATIONAL SERVICE LIFE INSURANCE—KEEP IT!

"In ROME, they Kiss a Girl's Hand," Bill said.

"A Roman would kiss such a soft hand," Bill said—and then he did! My heart skipped. I use Jergens Lotion to keep my hands soft and smooth, but I never dreamed...

We hardly saw the Colosseum, Bill held my hands so tight. "I won't let these adorable little hands go," he whispered, "unless they promise to come back and be held by moonlight."

There was magic in the moonlight! Bill held my hands... our eyes met long enough to say, "I love you." "This is forever," he said. "Your gentle hands... your dear heart are mine now."

And I'm keeping my hands soft for Bill. Like every wise wife I use Jergens Lotion.

See how greedy your hands are for the smoothing protection of Jergens Lotion. Being a liquid, Jergens Lotion quickly furnishes the softening moisture thirsty hands need. Your skin absorbs Jergens Lotion instantly...leaving no oiliness or stickiness. Today's creamy-rich Jergens Lotion is two ways finer for you. No other hand care gives your hands such long lasting protection... keeps them so soft and smooth.

No wonder Hollywood Stars use Jergens Lotion 7 to 1 over any other hand care. They know the charm of lovely, soft hands. Do as the Stars do... use Jergens Lotion. 10¢ to $1.00 (plus tax).

Now yours—Jergens Beauty Kit! Contains generous samples of Jergens Lotion, Powder, Face Cream and Dryad Deodorant! Send 10¢ to The Andrew Jergens Company, Box 6, Dept. 26A, Cincinnati 14, Ohio. (Sorry, offer good in U.S.A. only, expires December 31, 1949.)

More Women use Jergens Lotion than any other Hand Care in the World

(Continued from Page 69)

r voice. "Charley, I'm so proud of you. ow turn on the lights. Isn't it nice to have ctric lights?"

Until he pressed the switch by the door, he d almost thought that his aunt was dead eady, but when the ceiling light was on in e old gas chandelier the brilliance of the om erased all that talk of death. His aunt oked very well and just as he had always membered her.

"Well," she said, "that's settled. Charley, wish you saw more girls."

"Why, you're my only girl," Charles said, d he laughed.

"I wish you saw some nice girls," his Aunt ne said again. "Why don't you ever see ssica Lovell?"

"Jessica Lovell? Why, I hardly know her." His aunt should have known he belonged a different group from Jessica Lovell and at groups hardly ever mingled in Clyde.

When Charles arrived home after his talk th Aunt Jane on death and testaments, orothea was playing the phonograph. The nily were sitting in the second-best parlor d Elbridge Sterne was with them. A log e was burning, which showed that El- dge must have lugged the wood in from e shed outdoors, because Charles had not ought any in and his father disliked doing His father was reading a newspaper by e big table lamp.

John Gray said, "Oh, by the way, Char- , there's going to be a muster tomorrow ernoon. The firemen's muster. The Pine ees will be there and there will be eight nd tubs, and two hundred dollars in cash zes. Why don't you watch me make a ctacle of myself? It's Saturday."

"Exactly what is the purpose of a fire- n's muster, Mr. Gray?" Elbridge asked. It often seemed to Charles that Elbridge ew nothing about anything except the mposition of brass, but John Gray was ry patient.

"The purpose of a muster," he said, side from social relaxation, is to see which these antiquated fire engines can squirt e longest stream of water from its base— athletic contest, Elbridge. You should me with Dorothea and see us, and, Charley, vant you particularly."

"I don't know whether I can get away in e, father."

"Charley," his mother said, "if your her wants you to, of course you can."

CHARLEY," Jessica said to him once, "it s all so funny, wasn't it? You being there, d me, when neither of us wanted to be." ey were talking, of course, about the fire- n's muster. "Do you remember the fife- d-drum corps?"

Of course Charles remembered.

"And your father in that red shirt, stand- on top of the machine?"

Naturally Charles remembered his father, his helmet and his red shirt with "Pine e" written on the front in white letters, in blue trousers and his belt with its ornate ss buckle. For years Charles had been ply embarrassed whenever his father had eared in that make-believe fireman suit.

"I don't see why father likes it," Charles d.

"Because he has a good time," Jessica d him. "He was having a wonderful time. d we had a good time too. We had a won- ful time."

Luncheon that Saturday had consisted y of a little cold meat and cracked cocoa l his father ate it hurriedly. He might not e been elected to the Clyde Fund, but he l been elected captain of the Pine Trees. Charles was wearing his gray flannel users, his old sneakers and his old tweed t when he and John Gray walked out of front yard and down Spruce Street. It s all very well to tell himself that every- recognized his father's eccentricity, but hing could reconcile Charles to the way father's whole manner changed whenever wore that red shirt and helmet. His ner's voice had already assumed a nasal e and he walked with a slight swagger. He was glancing anxiously at the clear sky to gauge the breeze as it blew off occasional yellowing leaves from the elm trees.

"The wind's certainly calming down," he said. Charles noticed that he said "calming" in a flat way that was more River Street than Spruce Street. "I don't want any down draft blowing the spray sideways before it hits the paper."

Then he discussed the strengths and weaknesses of the hand engine that the Pine Trees owned—the old Pine Tree tub. Charles knew she was a beautiful machine, made by Button in 1878. He knew, or at least he had been told, that the Button machines were better than the Borgs or the Lyles. The tub had a new coat of paint and a new pressure gauge, and the ropes for pulling her had been stitched with clean white canvas. Everyone always recognized the Pine Tree tub right away at musters.

There was a big crowd waiting outside the firehouse, old Pine Trees and young Pine Trees drifting in and out through the open doors and eddying about the weedy lot. Mr. Elmer Swasey, who must have been over eighty, was standing with his helmet tilted back on his head and his white beard cascading over his red shirt. There were Johnny Leveroni and young Vincent Sullivan and Andrew Garvin, and any number of little boys ran yelling around the legs of their elders, and the Pine Tree fife-and-drum corps was already beginning to play The Gang's All Here.

His father was an integrated part of the Pine Trees and Charles was an outsider who had come to look on and who had no real part in the ceremony.

"Hi, Earl," he said, trying to get in the spirit of it. "Hi, Johnny." And they all said, "Hi, Charley. How's it going?" but they knew he was not one of them. He belonged on Spruce Street, not on River Street. Charles was an outsider but somehow, by some strange alchemy, his father had bridged the gap.

"All right," John Gray was calling. "Now wait a minute." The fife-and-drum corps had stopped and his voice had filled the gap of silence. "We're going to roll her out in a minute. And don't forget what happened at Smith's Common." Charles did not know, but all the Pine Trees did. "We don't want anybody winded before he pumps. Now we all know there's a barrel of hard cider down cellar in Stevenses' barn and you get into the cellar by the back way. Now, if the Excelsiors or the Lions want it give it to 'em, but no one on the Pine Tree brakes gets it till it's over. . . . All right, boys, bring her out."

The tub clattered out into the sunshine, an antiquated hand-pumping mechanism with its long pump bars, called brakes, its brass and its bright red wheels and its name painted on the center bar, Pine Tree, Clyde—a beautiful, shiny, obsolete thing. The fife-and-drum corps started playing The Gang's All Here again and the procession moved down River Street. Heads appeared in the windows and the mill whistle blew.

The crowd had lined Training Street and covered the field as the hand tubs marched past, but Charles had dropped from the procession as soon as the Pine Trees reached Training Street and finally he found himself, when the pumping started, by the old tubs, at the far end of the field. This was the more disorderly end where the pumping teams were congregating to await their turns on the tub stand, far back from the hose nozzle and the paper where most of the crowd had gathered. This was the spot where there was always quiet drinking and where the fife-and-drum corps played to encourage the pumpers and where individuals performed small, competitive feats of strength. The Excelsior machine was on the stand; the Excelsiors had lined the pump bars and their captain stood holding a handkerchief in his upraised hand, watching the wind and waiting for his assistant to tell him the pressure. As Charles watched the captain's arm drop, the pumpers moved into unified action, creakingly and slowly, and the fifes and drums began playing The Stars and Stripes Forever. It was hard for the captain to make himself heard above the squealing of the fifes.

At this moment Charles heard a girl behind him humming The Stars and Stripes Forever. Established custom made it unusual for many girls, or at least many nice girls, to be at that corner of the field, where it was necessary to shout crude Anglo-Saxon exhortations as the pumpers increased the beat. Charles turned to see who the girl behind him was and was very much surprised to find it was Jessica Lovell.

"Hello," she said. "I was wondering when you'd speak to me."

She was as tall as he was. She was dressed in a gray tweed suit tailored so that it seemed to add to her height. A tight red felt hat was pushed over her soft black hair and she was smiling.

"Oh, hello," Charles said. "They're really working now."

He could not think of anything else to say. Though he had always thought of her as Jessica Lovell, he could not very well call her "Jessica," and yet it would have sounded silly to call her "Miss Lovell."

"The Excelsior has a good pump team; at least that's what they say."

"I suppose you know all about this," she said. "Your father's in the Pine Trees, isn't he?"

"Yes, my father's crazy about the Pine Trees."

"Well, it must be fun."

"He thinks it is," Charles answered, and then there was silence.

"You haven't seen a queer sort of man around, have you?" she asked.

Charles laughed and looked at the crowd. "There are lots of them around here."

"But not like this one." Her voice had a confidential note. "He's been studying the headhunters from Borneo. He was at the house for lunch. He's here to make a survey."

"What sort of a survey?"

She gave her head a quick, impatient shake. "Why, I don't know. Some sort of social survey. He wanted to see this thing and now he's gone away and left me."

"Do you want me to help you find him?"

"No," she said. "I'd rather stay here and let him find us; that is, if it's all the same to you, Charley."

He was startled when she called him by his first name, but then nearly everyone in Clyde referred to him as Charley Gray.

"What are they going to do now?" she asked.

"They're going to pump again. They have three tries."

"It's nice to be here with an expert. Let's go over there and listen to the music."

The music had stopped. The fifes and drums had gathered in a sunny spot on the edge of the road opposite the Stevenses' barn.

"I wouldn't go over there," Charles said. There was always a tough crowd around the Stevenses' barn, but then everyone knew she was Jessica Lovell. She was moving over toward the tough crowd before she answered.

"Come on," she said. "I've never been to one of these things before."

OBVIOUSLY no one would so much as whistle at her. Loud voices trailed off into whispers, the fife-and-drum corps, who had been to the Stevenses' barn cellar, gazed at both of them in a way that made Charles shift from one foot to another, but the lull did not last, because they had all been drinking cider.

"Aren't they going to play again?" Jessica asked.

Of course, the fifes and drums heard her and they were delighted to show how well they could play. They began playing School Days, Dear Old Golden Rule Days, and then with hardly a pause they began playing Marching Through Georgia. Someone touched a cigarette to a balloon and it exploded in a very humorous way.

In the warmth of the cider and group companionship, Charles and Jessica were beginning to be forgotten. There was a tightening circle around the fifes and drums. A heavy, flush-faced young man with short yellow hair shoved inside the circle. Someone tripped him and he fell down and it was just the thing that everybody needed to make the gathering a success. The young man took off his frayed coat sweater and began asking who had done it.

"Who is he?" Jessica Lovell asked. She had to lean close to Charles before he could hear her. "The one who got tripped up."

"He's a North Ender," Charles answered. It seemed unnecessary to tell her that he was Hughie Willis and that almost every Saturday Hughie Willis got into trouble.

A Smith's Common fireman pushed Hughie and one thing led to another. They were not fighting, they were wrestling. They were rolling over and over on the grass, and when the fireman's shoulders touched the ground everyone was delighted that Hughie had got the Smith's Common fireman down.

"Who else wants a try?" Hughie shouted.

"He's pretty good, isn't he?" Charles said, and he had some childish desire to impress Jessica Lovell. "I'd like to take him on myself."

He could certainly have had no serious intention of doing it. He could only have meant to explain to Jessica that he had gone out for wrestling at Dartmouth.

"Why don't you?" Jessica Lovell asked.

"Because it would be silly."

"Then why did you say it?"

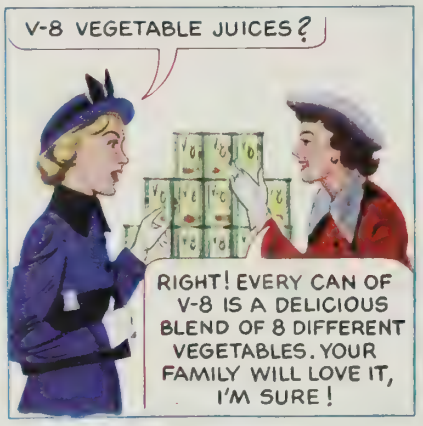
"I just said it."

"Oh," Jessica said, "you just said it."

He looked straight at her and she looked back, and she was telling him without words that she knew he would not do it.

"I don't suppose you think I would," he said.

"No, of course you wouldn't."



"Clara! Isn't there a dirty ash tray in the house?"

THIS IS HOW IT HAPPENED...

Happy Days Later

IMPORTANT!

Put a pitcher of V-8 on the table at every meal. Serve it between meals, too. Every delicious glass contains nutrients of 8 different vegetables:—

CELERY LETTUCE
PARSLEY CARROTS
SPINACH TOMATOES
BEETS WATERCRESS

Made by the makers of Campbell's Soups

*V-8 is a trademark owned in the United States by Campbell Soup Company, in Canada by Campbell Soup Company, Ltd.

"All right," he said. "All right."

So many things were always in a balance, and so often, before you knew it, it was too late to stop. When he was in the open space he wished to heaven it were not too late, but while he was wishing he was taking off his coat.

"What do you know?" somebody was saying. "It's Charley Gray."

And they were already taking sides, yelling for him and Hughie Willis. Hughie was reaching for him as he dropped his coat. They were swaying together, holding each other's arms, when Hughie lunged for the back of his neck and Charles sprang forward into the old cross-buttock hold, and it was good luck and nothing else that Hughie was off balance. It was simply the application of force at just the right moment that made Hughie fall. It was over so quickly that Charles was not out of breath. He was getting into his coat before Hughie could start to say it was not fair, but the Pine Trees were going to pump and no one was interested in wrestling any longer. The crowd was moving back to the hand tubs when he reached Jessica Lovell.

"Well," he said, "do you want to watch the Pine Trees?"

"Why, yes, I'd love to. Your tie's all on one side."

"Oh," Charles said. "Thanks. I hadn't noticed."

"I don't know why we've hardly ever seen each other before," she said. "Oh dear, here he comes."

"Who?"

"That man." An angular-looking stranger was coming toward them.

"Jessica," Charles said quickly, "can I come to see you sometime?"

Jessica began to laugh.

"What are you laughing at?" he asked.

"It sounds so funny. Wait a minute. Can you drive a car?"

"No. We haven't got a car."

"Well, I can. We'll go driving tomorrow. Come around at three o'clock. Oh, hello, Mr. Bryant. What happened to you?"

Jessica Lovell was speaking to the stranger, an angular, untidily dressed man in his middle thirties, with a bony face and deep-set eyes.

"This is Mr. Gray," Jessica was saying. "Mr. Bryant."

It seemed to Charles that he looked like a teacher or a college professor. "I'm glad to meet you, Mr. Gray," he said, and his speech reminded Charles of Elbridge Sterne's. "Do you live here in Clyde?"

"Yes," Charles said, "I live here."

"Well, that's fine," Mr. Bryant said. "I suppose Miss Lovell's been telling you about me."

"Why, no, not much."

"Well, you see, we're considering doing a little job on this town," Mr. Bryant said. "It's a wonderful town, a beautiful, static, organized community."

"Mr. Bryant is doing a survey," Jessica said. "I told you. Some sort of a social survey, and he's just back from Borneo."

"That's right," Mr. Bryant said, "just back from a call on the head-hunters. They're people, just like you and me. All men are basically alike. This thing"—Malcolm Bryant waved his arm in a gesture that embraced the training field—"this beautiful, tribal ritual. It's like the Maori war dance. Of course, you think of it as a thing called a firemen's muster, but obviously, deep down inside, it's the survival of a tribal rite. But the whole community isn't in it, not all the classes. I mean your father wouldn't be in it, Jessica. It's more of a folk custom."

"Charles' father is," Jessica said. "He's right up there now on the machine."

Mr. Bryant turned around. "That's interesting. Is your father a college man?"

"He went to Harvard for a while," Charles told him.

"And there he is up there," Malcolm Bryant said. "That's interesting. It's going to take me quite a while to get this structure straight."

"It's four o'clock," Jessica said. "I'd better be going home. Are you coming back to the house, Mr. Bryant?"

"Well, if it's just the same to you, I'd better stay right here. You don't mind, do you, Jessica?"

"No," Jessica said, "I don't mind. Charley can take me home. Come on, Charley."

It was four, and Charles had left the Pine Tree clubhouse at one o'clock, but the gap of time seemed much greater when Jessica Lovell and he turned off Training Street to Johnson Street. Jessica was talking about Malcolm Bryant. He had appeared in the house one day with a letter from someone. He was working for some kind of foundation, like the Rockefeller or the Carnegie. Something she could not tell what, had made her father like him. Then when he had heard that Malcolm Bryant was doing a survey which might be published in some sort of book, he seemed to feel that Malcolm Bryant was his personal responsibility.

"You see," Jessica said, "father feels he's the world's greatest living authority on Clyde."

"My father's an authority too," Charles told her.

"Does he keep going on about it?" Jessica asked.

Yes, Charles said, he kept going on about it.

"Well, you and I don't have to, do we?" Jessica said.

She could see how Clyde must look to an outsider, she said, because she was partly an outsider herself, and so was he, since they had both been away to college. She only hoped Malcolm Bryant did not think that she and Charles were like the rest of the natives—and she was afraid he did.

"Did you notice the way he looked at us?" she asked. "It made me feel as though you and I were on a microscopic slide."

Charles laughed, and then they both were laughing.

Charles had been so absorbed by the conversation that the dwellings on Johnson Street had passed by him in a pleasant blur until he saw the pineapples on the wooden fence before the Lovells' house, and the border of autumn chrysanthemums. The gate stood open and a brick path lay before them leading to the Corinthian portico of the Lovells' front door.

"Well," he said, "I'll come around tomorrow if you haven't got anything better to do."

"Aren't you coming in now?"

"I guess I'd better not. It's getting pretty late."

"Why, it isn't late at all. It's just time for tea."

"I look pretty shabby," he said, "to go anywhere for tea."

As a matter of fact, those old clothes of his were exactly the ones he should have worn because his tweed coat and baggy flannel trousers showed that he did not consider calling on the Lovells a great occasion.

When they were in the hall, Jessica closed the front door noisily behind her and it made a cheerful, booming sound that echoed along the length of the hall and up the broad, airy staircase. She had pulled off her red felt hat and had tossed it on a Chippendale chair and now she stood before the dusky glass of the great gold hall mirror, giving her head a quick impatient shake and smoothing her soft wavy, dark hair. He could see his own reflection as he stood behind her and their glances met in the dark glass.

"We look like the portraits, don't we?" she said. "That's the trouble with the mirror."

He saw two portraits in the hall, dimly lighted by the arched window at the head of the staircase and by the fanlights above the front and back hall doors. It was true. The gold frame of the mirror was almost like the portraits' frames and for a moment they were both as still as a picture before he followed her down the hall.

Jessica was leading him to what the Lovells called the wallpaper room. "This room," he read later in one of the many architectural accounts of Clyde, "is a triumph of Federal interior. It is as though the room were consciously built to house its greatest treasure, magnificent wallpaper from France, a romantic interpretation of European merchan visiting a Chinese water front. The ships, the pagodas, the pavilions blend most happily with the mantel and the few pieces of Chinese Chippendale, which fit in the room as if they, too, were built for it." Charles read this later. He was conscious then only of the spaciousness the paper gave the room and of the dancing fire beneath the Chippendale mantel and of Jessica's aunt, Miss Lovell, who looked like his own Aunt Jane as she sat on a Hepplewhite sofa behind a low mahogany tea table, working on a panel of embroidery.

"This is Charley Gray," Jessica said. "I've brought him in to tea. You know Charley Gray, don't you, Aunt Georgianna?"

Miss Lovell inserted her needle in her embroidery and then laid it down beside her and looked up at Charles. "I don't know Charles," she said, "but of course I know all about him." And she held out her hand.

"Aunt Georgianna knows about everybody," Jessica said.

"Ring the bell, Jessica," Miss Lovell told her. "It's time for tea. You look as though you'd been walking."

"Well, not exactly walking," Jessica said. "We were at the firemen's muster."

"Oh, yes. What became of Mr. Bryant? Did you get rid of him?"

"No," Jessica said, "he got tired of me. He's down there still."

The tea on a silver tray was being carried in. "Hannah," Miss Lovell said, "will you please tell Mr. Lovell that tea is ready? How do you like your tea, Charles?"

"Oh," Charles said, "why, any way at all, thank you, Miss Lovell."

Then Charles heard a footstep behind him and turned to see Mr. Lovell.

"Well, well," Mr. Lovell said, "I didn't know we were going to have company."

"You know Charley Gray, don't you, father?" Jessica said.

"Of course I know Charley Gray, Jessie, or Charley Gray. Where did you find him, dear? Not that I'm not very glad you found him."

Then Jessica was explaining again that she had found him at the firemen's muster.

"This is quite a coincidence," Mr. Lovell said. "Only a day or two ago I heard Francis Bryant say that you are at Wright-Sherman's. . . Thank you, Georgianna." And he stirred his cup of tea. "Jessica, what became of that other friend?"

Jessica told again where Malcolm Bryant had gone.

"Well, he'll be back for supper, won't he?" Mr. Lovell said. "We always call it supper in Clyde, don't we, Charles? But Jessie likes to call it dinner."

"Charley," Jessica said, "have you ever seen the garden?"

CHARLES shook his head. He said he had never seen the garden, but he would like to.

"What do you want to show him the garden for, Jessie?" Mr. Lovell said. "It's October. There's still the boxwood," Jessica said, "and the chrysanthemums."

"Well," Mr. Lovell said. "Well. I'll say good-by to you now, Charles, in case I don't see you again. Give your father my regards."

The wallpaper room was silent as Charles and Jessica walked down the hall together, but before they reached the back hall door Charles heard Mr. Lovell's voice.

"Well," Mr. Lovell was saying. "Well—well."

"Come on, Charley," Jessica said quickly, and they stepped outside onto a long path bordered with boxwood.

The formal garden of the Lovells, so often described in Garden Club lectures, lay before them, rising gradually to the top of a gentle slope, with its box borders casting long shadows across the gravel paths because the sun was setting.

"You know," Jessica said, "I really think father likes you."

"I don't see why you think so," he told her.

"Because he talked so much," Jessica said, "and you didn't do anything wrong."

He wondered exactly what she meant. They were following the path up to a summerhouse. At any rate, nothing in the Lovell house had made him uneasy and perhaps that was what she had meant when she said he had done nothing wrong. Perhaps she had meant that he had been neither impressed nor disturbed by her aunt or father and that they had not seemed to him in any way extraordinary. He was thinking that there was nothing so extraordinary about Jessica, either. He could still see her as she was, before whatever drew them together became too strong for him to see her in any true perspective. She was not strikingly beautiful. She was too tall and her chin and nose were both a little too long and her eyebrows were too black and heavy, but those defects were vanishing already as she walked beside him up the path. The open fire had made her cheeks glow and her eyes were bright and her lips, which were rather like her father's, were relaxed. Once they reached the summerhouse, it was cool and almost chilly in the shadows.

"Well," she said, "there's the garden."

They stood leaning on the summerhouse railing, gazing at the garden, which had been laid out by a French émigré more than a century before, and back at the house with its high-arched windows and its balustrade and cupola.

"You can see the harbor from the cupola," she said. And then she said it was strange to think of staying at home with no more college and nothing to do but just being there. "I don't know what I'm going to do," she said, and Charles was telling her that there were all sorts of things to do in Clyde. "Well," she said, "I'm awfully glad you think so." She had been moving her finger idly, making little patterns on the summerhouse railing. "Oh dear, here he comes."

Malcolm Bryant was coming toward them up the path.

"Jessica," Charles said, "you won't forget about tomorrow, will you?"

"No," she said, "of course I won't," and her hand touched his. "Good-by, Charley."

(To be Continued)

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Vermont Farmer

By Eleanor Alletta Chaffee

Winter was inch-thick on the window sills.
He sniffed, and stretched his legs out to the fire.
Those smart young Jacks and city-softened Jills
Should be here now, to wade through sleet and mire.
Easy enough, when August's flooding sun
Drenched the mowed fields, to praise the country life,
To call the milking and the haying fun:
They'd never felt the north wind like a knife.
Too tough for them, he'd bet. . . . He raised his head.
"What's that noise, Martha, over on Tibbetts' Hill?"
"Why, that's the skiers—came today," she said.
He opened the door. The night was starry, still,
Except for fresh young laughter against the cold.
He sighed, and suddenly felt tired, and old.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

for finer flavor serve Hi Ho!

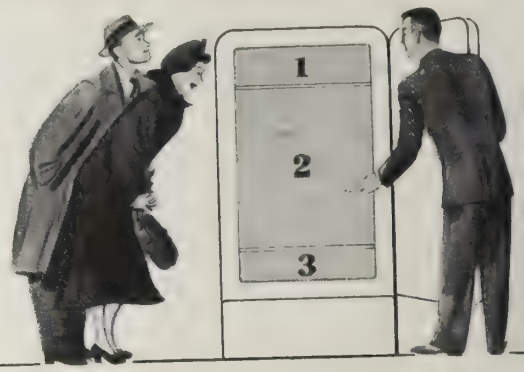
Compare Hi Ho with any other cracker

COMPARE for appetizing appeal . . . In appearance, Hi Ho crackers invite comparison with any other cracker. Note the golden-brown color . . . the uniformity of every Hi Ho.

COMPARE for flakiness . . . Turn a Hi Ho cracker edgewise. Note the flakiness, the delicate texture . . . sure sign of expert baking.

COMPARE for finer flavor . . . Taste Hi Ho . . . try them on your family and guests. No other cracker has the flavor that belongs only to Hi Ho!



FROM THE THOUSAND WINDOW BAKERIES OF

Sunshine Biscuits INC.

Want all three cold zones larger in your new refrigerator?

Ask your Frigidaire Dealer to show them to you in America's No. 1 Refrigerator— the one that is different from all others!

You'll be amazed at all the extra room inside this new Frigidaire De Luxe!

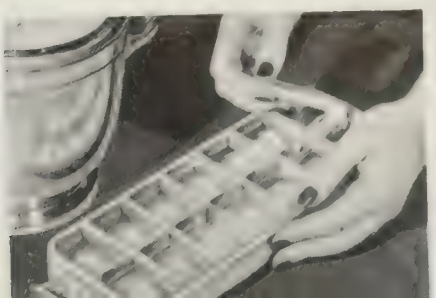
Yes, your Frigidaire Dealer will show you there's all that extra space you've always needed—up to 50% more room than before!—in the 3 cold zones of the new Frigidaire Refrigerators.

This De Luxe model, for example, holds 50 lbs. of frozen foods in the freezing cold of its Super-Freezer Chest. Nearly 2/3 of a bushel of fruits and vegetables will stay fresher, crisper in its super-moist Hydrator—protected by an additional refrigerating system of its own. In between you'll see all kinds of space for everything from fresh eggs to tall cold bottles.

But you'll see far more than extra space—more than extra conveniences. There's one thing that only a Frigidaire Dealer can show you—the difference between a Frigidaire and any other refrigerator you've ever owned or seen—the famous Meter-Miser! Look at it carefully for it's the key to the long, carefree life of your refrigerator—sealed in steel against dirt and moisture, oiled for life, so you won't have to look at it again for years and years. Yes, it's the simplest of all cold-making mechanisms—stingy in its use of current—the No. 1 reason why Frigidaire is America's No. 1 Refrigerator!

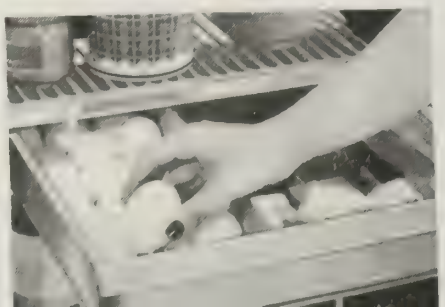
Your Frigidaire Dealer will demonstrate all 9 Frigidaire models—all backed by the experience of building 10 million refrigerating units. He will help you select the one that best fits your kitchen, your family, your eating habits. Also ask to see the Frigidaire electric ranges, automatic washer and other appliances for the home.

Look up the name of your Frigidaire Dealer today—in Classified Phone Directory: or write Frigidaire Division of General Motors, Dayton 1, O. In Canada, Leaside 12, Ont.



Listen to Frigidaire's New Lum and Abner Show, Sunday nights. See newspaper for time, station.

FRIGIDAIRE
Refrigerators



Look how the Meter-Miser works— without belts or gears, without oiling or cooling, without any attention! It's the simplest cold-making mechanism of all—so easy on electric current!

Watch "Quickubes" pop right out of Frigidaire's exclusive Quickube trays. Cubes freeze fast—come out trigger-quick at the touch of a single lever.

Put all your eggs in one Basket-Drawer—the handy aluminum drawer that's so convenient for storing all types of small packages as well as eggs.

You'll cheer for these streamlined shelves—they're rust-proof aluminum, stay clean and bright. Close-spaced bars support small items, tippy bottles.

Kitchen in a Nutshell

PHOTOS BY STUART

place for a kitchen?

Take a space but five feet six. See what can happen.

By GLADYS TABER

THIS kitchen made me think of Alice in Wonderland when she nibbled the magic bite and shrank down to a miniature girl. The same kind of magic makes a kitchen no bigger than a nutshell, which will make home a happier place for families that have to double up. It can be tucked in a little space just five feet by six feet and a young couple can be independent of the rest of the family, or a mother-in-law can stir and brew when and as she likes.

This kitchen is based on a unit which includes a range, sink and refrigerator, with storage cabinets above. The range has three units on top, and an oven and storage drawer below the counter surface. The refrigerator is

(Continued on Page 120)

Cooking Center. Shelf space in unit is generous, drawer space limited. Cooking utensils and food supplies go on shelves. Most-used pans, lids and kitchen tools hang from wood strip placed below cabinets. Narrow canister shelf for sugar, flour, salt, pepper; shallow tray for stirring spoons and turning forks.

Tableware Storage. Built-in cupboard is tailored to fit service for six. Shallow shelves for small dishes. Tall spaces for larger ones. Rubber-covered plate racks save space, file plates for easy accessibility. Let-down drawer makes silver reachable and visible. Shallow drawers under counter hold napkins and table mats.

Counter Space. Narrow counters are better than none. Continuing counter around corner to door swing adds shelf space for serving. Narrow shelves with turned-up edges under side counter hold serving trays and chop plates. Open space is left for dish-draining tray, towel racks, a one-step stool and wastebasket.

Taste Perfection *

makes DELRICH

E-Z COLOR PAK MARGARINE

A New American Favorite!

"WHAT A SNAP FOR ME!"

"How glad I am that Delrich gave me the easy, modern way to color my favorite table spread! And my family voted it their favorite, too, for its delicious, creamy-rich flavor! There's such a difference in Delrich! It's amazing the way it holds its flavor and freshness!"

See why thousands are switching to Delrich! Nutritious—yet economical, it's packed with food energy. Enriched with 15,000 units of Vitamin A.

Delrich and E-Z Color Pak are the trademarks of The Cudahy Packing Co. for its margarine.

© T. C. P. CO., 1948

THE CUDAHY PACKING CO. Chicago, Ill.

TRADEMARK

ENDS MIXING BOWL MESS!

PINCH BERRY AND KNEAD BAG TO COLOR DELRICH

Enjoy the exciting advantages of Delrich—the original E-Z Color Pak Margarine!

- No mixing bowl mess!
- Blends to golden yellow inside bag!
- Amazingly easy to color!
- No mold needed! No waste!
- No messy transferring!
- Reshape in own carton!
- Easy to cut in quarters or patties!

CUDAHY Pure Processed TASTE TESTED AND PROVED

After All "THE TASTE TELLS"

© UNDERWOOD & UNDERWOOD, N. Y.

Fresh air and sunshine are good for kids, but dad was too smart to say so.

CHEAPER BY THE DOZEN

(Continued from Page 35)

shaving with two razors, but finally gave that up.

"I can save forty-four seconds," he grumbled, "but I wasted two minutes this morning putting this bandage on my throat." It wasn't the slashed throat that really bothered him. It was the two minutes.

Some people used to say that dad had so many children he couldn't keep track of them. Dad used to tell a story about one time when mother went off to fill a lecture engagement and left him in charge at home. When mother returned, she asked if everything had run smoothly.

"Didn't have any trouble except with that one over there," he replied. "But a spanking brought him into line."

Mother could handle any crisis without losing her composure. "That's not one of ours, dear," she said. "He belongs next door."

None of us remembers it, and maybe it never happened. Dad wasn't above stretching the truth, because there was nothing he liked better than a joke. This much is certain, though. There were two red-haired children who lived next door, and the Gilbreths all are blondes or redheads.

Although he was a strict taskmaster within his home, dad tolerated no criticism of the family from outsiders. Once a neighbor complained that a Gilbreth had called the neighbor's boy a son of an unprintable word.

"What are the facts of the matter?" dad asked blandly. And then walked away while the neighbor registered a double take.

But dad hated unprintable words, and the fact that he had stood up for his son didn't prevent him from holding a full-dress court of inquiry once he got home, and administering the called-for punishment.

DAD was happiest in a crowd, especially a crowd of kids. Wherever he was, you'd see a string of them trailing him—and the ones with plenty of freckles were pretty sure to be Gilbreths. He had a way with children and knew how to keep them on their toes. He had a respect for them, too, and didn't mind showing it.

Whenever dad returned from a trip—even if he had been gone only a day—he whistled the family "assembly call" as he turned in at the sidewalk. The call was a tune he had composed. He whistled it, loud and shrill, by doubling his tongue behind his front teeth. It took considerable effort and dad, who never exercised if he could help it, usually ended up puffing with exhaustion.

The call was important. It meant drop everything and come running—or risk dire consequences. At the first note, Gilbreth children came dashing from all corners of the house and yard. Neighborhood dogs, barking loudly, converged for blocks around. Heads popped out of the windows of near-by houses.

Dad gave the whistle often. He gave it when he had an important family announcement. He gave it when he was bored and wanted some excitement with his children. He gave it when he had invited a friend home and wanted to introduce the friend to the whole family.

LIKE most of dad's ideas, the assembly call made sense. This was demonstrated in particular one day when a bonfire of leaves in the driveway got out of control and spread to the side of the house. Dad whistled, and the house was evacuated in fourteen seconds—eight seconds off the all-time record. That occasion was memorable because of the remarks of a frank neighbor, who watched the blaze from his yard. During the height of the excitement, the neighbor's wife came to the front door and called to her husband:

"What's going on?"

"The Gilbreths' house is on fire," he replied. "Thank God!"

"Shall I call the fire department?" she shouted.

"What's the matter, are you crazy or something?" the husband answered incredulously

Anyway, the fire was put out quickly and there was no need to ask the fire department for help.

When dad bought the house in Montclair he described it to us as a tumbled-down shanty in a run-down neighborhood. We thought this was another one of his surprises, but he finally convinced us that the house was a hovel.

"It takes a lot of money to keep this family going," he said. "Food, clothes, allowances, doctor's bills, getting teeth straightened, and buying ice-cream sodas. I'm sorry, but I couldn't afford anything better. We'll have to fix it up the best we can."

We were living at Providence, Rhode Island, at the time. As we drove from Providence to Montclair, dad would point to every termite trap we passed.

"It looks something like that," he would say, "only it has a few more broken windows and the yard is maybe a little smaller."

As we entered Montclair, he drove through the worst section of town, and finally pulled up at an abandoned structure that even Dracula wouldn't have felt at home in.

"Well, here it is," he said. "All out."

"You're joking, aren't you, dear?" mother said hopefully.

"What's the matter with it? Don't you like it?"

"If it's what you want," said mother, "I'm satisfied. I guess."

"It's a slum, that's what's the matter with it," said Ernestine.

"No one asked your opinion, young lady," replied dad. "I was talking to your mother, and I will thank you to keep out of the conversation."

"You're welcome," said Ernestine, who knew she was treading on thin ice but was too upset to care. "Only I wouldn't live in it with a ten-foot pole."

"Neither would I," said Martha. "Not with two ten-foot poles."

Lill started to sob.

"It won't look so bad with a coat of paint and a few boards put in where these holes are," mother said cheerfully.

Dad, grinning now, was fumbling in his pocket for his notebook. "By jingo, kids, wait a second," he crowed. "Wrong address. Well, what do you know! Pile back in. I thought this place looked a little more run down than when I last saw it."

Then he drove us to 68 Eagle Rock Way, which was an old but beautiful Taj Mahal of Frankly, dad didn't drive our car well at all. But he did drive it fast. He terrified all of us, but particularly mother. She sat next to him on the front seat—with two of the babies on her lap—and alternated between clutching dad's arm and closing her eyes in supplication.

"Not so fast, Frank, not so fast," she would whisper. But dad never seemed to hear.

Foolish Carriage was a right-hand drive, so whoever sat to the left of mother and the babies on the front seat had to be on the lookout to tell dad when he could pass the car ahead.

"You can make it," the lookout would shout.

"Put out your hand," dad would holler.

Eleven hands—everybody contributing one except mother and the babies—would emerge from both sides of the car; from the front seat, rear seat and folding swivel chairs amidships. We had seen dad nick fenders, slaughter chickens, square away with traffic policemen and knock down full-grown trees, and we weren't taking any chances.

The lookout on the front seat was dad's own idea. The other safety measures, which we soon inaugurated as a matter of self-

PHOTOGRAMS

Twenty-two ears (all clean, we'll bet) cocked to catch dad's story.

a house with fourteen rooms, a two-story barn, a greenhouse, chicken yard, grape arbors, rose bushes, and a couple of dozen fruit trees. At first we thought dad was teasing us again, and that this was the other end of a scale—a house much better than the one he had bought.

"This is really it," he said. "The reason I took you to that other place first—well, I didn't want you to be disappointed. Forgive me?"

We said we did.

Dad had bought the automobile a year before we moved. It was our first car, and cars still were a novelty. Although dad made his living by redesigning complicated machinery, as to reduce the number of motions required to operate it, he never really understood the intricacies of our automobile. It was a gray Pierce Arrow, equipped with two bulb horns and an electric Klaxon, which dad could try to blow all at the same time when he wanted to pass anyone. The engine hood was long and square, and you had to raise it to prime the petcocks on cold mornings. Dad had seen the car in the factory and been in love with it. The affection was entirely one-sided and unrequited. He named it Foolish Carriage because, he said, it was foolish for any man with as many children as he could think he could afford a horseless carriage. The contraption kicked him when he cranked, spat oil in his face when he looked at its bowels, squealed when he mashed the gears, and rumbled ominously when he changed gears. Sometimes dad would spit, pedal and rumble back. But he never won a close decision.

preservation, were our own. We would assign someone to keep a lookout for cars approaching on side streets to the left; someone to keep an identical lookout to the right; and someone to kneel on the rear seat and look through the isinglass window in the back.

"Car coming from the left, dad," one lookout would sing out.

"Two coming from the right."

"Motorcycle approaching from astern."

"I see them, I see them," dad would say irritably, although usually he didn't. "Don't you have any confidence at all in your father?"

He was especially fond of the electric horn, an ear-splitting gadget which bellowed "kadookah" in an awe-inspiring, metallic baritone. A few days after he bought the car, he brought each of us children up to it, one at a time, raised the hood, and told us to look inside and see if we could find the birdie in the engine. While our backs were turned, he'd tiptoe back to the driver's seat and press down on the horn.

"Kadookah, kadookah." The horn blaring right in your ear was frightening, and you'd jump away in hurt amazement. Dad would laugh until the tears came to his eyes.

"Did you see the birdie? Ho, ho, ho," he'd scream. "I'll bet you jumped six and nine tenths inches."

One day after returning from a particularly trying picnic the engine balked, coughed, spat and stopped. Dad ordered us out of the car, which was overheated and steaming. He wrestled with the back seat to get the tools. It was stuck and he kicked it. He took off his coat, rolled up his sleeves and raised the left-hand side of the hood.

You're EASIER and FASTER, too... OLD DUTCH CLEANSER, I Love You!

We've ACTIVATED Seismotite

in New Postwar Old Dutch Cleanser... to give you

FASTER-EASIER CLEANING

than any other cleanser you've ever used...and it's SAFE!

NEW GLIDING ACTION! Old Dutch gives you almost effortless cleaning. Polishes while it cleans . . . takes less work, less rubbing, thanks to ACTIVATED Seismotite (exclusive process, patent applied for).

PROVED FASTER, EASIER than all other leading cleansers in scientific tests! New Postwar Old Dutch cleansing action sweeps away BOTH stains and dirt with lightning speed!

NO GRITTY SEDIMENT! Pure, snowy white OLD DUTCH rinses away quickly. It's safe, kind to hands; economical, too, because just a touch does so much!

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

CUDAHY Plus Product VALUE TESTED AND PROVED

© THE CUDAHY PACKING COMPANY, 1946

THE FIRST MAJOR CLEANSER IMPROVEMENT SINCE THE INTRODUCTION OF SEISMOTITE

YOU CAN BE SURE..
IF IT'S
Westinghouse

FOR MEALS THAT ARE THRILLING EAT-TREATS
BUY AMERICA'S LEADING ROASTER

- Cooks everything... plugs in anywhere
- Gives you easy electric cooking in only 2 sq. ft. of space
- Adds new taste zest to everything
- Year after year... the most popular Electric Roaster

"Cooking Magic, portable and compact"...that's what all America calls this versatile Westinghouse Roaster-Oven! Cooks a complete meal, bakes a cake, roasts a turkey with equal ease because of accurate thermostat control. Has set of glass ovenware dishes. When equipped with detachable Broiler-Grid, this Roaster-Oven fries, grills, or broils food to mouth-watering goodness. Yes, the Westinghouse Roaster-Oven is first in performance, first in sales! It's America's leading Roaster. See it at your Westinghouse retailer's today!

$38.95 Broiler-Grid $6.75
Prices include Federal Excise Tax

WESTINGHOUSE ELECTRIC CORPORATION • • • APPLIANCE DIVISION • • • MANSFIELD • OHIO

EVERY HOUSE NEEDS A
Westinghouse Roaster-Oven

TUNE IN TED MALONE...EVERY MORNING, MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY...ABC NETWORK

Dad seldom swore. An occasional "damn," perhaps, but usually he stuck to such phrases as "by jingo" and "holy Moses." He said them both now, only there was something frightening in the way he rolled them out.

His head and shoulders disappeared inside the hood. You could see his shirt, wet through, sticking to his back.

Nobody noticed Bill. He had crawled into the front seat. And then—"Kadookah. Kadookah."

Dad jumped so high he actually toppled into the engine. His head butted the top of the hood and his right wrist came up against the red-hot exhaust pipe. You could hear the flesh sizzle. Finally he managed to extricate himself. He rubbed his head, and left grease across his forehead. He blew on the burned wrist. He was livid.

"Who did that?" he screamed.

Bill, who was six and always in trouble anyway, was the only one with nerve enough to laugh. But it was a nervous laugh. "Did you see the birdie, daddy?" he asked.

Dad grabbed him; Bill stopped laughing.

"That was a good joke on you, daddy," Bill said hopefully. But there wasn't much confidence in his voice.

"There is a time," dad said, "and there is a place for birdies. And there is a time and place for spankings."

"I'll bet you jumped six and nine tenths inches, daddy," said Bill, stalling for time.

Dad relaxed and let him go. "Yes, Billy, by jingo," he said. "That was a good joke on me, and I suspect I did jump six and nine tenths inches."

Dad loved a joke on himself, all right. But he loved it best a few months after the joke was over, and not when it was happening. The story about Bill and the birdie became one of his favorites.

When dad decided he wanted to take the family for an outing in the Pierce Arrow, he'd whistle assembly and ask, "How many want to go for a ride?"

The question was purely rhetorical, for when dad rode, everybody rode. So we'd all say we thought a ride would be fine.

Dad would tell us to get ready while he brought the car around to the front of the house. Getting ready meant scrubbed hands and face, shined shoes, clean clothes, combed hair. It wasn't advisable to be late, and it wasn't advisable to be dirty.

BESIDES getting himself ready, each older child was responsible for one of the younger ones. Anne was in charge of Dan, Ern in charge of Jack and Mart in charge of Bob. This applied not only to rides in the car, but all the time. The older sister was supposed to help her particular charge get dressed in the morning, to see that he made his bed, to put dry clothes on him when he needed them, to see that he was washed and on time for meals, and to see that his process charts were duly initialed.

Anne, as the oldest, also was responsible for the deportment and general appearance of the whole group. Mother, of course, watched out for the baby, Jane. The intermediate children, Frank, Bill, Lill and Fred, were considered old enough to look out for themselves, but not old enough to look after anyone else.

When we'd all gathered in front of the house, the girls in dusters, the boys in linen suits, mother would call the roll.

Dad would get out and help mother and the two babies into the front seat. He'd pick out someone whose behavior had been especially good, and allow him to sit up front, too, as the left-hand lookout. The rest of us would pile in the back.

Finally, off we'd start. We made quite a sight rolling along in the car with the top down. As we passed through cities and villages, we caused a stir equaled only by a circus parade.

This was the part dad liked best. He'd slow down to five miles an hour and blow the horns at imaginary obstacles and cars two blocks away. The horns were dad's calliope.

"I seen eleven of them, not counting the man and the woman," someone would shout from the sidewalk.

"You missed the second baby up front, mister," dad would call over his shoulder.

Mother would make believe she hadn't heard anything, and look straight ahead.

Pedestrians would come scrambling from side streets, and children would ask their parents to lift them onto their shoulders.

"How do you grow them carrot tops, brother?"

"These," dad would bellow. "These aren't so much, friend. You ought to see the ones I left at home."

Whenever the crowds gathered at some intersection where we were stopped by traffic, the inevitable question came sooner or later. "How do you feed all those kids, mister?"

Dad would ponder for a minute. Then he'd say as if he had just thought it up, "Well, they come cheaper by the dozen, you know."

DAD would use that same line whenever we stopped at a tollgate or went to a movie. "Do my Irishmen come cheaper by the dozen?" he'd ask. Dad could take one look at a man and know his nationality.

"Irishmen is it? And I might have known it. Lord love you, and it takes the Irish to raise a crew of redheaded Irishmen like that. Drive through on the house."

"If he knew you were a Scot he'd take a shillelagh and wrap it around your tight-fisted head," mother giggled as we drove on.

"He probably would," dad agreed.

And one day at the circus:

"Do my Dutchmen come cheaper by the dozen?"

"Dutchmen? Ach. And what a fine lot of healthy Dutchmen."

"My kids want to see the elephants."

"And my elephants want to see your kids. Just go in that gate over there where there ain't no turnstile."

Roads weren't marked very well in those days, and dad never believed in signs anyway. "Probably some kid has changed those arrows around," he would say. "Seems to me that if we turned the way the arrow says, we'd be headed back where we came from."

It was the same way with the Automobile Blue Book. Mother would read to him: "Six tenths of a mile past windmill, bear left at brick church and follow paved road."

"That must be the wrong windmill," dad would say. "No telling when the fellow who wrote that book came over this road to check up on things. My bump of direction tells me to turn right."

Then, after he'd turned right and got lost, dad would ask directions at a store or filling station. He'd listen, and usually drive off in exactly the opposite direction from the one his informant had indicated.

"Old fool," dad would mutter. "He's lived five miles from Trenton all his life and doesn't even know how to get there. He's trying to route me back to New York."

Mother was philosophical about it. Whenever she considered that dad was hopelessly lost, she'd open a little portable icebox that she kept on the floor of the car under her feet and hand Jane her bottle. This was mother's signal that if was time to have lunch.

"All right, Lillie," dad would say. "Gues we might as well stop and eat, while I get m bearings. You pick out a good place for picnic."

While we were eating, dad would keep look ing around for something that might be in teresting. He was a natural teacher, and be lieved in utilizing every minute. Eating, h said, was "unavoidable delay." So were dres ing and going to the bathroom. "Unavoic able delay" was not to be wasted.

If dad found an anthill, he'd tell us abou certain colonies of ants that kept slaves ar herds of "cows." Then we'd take turns lyir on our stomachs, watching ants go back ar forth picking up crumbs from sandwich

"See, they all work and they don't wa anything," dad would say. "Look at t teamwork, as four of them try to move th piece of meat. That's motion study for yo

Or he'd point out a stone wall and say was a perfect example of engineering. H explain about how the glaciers passed o the earth many years ago, and left the st when they melted.

If a factory was near by, he'd explain how you used a plumb line to get the chimney straight and why the windows had been placed a certain way to let in the maximum light. If the factory whistle blew, he'd take out his stop watch and time the difference between when the steam appeared and when we heard the sound.

"Now take your notebooks and pencils and I'll show you how to figure the speed of sound," he'd say.

But it was mother who spun the stories that made the things we studied really unforgettable. If dad saw motion study and teamwork in an anthill, mother saw a highly complex civilization governed, perhaps, by a fat old queen who had a thousand black slaves bring her breakfast in bed mornings. If dad stopped to explain the construction of a bridge, she would find the workman in his blue jeans, eating his lunch high on the top of the span. It was she who made us feel the breathless height of the structure and the relative puniness of the humans who had built it. Or if dad pointed out a tree that had been bent and gnarled, it was mother who made us sense how the wind, beating against the tree in the endless passing of time, had made its own relentless mark.

We'd sit there memorizing every word, and dad would look at mother as if he was sure he had married the most wonderful person in the world.

Dad was born in Fairfield, Maine, where his father ran a general store, farmed and raised harness-racing horses. John Hiram Gilbreth died in 1871, leaving his three-year-old son, two older daughters and a stern and rockbound widow.

Dad's mother, Grandma Gilbreth, believed that her children were fated to make important marks in the world, and that her first responsibility was to educate them. She moved to Andover, Massachusetts, so that the girls could attend Abbott Academy. Later, when her older daughter showed a talent for music, Grandma Gilbreth decided to move to Boston.

Dad wanted to be a construction engineer, and his mother planned to have him enter Massachusetts Institute of Technology. By the time he finished high school, he decided this would be too great a drain on the family finances. Without consulting his mother, he took a job as a bricklayer's helper.

During dad's first week at work he made so many suggestions about how brick could be laid faster and better that the foreman threatened to fire him.

"You're the one who came here to learn," the foreman hollered at him. "Don't try to learn us."

SUBTLE innuendoes like that never worried dad. "Did you ever notice that no two men use exactly the same way of laying brick?" he asked. "If I had your job, I'd find who's laying brick the right way, and make all the others copy him."

"If you had my job," shouted the foreman, "the first thing you'd do is fire the redheaded unprintable son of a deleted who tried to get your job. That's what I think you're trying to do." He picked up a brick and waved it menacingly. "I'm warning you, stop bothering me or this brick goes in your mouth—edgewise."

Within a year, dad designed a scaffold that made him the fastest bricklayer on the job. The principle of the scaffold was that loose bricks and mortar always were at the level of the top of the wall being built. The other bricklayers had to lean over to get their materials. Dad didn't.

"You ain't smart," the foreman scoffed. "You're just too lazy to squat."

But the foreman had identical scaffolds built for all the men on the job, and even suggested that dad send the original to the Mechanics Institute, where it won a prize. Later, on the foreman's recommendation, dad was made foreman of a crew of his own. He was promoted to superintendent, and then went into the contracting business for himself, building bridges, canals, industrial towns and factories. By the time he was twenty-seven, he had offices in New York, Boston and London. He had a yacht, smoked cigars and had a reputation as a snappy dresser.

MOTHER came from a well-to-do family in Oakland, California. She had met dad in Boston while she was en route to Europe on one of those well-chaperoned tours for fashionable young ladies of the 'nineties.

Mother was a Phi Beta Kappa and a psychology graduate of the University of California. In those days women who were scholars were viewed with some suspicion. When mother and dad were married, the Oakland paper said, "Although a graduate of the University of California, the bride is nonetheless an extremely attractive young woman." Indeed she was.

So it was mother, the psychologist, and dad, the motion-study man and general contractor, who decided to look into the new field of the psychology of management, and the old field of psychologically managing a houseful of children. They believed that what would work in the home would work in the factory, and what would work in the factory would work in the home.

Dad put the theory to a test shortly after we moved to Montclair. The house was too big for Tom Grieves, the handy man, and Mrs. Cunningham, the cook, to keep in order. Dad decided we were going to have to help, and he wanted us to offer the help of our own accord. He and mother set up a family council, patterned after an employer-employee board. The council met every Sunday afternoon immediately after dinner.

At the first session, dad got to his feet and began a speech. "You will notice," he said, "that I am installed here as your chairman. I assume there are no objections. The chair, hearing no objections, will ——"

"Mr. Chairman," Anne interrupted. Being in high school, she knew something of parliamentary procedure, and thought it might be a good idea to have the chairman represent the common people.

"Out of order," said dad. "Very much out of order when the chair has the floor."

"But you said you heard no objections, and I want to object."

"Out of order means sit down, and you're out of order," dad shouted. He resumed his speech. "The first job of the council is to apportion necessary work in the house and yard. Does the chair hear any suggestions?"

There were no suggestions.

Dad forced a smile. "Come, come, fellow members of the council. This is a democracy. Everybody has an equal voice. How do you want to divide the work?"

No one wanted to divide the work or otherwise be associated with it in any way, shape or form. No one said anything.

"In a democracy everybody speaks," said dad, "so start speaking. Jack, I recognize you. What do you think about dividing the work?"

NEXT MONTH

"When I see parents impatient or bored with their children, I wish I could say to them, 'But they are alive, think of the wonder of that!'"

ALL parents who have lost a child will find understanding and hope in John Gunther's memoir to his only son, Johnny, who died at seventeen with a brilliant life barely begun. For Johnny's mother and father feel that death, like birth, is part of life—but not the final part.

Read

Death Be Not Proud

A Memoir by John Gunther
Complete in the February JOURNAL.
Condensed from the book soon to be published by Harper & Brothers.

YOU CAN BE SURE..
IF IT'S Westinghouse

NOW..BUY THE BEST.. select the cleaner you need

- Get the one best suited to YOUR needs
- Choose an Upright, Tank or Hand Vac

You can count on Westinghouse whatever your cleaning job: Choose an Upright if rugs and carpets are your chief problem, especially deep-piled, hard-to-clean weaves. Choose a Tank-Type if you have many small rugs, bare floors, lots of dusting, and low, hard-to-get-under furniture. Choose a Hand Vac Convertible if you have a small apartment or need an extra upstairs Cleaner . . . and for mattresses, stair-carpets, or automobile upholstery. Only Westinghouse makes all three. See them at your Westinghouse retailer's now.

WESTINGHOUSE ELECTRIC CORPORATION • • • APPLIANCE DIVISION • • • MANSFIELD • OHIO

EVERY HOUSE NEEDS
Westinghouse Cleaners

TUNE IN TED MALONE... EVERY MORNING, MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY... ABC NETWORK

ink," Jack said slowly, "that Mrs. gham and Tom should do the work. t paid for it."

down," dad hollered. "You are no ecognized."

sat down amid general approval, ex- at of dad and mother.

was next recognized by the chair. "I Tom and Mrs. Cunningham have to do," he said, as dad and mother d and nodded agreement. "I think we hire more people to work for us."

t of order," dad shouted. "Sit down quiet!"

saw things weren't going right. ur chairman recognizes the assistant an." He nodded to mother to let her he had just conferred that title on her. e could hire additional help," mother "But that would mean cutting the t somewhere else. If we cut out all des- nd allowances, we could afford a maid. we cut out moving pictures, ice-cream and new clothes for a year, we could a gardener too."

o I hear a motion to that effect?" dad ed. "Does anybody want to stop allow- ?"

one did. After some prodding by dad, notion on allotting work finally was in- ced and passed. The boys would cut the and rake the leaves. The girls would , dust and do the supper dishes. Every- xcept dad would make his own bed and his room neat. When it came to appor- ng work on an aptitude basis, the smaller were assigned to dust the legs and lower es of furniture; the older girls to dust tops and upper shelves. The older boys d push the lawn mowers and carry leaves. younger ones would do the raking and ding.

ike most of dad's and mother's ideas, family council was basically sound and ight results. Family purchasing commit- , duly elected, bought the food, clothes, niture and athletic equipment. A utilities mmittee levied one-cent fines on wasters of er and electricity. A projects committee that work was completed as scheduled. owances were decided by the council, which meted out rewards and punishments. t was the council, too, which worked out system of submitting bids for unusual s to be done. When Lill was eight, she sub- tted a bid of forty-seven cents to paint a g, high fence in the back yard. Of course was the lowest bid, and she got the job.

"She's too young to try to paint that fence by herself," mother told dad.

"Nonsense," said dad. "She's got to learn e value of money and to keep agreements. t her alone."

Lill, who was saving for a pair of roller kates and wanted the money, kept insisting he could do it.

"If you start it, you'll have to finish it," ad said.

"I'll finish it, daddy. I know I can."

T took Lill ten days to finish the job, work- ng every day after school and all day week nds. Her hands blistered, and some nights he was so tired she couldn't sleep. It worried dad, but he made her live up to her contract.

When Lill finally completed the job, she came to dad in tears. "It's done," she said. "Now can I have my forty-seven cen. ?"

Dad counted out the change. "Don't cry, honey," he said. "No matter what you think of your old daddy, he did it for your own good. If you go look under your pillow you'll find that daddy really loved you all the time."

The present was a pair of roller skates.

Fred headed the utilities committee and collected the fines. Once, just before he went to bed, he found that someone had left a fau- cet dripping and that there was a bathtubful of hot water. Jack had been asleep for more than an hour, but Fred woke him up.

"Get in there and take a bath," he said

"But I had a bath just before I went to bed."

"I know you did, and you left the faucet dripping," Fred told him. "Do you want to waste that perfectly good water?"

"Why don't you take a bath?"

"I take my baths in the morning. You know that. That's the schedule."

Jack had two baths that night.

One day dad came home with two phono- graphs and two stacks of records. He whistled assembly as he hit the front steps, and we helped him unload.

"Kids," he said, "I have a wonderful sur- prise. Two phonographs and all these lovely records."

"But we have a phonograph, daddy."

"I know that, but the phonograph we have is the downstairs phonograph. Now we are going to have two upstairs phonographs. Won't that be fun?"

"Why?"

"Well, from now on," said dad, "we are going to try to do away with unavoidable delay. The phonographs will go in the bath- rooms—one in the boys' bathroom and the other in the girls' bathroom. When you are taking a bath, or brushing your teeth, or otherwise occupied, you will play the phono- graphs."

"Why?"

"Why, why, why," mimicked dad. "Does there have to be a why for everything?"

"There doesn't have to be, daddy," Ernes- tine explained patiently. "But with you there usually is. When you start talking about unavoidable delay and phonographs, dance music is not the first thing that pops into our minds."

"No," dad admitted. "It's not dance music. They are French and German language-lesson records. You don't have to listen to them con- sciously. Just play them. And they'll finally make an impression."

"Oh, no!"

Dad tired of diplomacy and psychology. "Shut up and listen to me," he roared. "I have spent one hundred and sixty dollars for this equipment. Did I get it for myself? I most emphatically did not. I happen to be able to speak German and French with such fluency that I frequently am mistaken for a native of both of those countries."

This was a gross exaggeration for, while dad had studied languages most of his adult life, he never had become very familiar with French, although he could stumble along fairly well in German. Usually he insisted that mother accompany him as an interpreter on business trips to Europe. Languages came naturally to mother.

"No," dad continued, "I did not buy this expensive equipment for myself. I bought it for you. And you are going to use it. If those two phonographs aren't going every morning from the minute you get up until you come down to breakfast, I'm going to know the reason why."

"One reason," said Bill, "might be that it is impossible to change records while you are in the bathtub."

"A person who applies motion study can be in and out of the tub in the time it takes one record to play."

That was perfectly true. Dad would sit in the tub and put the soap in his right hand. Then he'd place his right hand on his left shoulder and run it down the top of his left arm, back up the bottom of his left arm to his armpit, down his side, down the outside of his left leg, and then up the inside of his left leg. Then he'd change the soap to his left hand and do the same thing to his right side. After a couple of circular strokes on his mid- section and his back, and some special atten- tion to his feet and face, he'd duck under for a rinse and get out. He had all the boys in the bathroom several times to demonstrate just how he did it, and he sat in the middle of the living-room rug one day, with all clothes on, to teach the girls.

So there was no more unavoidable delay in the bathroom, and it wasn't long before we were all speaking at least a pidgin variety of French and German. For ten years the phono- graphs ground out their lessons on the second floor of our Montclair house. As we became fairly fluent, we often would speak the lan- guages at the dinner table. Dad was left out of the conversation when the talk was in French.

"Your German accents are not so bad," he said. "I can understand most of what you say when you talk German. But your French ac- cents are so atrocious that no one but your- selves could possibly understand you. Don't you think so, Lillie?"

"Well, dear," she said, "I don't think any- one would mistake them for natives of France, but I can usually make out what they're get- ting at."

"That," said dad, with some dignity, "is because you learned your French in this country, whereas my knowledge of the lan- guage came straight from the streets of Paris."

"Maybe so, dear," said mother. "Maybe so."

At about the time he brought home the phonographs, dad became a consultant to the Remington typewriter company and, through motion-study methods, helped Remington develop the world's fastest typist. He told us about it one night at dinner—how he had put little flashing lights on the fingers of the typ- ist and taken moving pictures to see just what motions she employed and how those motions could be reduced.

"Anyone can learn to type fast," dad con- cluded. "Why, I've got a system that will teach touch typing in two weeks. Absolutely guaranteed."

The next day he brought home a new, per- fectly white typewriter, a gold knife and an Ingersoll watch. He unwrapped them and put them on the dining-room table.

"Why is the typewriter white?" Anne wanted to know. "It's beautiful, but why is it white?"

"It's white so that it will photograph bet- ter," dad explained. "Also, for some reason, anyone who sees a white typewriter wants to type on it. Don't ask me why. It's psychol- ogy."

All of us wanted to use it, but dad wouldn't let anyone touch it but himself.

"THIS is an optional experiment," he said. "I believe I can teach the touch system in two weeks. Anyone who wants to learn will be able to practice on the white machine. The one who can type the fastest at the end of two weeks will receive the typewriter as a present. The knife and watch will be prizes awarded on a handicap basis, taking age into consideration."

Except for the two youngest, who still weren't talking, we all said we wanted to learn.

Dad brought out paper diagrams of a type- writer keyboard, and passed one to each of us. "The first thing you have to do is to mem- orize that keyboard. Q-W-E-R-T-Y-U-I-O-P. Those are the letters in the top line. Mem- orize them. Get to know them forward and backward. Get to know them so you can say them with your eyes closed."

Once we had memorized the keyboard, our fingers were colored with chalk. The little fingers were colored blue, the index fingers red, and so forth. Corresponding colors were placed on the key zones of the diagrams.

"All you have to do now is practice until each finger has learned the right color habit," dad said. "Once you've got that, we'll be ready to start."

In two days we were fairly adept at matching the colors on our fingers with the colors on the keyboard diagrams. Ernestine was the fastest, and got the first chance to sit down at the white typewriter. We all gath- ered around.

"Hey, no fair, daddy," she wailed. "You've put blank caps on all the keys."

Blank caps are fairly common now, but dad had thought up the idea and had them made by the Remington company.

"You don't have to see," he said. "Just imagine that those keys are colored, and type as you were typing on the diagram."

Ern started slowly, and then picked up speed, as her fingers jumped instinctively from key to key. Dad stood in back of her, with a pencil in one hand and a diagram in the other. Every time she made a mistake, he brought the pencil down on the top of her head.

"Stop it, daddy. That hurts."

"It's meant to hurt. Your head has to teach your fingers not to make mistakes."

Ern typed along. About every fifth word, she'd make a mistake and the pencil would descend with a bang. But the bangs became less and less frequent and finally dad put the pencil away.

"That's fine, Ernie," he said. "I believe I'll keep you."

By the end of two weeks, all children over six years old and mother knew the touch sys- tem reasonably well. We were a long way from being fast—because nothing but prac- tice gives speed—but we were reasonably accurate.

Since dad thought eating was a form of un- avoidable delay, he utilized the dinner hour as an instruction period. His primary rule was that no one could talk unless the subject was of general interest. Dad was the one who decided what subjects were of general inter- est. Since he was convinced that everything he uttered was interesting, the rest of the family had trouble getting a word in edge- wise. (Continued on Page 82)

"Sale? One seventy-nine? Why it's lovely!"

Open their eyes with this round-up of summer fruits!

Ready-diced! And even Sunday-morning sleepyheads brighten up to such marvelous flavor!

All five of these sparkling fruits are DEL MONTE, with all that name means in rich, ripe goodness—and combined in a balance you'll say is just right.

That's why you'll find DEL MONTE Brand Fruit Cocktail so much help.

It tastes every bit as good plain as it does in special recipes like this coffee cake. So you'll use it for starters, salads, desserts—any time you need something good and easy. Especially when you need it in a hurry—

Because "quick" is DEL MONTE Fruit Cocktail's middle name. We've done the peeling, dicing, mixing—you just be sure you get DEL MONTE, for flavor.

5-FRUIT COFFEE CAKE

- 1 No. 2½ can DEL MONTE Fruit Cocktail
- 2 cups biscuit mix
- ⅔ cup milk
- 3 tbsps. butter or margarine
- 1 tsp. grated lemon rind
- ⅓ cup brown sugar, firmly packed
- ½ cup chopped nutmeats
- ½ tsp. cinnamon

Thoroughly drain 1½ cups of the fruit cocktail on paper towels. Add milk to biscuit mix; stir well till smooth. Cover; let rest 10 min. Roll out on floured board into rectangle about 8x16 in.; place on cooky sheet. Mix softened butter and lemon rind; spread on dough. Place drained fruit evenly over surface. Sprinkle with sugar, nuts, cinnamon. Roll lengthwise like jelly roll. Pinch edge to seal; join ends to form ring. Slash with scissors at 1½-in. intervals to within 1 in. of center. Turn slices to overlap. Bake in moderately hot oven (400° F.) 25-30 min. Glaze while hot with powdered sugar moistened with syrup from fruit cocktail. Serve hot with remaining DEL MONTE Fruit Cocktail. Serves 6.

Del Monte FRUIT COCKTAIL

One more good food from the brand that puts FLAVOR FIRST

AMERICA'S EASIEST RANGE TO KEEP CLEAN

— a style and price for every need oking's joyously easy on the new Ultra-tic Caloric.

avor-Saver Dual Burners "measure" heat, op potwatching, protect vitamins, save s. Guaranteed for life.

ame-broiling's no bother. Veri-Clean oiler removes completely, washes in your k. Seamless porcelain enamel.

g oven with Hold-Heat Door Seal has tomatic control to bake or cook whole eals without attention.

oors have that "solid" feel, with patented lanced-action mounting for smooth osing without jar or slam.

very other feature—and there are plenty ore—give you America's biggest range alue for high speed, better cooking, longer fe, brighter beauty.

Dealers listed under CALORIC in Classified Telephone Book.

Caloric Stove Corporation, 1202 Widener Building, Philadelphia 7, Pa.

6-Burner (main illustration), 1 or 2 ovens—40"

4-Burner Divided Top 40" or 36"

4-Burner Cluster Top 40" or 36"

COMPACTO Space-saver 21" wide

Specially engineered models for LP-Gas users beyond city mains. Every model can include CP features if you desire.

Ultramatic

Caloric Automatic Gas Ranges

(Continued from Page 80)

"Honestly, we have the stupidest boy in our history class," Anne would begin.

"Is he cute?" Ernestine asked.

"Not of general interest," dad roared.

"I'm interested," Mart said.

"But I," dad announced, "am bored stiff. Now if Anne had seen a two-headed boy in history class, that would have been of general interest."

Usually at the start of a meal, while mother served the plates at one end of the table, dad served the day's topic of conversation at the other end.

"I met an engineer today who had just returned from India," he said. "What do you think he told me? He believes India has fewer industries for its size than any country in the world."

We knew, then, that for the duration of that particular meal even the dullest facts about India would be deemed of exceptional general interest; whereas neighboring Siam, Persia, China and Mongolia would, for some reason, be considered of but slight general interest, and events which had transpired in Montclair, New Jersey, would be deemed of no interest whatsoever.

Sometimes the topic of conversation was a motion-study project, such as clearing off the dishes from the table. Motion study was always of great general interest.

"Is it better to stack the dishes on the table, so that you can carry out a big pile?" dad asked. "Or is it better to take a few of them at a time into the butler's pantry, where you can rinse them while you stack? After dinner we'll divide the table into two parts, and try one method on one part and the other method on the other. I'll time the job for you."

Also of exceptional general interest was a series of tricks whereby dad could multiply large numbers in his head, without using pencil and paper. The explanation of how the tricks are worked is too complicated to explain in detail here. Two fairly elementary examples should suffice.

1. To multiply 46 times 46, you figure how much greater 46 is than 25. The answer is 21. Then you figure how much less 46 is than 50. The answer is 4. You square the 4 and get 16. You put the 21 and the 16 together, and the answer is 21–16, or 2,116.

2. To multiply 44 times 44, you figure how much greater 44 is than 25. The answer is 19. Then you figure how much less 44 is than 50. The answer is 6. You square the 6 and get 36. You put the 19 and the 36 together, and the answer is 19–36 or 1,936.

"I want to teach all of you how to multiply two-digit numbers in your head," dad announced at dinner.

"Not of general interest," said Anne.

"Those who do not think it is of general interest may leave the table and go to their rooms," dad said coldly, "and I understand there is apple pie for dessert."

Nobody left.

"Since everyone now appears to be interested," said dad, "I will explain how it's done."

It was a complicated thing for children to understand, and it involved memorizing the squares of all numbers up to 25. But dad took it slowly, and within a couple of months the older children had learned all the tricks involved.

Mother took an active part in Sunday-school work. She didn't teach a class, but she served on a number of committees. Once she called on a woman who had just moved to town, to ask her to serve on a fund-raising committee.

"I'd be glad to if I had the time," the woman said. "But I have three young sons and they keep me on the run. I'm sure if you have a boy of your own, you'll understand how much trouble three can be."

"Of course," said mother. "That's quite all right. And I do understand."

"Have you any children, Mrs. Gilbreth?" the woman asked.

"Oh, yes."

"Any boys?"

"Yes, I have six boys."

"Six boys!" gulped the woman. "Imagine a family of six!"

"Oh, there're more in the family than that. I have six girls too."

"I surrender," whispered the newcomer: "When is the next meeting of the committee? I'll be there, Mrs. Gilbreth."

One teacher in the Sunday school, a Mrs. Bruce, had the next-to-largest family in Montclair. She had eight children, most of whom were older than we. Mother and Mrs. Bruce became great friends.

About a year later, a New York woman connected with some sort of national birth-control organization came to Montclair to form a local chapter. Her name was Mrs. Alice Mebane, or something like that. She inquired among her acquaintances who in Montclair might be sympathetic to the birth-control movement. As a joke, someone referred her to Mrs. Bruce.

"I'd be delighted to co-operate," mother's friend told Mrs. Mebane, "but you see I have several children myself. So I don't think I would be the one to head up a birth-control movement in Montclair. But I know just the person for you. She has a big house that would be ideal for meetings."

"Just what we want," purred Mrs. Mebane. "What is her name?"

"Mrs. Frank Gilbreth. She's civic-minded, and she's a career woman."

"Exactly what we want. May I use your name and tell Mrs. Gilbreth you sent me?"

"By all means," said mother's friend. "I shall be disappointed if you don't."

The afternoon that Mrs. Mebane arrived at our house, all of us children were either upstairs in our rooms or playing in the back yard. Mrs. Mebane introduced herself.

"It's about birth control," she told mother.

"What about it?" mother asked.

"I was told you'd be interested. There's work to be done, Mrs. Gilbreth, and that's why I'm here. We'd like you to be the moving spirit behind a Montclair birth-control chapter."

Mother decided at this point that the situation was too ludicrous for dad to miss, and that he'd never forgive her if she didn't deal him in.

"I'll have to ask my husband," she said. "Excuse me while I call him."

Mother stepped out and found dad. She gave him a brief explanation and then led him into the parlor and introduced him.

"It's a pleasure to meet a woman in such a noble cause," said dad.

"Thank you. And it's a pleasure to find a man who thinks of it as noble. In general, I find the husbands less sympathetic with our aims than the wives. You'd be surprised at some of the terrible things men have said to me."

"I love surprises," dad leered. "What do you say back to them?"

"If you had seen, as I have," said Mrs. Mebane, "relatively young women grown old before their time by the arrival of unwanted young ones. And population figures show —— Why, Mr. Gilbreth, what are you doing?"

What dad was doing was whistling assembly. On the first note, feet could be heard pounding on the floors above. Doors slammed, there was a landslide on the stairs, and we started skidding into the parlor.

"Nine seconds," said dad, pocketing his stopwatch. "Three short of the record."

"What is it?" said Mrs. Mebane. "Is it a school? No. Or is it —— For heaven's sake!"

"I was about to introduce you," said dad. "Mrs. Mebane, let me introduce you to the family—or most of it. Seems to me there should be some more around someplace."

"God help us all!"

"How many head of children do we have now, Lillie?"

"Last time I counted, seems to me there was an even dozen," said mother. "I might have missed one or two of them, but not many."

Mrs. Mebane was putting on her coat. "You poor dear," she clucked to mother. "You poor child." Then, turning to dad, "It seems to me that the people of this town have pulled my leg on two different occasions today."

The day the United States entered the first World War, dad sent President Wilson a telegram which read:

ARRIVING WASHINGTON 7:03 P. M. TRAIN. IF YOU DON'T KNOW HOW TO USE ME, I'LL TELL YOU HOW.

Whether or not this heartening intelligence took some of the weight off Mr. Wilson's troubled shoulders, dad never made entirely plain. But the next time we saw him, he was in uniform, assigned to motion-study training in assembling and disassembling the Lewis machine gun and other automatic weapons.

Mother had been planning for several years to take all of us to California to visit her family. When dad was ordered to Fort Sill, Oklahoma, the time seemed opportune.

Mother's family was socially prominent and well-to-do. She was the oldest of nine children, only three of whom were married. The six others, two brothers and four sisters, lived with their parents in Oakland. The Mollers managed, in spite of their worldly goods, to live fairly simply. They were quiet and conservative. They seldom raised their voices and were immensely fond of one another and affectionate.

Even before we visited California, we knew all about the household at Oakland and its inhabitants, because mother used to like to tell us about her girlhood. We knew the arrangement of the house, even down to the full-length mirror on a hall door which mother's younger sisters used to open at just the right angle so that they could watch dad's courting technique.

Tzu Chang asked Confucius the meaning of virtue, to which the sage replied: To be able everywhere one goes to carry five things into practice constitutes virtue. They are courtesy, magnanimity, sincerity, earnestness and kindness. With courtesy you avoid insult, with magnanimity you will win all, with sincerity men will trust you, with earnestness you will have success, and with kindness you will be fitted to command others.

Hearing mother tell about the courtship, we used to wonder what her parents had thought when dad first came to call. He had met mother in Boston, about a year before, when she was on that well-chaperoned tour to Europe. The chaperon, who was dad's cousin, had introduced him to all the girls, but he had selected Miss Lillie as the one on whom to shower his attention. Mother went on to Europe. After her return, dad followed her to the West Coast.

When he arrived at Oakland he was invited to mother's house for tea, where he met her mother and father and most of her brothers and sisters. A workman was building a new fireplace in the living room, and as dad was escorted through that room he stopped to watch the man laying bricks.

"Now there's an interesting job," dad said. "Laying brick. It looks easy to me. I don't see why those workmen claim that laying brick is skilled labor. I'll bet anyone could do it."

"Right this way, Mr. Gilbreth," said mother's father. "We're having tea on the porch."

Dad wouldn't be hurried. "It seems to me that all you do is pick up a brick, put some mortar on it, and put it in the fireplace."

THE bricklayer turned to survey the plump but dapper dude from the East. "Like to try it, mister?"

Dad, who had set his sights on just such an invitation, said he guessed not. Mother tugged at his sleeve and fidgeted.

"Here," the bricklayer said, handing dad the trowel. "Try it."

Dad grinned and took the trowel. He grabbed a brick, flipped it into position in his hand, slapped on the mortar with a rotary motion of the trowel, placed the brick, scraped off the excess mortar, reached for a second brick, flipped it, and was about to slap on more mortar when the workman reached out and took back his trowel.

"That's enough, you old hod carrier," he shouted. "It's many a thousand brick you've laid, and don't try to tell me different."

Dad dusted off his hands with this spotless handkerchief. "Dead easy, my [illegible]ding man."

"And what did your family [illegible]ud and n[illegible]ink of him?" we asked mother.

[illegible] so well in te[illegible] decided to use

"I never could understand it," mother said. "But they thought he was simply wonderful. Mamma said it was like a breath of fresh air when he walked into a room. And papa said the business of laying bricks wasn't just showing off, but was your father's way of telling them that he had started out by making a living with his hands."

"Is that what you were trying to tell them, daddy?" we asked.

"Trying to tell them nothing," dad shouted. "When some people walk into a parlor, they like to sit down at the piano and impress people by playing Bach. When I walk into a parlor, I like to lay brick, that's all."

THERE were eight children in the family when we set out with mother for California. Fred was the baby, and was trainsick all the way. Lill, next to youngest, had broken a bone in her foot three weeks before, and had to stay in her berth. Mother was expecting another baby in three months, and didn't always feel too well herself.

Mother had spent a good bit of money buying us new outfits so that we would make a good impression, and she thought she ought to economize on train accommodations. We were jammed, two in a berth, into a drawing room and two sections. She brought along a Sterno cooking outfit and two suitcases of food, mostly cereals and graham crackers. We ate almost all our meals in the drawing room, journeying to the dining car only on those infrequent occasions when mother yielded to our complaints that scurvy was threatening to set in.

She spent most of her time trying to make Lill comfortable and trying to find some kind of milk that would stay on Fred's stomach. She had little opportunity to supervise the rest of us, and we wandered up and down the train, peeking into berths and, in the case of Frank and Bill, turning somersaults and wrestling in the aisles.

After four days on the train, with no baths except for the sponge variety, we were not very sanitary when we reached California. Mother wanted us to look our best and she planned to give each of us a personal scrubbing and see that we had on clean clothes, an hour before we got to Oakland.

Her oldest brother, Uncle Fred, surprised us by boarding the train at Sacramento. He found us in the drawing room, in the middle of a meal. Suitcases were open on the floor, and there was a pile of diapers in a corner. The baby, still trainsick, was crying in mother's arms. Lill's foot was hurting, and she was crying on the couch. Bill was doing acrobatics on the bed. There were bowls of cereal and graham crackers on a card table. The place smelled of Sterno and worse.

Uncle Fred used to joke about it when we were older. But at the time you never would have known he noticed anything unusual.

"Lillie, dear, it's good to see you," he said. "You look simply radiant. Not a day older."

"Oh, Fred, Fred." Mother put down the baby, wiped her eyes apologetically, and clung to her brother. "It's ridiculous to cry, isn't it? But it means so much having you here."

"Was it a hard trip, dear?"

Mother was already bustling around straightening up the drawing room. "I wouldn't want to do it every day," she admitted. "But it's almost over and you're here. You're my first taste of home."

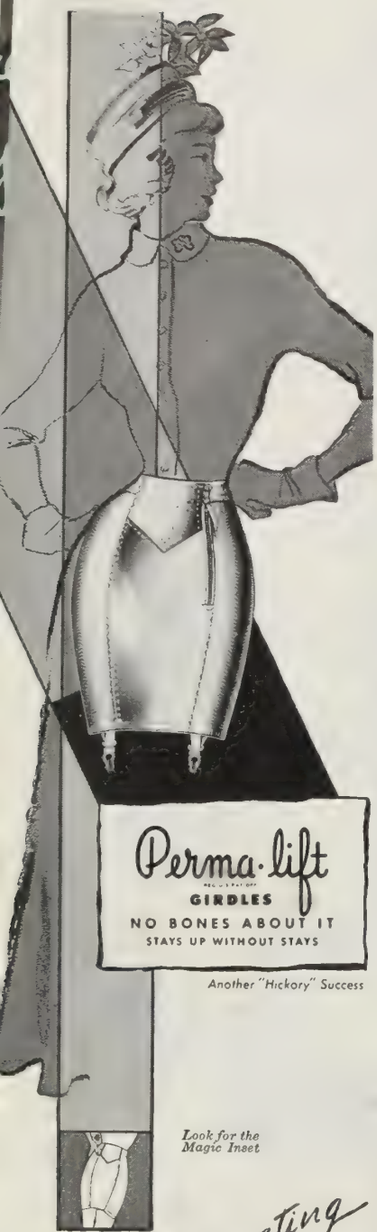
Uncle Fred turned to us. "Welcome to California."

"You're just like we imagined you," Martha told him. "Are we like you imagined us?"

"Just exactly," he said. "Down to the last freckle."

"I hope you didn't imagine them like this," mother said, but she was happy. "Never mind. You'll never know them in a few minutes. You take the boys out into the car, and I'll start getting the girls cleaned up. Of course, none of them will be really clean until I can get them into a tub."

Cut Down Food Bills with this Second-Helping Heinz Dish-



Romany Steak Pie— Brown 1 lb. ground round steak in skillet. Add contents of a tin of Heinz Condensed Cream of Tomato Soup, undiluted, and 4 strips bacon, sautéed and broken into pieces. Place in a casserole. Top with biscuits and bake in a very hot oven (450° F.) 15 minutes or until biscuits are a rich golden brown.

Taste the WONDERFUL DIFFERENCE in Heinz 57 Soups

You've probably enjoyed Heinz Soups for lunch or supper. But have you tried these old favorites in thrifty casserole dishes? Heinz Soups have flavor to spare! Careful cooking brews in the flavors of homemade noodles, fresh vegetables, chicken and other choice things. Ask for Heinz Cream of Tomato, Cream of Mushroom or other favorites. They taste homemade!

for fascinating fashion elegance

NO BONES ABOUT IT

Stays up without stays

A "Perma·lift"* Girdle keeps you in line with today's fashions. The famous Magic Inset craftily flattens your tummy, nips in your waist, smooths your hip line with No Bones About It. Gone is the discomfort of sticking stays and binding bulges. Here is healthful, boneless, non-roll, figure control. And best of all, your "Perma·lift" Girdle is featherweight, retains its gentle firm support through countless washings and wearings. At your favorite corset department—$5.00 to $12.50. Ask for yours today.

Also enjoy the lasting lift of a "Perma·lift" Brassiere—America's favorite bra with "The Lift that never lets you down."

*"Perma·lift" and "Hickory," are trade marks of A. Stein & Company (Reg. U. S. Pat Off.)

We were presentable and on our best behavior when we finally arrived in Oakland, where mother's sisters and other brothers were waiting.

"Lillie, dear, it's good to see you, and the dear children," they kept repeating. Each of us had a godparent among mother's brothers and sisters.

Mother's father and mother—Papa and Grosie, we called them—were waiting for us on the steps of the house. We thought they were picture-book grandparents. Papa was tall, lean and courtly, with a gates-ajar collar, string tie and soft, white mustache. Grosie was short and fragile, with a gray pompadour and smiling brown eyes. Grosie kissed us and called us "dears." Papa shook hands, and said that each day we stayed in his house he was going to take all of us down to a toyshop and let us pick out a toy apiece.

We were so impressed by the comforts and quiet organization of the Mollers' home that we were subdued and on our best behavior.

"They don't act at all the way I pictured them," Papa said. "From your letters, I thought they whooped and hollered around. I don't believe they feel at home."

"They'll feel at home soon enough," mother warned.

We decided to feel at home on the day that Grosie gave a formal tea in mother's honor. We were dressed up in new outfits. For the girls, it was dotted Swiss and matching hair ribbons and sashes; for the boys, blue serge suits and Buster Brown collars, with red, generous bow ties.

"We're all going to be so proud of you today, dears," the aunts told us. "You're going to make such a lovely impression on all the guests. First the grownups will have a little visit by themselves. Then we want you children to come in and meet the guests. Remember, some of these people are your mother's oldest friends, and she wants to be proud of you. Now run along out into the garden. We'll call you when it's time."

Left by ourselves, we walked out on the lawn, where we formed a starched, uncomfortable and resentful group.

"At home," Martha said, "the children visit when the grownups visit. At home they think the children have enough sense to fix their own hair. And they don't have to wear hair ribbons tied so tight they can't wiggle their eyebrows."

A sprinkler was watering the lawn near by. Martha jerked off her hair ribbon, threw it on the ground, walked deliberately to the sprinkler and stood under it.

Anne and Ernestine were horrified. "Martha," they shouted. "Are you crazy? Come out of there."

MARTHA put her head back and laughed. She opened her mouth and caught water in it. She wiggled her now free eyebrows in ecstasy. The starch went out of her clothes, and the hair streamed over her face.

Frank and Bill joined Martha under the sprinkler. Then Ernestine came in, leaving Anne, the oldest, in what for her was a fairly familiar dilemma: whether to cast her lot with us or with the adults.

"Come in and get wet," we shouted. "Don't be a traitor. The water's fine."

Anne sighed, untied her hair ribbon and came in.

"All right, dears," one of the aunts called from the house. "It's time to meet the guests now."

We filed, grinning, into the living room, where our dripping clothes made puddles on Grosie's Persian rug.

"I think they feel at home now," mother said a little ruefully. "You children listen to me. Go upstairs and change your clothes. No nonsense, now. I want you down here, dry, in ten minutes. Do you understand?"

We understood. That was the kind of talk we understood.

Everybody liked it better now that we went shouting through the house, playing hide-and-go-seek, and sliding down the banisters. Only during the afternoons, when Grosie was taking a nap, Papa asked us to be quiet.

"Try to keep it down to a dull roar for just two hours, dears," he told us. "Your grandmother really needs her rest."

The visit came to an end, and we put on our traveling clothes and said good-by on the station platform. We got on the train and pressed our noses against the glass.

Mother did her best to cheer us up. "I didn't bring a single Sterno can with me," she said. "Things will be much better going home than they were coming out. Lill's foot is better, and I don't think Freddy's going to be sick any more. We can go into the diner and ——"

"Whoop," Martha coughed. "Whoop. Whoop." She was sick in the basin.

"You don't suppose that child's caught whooping cough, do you?" mother asked. "Let me feel your forehead."

By the time we reached Salt Lake City, all eight of us had whooping cough.

Dad had managed to obtain leave from Fort Sill, and surprised us by boarding the train at Chicago. He helped with a bucket and mop mother had borrowed from the porter, and brought us soup heated over recently acquired Sterno cans.

"Thank you, daddy, dear," we told him.

"Daddy, dear?" he said. "Daddy, dear? Well! I guess I ought to send you kids to California every summer."

"Not with me, you don't," mother put in. "I can't tell you how much I enjoyed seeing the dear folks. But next time you take the children out West, and I'll go to war."

WE spent our summers at Nantucket, Massachusetts, where dad bought two lighthouses, which had been abandoned by the Government, and a ramshackle cottage, which looked as if it had been abandoned by Coxey's Army. Dad had the lighthouses moved so that they flanked the cottage. He and mother used one as an office and den. The other served as a bedroom for three of the children.

The cottage and lighthouses were situated on a flat stretch of land between the fashionable Cliff and the bathing beach. Besides our place, there was only one other house in the vicinity. This belonged to an artist couple named Whitney. After our first summer at Nantucket, the Whitneys had their house jacked up, placed on rollers, and moved a mile away to a vacant lot near the tip of Brant Point. After that, we had the strip of land all to ourselves.

Our cottage had one small lavatory, but no hot water, shower or bathtub. Dad thought that living a primitive life in the summer was healthful. He also believed that cleanliness was next to godliness, and as a result all of us had to go swimming at least once a day. The rule was never waived, even when the temperature dropped to the fifties and a cold, gray rain was falling. Dad would lead the way from the house to the beach, dogtrotting, holding a bar of soap in one hand and beating his chest with the other.

"Look out, ocean, here comes a tidal wave. B'r-r-r. Last one in is Kaiser Bill."

Then he'd take a running dive and disappear in a geyser of spray. He'd swim underwater a way, allow his feet to emerge, wiggle his toes, swim underwater some more, and then come up head first, grinning.

"Come on," he'd call. "It's wonderful once you get in." And he'd start lathering himself with soap.

As in every other phase of teaching, dad knew his business as a swimming instructor. Some of us learned to swim when we were as young as three years old, and all of us had learned by the time we were five.

Dad had promised before we came to Nantucket that there would be no formal studying—no language records and no schoolbooks. He kept his promise, although we found he was always teaching us things informally, when our backs were turned.

For instance, there was the matter of the Morse code.

"I have a way to teach you the code without any studying," he announced one day.

We said we didn't want to learn the code, that we didn't want to learn anything until school started in the fall.

"There's no studying," said dad, "and the ones who learn it first will get rewards. The ones who don't learn it are going to wish they had."

After lunch, he got a small paintbrush and a can of black enamel, and locked himself in

Sell EVERYDAY CARDS
EARN Spare Time CASH
IT'S EASY. Just show friends these lovely boxes of Birthday, Get Well, Secret Pal, Kiddy, Easter and Relative cards. Sell on sight. Box of 14 assorted cards sell for $1—pays you up to 50c cash. Also Gift Wrappings, newest Stationery, Cute Notes. Start earning now. WRITE TODAY for SAMPLES sent on approval.
MIDWEST CARD CO., 415 N. 8th, Dept. 5-J, St. Louis 1, Mo.

KNITTING WOOL
Send for 250 FREE Samples
Prompt Mail Service
Colonial Yarn House, 1231-R Cherry St., Phila. 7, Pa.

AMAZING OFFER—$50 IS YOURS
FOR SELLING ONLY 100 BOXES of entirely different, new Deluxe All Occasion cards. Patented feature relies on and included. Each box sells for $1.00, your profit 50c. Surprise items. It costs you nothing to try. Write today.
CHEERFUL CARD CO., Dept. G-17, White Plains, N. Y.
WRITE FOR SAMPLES

the lavatory. On the wall directly across from the toilet, he painted the alphabet in code. The only way you could keep from looking at it was to close your eyes.

For the next three days dad was busy with his paintbrush, writing code over the whitewash in every room. On the ceiling in the dormitory bedrooms, he wrote the alphabet together with key words, whose accents were a reminder of the code for the various letters. It went like this: A, dot-dash, a-BOUT; B, dash-dot-dot-dot, BOIS-ter-ous-ly; C, dash-dot-dash-dot, CARE-less CHILD-ren; D, dash-dot-dot, DAN-ger-ous, and so on.

When you lay on your back, dozing, the words kept going through your head, and you'd find yourself saying, "DAN-ger-ous, dash-dot-dot, DAN-ger-ous."

He painted secret messages in code on the walls of the front porch and dining room.

"What do they say, daddy?" we asked.

"Many things," he replied mysteriously. "Many secret things and many things of great humor."

We went into the bedrooms and copied the code alphabet on pieces of paper. Then, referring to the paper, we started translating dad's messages. He went right on painting, as if he were paying no attention to us, but he didn't miss a word.

"What awful puns," said Anne. "Listen to this one: 'Bee it ever so bumble there's no place like comb.'"

"And we're stung," Ern moaned. "We're not going to be satisfied until we translate them all. I see dash-dot-dash-dot, and I hear myself repeating CARE-less CHILD-ren. What's this one say?"

We figured it out: "When igorots is bliss, 'tis folly to be white." And another, by courtesy of Mr. Irvin S. Cobb, "Eat, drink and be merry for tomorrow you may diet."

Every day or so dad would leave a piece of paper, containing a Morse-code message, on the dining-room table. Translated, it might read something like this: "The first one who figures out this secret message should look in the right-hand pocket of my linen knickers, hanging on a hook in my room. Daddy." Or: "Hurry up before someone beats you to it, and look in the bottom, left drawer of the sewing machine."

In the knickers pocket or in the drawer would be some sort of reward—a chocolate bar, a quarter, a receipt entitling the bearer to one chocolate ice-cream soda at Coffin's Drug Store, payable by dad on demand.

Some of the Morse-code notes were false alarms. "Hello, Live Bait. This one is on the house. No reward. But there may be a reward next time. When you finish reading this, flash off like mad so the next fellow will think you are on some hot clue. Then he'll read it, too, and you won't be the only one who got fooled. Daddy."

As dad had planned, we all knew the Morse code fairly well within a few weeks. Well enough, in fact, so that we could tap out messages to each other by bouncing the tip of a fork on a butter plate. When a dozen or so persons all attempt to broadcast in this matter—and all of us preferred sending to receiving—the accumulation is loud and nerve-shattering.

The wall-writing worked so well in teaching us the code that dad decided to use the same system to teach us astronomy. His first step was to capture our interest, and he did this by fashioning a telescope from a camera tripod and a pair of binoculars. He'd tote the contraption out into the yard on clear nights, and look at the stars, while apparently ignoring us.

We'd gather around, demanding that he let us look through the telescope.

"Don't bother me," he'd say, with his nose stuck into the glasses. "My golly, I believe those two stars are going to collide! No. Awfully close, though. Now I've got to see what the Old Beetle's up to. What a star, what a star!"

"Daddy, give us a turn," we'd insist. "Don't be a pig."

Finally, with assumed reluctance, he agreed to let us look through the glasses. We could see the rings of Saturn, three moons of Jupiter, and the craters on our own moon. Dad's favorite star was Betelgeuse, the yellowish-red "Old Beetle" in the Orion constellation. He took a personal interest in her, because some of his friends were collaborating in experiments to measure her diameter by Michelson's interferometer.

When he finally was convinced he had interested us in astronomy, dad started a new series of wall paintings dealing with stars. On one wall he made a scale drawing of the major planets, ranging from little Mercury, represented by a circle about as big as a marble, to Jupiter, as big as a basketball. On another, he showed the planets in relation to their distances from the sun, with Mercury the closest and Neptune the farthest away—almost in the kitchen. Pluto still hadn't been discovered, which was just as well, because there really wasn't room for it.

There was still some wall space left, and dad had more than enough ideas to fill it. He tacked up a piece of cross-section graph paper, which was a thousand lines long and a thousand lines wide, and thus contained exactly a million little squares.

"You hear people talk a lot about a million," he said, "but not many people have ever seen exactly a million things at the same time. If a man has a million dollars, he has exactly as many dollars as there are little squares on that chart. If you count them, you'll see."

"Do you have a million dollars, daddy?" Bill asked.

"No," said dad a little ruefully. "I have a million children instead. Somewhere along the line, a man has to choose between the two."

He painted diagrams in the dining room, showing the difference between meters and feet, kilograms and pounds, liters and quarts. And he painted seventeen mysterious-looking symbols, representing each of the Therbligs, on a wall near the front door.

The Therbligs were discovered—or maybe a better word would be "diagnosed"—by dad and mother. Everybody has seventeen of them, they said, and the Therbligs can be used in such a way as to make life difficult or easy for their possessor.

A lazy man, dad believed, always makes the best use of his Therbligs because he is too indolent to waste motions. Whenever dad started to do a new motion-study project at a factory, he'd always begin by announcing

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

I Love to Loll

By Jessie Heckman Hirschl

I love to loll in soothing suds, within a tepid tub;
In mood euphoric, mildly caloric, to lie in peace and scrub.
But oh! The houses of my friends, where showers leap and beat!
I squirm and scream, in seething steam, from cowering head to feet.
The horrid power of torrid shower
I try to coax and cosset
With gentle jiggle—the merest wiggle—of bright unyielding faucet.
But then, like waters at Lodore, an urgent, icy torrent Shakes every molar with blasts so polar
It's equally abhorrent.

The basic error in the case—
I hope that you'll agree?—
Is just—I like to take a bath
And not have it take me.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Red is smart here...

but never here!

CHAP-PROOF* your hands with TRUSHAY

Red, red rubies in your hair—so bewitching, so fashion-right! But red hands—never! They spoil your whole appearance. And they're so needless now!

Even if you do dishes or brave wintry winds, you can keep your hands smooth and lovely with different Trushay.

For Trushay has a unique "beforehand" extra that guards against chapping. Yes, you can use Trushay two wonderful ways!

To soften and smooth. Just a few drops make your hands feel like satin! Use fragrant, creamy-rich Trushay anytime!

To chap-proof. Smooth on Trushay before doing dishes, light laundry, or before going outdoors. As long as Trushay is on your hands, they're protected against water chap and weather chap!

For evening-soft hands all day long... begin today to use Trushay!

TRUSHAY

PRODUCT OF BRISTOL-MYERS

The lotion with the "beforehand" extra!

* Applied before exposure to hot, soapy water—or wind and weather—Trushay protects hands against the red, rough, dried-out condition known as chapping. When soap-and-water tasks are prolonged—or weather is severe—renew application at convenient intervals.

DRINK

Heart's Delight

California

APRICOT NECTAR

Heart's Delight

FRUIT NECTARS

APRICOT · PEACH · PEAR

YOU'LL LIKE ALL THREE!

Imagine! In every glassful of Heart's Delight Fruit Nectar—Apricot, Peach or Pear—you get the goodness and food value of fresh, ripe California fruit especially selected for nectar use! Here indeed is the easy, economical way to give your family the fruit nourishment they need in "Juicidrinks" they really enjoy!

SIX TEMPTING USES, MORNING, NOON AND NIGHT!. . . . . 1. Beverage
2. Sherbet
3. Punches
4. Sauces
5. Salads and Dressings
6. Desserts

Try the tested recipes on the back of every Heart's Delight Fruit Nectar label!

Delight your family with

● HOT SPICED APRICOT NECTAR

Boil together 5 minutes—½ cup granulated sugar, 1½ cups water, 5 whole cloves, one 2-inch stick cinnamon. Strain, add 1½ cups Apricot Nectar, 2 tablespoons lemon juice and ½ cup strong tea. Reheat, serve hot. Serves 6.

● APRICOT SHERBET

Simmer ¼ cup apricot nectar and ½ cup sugar for 2 minutes. Stir in 1 cup nectar, 2 teaspoons lemon juice and ¼ teaspoon salt. Freeze to a mush. Add 2 tablespoons sugar to 2 stiffly-beaten egg whites; fold into frozen mixture. Freeze until firm, stirring twice. Serves 6.

RICHMOND CHASE COMPANY San Jose, California

he wanted to photograph the motions of the laziest man on the job.

"The kind of fellow I want," he'd say, "is the fellow who is so lazy he won't even scratch himself. You must have one of those around some place. Every factory has them."

Dad named the Therbligs for himself—Gilbreth spelled backward, with a slight variation. They were the basic theorems of his business and resulted indirectly in such things as foot levers to open garbage cans, special chairs for factory workers, redesign of typewriters, and some aspects of the assembly-line technique.

Actually, a Therblig is a unit of motion or thought. Suppose a man goes into the bathroom to shave. We'll assume that his face is all lathered and he is ready to pick up his razor. He knows where the razor is, but first he must locate it with his eye. That is "search," the first Therblig. His eye finds it and comes to rest—that's "find," the second Therblig. Third comes "select," the process of sliding the razor prior to the fourth Therblig, "grasp." Fifth is "transport loaded," bringing the razor up to the face, and sixth is "position," getting the razor set on the face. There are eleven other Therbligs—the last one is "think!"

When dad made a motion study, he broke each operation down into a Therblig, and then tried to reduce the time taken to perform each. Perhaps certain parts to be assembled could be painted red and others green, so as to reduce the time required for "search" and "find." Perhaps the parts could be moved closer to the object being assembled, so as to reduce the time required for "transport loaded."

Every Therblig had its own symbol, and once they were painted on the wall dad had us apply them to our household chores—bedmaking, dishwashing, sweeping and dusting.

It was an off year that didn't bring a new Gilbreth baby. Both dad and mother wanted a large family. And if it was dad who set the actual target of an even dozen, mother as readily agreed.

Dad mentioned the dozen figure for the first time on their wedding day. They had just boarded a train at Oakland, California, after the ceremony, and mother was trying to appear blasé, as if she had been married for years. She might have gotten away with it, if dad had not stage-whispered when she took off her hat prior to sitting down:

"Good heavens, woman, why didn't you tell me your hair was red?"

The heads of leering, winking passengers craned around. Mother slid into the seat and wiggled into a corner, where she tried to hide behind a magazine. Dad sat down next to her. He didn't say anything more until the train got under way.

"I shouldn't have done that," he whispered. "It's just . . . I'm so proud of you I want everyone to look at you, and know you're my wife."

"That's all right, dear. I'm glad you're proud of me."

"We're going to have a wonderful life, Lillie. A wonderful life and a wonderful family. A great big family."

"We'll have children all over the house," mother smiled. "How many would you say we should have, just as an estimate?"

"We'll sell out for an even dozen," said dad. "No less. What do you say to that?"

"I say," said mother, "a dozen would be just right. Boys or girls?"

"Well, boys would be fine," dad whispered. "A dozen boys would be just right. But . . . well, girls would be all right too. Sure. I guess."

"I'd like to have half boys and half girls. Do you think it would be all right to have half girls?"

"If that's what you want," dad said, "we'll plan it that way. Excuse me a minute while I make a note of it." He took out his memorandum book and solemnly wrote: "Don't forget to have six boys and six girls."

They had a dozen children, six boys and six girls, in seventeen years. Somewhat to dad's disappointment, there were no twins or other multiple births. There was no doubt in his mind that the most efficient way to rear a large family would be to have one huge litter and get the whole business over at one time.

It was a year or so after the wedding, when mother was expecting her first baby, that dad confided to her his secret conviction that all their children would be girls.

"Would it make much difference to you?" mother asked.

"Would it make much difference?" dad asked in amazement. "To have a dozen girls and not a single boy?" Then, realizing that he might upset mother, he added quickly, "No, of course not. Anything you decide to have will be just fine with me."

Dad's conviction that he would have no boys was based on a hunch that the Gilbreth name, of which he was inordinately proud, would cease to exist with him. Dad was the only surviving male of the entire branch of his family. There were two or three other Gilbreths in the country, but apparently they were no relation to dad. The name Gilbreth, in the case of dad's family, was a fairly recent corruption of Galbraith. A clerk of court, in a small town in Maine, had misspelled Galbraith on some legal document, and it had proved easier for dad's grandfather to change his name to Gilbreth—which was how the clerk had spelled it—than to change the document.

So when Anne was born, in New York, dad was not in the least disappointed, because he had known all along she would be a girl. It is doubtful if any father ever was more insane about an offspring.

Dad had long held theories about babies and, with the arrival of Anne, he was anxious to put them to a test. He believed that children, like little monkeys, were born with certain instincts of self-preservation, but that the instincts vanished because babies were kept cooped up in a crib. He was convinced that babies started learning things from the minute they were born, and that it was wrong to keep them in a nursery. He always forbade baby talk in the presence of Anne or any of his subsequent offspring.

He also thought that to feel secure and wanted in the family circle, a baby should be brought up at the side of its parents. He put Anne's bassinet on a desk in his and mother's bedroom, and talked to her as if she were an adult, about concrete, and his new houseboat, and efficiency, and all the little sisters she was going to have.

The German nurse whom dad had employed was scornful. "Why, she can't understand a thing you say," the nurse told dad.

"How do you know?" dad demanded. "And I wish you'd speak German, like I told you to do, when you talk in front of the baby. I want her to learn both languages."

"What does a two-week-old baby know about German?" said the nurse.

"Never mind that," dad replied. "I hired you because you speak German, and I want you to speak it."

A week later, dad talked mother into letting him see whether new babies were born with a natural instinct to swim.

"When you throw little monkeys into a river, they just automatically swim. That's the way monkey mothers teach their young. I'll try Anne out in the bathtub. I won't let anything happen to her."

"Are you crazy or something?" the nurse shouted. "Mrs. Gilbreth, you're not going to let him drown that child."

"Keep quiet and maybe you'll learn something," dad told her.

Anne liked the big bathtub just fine. But she made no effort to swim and dad finally had to admit that the experiment was a failure.

Dad and mother moved to another apartment on Riverside Drive, where Mary and Ernestine were born. Then the family moved to Plainfield, New Jersey, where Martha put in an appearance. With four girls, dad was reconciled to his fate of being the Last of the Gilbreths. He was not bitter, merely resigned. He kept repeating that a dozen girls would suit him just fine, and he made jokes about "my harem." When visitors came to call dad would introduce Anne, Mary and Ernestine. Then he'd get Martha out of her crib and bring her into the living room.

"And this," he'd say, "is the latest model. Complete with all the improvements. And don't think that's all; we're expecting the 1911 model sometime next month."

Although mother's condition made the announcement unnecessary, he came out with it anyway. He never understood why this embarrassed mother.

"I just don't see why you mind," he'd tell her later. "It's something to be proud of."

"Well, of course it is. Maybe I'm old-fashioned, but it seems to me a mistake to proclaim it from the housetops, or confide it to comparative strangers, until the baby arrives."

Still, mother knew very well that dad had to talk about his children, the children who had already arrived and those who were expected.

In spite of mother's protests, dad decided that the fifth child would be named for her. Mother didn't like the name Lillian, and had refused to pass the name along to any of the first four girls.

"No nonsense, now," dad said. "Whether you like it or not, I want a little Lillian."

"But it could be a boy, you know."

"Boys!" dad grunted. "Who wants boys?"

"Sooner or later there'll be a boy," mother said. "Look what happened in my family." Mother's mother had six girls before she produced a boy.

"Sure," sighed dad, "but your father wasn't the Last of the Gilbreths."

When Doctor Hedges came out of mother's bedroom and announced that mother and the fifth baby were doing nicely, dad told him that the "latest model" was to be named Lillian.

If thou hearest that a mountain has moved, believe it: but if thou hearest that a man has changed his character, believe it not.

—MOHAMMEDAN PROVERB.

"I think that's nice," Doctor Hedges said. "Real nice. Of course, the other boys in his class may tease him about having a girl's name, but ——"

Dad grabbed the doctor by the shoulders and shook him. "Other boys?" he shouted. "Did you say other boys? Boys?"

"I hate to disappoint you, Mr. Gilbreth," grinned Doctor Hedges. "Especially since you've been telling everyone how much you wanted a fifth girl. But this one ——"

Dad pushed him out of the way and rushed into the bedroom, where his first son was sleeping in a by-now-battered bassinet.

"Chip off the old block," dad cooed into the bassinet. "Every inch a Gilbreth. Oh, Lillie, how did you ever manage to do it?"

"Do you think he's all right?" mother whispered.

"He's one I think we'd better keep," said dad. "Do you know something? I didn't come right out and say so before, but I really wanted a boy all the time. I was just trying to make you feel better when I said I wanted a fifth girl."

Mother managed to keep a straight face. "You certainly had everybody fooled," she said. "I thought you'd be simply furious if little 'Lillian' turned out to be a boy. Are you sure you're not disappointed?"

"Gee whiz," was all dad could manage.

"What should we name him?" mother asked him.

Dad wasn't listening. He was still leaning over the bassinet. There was little doubt in mother's mind, anyway, about what the baby would be named, and dad clinched the matter by the next remark which he addressed to the baby.

"I've got to leave you now for a few minutes, Mr. Frank Bunker Gilbreth, Junior," he said. "I've got to make a few telephone calls and send some wires. Behave yourself while I'm gone and take care of your mother. That's one of your jobs from now on." And over his shoulder to mother, "I'll be back in a few minutes, Lillie." Dad closed the door carefully. "Anne, Mary, Ernestine, Martha. Did you hear the news? It's a boy. Frank Bunker Gilbreth, Junior. How do you like the sound of that? Every inch a Gilbreth. Chip off the old block. Hello, central? Central? Long distance, please. It's a boy."

Having fathered one son, dad took it pretty much for granted that all the rest of his children would be boys.

"The first four were just practice," he'd say to mother, while glaring with assumed ferocity at the girls. "Of course, I suppose we ought to keep them. They may come in handy someday to scrub the pots and pans and mend the socks of the menfolk. But I don't see that we need any more of them."

The girls would rush at him and dad would let them topple him over on the rug. Martha, using his vest pockets for finger holds, would climb up on his stomach and the other three would tickle him so that Martha would be joggled up and down when he laughed.

No. 6 was born in Providence, where the family had moved in 1912. As dad had assumed, the new addition was a boy. He was named William, for mother's father.

"Good work, Lillie," dad told mother. But this time there was no elaborate praise and his tone indicated that mother merely had done the sort of competent job that one might expect from a competent woman. "There's our first half dozen."

Mother had her first half-dozen babies at home, instead of in hospitals, because she liked to run the house and help dad with his work, even during the confinements. She'd supervise the household right up until each baby started coming. There was a period of about twenty-four hours, then, when she wasn't much help to anybody. But she had prepared all the menus in advance, and the house ran smoothly during the one day devoted to the delivery. For the next ten days to two weeks, while she remained in bed, we'd file in every morning so that she could tie the girls' hair ribbons. Then we'd come back again at night to hold the new baby and listen to mother read The Five Little Peppers. Mother enjoyed the Little Peppers every bit as much as we.

When dad's mother came to live with us, mother decided to have No. 7 in a Providence hospital, since grandma could run the house. Six hours after mother checked into the hospital, a nurse called and told dad that Mrs. Gilbreth had had a nine-pound boy.

"Quick work," dad told grandma. "She really has found the one best way of having babies."

Grandma asked whether it was a boy or a girl, and dad replied:

"A boy, naturally, for goodness' sakes. What did you expect?"

A few moments later, the hospital called again and said there had been some mistake. A Mrs. Gilbert, not Gilbreth, had had the baby boy.

"Well, what's my wife had?" dad asked. "I'm not interested in Mrs. Gilbert, obstetrically or any other way."

"Of course you're not," the nurse apologized. "Just a moment, and I'll see about Mrs. Gilbreth." Then a few minutes later, "Mrs. Gilbreth seems to have checked out of the hospital."

"Checked out? Why, she's only been there six hours. Did she have a boy or a girl?"

"Our records don't show that she had either."

"It's got to be one or the other," dad insisted. "What else is there?"

"I mean," the nurse explained, "she apparently checked out before the baby arrived."

Dad hung up the receiver. "Better start boiling water," he said to grandma. "Lillie's on the way home."

"With that new baby?"

"No." Dad was downcast. "Somebody else claimed that baby. Lillie apparently put off having hers for the time being."

Mother arrived at the house about half an hour later. She was carrying a suitcase and had walked all the way.

Grandma was furious. "My goodness, Lillie, you have no business out in the street in your condition. And carrying that heavy Brighter shines—quicker!

It's just "dip, rub and rinse"—there's your shine. With soap in each pad, S.O.S. brings brighter shines quicker and it's the only cleanser needed for pots and pans!

Daily shines—thriftier!

Every day—every time a pan is used—whisk it clean with S.O.S.—and for only pennies a month!

The S.O.S. Company, Chicago, Illinois, U.S.A.
S.O.S. Mfg. Co. of Canada, Ltd., Toronto, Ont.

More shines—easier!

No job is too tough for S.O.S.! Sturdy, interwoven fibres can't pull apart. Handy oval shape cleans hard-to-clean corners.

"yes! S.O.S beats all!

and for pennies a month!"

HOW TO SAVE FOOD DOLLARS

. . . Serve This Supremely Good New England Meal

Here's how to serve hearty always-welcome meals of extra-delicious flavor that save your precious food dollars. Treat the family frequently to New England's favorite feast, B&M Brick-Oven Baked Beans. These wonderfully mealy and tender baked beans are actually baked (not steamed) for one entire day. They're baked the "home-kitchen" way with lots of juicy pork and spicy sauces, baked with the special goodness for which New England cooks have long been noted. Why not try one of these real "thrift" meals right away? You're sure to prefer these better-quality baked beans from famous Burnham & Morrill ovens "Down East" in Portland, Maine.

(In glass, or tin) suitcase. Give it to me. Now get upstairs to bed where you belong. What did you leave the hospital for?"

"I got tired of waiting and I was lonesome. I decided I'd have this one at home too. Besides, that nurse—she was a fiend. She hid my pencils and notebook and wouldn't even let me read. I never spent a more miserable day."

Lill was born the next day, in dad and mother's room, where pencils and notebooks and proofs were within easy reach of mother's bed.

"I had already told everybody it was going to be a boy," dad said a little resentfully. "But I know it's not your fault, and I think a girl's just fine. I was getting a little sick of boys, anyway. Well, this one will be named for you."

Fred was born in Buttonwoods, Rhode Island, where we spent a summer. A hurricane knocked out communications and we couldn't get a doctor. A next-door neighbor who came over to help became so frightened that she kept shouting to mother:

"Don't you dare have that baby until the doctor comes."

"I'm trying not to," mother assured her calmly. "There's no use to get all excited. It's not good for you. Sit down here on the side of the bed and try to relax."

"Who's having this baby, anyway?" dad asked the neighbor. "A big help you are!" He departed for the kitchen to boil huge vats of water, most of which was never used.

Fred, No. 8, arrived just as the doctor did.

Dan and Jack were born in Providence, and Bob and Jane in Nantucket. Dan and Jack came into the world in routine enough fashion, but Bob arrived all of a sudden. Tom Grieves had to pedal through Nantucket on a bicycle to find the doctor. Since Tom was in pajamas, having been routed from his bed, most of the island knew about Bob's birth. Once again it was a case of the baby and the doctor arriving simultaneously.

By that time all the family names for boys had been exhausted. The names of all the uncles, both grandfathers and the four great-grandfathers had been used.

"Now let's run over the names of the Bunker men again," dad said, referring to Grandma Gilbreth's brothers. "Samuel? Never could tolerate that name. Nathaniel? Too bookish. Frederick? We got one already. Humphrey? Ugg. Daniel? We got one. Nothing there."

"How about the middle names?" mother suggested. "Maybe we'll get an idea from the Bunkers' middle names."

"All right. Moses? Too bullrushy. William? We got one. Abraham? They'd call him Abie. Irving? Over my dead body, which would be quite a climb."

"What was your father's name again?" mother asked.

"John," said dad. "We got one."

"No, I know that. I mean his middle name."

"You know what it was," said dad. "We're not having any."

"Oh, that's right," mother giggled. "Hiram, wasn't it?"

Dad started thumbing impatiently through the Bible. "Jacob? No. Saul? Job, Noah, David? Too sissy. Peter? Paul? John? We got one."

"Robert," mother said. "That's it. We'll call him Robert."

"Why Robert? Who's named Robert?" Dad looked over the top of his glasses at mother.

"No one in particular. It's just a beautiful name, that's all. This one will be Robert."

Bob, No. 11, made the count six boys and five girls. There was considerable partisanship among the family as to the desired sex of the next baby. The boys wanted to remain in the majority; the girls wanted to tie the count at six all. Dad, of course, wanted another boy. Mother wanted to please dad, but at the same time thought it would be nice to have a girl for her last child.

No. 12 was due in June, 1922, and that meant we would be in Nantucket. Mother debated whether to remain behind at Montclair and have the baby at home there, or to go to Nantucket with us and have the baby in a hospital. Finally she chose the latter alternative. Jane, No. 12, was born in the Nantucket Cottage Hospital.

When dad drove mother and Jane home, he lined all of us up by age on the front porch. Jane, in her bassinet, was at the foot of the line.

"Not a bad-looking crowd if I do say so myself," he boasted, strutting down the line like an officer inspecting his men. "Well, Lillie, there you have them, and it's all over. Have you thought what it's going to be like not to have a baby in our room? For the first time in seventeen years, you'll be able to go to bed without setting the alarm clock for a two-o'clock feeding."

"I've been thinking about that," said mother. "It's certainly going to be luxury, isn't it?"

Dad put his arm around her waist, and tears came to her eyes.

Later that summer, when company came to call, dad would whistle assembly and then introduce us. "This one is Anne," he'd say, and she'd step forward and shake hands. "And Ernestine, Martha ——"

"Gracious, Mr. Gilbreth. And all of them are yours?"

"Hold on, now. Wait a minute." He'd disappear into the bedroom and come out holding Jane. "You haven't seen the latest model."

But some of the enthusiasm had gone out of his tone, because he knew the latest model really was the last model, and that he would never again be able to add the clincher, which so embarrassed mother, about how another baby was under way.

Next to motion study and astronomy, photography was the science nearest to dad's heart. He had converted most of the two-story barn in Montclair into a photographic laboratory.

Most photographers prefer sunlight for their pictures. But dad liked it best when there was no sun and he had an excuse to take his pictures indoors. He seemed to have a special affinity for flashlight powder, and the bigger the flash the more he enjoyed it. He'd pour great, gray mountains of the powder into the pan at the top of his T-shaped flash gun, and hold this as far over his head as possible with his left hand. In his right hand he'd hold the shutter release and a toy o some kind, which he'd shake and rattle t get our attention.

Probably few men have walked away from larger flashlight explosions than those dad se off as a matter of routine. The ceilings of som of the rooms in Montclair bore charred, blac circles in testimony to his intrepidity. Som professional photographers, seeing him load flash gun, would blanch, mutter and haste from the room.

The older children had been through it s often that, while somewhat shell shocke they were no longer terrified. It would stretching a point to say they had develope any real confidence in dad's indoor photo raphy. But at least they had adopted a fata istic attitude that death, if it came, would swift and painless. The younger children, u fortunately, had no such comforting philo ophy to fall back on. They'd behave prett well right up to the time dad was going take the picture. Then they'd start bellowin

"Lillie, stop those children from crying dad would shout from under the black clot "Dan, open your eyes and take your finge out of your ears! The idea! Scared of a litt flash! And stop that fidgeting!" He'd com up in disgust from under the cloth. It was h under there, and the bending over had mad the blood run to his head. He'd submer again. "I said stop that crying. Now smil or I'll come out and give you something smile about. Smile so I can see the whites your teeth. That's more like it."

He'd slip a plate holder into the back of t camera.

"Ready? Smile now. Hold it. Ho-o-old it

He'd wave the toy furiously and th there'd be an awful, blinding, roaring fla that shook the room and deposited a fine a all over us and the floor. Dad would look to whether the ceiling was still there, and th ut down the flash gun and go over and open he windows to let out a cloud of smoke.

"I think that was a good picture," he'd ay. "And this new flash gun certainly works ne."

For photographs taken in the sunlight, dad ad a delayed-action release that allowed him o click the camera and then run and get into he picture himself before the shutter was eleased.

The most heavily relied upon prop for out-oor pictures was the family Pierce-Arrow, arked with top down in the driveway. Once e were seated to dad's satisfaction, he would ocus, tell us to smile, click the delayed-action elease, and race for the driver's seat. He'd rrive there panting, and the car would lurch s he jumped in. When conditions were ideal, here would be just enough time for dad to ettle himself and smile pleasantly, before the amera clicked off the exposure.

Conditions were seldom ideal, for the elayed-action release was unreliable. Some-mes it went off too soon, thus featuring ad's blurred but ample stern as he climbed nto the car. Sometimes it didn't go off for a natter of minutes, during which we sat tensely, ith frozen-faced smiles, while we tried to eep the younger children from squirming. ad, with the camera de of his mouth visted into a smile, ould issue threats om the other side out what he was ing to do to all of us we so much as vitched a muscle or itted an eyelash.

Any number of ctures showed vari-is members of the mily, who had re-ived discipline ithin a matter of conds before the utter clicked, look-g anything but easant in the swivel ats of the car. The ivel-seat occupants ceived most of the scipline, because ey were the easiest r dad to reach, and one liked to sit ere when it was cture-taking time. Sometimes newspaper photographers would me to the house to take publicity pictures. ad would whistle assembly, take out his p watch, and demonstrate how quickly we uld gather. Then he would show the visit-s how we could type, send the Morse code, ltiply numbers, and speak some French, rman and Italian. Sometimes he'd holler ire!" and we'd drop to the floor and roll in rugs.

Everything seemed to go much more oothly when dad was on our side of the nera, for he, too, was ordered where to nd, when to lick his lips and, occasionally, stop fidgeting. The rest of us had no uble looking pleasant after the photog-pher lectured dad. In fact, we looked so asant we almost popped.

AD'S theories on social poise, although quiring some minor revision as the family w larger, were constant to the extent that y hinged on unaffectation. A poised, un-ected person was never ridiculous, at least t in his own mind, dad told us.

The part of the theory that required some ision was that guests would feel at home hey were treated like one of our family. As ther pointed out, and dad finally ad-tted, the only guest who would feel like a mber of our family was a guest who came m a family of a dozen, headed by a mo-in-study man.

When guests weren't present for a meal, d worked at improving our table manners. henever a child within his reach took too ge a mouthful of food, dad's knuckles uld descend sharply on the top of the nder's head, with a thud that made ther wince.

"Not on the head, Frank," she protested. "For mercy's sake, not on the head!"

Dad paid no attention except when the blow had been unusually hard. In such cases he rubbed his knuckles ruefully and replied, "Maybe you're right. There must be softer places."

If the offender was at mother's end of the table, out of dad's reach, he'd signal her to administer the skull punishment. Mother, who never disciplined any of us or even threatened discipline, would always ignore the signals. Dad then would catch the eye of a child sitting near the offender and, by signals, would deputize him to carry out the punishment.

"WITH my compliments," dad would say when the child with the full mouth turned furiously on the one who had knuckled him. "If I've told you once, I've told you a hundred times to cut your food up into little pieces. How am I going to drive that into your skull?"

"Not on the head," mother repeated. "Mercy, not on the head!"

Anyone with an elbow on the table might suddenly feel his wrist seized, raised and jerked downward so that his elbow hit the table hard enough to make the dishes dance.

"Not on the elbow, Frank. That's the most sensitive part of the body. Any place but on the elbow."

Mother disapproved of all forms of corporal punishment. She felt, though, that she could achieve better results by objecting to the part of the anatomy selected for the punishment, rather than the punishment itself. Even when dad administered vitally needed punishment on the conventional area, mother tried to intervene.

"Not on the end of the spine," she'd say in a voice that indicated her belief dad was running the risk of crippling us for life. "For goodness' sake, not on the end of the spine!"

"Where, then?" dad shouted furiously in the middle of one spanking. "Not on the top of the head, not on the side of the ear, not on the back of the neck, not on the elbow, not across the legs, and not on the seat of the pants. Where did your father spank you? Across the soles of the feet like the heathen Chinese?"

"Well, not on the end of the spine," mother said. "You can be sure of that."

Both dad and mother tried to impress us that it was our responsibility to make guests feel at home. There were guests for meals almost as often as not, particularly business friends of dad's, since his office was in the house. There was no formality and no special preparation except a clean napkin and an extra place at the table.

"If a guest is sitting next to you, it's your job to keep him happy, to see that things are passed to him," dad kept telling us.

Dad was an easygoing host, informal and gracious, and we tried to pattern ourselves after him.

"Any more vegetables, boss?" he'd ask mother. "No? Well how about mashed potatoes? Lots of them. And plenty of lamb. Fine. Well, sir, I can't offer you any vegetables, but how about ——"

"Oh, come on, have some more beef," Frank urged a visiting German engineer. "After all, you've only had three helpings."

"There's no need to gobble your grapefruit like a pig," Fred told a woman professor from Columbia University, who had arrived late and was trying to catch up with the rest

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

The Lostling

By Helen Thankful Siems

It was only a lostling so lonely and cold,
A wee, trembling lambkin which strayed from its fold.

I cuddled it closely, for night is so bleak;
Its nose sought the warmth of my wind-roughened cheek.

It was only a lostling, too complacent to see
That it, too, warmed a lostling in snuggling to me.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

NO WONDER FOLKS
Make Good Money!
. . . These Exquisite DOEHLA Greeting Cards Sell On Sight!

Mrs. Donald Hance of Bristol, Penn. writes: "A year ago I needed things for my 2 boys; but couldn't afford them. I read ad, sent for samples. The extra money earned paid for more than boys needed. Now saving to help pay for home."

HERE'S a friendly way to make a fine income, spare-time or full time. Show lovely Doehla Box Assortments of richly decorated All-Occasion Greeting Cards, distinctive "Name-Imprinted" Stationery, gay Gift Wrappings. Many other Doehla items so exceptionally beautiful that your friends, neighbors, and co-workers will be delighted to give you big orders. NO EXPERIENCE NEEDED—our FREE BOOK shows you easy ways for any beginner to make money! You make up to 50¢ on each $1 box, even more on bonus orders. Mail coupon below—without money—for sample boxes on approval. No obligation. Send coupon NOW. HARRY DOEHLA CO., Studio L26, Fitchburg, Mass.

HARRY DOEHLA CO.
Studio L26, Fitchburg, Mass.
Please rush—for FREE TRIAL—sample boxes on approval, money-making plan, extra-profit bonus offer. Also send FREE BOOK of easy ways for anyone to make money.
Name.....
Address.....
City..... Zone No. (if any)... State.....

JOLLY TIME POP CORN POPS BEST
JOLLY TIME Hulless POP CORN

When it comes to making gravy!
DO IT THE EASY WAY
GRAVY MASTER
makes it taste and look good too
GET A BOTTLE—TRY IT—COMPARE
LET YOUR TASTE DECIDE!

REPAIR SPLIT SALAD BOWLS with PLASTIC WOOD
EASY! No skill required. Handles like putty...hardens into wood.
A CELLULOSE FIBRE FILLER
IN CANS OR TUBES
DOZENS OF OTHER USES

WISTFUL WANGLER

Jackie, age four, was a positive master at the art of wangling out of folks any little thing he had set his heart upon.

One day, he dropped into a neighbor's house just as the family were busily eating big bowls full of Grape-Nuts Wheat-Meal, with obvious relish.

When they asked how cold it was outside, he glanced wistfully at the delicious, steaming hot cereal.

"The weather," he said, "is just right for everybody to be eating Grape-Nuts Wheat-Meal."

(Advertisement)

100% PURE
SUPREME QUALITY
MAPLE SYRUP
from Old Vermont in charming gift container

Working with our friends and neighbors we make what we believe is the finest-flavored Maple Syrup ever to come out of Vermont. It is rated top quality Fancy Grade and we'll send you fifteen full fluid ounces of this Green Mountain nectar—done up as it deserves in a lovely ceramic pitcher—for only $3.00

Grade A—$2.50 slightly darker.
Pasteurized to prevent mold, fermentation. Conforms to Fed. & Vt. Dept. of Agric. Standards.
Send money order or check to
DEER RIDGE FARMS
R.F.D. No. 4, Brattleboro, Vt.
Sugar House C

Quickest! Easiest! Tastiest!

HOT BISCUITS!

In only 9 Minutes..

Bake the Biscuits that make the meal...

the Ballard workless way

Bite into a buttery golden-good OvenReady Biscuit. M-m-m! Go back to troublesome, old-fashioned biscuit making? Never! Ballard Biscuits are so luscious, so fluffy, so easy, and perfect, every time! Ballard takes finest ingredients—snowy flour, purest shortening—mixes, rolls and cuts OvenReadys. Then rushes them vacuum-packed to your grocer's refrigerator. One package makes a big plateful!

BALLARD OvenReady BISCUITS

Best you ever tasted ... or your money back

Distributed Exclusively by Kraft of us. "If we finish ahead of you, we'll wait until you're through."

"I'm sorry, but I'm afraid I can't pass your dessert until you finish your Lima beans," Dan told a guest on another occasion. "Daddy won't allow it, and you're my responsibility."

"Daddy, do you think that what Mr. Fremonville is saying is of general interest?" Lill interrupted a long discourse to ask.

Dad and mother, and most of the guests, laughed away remarks like these without too much embarrassment. Dad would apologize and explain the family rule and the reason for it. After the guests had gone, mother would get us together and tell us that, while family rules were important, it was even more important to see that guests weren't made uncomfortable.

Sometimes after a meal, dad's stomach would rumble and, when there weren't any guests, we'd tease him about it. The next time it rumbled, he'd look shocked and single out one of us.

"Billy," he said. "Please! I'm not in the mood for an organ recital."

"That was your stomach, not mine, daddy. You can't fool me."

One night, Mr. Russell Allen, a young engineer, was a guest for supper. Jack, in a high chair across the table, accidentally swallowed some air and let out a belch that resounded through the dining room. It was such a thorough burp that conversation was momentarily suspended in amazement. Jack, more surprised than anybody, looked shocked. He reached out his arm and pointed a chubby, accusing forefinger at the guest.

"Mr. Allen," he said in offended dignity. "Please! I'm not in the mood for an organ recital."

"Why, Jackie!" said mother, almost in tears. "Why, Jackie. How could you?"

"Out!" roared dad. "Skiddoo. Tell Mrs. Cunningham to give you the rest of your supper in the kitchen. And I'll see you about this later."

"Well, you say it!" Jack sobbed as he disappeared toward the kitchen. "You say it when your stomach rumbles."

Dad was blushing. The poise which he told us he valued so highly had disappeared. He shifted uneasily and fumbled with his napkin. Nobody could think of a way to break the uneasy silence. Dad cleared his throat with efficient thoroughness. But the silence persisted, and it hung heavily over the table.

Dad suddenly flung his napkin on the table and walked out into the kitchen. He returned holding Jack by the hand. Jack was still crying.

"All right, Jackie," dad said. "Come back and sit down. You're right, you learned it from me. First you apologize to Mr. Allen. Then we'll tell him the whole story. And then none of us will ever say it again."

A WOMAN psychologist came to Montclair every fortnight from New York to give us intelligence tests. It was her idea, not dad's or mother's. She was planning to publish a paper about the effects of dad's teaching methods on our intelligence quotients. She was thin and sallow, with angular features and a black mustache. We hated her and suspected the feeling was mutual.

At first her questions were legitimate enough: arithmetic, spelling, languages, geography, and the sort of purposeful confusion—about ringing numbers and underlining words—in which some psychologists place particular store.

After we had completed the initial series of tests, she took us, one by one, into the parlor for personal interviews. Mother and dad weren't allowed to be present. The interviews were embarrassing and insulting.

"Does it hurt when your mother spanks you?" she asked each of us, peering searchingly into our eyes. "You mean your mother never spanks you?" She seemed disappointed. "Well, how about your father? Oh, he does?" That appeared to be heartening news. "Does your mother pay more attention to the other children than she does to you? How many baths do you take a week? Are you sure? Do you think it would be nice to have still another baby brother? You do? Goodness!"

We decided that if dad and mother knew the kinds of questions we were being asked, they wouldn't like them any better than we did. Anne and Ernestine had made up their minds to explain the situation to them, when destiny delivered the psychologist into our hands.

Mother had been devising a series of job aptitude tests, and the desk by her bed was piled with pamphlets and magazines on psychology. Ernestine was running idly through them one night, while mother was reading aloud to us, when she came across a batch of intelligence tests. One of them was the test which the New York woman was in the process of giving us—not the embarrassing personal questions, but the business of circling numbers, spelling and filling in blanks. The correct answers were in the back.

THE psychologist had given us the first third of the test. Anne and Ernestine tutored us on the second third, until we could run down a page and fill in the answers without even reading the questions. The last third was an oral word-association test, and they coached us on that too.

The next time the psychologist came, she sat us at intervals around the walls of the parlor, with books on our laps to write on. She passed each of us a copy of the second third of the test.

"When I say commence, work as quickly as you can," she told us. "You have half an hour, and I want you to get as far along in the tests as you can. If any of you should happen to finish before the time is up, bring your papers to me. Remember, I'm watching you so don't try to look at your neighbor's paper."

We ran down the pages, filling in the blanks. The older children turned in their papers within ten minutes. Lillian, the youngest being examined, turned hers in within twenty.

The psychologist looked at Lillian's paper and her mouth dropped open. "How old are you, dearie?" she asked.

"Six," said Lill. "I'll be seven in June."

"There's something radically wrong here," the visitor said. "I haven't had a chance to grade all of your paper, but do you know you have a higher I.Q. than Nicholas Murray Butler?"

"I read a lot," Lill said.

The psychologist glanced at the other test and shook her head. "I don't know what to think," she sighed. "You've certainly shown remarkable improvement in the last two weeks. Maybe we'd better get on to the last third of the test. I'm going to go around the room and say a word to each of you. I want you to answer the first word that comes into your mind. Now won't that be a nice little game?"

Anne twitched. Ernestine scratched. Martha bit her nails.

"We'll go by ages," the visitor continued. "Anne first." She pointed to Anne. "Knife," said the psychologist.

"Stab, wound, bleed, slit-throat, murder, disembowel, scream, shriek," replied Anne without taking a breath and so fast that the words flowed together.

"Let me get that down," said the psychologist. "You're just supposed to answer one word, but let me get it all down anyway." She panted in excitement as she scribbled in her pad. "All right, Ernestine. Your turn. Just one word. 'Black.'"

"Jack," said Ernestine.

The visitor looked at Martha. "Foot."

"Kick," said Martha.

"Hair."

"Louse," said Frank.

"Flower."

"Stink," said Bill.

The psychologist was becoming more and more excited. She looked at Lill.

"Droppings," said Lill, upsetting the applecart.

"But I haven't even asked you your word yet," the visitor exclaimed. "So that's it. Let me see what your word was going to be. I thought so. Your word was 'bird.' And they told you to say 'droppings,' didn't they?"

Lill nodded sheepishly.

"And they told you just how to fill out the rest of the test, didn't they? I suppose the answers were given to you by your mother, so ou would impress me with how smart you e."

We started to snicker, but the psychologist dn't think it was funny.

"You're all nasty little cheats," she said. Don't think for a minute you pulled the ool over my eyes. I saw through you from e start."

She picked up her wraps and started for e front door. Dad had heard us laughing, d came out of his office.

"Well," he beamed, "it sounds like it's en a jolly test. Running along so soon? Tell e, what do you think of my family?"

She looked at us and there was an evil glint her eye. "I'm glad you asked me that," she hinnied. "Unquestionably, they are smart. oo smart for their breeches. As to whether ey were aided and abetted in an attempted aud, I cannot say. But my professional adce is a good thrashing right now, from the dest to the youngest."

She slammed the front door, and dad looked us.

"What have you been up to? That womn's going to write a paper on the family. hat did you do to her?"

"Do you want another baby brother?" nne asked.

"Does it hurt when your mother spanks ou?" said Ernestine.

"When did you have your last bath?" artha inquired. "Are you sure? H'm-m-m?"

Dad raised his hands in surrender and ook his head. He looked old and tired now. Come in and give me all the frightful deils."

A few minutes later, mother came into the fice, where we were perched on the edges of r and dad's desks. The enographers had abanned their typewriters and re crowded around us.

"What's the commom, Frank?" she asked. could hear you bellowg all the way up in the tic."

"Start at the beginning, ds. I want your mother hear this too," dad said. he bearded old goat—not you, Lillie."

When we were children we were grateful to those who filled our stockings with toys at Christmastide. Why are we not grateful to God for filling our stockings with legs?
—G. K. CHESTERTON.

By the time Anne was a senior in high hool, dad was convinced that the current neration of girls was riding, with rouged s and rolled stockings, straight for a renzvous with the devil. Flaming youth had st caught fire. It was the day of the flapper d the sheik, of petting and necking. Girls re beginning to bob their hair, and boys to bricate theirs. The ukulele was a social ast second only to the traps and saxophone. e accepted mode of transportation was the ipped-down Model T Ford, preferably inibed with such witticisms as "Chicken, re's Your Roost" and "Four Wheels, No akes."

If people wanted to go crazy, that was their air. But dad had no intention of letting his ughters go with them.

"What's the matter with girls today?" he pt asking. "Don't they know what's going happen to them if they go around showing eir legs through silk stockings, and with re knees, and with skirts so short that the ghtest wind doesn't leave anything for the agination?"

WELL, that's the way everybody dresses," nne insisted. "Everybody but Ernestine d me; we're the school freaks. Boys don't tice things like that when everybody esses that way."

"Don't try to tell me about boys," dad id in disgust. "I know all about what boys tice. I hate to tell you what would have ppened in my day if girls had come to hool dressed like some girls dress today."

The girls turned to mother for support, but e agreed with dad. "After all, men don't nt to marry girls who wear make-up and gh heels," mother said. "That's the kind ey run around with before they're married. t when it comes to picking out a wife, they nt someone they can respect."

"They certainly respect me," Anne moaned. 'm the most respected girl in the whole high school. The boys respect me so much they hardly look at me. How can you expect me to be popular?"

"Popular!" dad roared. "Popular. That's all I hear. That's what's the matter with this generation. Nobody thinks about being smart, or clever, or sweet, or even attractive. No, sir. They want to be skinny and flat-chested and popular."

"We're the only girls in the whole high school who aren't allowed to wear silk stockings," Ernestine complained. "If we could just wear silk stockings it wouldn't be so bad about the long skirts and sensible shoes."

"No, by jingo." Dad pounded the table. "I'll put you both in a convent first. Silk stockings indeed! I don't want to hear another word out of either of you."

ANNE decided that she could never get dad's permission to dress like the other girls in her class, and that it was up to her to take matters into her own hands. She felt a certain amount of responsibility to Ernestine and the younger girls, since she knew they would never be emancipated until she paved the way. She had a haunting mental picture of Jane, fifteen years hence, still wearing pugs over her ears, long winter drawers and heavy ribbed stockings.

"Convent, here I come," she told Ern.

She disappeared into the girls' bathroom with a pair of scissors. When she emerged, her hair was bobbed and shingled up the back. It wasn't a very good-looking job, but it was good and short. She tiptoed, unnoticed, into Ernestine's room.

"How do I look, Ernestine?" she asked. "Do you think I did a good job?"

"Get out of here," Ernestine screamed. "It might be catching."

"I'll catch it when dad gets ahold of me, I know. But how does it look?"

"I didn't know any human head of hair could look like that," Ernestine said. "I like bobbed hair, but yours looks like you backed into a lawn mower."

"You're going to back me up, aren't you, when dad sees it? After all, you want to bob your hair, don't you?"

"I'll back you up," said Ern. "But I don't want to bob my hair. I want a barber to bob it for me."

"I have a feeling," Anne said, "that I'm going to be in for a fairly disagreeable evening. Oh, well, somebody had to do it, and I'm the oldest."

They sat in Ernestine's room until suppertime, and then went downstairs together. Mother was serving the plates, and dropped peas all over the tablecloth.

"Anne," she whispered. "Your beautiful hair. Oh, oh, oh. What have you done? Just look at yourself!"

"I have looked at myself," Anne said. "Please don't make me look at myself again. I don't want to spoil my appetite."

Mother burst into tears.

Dad hadn't paid any attention when Anne and Ernestine entered the dining room. "What's the trouble now?" he asked. "Can't we have a little peace and quiet around here for just one meal? All I ask is ——" He saw Anne and choked. "Go back upstairs and take that thing off!" he roared. "And don't you ever dare to come down here looking like that again. You ought to be ashamed of yourself."

"It's done, daddy," Anne said. "I'm afraid we're all going to have to make the best of it."

"I think it looks snaky." Ern hastened to do her duty to her older sister. "And listen, daddy, it's ever so much more efficient. It takes me ten minutes to fix these pugs in the morning, and Anne can fix her hair in fifteen seconds."

"What hair?" dad shouted. "She doesn't have any hair to fix."

"How could you do this to me?" mother sobbed.

"How could she do it to an Airedale, let alone to herself or you and me?" said dad. "Well, I won't have it, do you understand?

Peas that taste better -their tenderness is famous, too

Why? Because Green Giant Brand peas are bred for flavor, grown for flavor, packed at that "fleeting moment of perfect flavor." You can taste the difference in every sweeter, tenderer mouthful. Know them when you shop, by the Green Giant on the label.

Listen to the Fred Waring Show on NBC every Friday morning for the Green Giant

"Green Giant" and "Niblets" Brands Reg. U. S. Pat. Off. ©MVCCo.

Green Giant Peas
BRAND

Minnesota Valley Canning Co., headquarters, Le Sueur, Minnesota; Fine Foods of Canada, Ltd., Tecumseh Ont
ALSO PACKERS OF NIBLETS BRAND WHOLE KERNEL CORN

I want your hair grown back in and I want it grown back in fast."

Anne had tried to keep up a bold front, but the combined attack was too much and she burst into tears. "Nobody in this family understands me," she sobbed. "I wish I were dead." She ran from the table. We heard her bedroom door slam, and muffled, heartbroken sobs.

Neither dad nor mother could eat anything, and there was an uneasy, guilty silence.

"Listen to that poor, heartbroken child," mother finally said. "Imagine her thinking that no one understands her. Frank, I think you were too hard on her."

Dad put his head in his hands. "Maybe I was. Personally, I don't have anything much against bobbed hair. Like Ernestine says, it's more efficient. But when I saw how upset it made you, I lost my temper, I guess."

"I don't have anything against bobbed hair either," mother said. "It certainly would eliminate a lot of brushing and combing. But I knew you didn't like it, and ——"

Anne appeared at dessert time, red-eyed and disheveled. Without a word she sat down and picked up her knife and fork. Minutes later, she smiled enchantingly.

"That was good," she said, passing her plate. "If you don't mind, mother, I'll have another helping of everything. I'm starved tonight."

"I don't mind, dear," said mother.

"I like to see girls eat," said dad.

That week end, mother took the girls to dad's barbershop. "I want you to trim this one's hair, please," she said, pointing to Anne, "and to bob the hair of the others."

"Any special sort of bob, Mrs. Gilbreth?" the barber asked.

"No, I guess just a regular bob," mother said slowly. "The shorter the better."

Having capitulated on the hair question, dad put up an even sterner resistance against any future changes in dress. But Anne and Ernestine broke him down a little at a time. Anne got a job in the high-school cafeteria, saved her money, and bought silk stockings, two short dresses and four flimsy pieces of underwear known as teddies. These she unwrapped with some ceremony in the living room.

"I don't want to be a sneak," she said, "so I'm going to show these to everybody right now. If you won't let me wear them at home, I'll change into them on the way to school. I'm never going to wear long underwear again."

"Oh, no, you don't," dad shouted. "Take those things back to the store. It embarrasses me to look at them, and I won't have them in my house." He picked up a teddy and held the top of it against his shoulders. It hung down to his belt. "You mean that's all the underwear women wear nowadays?" he asked incredulously. "Well, you take the whole business right back to the store."

"No," Anne insisted. "I bought these clothes with my own money and I'm going to wear them. I'm not going to be the only one in the class with long underwear and a flap in the back. It's disgusting."

"It's not so disgusting as having no back of the underwear to sew a flap on," said dad. "I just can't believe that everybody in your class wears these things. There must be some sane parents besides your mother and me." He shook his head. But he was weakening.

"I don't see why you object to teddies," Anne said. "They don't show, you know."

"Of course they don't show, that's just the trouble. It's what does show that I'm talking about."

"Be sensible, daddy," Anne begged him. "You don't want us to grow up to be wallflowers, do you?"

"I'd a lot rather raise wallflowers than clinging vines or worse. The next thing I know you'll be wanting to paint."

"Everybody uses make-up nowadays," Ern said. "They don't call it painting any more."

"I don't care what they call it," dad roared. "I'll have no painted women in this house."

Anne and Ernestine decided that half a loaf was better than none, and that they had better wait until dad got used to the silk stockings and short skirts before they pressed the make-up question. But it turned out that dad had given all the ground he intended to, and the girls found mother a weak reed on which to lean.

"Neither my sisters nor I have ever used face powder," mother told Anne and Ernestine. "Frankly, girls, I consider it nonessential."

Clothes remained a subject of considerable friction, but the matter that threatened to affect dad's stability was jazz. Radios were innocuous, being still in the cat-whisker-and-headphone stage. But five- and six-piece dance bands were turning out huge piles of phonograph records, and we tried to buy them all.

We already had an ample supply of phonographs, because of the ones dad had acquired for the language records. And we still weren't allowed to neglect our language lessons. But once we had played the required quota of French, German and Italian records, we switched to Stumbling, Limehouse Blues, Last Night on the Back Porch, I'm Forever Blowing Bubbles. Not only did we listen to them, we sang them, and rolled back the rugs and danced to them.

Dad didn't particularly object to jazz music. He thought some of it was downright catchy. But he thought we devoted far too much time to it. As he walked from room to room jazz assailed him from phonograph after phonograph, and he sometimes threw up his hands in disgust.

"Da-de-de-da-da-da," he bellowed sarcastically. "If you spent half as much time improving your minds as you do memorizing those stupid songs, you could recite the Koran forward and backward."

When Anne came home from school one afternoon and announced that she had been invited to her first dance, she seemed so happy that both dad and mother were happy for her.

"I told you that if I started dressing like the other girls everything would be all right," Anne crowed. "Joe Scales has asked me to go to the prom next Friday night."

"That's lovely, dear," mother said.

"That's just fine," dad smiled. "Is he a nice boy?"

"Nice? Gee, I'll say. He's a cheerleader and he has a car."

"Two mighty fine recommendations," dad said. He shook his head and sighed. "Honestly, I don't know what the world's coming to. Friday night, you say?" He pulled a notebook out of his pocket and consulted it. "All right, I can make it."

"You can make what?" Anne asked.

"I can make the dance," said dad. "You didn't think for a minute I was going to let you go out by yourself, at night, with that—that cheerleader, did you?"

"Oh, daddy," Anne moaned. "You wouldn't spoil everything by doing something like that, would you? What's he going to think of me?"

"He'll think you're a sensible, well-brought-up child, with sensible parents," mother put in. "I'm sure that if I called up his mother right now, she'd be glad to hear that your father was going along as a chaperon."

"Don't you trust your own flesh and blood?"

"Of course we trust you," dad said. "I trust all my daughters. It's that cheerleader I don't trust. Either I go, or you don't."

"Do you think it would help if I called up his mother and explained the situation?" mother asked.

Anne had become philosophic about breaking dad down a little at a time, and she had suspected all along that there was going to be a third person on her first date. "No, thanks, mother," she said. "I'd better announce the news myself. I don't know what he's going to say, though. Shall I tell him we'll go in his car, or ours?" Anne asked.

"His car?" said dad. "I haven't seen it, but I can imagine it. No doors, no fenders, no top and a lot of writing about in case of fire throw this in. No, we'll go in Foolish Carriage."

On the night of Anne's date, we stationed ourselves at strategic windows so we could watch Joe Scales arrive. As dad had predicted, Anne's friend drove up to the house in an ancient Model T, with writing on it. We could hear the car several blocks before it actually hove into sight. The exhaust whistle, coupled with the natural engine noises, precluded the necessity of Mr. Scales' giving any further notice about the car's arrival at its destination. But etiquette of the day was rigid, and he followed it to the letter by tooting and retooting the horn until Anne came to the front door.

"Come on in, Joe," Anne called.

"Okay, baby. Is your pop ready?"

Anne's sheik was wearing a black-and-orange-striped blazer, gray Oxford bags, a bow tie on an elastic band, and a brown triangular pork-pie hat.

"You and I are going to the dance," Joe shouted. "And so's your old man. Get it? So's your old man."

"Of course she gets it, wise guy," dad grumbled for mother's benefit. "What do you think she is, a moron? And let me hear you refer to me tonight as the old man and you'll get it too."

"Hush," mother warned him. "He'll hear you. Actually, he's kind of cute, in a sort of vest-pocket way."

"Cute?" said dad. "He looks like what might happen if a pygmy married a barber pole. And look at that car. What's that written on the side? 'Jump in, sardine, here's your tin.'"

"Well, don't worry about the car," mother told him. "You'll be riding in yours, not that contraption."

"Thank the Lord for small favors."

Dad disappeared in the direction of the barn, and mother went into the living room to meet the caller. As she entered, Joe was demonstrating to Frank and Bill how the bow tie worked.

"It's a William Tell tie," he said, holding the bow away from his neck and allowing it to pop back into position. "You pull the bow and it hits the apple."

Both Frank and Bill were impressed. "You're the first cheerleader we ever saw up close," Frank said. "Will you lead some cheers for us? We know them all. Anne and Ernestine taught them to us."

Joe leaped to his feet. "Sure thing," he said. He cupped his hands over his mouth and shouted in an adolescent baritone, "Let's have a hoo, rah, ray and a tiger for Montclair High. A hoo, rah, ray and a tiger. I want to hear you holler now. Read-d-dy?" He turned sideways, dropped on one knee and made his fists go in a circle, like a squirrel on a treadmill. "Hoo," he screamed, at the top of his voice. "Rah. Ray ——"

It was at this point that dad entered the room. He stood viewing the proceedings, lips pursed and hands on hips. At the end of the cheer, he sidled over toward mother. "The car won't start," he whispered. "What shall I do?"

"Why don't you call a cab?"

"Look at him," dad whispered. "He doesn't come up to her shoulder. He wouldn't dare get funny with her—she'd knock him cold." Dad walked over to where Joe and Anne were sitting. "I hope you youngsters won't mind," he said, "but I won't be able to go to the dance with you."

"No, we don't mind at all, daddy," said Anne.

"Now I want you to be home at midnight," dad said. "I'm going to be right here waiting for you, and if you're not here by one minute after midnight I'm coming looking for you. Understand?"

"All right, daddy," Anne grinned.

"Come on, Cinderella," said Scales. He and Anne departed, and he didn't forget to tip his hat.

Once the ice was broken, Anne started having dates fairly often, and Ernestine and Martha followed suit. Frank, Bill and Lillian, still in junior high school, resented the infiltration of the high-school Romeos. What they objected to principally was that the three oldest girls were being turned away from family activities.

Anne already had had her first proposal. Joe Scales had asked her to marry him. They were sitting in a hammock on the side porch

(Continued on Page 94)

SLEEPY-TIME CLOTHES

A SLEEP wardrobe in softest flannelette. The white nighty ties in back, is delicately detailed in front with white featherstitching. White lace edges neck and sleeves. The wrapper, bonnet and blanket all have tiny satin bindings and pretty embroidered flowers . . . look pretty in a carriage. Even if you are a beginner you can make them—they are that easy. ● BY NORA O'LEARY

Nighty, pattern 2438, 15¢; wrapper, bonnet and blanket, 2439, 15¢, from Journal Reference Library.

From experience comes faith . . .

In the beginning, a child's faith rests in a few simple experiences. The world extends. Perhaps it includes a playful puppy, a battered doll, a precious pebble.

Then come the adventures beyond the threshold, the weighing of friendships, the reckoning of values.

Tempered by hundreds of experiences, comparisons and judgments, a guiding faith is finally won. With it one measures immeasurable things . . . such as honesty, loyalty, worth.

It goes behind the faces of men, behind the words of men and says: this thought is right, this man is sound, this thing is good.

E·R·SQUIBB & SONS

Manufacturing Chemists to the Medical Profession since 1858

Anesthetics • Biologicals • Antibiotics
Sulfonamides • Endocrines
Nutritional and Medical Specialties

The priceless ingredient of every product is the honor and integrity of its maker

© E. R. SQUIBB & SONS

Why Squeeze?

SnowCrop fresh frozen orange juice is so good-so easy!

Stop squeezing and join the rush to SNOW CROP. Here's the original frozen orange juice concentrate that gives you the tree-ripened, tree-fresh goodness of luscious oranges at their peak of flavor. Just add back the water, for the finest juice you ever tasted . . . and what a real saving you'll make! Try SNOW CROP juice once—you'll never squeeze again.

Grandest for Flavor!
SNOW CROP'S squeezed-this-minute goodness just can't be beat.

Grandest for Convenience!
No squeezer—no waste—no mess. Fresh juice in 45 seconds.

ONE 6 OZ. CAN EQUALS JUICE OF 9 BIG ORANGES

Grandest for Health!
Natural Vitamin "C" content of the fruit is retained.

Makes 1½ pints of juice

40 budget saving SnowCrop varieties

Remember, SNOW CROP gives you a year-round variety of frozen fruits and vegetables always fresh as morning dew . . . fish and poultry that are a joy to cook and eat. To make sure of controlled top quality . . . plus budget-saving prices . . . always demand SNOW CROP Frozen Foods.

Insist on Snow Crop for controlled quality ...lower prices

A SUBSIDIARY OF CLINTON INDUSTRIES INC.

SnowCrop
FROZEN FOODS

(Continued from Page 92)

when he popped the question. The porch was separated by French doors from the parlor and by windows from the office. Frank, Bill and Lillian, lying flat on the parlor floor and peeking through the doors, bore witness to the proposal and to Anne's none-too-original rejection.

"I like to think of you as a brother," she told Scales.

"A fine thing!" Frank whispered to Bill. "Imagine thinking of that wet smack in terms of us."

"You caught me," Scales told Anne. "I went for you, hook, line and sinker. What are you going to do with me?"

Anne was touched by this show of slavish devotion. "What am I going to do with you?" she echoed dramatically.

"Throw him back," dad roared from the other side of the office window. "He's too small to keep."

Frank, Bill and Lill fought gamely against the invasion, but in vain. Even more effective, although unpremeditated, were the obstacles erected by the four little boys, Fred, Dan, Jack and Bob, who kept running into and out of the rooms where the older girls were entertaining their callers.

"I'm living through what can only be described as a hell on earth," Anne moaned to mother. "It's impossible to entertain at home with that troop of four little boys. Something drastic has got to be done about them."

"What's the matter with them?" mother asked.

"They're in and out of the porch all evening. They're driving me screaming, screeching mad. How can you expect any boy to get into a romantic mood when you have to button and unbutton pajamas all evening?"

"They're not supposed to get into romantic moods," dad said.

Anne paid no attention to him. "It's 'Andy, unbutton me, I have to go to the bathroom.' It's 'Andy, button me up, I'm cold.' I tell you, mother, it's just too much of a handicap to endure. You're going to have to do something about it."

"You're right," mother conceded. "I'll do my best to keep them upstairs the next time you have company."

The opposition of Frank, Bill and Lill was less subtle.

"You want to speak to Martha?" Frank would say in an incredulous voice when one of her sheiks would telephone. "You mean Martha Gilbreth, the one with all the freckles? Oh, mercy!" Then, holding the telephone so that the boy on the other end could still hear him, Frank would shout, "Martha, come quick. Imagine! It's a boy calling for you. Isn't that wonderful?"

ONE of Ernestine's sheiks drove a motorcycle madly around town, and used to buzz our place three or four times a night in hopes of catching sight of her. Mother and dad didn't allow the boys to come calling on school nights, but there was always a chance Ernestine might be out in the yard or standing by a window.

One night he parked his motorcycle a couple of blocks away, crept up to the house, and climbed a cherry tree near Ernestine's bedroom window. Fortunately for the motorcyclist, dad was out of town.

Ernestine was doing her homework, and had a spooky feeling she was being watched through the open window. She walked into a dark room, peeked out from behind a shade, and saw the sheik high up in the cherry tree, silhouetted against the moon. She was furious.

"The sneaking Peeping Tom," she told Anne. "Golly, I was just about to get undressed."

"Come on, we'll peek out that dark window again," Anne said. "If he's still there, I've got an idea."

He was still there, and Anne quickly rounded up Martha, Frank, Bill and Lillian.

"There's a Peeping Tom in the cherry tree," Anne explained. "He needs to be taught a lesson. Now, not a word to mother. She'll play her part better if she doesn't know what's going on. Ernestine, go back into your room. Don't pull down your shades. Comb your hair, take off your shoes and socks. Anything to keep him interested. The rest of you, come with me."

We went down into the cellar and got as many old packing boxes and as much excelsior as we could carry, and tiptoed to the cherry tree. We stacked them around the trunk and then went back into the cellar for more. When the supply was exhausted, we went into the back yard and got barrels of leaves.

Anne took some wire and fastened a rag to the end of a stick. She poured kerosene over it and lighted it. Then she led a torch parade from the cellar out to the cherry tree, which now was surrounded by a pile of combustibles more than eight feet high.

ERN'S sheik had been so interested in what seemed about to transpire in her bedroom that he hadn't seen any of the tiptoeing going on at the base of the tree. But the torch attracted his attention, and he looked down. We had formed a ring around the base of the tree, and Anne was swinging the torch uncomfortably close to the huge pile of refuse.

The Peeping Tom shouted in terror, "Don't set fire to that! You'll burn me alive!"

"Precisely," said Anne. "Precisely what you deserve too."

"It was just a prank," he pleaded. "Watch out for that torch. Let me come down!"

"Let you come down, nothing," said Martha. "You evil-minded thing. Let you come down and spread the story all over town about how you climbed our cherry tree and put on over on the Gilbreth family? I should say not."

Anne swung the torch nearer the pile of refuse.

"Look out!" the Peeping Tom shrieked. "You wouldn't roast me alive, would you?"

"Of course we would," Frank said. "Dead men tell no tales."

Ernestine stuck her head out her window. "Have you got him trapped?" she called. "Good. Is he who I think he is?"

"None other," said Anne. "Motorcycle Mac himself, in the soon-to-be-seared flesh."

"Don't cremate him until I get down," Ernestine begged. "I want to see the fun."

Motorcycle Mac was alternately whimpering and cursing when Ernestine joined the ring around the cherry tree.

"I always thought he was a nasty boy anyway," Ernestine said. "Sheiks are hard to find, and goodness knows I don't have too many. But he's one I'll be glad to sacrifice."

"I don't blame you," said Martha. "He's even a crybaby."

We had counted on the commotion to attract mother's attention, and now she opened her window and put her head out. "What's going on out there?" she called. "What are you doing with that torch? That doesn't look safe to me, children."

"I have it," Anne said. "It's all right, mother. We've trapped a skunk up in the cherry tree, and we're trying to make him come down."

Mother sniffed the air suspiciously. "I thought I smelled something," she said. "Listen, children, I don't think you ought to bum up that cherry tree for any old skunk. Your father is devoted to that tree. Come on in the house, and let's see if the skunk won't come down and go away by itself."

"Oh, we weren't really going to burn the tree," Ernestine giggled. "We just wanted to scare the skunk."

"I think you'd better come into the house all of you. It's bedtime, and even a skunk is entitled to some peace and quiet. You've scared him enough for one night." Mother disappeared inside the window.

"If dad were here," Bill said, "he'd probably blind him, like they did back in Lad Godiva's day."

"That's just what dad would do," Ann agreed. "I wish we had thought of that ourselves."

"Should I go get a hatpin?" Frank asked.

"Too late now," Anne said. "It's past your bedtime. But maybe he'll come back again some other night."

None of us children knew it, but dad had had a bad heart for years, and now Doctor Burton told him he was going to die.

We noticed that dad had grown thinner. For the first time in twenty-five years he weighed less than two hundred pounds. He looked about how strange it was to be able to see his feet again. His hands had begun to tremble a little and his face was gray. Sometimes, when he was playing baseball with the older boys or rolling on the floor with Bob and Jane, he'd stop suddenly and say he guessed he had had enough for today. There was a trace of a stagger as he walked away.

He was fifty-five years old, and we supposed his symptoms were those of approaching old age. Certainly it never occurred to any of us that dad had any intention of dying until he was good and ready.

He had known about the bad heart even before Bob and Jane were born. He and mother had discussed it, and the possibility that she would be left a widow with all the children.

"But I don't think those doctors know what they're talking about," dad said.

Mother knew the answer dad wanted. "I don't see how twelve children would be much more trouble than ten," she told him, "and, personally, I like to finish what I start. I don't know about you."

The bad heart was one of the principal reasons for dad's home-instruction program. It was also why he had organized the house on an efficiency basis. He knew a load was going to be thrown on mother, and he wanted to lessen it as much as he could.

"Maybe tomorrow, maybe in six months," Doctor Burton told dad. "A bear at the outside if you stop work and stay in bed."

"Don't think you can scare me," dad said. "You doctors have been telling me for three years not to subscribe to any new magazines. Well, I don't believe a word of it."

Dad went home and wrote a letter to a friend, Dr. Myrtell Shanavan, the Boston brain specialist.

Dear Mortuary Myrt: If and when I die, I'd like my brain to go to Harvard, where they are doing those brain experiments you told me about. I'd like you to handle the details. My hat size is seven and three eighths, in case you want to get a jar ready. Don't think this letter means I'm getting ready to go any time soon, because I'm not. I'll leave a copy of this where Millie will see it when the time comes, and she'll get in touch with you. The next time I see you, I don't want you casting any appraising glances at my cranium.

With the letter mailed, dad shrugged thoughts of death out of his mind. The World Power Conference and the International Management Conference were going to meet in eight months in England and Czechoslovakia. Dad accepted invitations to speak at both.

The postwar industrial expansion had resulted in more and more emphasis being placed on motion study. For the first time, both dad and mother had more clients than they could handle. Dad went from factory to factory, installing timesaving systems, reducing worker fatigue, so as to speed up production.

He died on June 14, 1924, three days before he was to sail for Europe for the two conferences.

Dad had walked from our house down to the Lackawanna station, a distance of about a mile, where he intended to catch a commuters' train for New York. He had a few minutes before the train left, and he telephoned to mother from a pay booth in the station.

"Say, boss," he said, "on the way down here I had an idea about saving motions on packing those soap flakes for Lever Brothers. See what you think ——"

Mother heard a thud and the line went silent. She jiggled the receiver hook.

"I'm sorry." It was the voice of the operator. "The party who called you has hung up."

Jane, the baby, was two years old. Anne, the oldest, was taking her examinations at Smith, where she was a sophomore.

It was Saturday morning. The younger children were playing in the yard. Most of the older ones were in town doing the marketing. Six or seven neighbors set out in automobiles to round up those who were missing. The neighbors wouldn't say what the trouble was.

"Your mother wants you home," they told each of us. "There's been an accident. Just slide into the car and I'll drive you home."

When we arrived at the house, we knew the accident was death. Fifteen or twenty cars were parked in the driveway and on the front lawn. Mother? It couldn't be mother, because they had said mother wanted us home. Daddy? Accidents didn't happen to daddy. We jumped out of the car and ran toward the house. Jackie was sitting on a terrace near the sidewalk. His face was smudged where he had rubbed his hands.

"Our daddy's dead," he sobbed.

Dad was a part of all of us, and a part of all of us died then.

They dressed him in his Army uniform, and we went in and looked in the coffin. With his eyes closed and his face gone slack, he seemed stern and almost forbidding. There was no repose there and no trace left of the laugh wrinkles at the corners of his eyes.

We thought that when they came after him, daddy must have given them a real fight. We bet they had their hands full with daddy.

Mother found the carbon of the letter to dad's friend, and the brain went to Harvard. After the cremation, mother chartered a boat and went out into the Atlantic. Somewhere out there, standing alone in the bow, she scattered his ashes. That was the way dad wanted it.

There was a change in mother after dad died. A change in looks and a change in manner. Before her marriage, all mother's decisions had been made by her parents. After the marriage, the decisions were made by dad. It was dad who suggested having a dozen children, and that both of them become efficiency experts. If his interests had been in basket weaving or phrenology, she would have followed him just as readily.

WHAT'S THE SCORE?

THE mother, Dr. Lillian M. Gilbreth, is a national director of the Girl Scouts, president of Gilbreth and Company, consulting engineers, and professor of engineering at Purdue University. She travels more than 50,000 miles a year, mostly by plane, between her consulting jobs and lecture engagements

All the children are married and none divorced. Each has at least one child. None has more than three so far. There are nineteen Gilbreth grandchildren.

- The Gilbreths live all over the United States:
  - 3 New York
  - 3 New Jersey
  - 2 California
  - 1 Washington, South Carolina and Massachusetts
- All the children graduated from college as follows:
  - 3 University of Michigan
  - 2 Smith College
  - 1 Brown, New Jersey College for Women, Princeton, Purdue, University of North Carolina, University of Pennsylvania
- The eleven living Gilbreths chose the following careers (Mary, second in the family, died at five of diphtheria.):
  - 4 Homemakers
  - 3 Engineers
  - 1 Newspaperman
  - 1 Department-store buyer, personnel, export

Um-m...For Beans You Bake At Home

It's Worth Getting ▸▸▸▸

WASHBURN'S Fancy BEANS

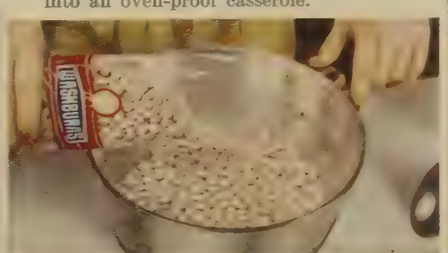
The Beans Selected For Finest Flavor — And So Clean You Don't Have to Rinse

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

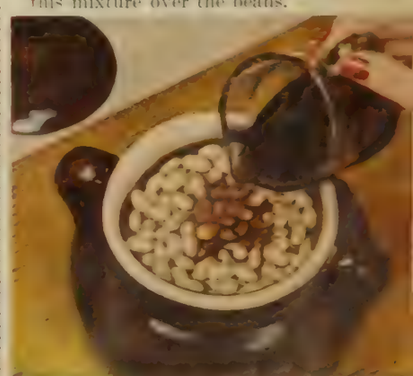
No Others Are Like WASHBURN'S Naturally Finer Beans

To put up our Washburn's Fancy Pack we start with the recognized top grade of beans. We sort these to discard all but the choicest beans. Then just before they go into the package, we clean and polish every bean! You can get all your favorite varieties of beans in our Washburn's Fancy pack.

On other foods, too, Washburn's brand means fine eating-quality. Split peas, whole peas, lentils, pearl barley and rice — you will find these foods naturally finer if you take care to get them in our Washburn's red and blue packages: 1-pound and 2-pound cellophane bags, also 1-pound cartons.

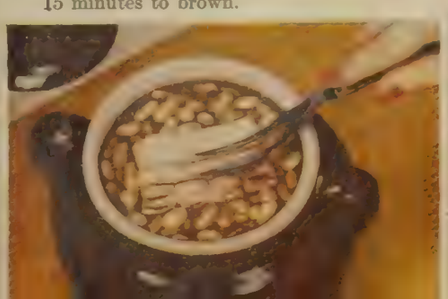


Copyright 1949, by Washburn's, Moscow, Idaho

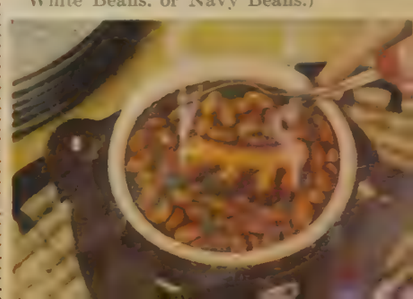


1. BAKED BEAN Recipe for 6 People

1 lb. Washburn's Fancy Beans
8 cups warm water
¼ cup molasses
1½ tbsps. brown sugar
1 tbsp. salt
½ tsp. dry mustard
¼ lb. chunk of salt pork, scored



Add beans to water and soak 5 hours or overnight. Boil gently in same water in covered kettle about 1½ hours until barely tender. Drain, and save the liquid. Pour beans into 2-quart bean pot or into an oven-proof casserole.



2. Pour the molasses over the beans. Then to 2 cups of the liquid you drained from the boiled beans, add the brown sugar, salt and dry mustard. Now pour this mixture over the beans.

3. Press into top of beans a scored chunk of salt pork. Cover and bake in very slow oven (275° F.) 4 hours, adding water if needed to keep beans moist. Uncover last 15 minutes to brown.

4. Serve your baked beans bubbling hot — makes 6 hearty platefuls. (This recipe can be made with Washburn's Great Northern Beans, Pea Beans, Small White Beans, or Navy Beans.)

Heaven knows!

Work takes wings with a wonderful new Gas range! Top burners, oven, broiler —all light without matches.

Divinely accurate automatic thermostats on new Gas ovens set and keep any exact heat . . . from 250° to 550°.

Celestial baking—Only the air-circulated Gas oven gives you such uniform baking . . . such even browning.

"Guardian angel" clock control cooks complete oven meal by itself . . . turns Gas on and off . . . automatically.

Glorious broiling from rare-and-juicy to "done through." New Gas broilers are smokeless, require no pre-heating.

Blissful coolness—No lingering heat after Gas is off. Extra-insulation makes cooking cooler—thriftier.

"OUT OF THIS WORLD!" That's what millions who now own new Gas ranges say. That's what you'll say when you see this TAPPAN "CP" Gas range, or any of the other superb new Gas ranges built to "CP" standards, now at your Gas company or appliance dealer's. And remember to see the new silent Servel Gas refrigerator. It's the next important step in your "New Freedom Gas Kitchen"!*

AMERICAN GAS ASSOCIATION

*CERT. MARK, AMER. GAS ASSOC., INC.

While dad lived, mother was afraid of fast driving, of airplanes, of walking alone at night. When there was lightning, she went in a dark closet and held her ears. When things went wrong at dinner, she sometimes burst into tears and had to leave the table. She made public speeches, but she dreaded them.

Now, suddenly, she wasn't afraid any more, because there was nothing to be afraid of. Now nothing could upset her because the thing that mattered most had been upset. None of us ever saw her weep again.

It was two days after dad's death, and the house still smelled of flowers. Mother called a meeting of the family council. It seemed natural for her to sit at dad's place in the chairman's chair.

Mother told us that there wasn't much money—most of it had gone back into the business. She said she had talked by telephone with her mother, and that her mother wanted all of us to move to California and live with her.

Anne interrupted to say she planned to leave college and get a job. Ernestine, who had graduated from high school the night before dad died, said she didn't care anything about college either.

"Please wait until I'm finished," mother said. "There is another alternative, but it hinges on your being able to take care of yourselves. And it would involve some sacrifices from all of us. So I want you to make the decision. I can go ahead with your father's work. We can keep the office open here. We can keep the house, but we would have to let the cook go."

"Tom too?" we asked. "We couldn't let Tom go, could we? He wouldn't go anyway."

"No, not Tom. But we would have to sell the car and live very simply. Still we could be together. And Anne would go back to college. You know your father wanted all of you to go to college. Do you want to try it? Can you run the house and take care of things until I get back?"

"Get back from where?" we asked.

"If you want to try it," she told us, and she actually rapped the table, "I'm going on that boat tomorrow; the one your father planned to take. He had the tickets. I'm going to give those speeches in London and Prague. I think that's the way your father would want it. But the decision is up to you."

Ernestine and Martha went upstairs to help mother pack. Anne disappeared into the kitchen to plan supper. Frank and Bill started downtown to see the used-car dealers about selling the automobile.

"Better tell them to bring a tow car," Lil called after the boys. "Foolish Carriage never starts for anybody but daddy."

Someone once asked dad, "But what do you want to save time for? What are you going to do with it?"

"For work, if you love that best," said dad. "For education, for beauty, for art, for pleasure." He looked over the top of his pince-nez. "For mumblety-peg, if that's where your heart lies."

SOUP FOR SUPPER

(Continued from Page 56)

the winter. And how happy we are that this is so.

Flexible supper. For one of these occasions we present a supper in which soup plays the star role. And why not, since January is a cold month and soup is a stomach-satisfying, heart-warming dish? I call this supper flexible because you may change things around to suit yourself and the occasion. Should the first soup, that in the fascinating "kettle," served in the French pots, not meet your desire, I'm adding another, later on, to give you a choice.

The choices are endless. Of course there are any number of soups and bisques and chowders and just regular soups, made at home or very elegant combinations of those that come in cans, so you may have more strings to your bow than set forth here. But you'll choose; and so, to get things going, I'll set down here and now a receipt for one of those popular and well-liked French dishes known to the initiated as petite marmite.

PETITE MARMITE

A marmite is a large earthenware soup pot, and a petite marmite is a small individual pottery soup crock. Following the French custom, this soup is served in individual pots. Chicken is an essential meat in the soup. It is always served with grated cheese and French bread. The bread may be toasted and put in the soup as you do in an onion soup. Add 2 quarts water to 1 veal knuckle (cracked) and some beef bones. Add some celery tops, parsley, 2 carrots, 1 medium onion, ⅛ teaspoon marjoram, ⅛ teaspoon thyme, 2 teaspoons salt, and pepper to your taste. Simmer 3 hours to make a good strong stock. Remove the bones. Strain the stock. Cool and remove all the fat. Nothing is worse than fat swimming around on top of your soup. Clear the stock with 1 egg white and shell for each quart of stock. Now take hold and cook a chicken—good big one—in water to cover, with seasonings, 2 to 3 hours, until the stock is rich and the chicken tender. Strain the chicken stock. Cool it and get off every last bit of fat. Cut all the meat from the bones. Add 1 quart chicken stock to 1 quart meat stock. Add 1 cup diced turnips, 3 carrots, sliced thin, ¾ cup thin slivers of green beans, 2 cups green peas and 3 sticks celery cut into small pieces. Add salt and cook all together until the vegetables are tender. Add more seasoning to taste when the vegetables are done, and add a pinch each of thyme and marjoram. Cut the chicken into small pieces and add. This makes 4 quarts. Serve with plain or toasted French bread and grated cheese.

Are you a breadmaker? Right along with the soup, perhaps you'd like to try your hand at French bread. You know I am forever talking about making bread and rolls. Well, here I am again, taking up the theme with a variation I haven't played before. And if you think breadmaking is hard and why bother, get out the bowl and the board and take a flier in the French manner, and when the sweet-smelling loaves come from the oven, and the crusty slices are beautiful on the table, you'll feel richly repaid. To be sure, you can buy this bread, but once you get on to the making, you'll wonder why you haven't done it before.

HOMEMADE FRENCH BREAD

Dissolve 1 package quick dry yeast, or soften 1 cake fresh yeast, in ½ cup lukewarm water. Let it stand 5 minutes. Put ½ cup lukewarm water into a bowl and add 1 tablespoon sugar, 1 teaspoon salt and 2 tablespoons shortening. Add 1 cup all-purpose flour, beating thoroughly. Add the yeast mixture. Add ½ cup more flour, beating again very hard. Then fold in 2 egg whites beaten stiff. Add enough more flour to make a soft dough—about 2 cups, or 3 cups flour altogether. Knead on a floured board until smooth, satiny and very elastic. Put in a greased bowl and let the dough rise until doubled in bulk. Punch down. Let it rise until doubled again. Knead it down lightly. Cover it and let rest 10 minutes. Roll out the dough on a floured board to an oval shape—fold long sides in toward the center. Shape into a roll about 15–18 inches long, slightly wider in the center and tapering at either end. Place it on a baking sheet that has been sprinkled with corn meal. Cover it with a damp cloth and let it rise until rounded and light. Brush the loaf with a glaze made by cooking ½ tablespoon cornstarch, ½ teaspoon salt and ½ cup cold water until thick and clear, stirring constantly. Cool before spreading it on the bread. Cut ½ inch-deep diagonal gashes in the bread with scissors. Put a large pan of boiling water on the bottom rack of the oven. Bake the bread in a hot oven, 450°F., 15 minutes, until a golden brown. Then reduce the heat to 350°F. and bake 20 minutes more. When you thump the bread and it sounds "hollow" the bread is done. Remove it from the baking sheet and cool it on a rack. The pe Anchored to grimy pans?

Don't slave over scorchy pans with a lazy, slipsy dishrag! Use a metal-fiber Brillo pad-with-soap!

Shine 'em easy with BRILLO

A Brillo pad-with-soap whisks off scorch! Shines crusty pots and pans in a jiffy! Use Brillo every day!

GREEN box—pads and cake soap
RED box—soap-filled pads

contains JEWELER'S POLISH

Shines aluminum fast!

of hot water in the bottom of the oven helps to give the bread a crisp crust. If you do not have a long baking sheet or aluminum tray to bake your bread on, divide the dough and make 2 smaller loaves—but this bread should bake on something flat so the sides brown as well as the top. And be sure the bread is very well done, else it will be doughy inside and more Irish than French.

Here is another soup (in place of the marmite) and quite another kettle of fish, as it were. Serve in bowls or old-fashioned soup plates.

SUPPER CHOWDER

Mix 1 can condensed pea soup, 1 can condensed bouillon or consommé, 1 can condensed tomato soup or 1 can tomato sauce. Add 1½ cups water and 1¼ cups cream. Now add 1 small jar chopped ripe olives. Well, they tell me olives come chopped, but I always chop. Thought I had to. (¼ cup chopped olives is about right.) Last of all, add 1 small can crab meat or lobster, picking it over carefully to remove the small bones. While it's heating, add the juice of half a lemon, a little grated onion, salt, pepper and a little mace. Very little. This makes 2 quarts—serves 6 to 8.

Something old—something new. Do any of you remember how at peach season the kitchen was cleared for action, and at least one day was given over to the making—shall I say making, or what? Anyway, to "canning" pickled peaches. And if you think a whiff of boiling stick cinnamon didn't come in my window this moment (it is snowing and the windows are battened down and no nonsense about it) you are mistaken. I can smell those spices as plain as plain. Give you my word. I can smell them all right.

A new use for an old stand-by. Well, the something new is to fly to the shop and get some pickled peaches, or pickle some quickly, and make them into a salad. While the soup may be the chief dish in this particular supper, the salad is what is called the middle or chewable dish. Takes up where a main course leaves off, and becomes very prominent all by itself. So get yourself the peaches, some onions and peppers, and go ahead on a salad that is lovely to look at and pretty elegant to eat.

PICKLED-PEACH SALAD—PEPPER-AND-ONION DRESSING

For pickled peaches, drain the sirup from 2 No. 2½ cans cling peach halves. To half the sirup add ¾ cup cider vinegar, ¾ cup sugar, 1 stick cinnamon and ½ teaspoon whole cloves. Bring to a boil. Boil 5 minutes. Pour hot over the peach halves. Let stand in the sirup overnight. For the salad, arrange the drained pickled peach halves on a bed of lettuce—the inside leaves, you know. Make cups. Pour this peppy dressing over the peaches: To ½ cup French dressing, add ¼ cup diced green pepper and 2 tablespoons chopped onion.

A royal dish. One of the cook's comforts in this world is rice. Ever think of the scores of things you can do with it? Plain boiled rice—if cooked right—can be and is one of the best of all possible things to go with curries or to make into croquettes to go with chicken. Rice croquettes filled with cheese are one of my favorites. Rice muffins, best in the list; rice with a fruit compote; and with cream, sweetened with maple sugar—but why try to go any further? Right now I'll tell you about a royal rice dessert—the rice pudding of song and story, of past fame and present glory. It completes the simple supper—the supper that you see here and now.

ROYAL RICE CUSTARD

Scald 3 cups milk. Cook ½ cup rice in boiling salted water until tender. Drain. Beat 3 whole eggs and 3 egg yolks slightly with 6 tablespoons sugar. Add ¼ teaspoon salt, 1 teaspoon grated lemon rind, ½ cup seedless raisins and 1 teaspoon vanilla. Add the scalded milk gradually. Stir in the cooked rice. Pour into a greased 2-quart casserole. Set it in a pan of hot water. Bake in a moderate oven, 350°F., 1 hour and 15 minutes or until a knife inserted in the center comes out clean. Cool, but don't shove it point-blank in the refrigerator. When it's cool you may do that. For it has to be cold. Make a 3-egg-white meringue, using 6 tablespoons sugar and a pinch of salt. Put this on the top of the pudding. Bake in a moderate oven, 350°F., 10 minutes. Cool and garnish with spoonfuls of jelly. By cooling the pudding well before adding the meringue to the top, the pudding won't separate.

Once more. Now I will leave you to celebrate the coming of the New Year—the way you've always done. It used to be New Year's calls—open house. Is it still that way in some old-fashioned places? Are the sleigh bells in the air or are they up in some neglected hayloft, their sweet music forgotten, their silver notes forever stilled?

At any rate, I know, the beginning of another year, a new epoch in each life, is filled with hope and faith and anticipation. It is so with me, and I pass it on to all of you. A Happy New Year, and may every wish come true!

THE END

Feasts From LEFTOVERS WITH MODERN Gel-Cookery

Recipes in every package

KNOX THE REAL Gelatine

Made in the morning Fresh at Noon!

WAXTEX

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

HEAVY WAXED PAPER

MARATHON CORPORATION
MENASHA, WISCONSIN

"And I ignored everything he said until he made the remark that his mother was prettier than you!"

Best new food idea in years!

Delicious beef gravy in cans . . . ready-to-serve!

Delicious brown beef gravy, all ready to serve, in cans! As good as any you ever made in your own roasting pan.

Meat, bread, potatoes, left-overs, economy foods . . . all taste better and look better with plenty of good, rich gravy!

No mixing, no stirring! Just open, heat and pour. Keep a few cans always handy. Costs pennies . . . helps save dollars on your monthly food bill.

A LIFE-SAVER FOR MEAL PLANNERS!

- Adds taste and glamor to economy foods
- Livens up left-overs
- Enriches slim meals
- Wonderful on bread for children's snacks

Franco-American BEEF GRAVY

One of the famous Franco-American "Meal Makers"
Spaghetti • Macaroni • Beef Gravy

At Vermont maple sugar season in the 1850's the young folks loved to invade the sugar camp and enjoy "sugar-on-snow."

Feast on this real maple sugar flavor

Those folks back in 1850 loved their maple syrup. But they missed what we give you in Vermont Maid Syrup—uniform quality flavor, year after year.

Our skilled blenders first select rich, full-bodied maple sugar; then blend it with cane sugar. This gives you, at moderate cost, uniformly rich and delicious real maple sugar flavor. At your grocer's.

Penick & Ford, Ltd., Inc.
Burlington, Vermont

Vermont Maid Syrup

So many delicious kinds of breads . . . at the stores . . . or that you can bake at home. Really nutritious . . . and how they do perk up your menus!

So inexpensive...the 6-way nourishment of ENRICHED BREAD and FLOUR

"HOT FROM THE OVEN" come your own biscuits, muffins, cakes, cookies, pies to thrill your family and guests. Always buy flour labelled "Enriched" to be sure of this added nourishment.

WHAT TEMPTING VARIETY your baker offers! New treats in breads, rolls, cookies! And they're all highly nutritious when enriched. Ask him whether they are. It is important that you know.

ALWAYS SERVE PLENTY OF BREAD. It's delicious and so economical. On the wrappers of enriched white bread there's a panel stating that it is enriched. Look for it on the loaves that you buy.

Copr. 1948, Wheat Flour Institute

You've always known it—that bread is food energy in its most economical form. And, in these hurry-up days, you know how you need energy. But see those flags? They tell the rest of the story. Modern enriched bread and baked foods make six important contributions to the all-round balanced diet you and your family need. Yes, enriched bread and flour give you 6-way nourishment! Remember this . . . at meal time, at snack time, every day.

"IS BREAD FATTENING?" No; nutritionists tell us breads are no more fattening than any other food of equal energy content. The carbohydrates of bread are readily and easily converted into energy which is then used by the body as needed.

The nutritional statements in this advertisement are acceptable to the Council on Foods and Nutrition of the American Medical Association.

ACCEPTED COUNCIL ON FOODS AND NUTRITION AMERICAN MEDICAL ASSOCIATION

WHEAT FLOUR INSTITUTE

A frontier past claims Sheridan again for its three-day rodeo, the Bots Sots Stampede. Above, the Schwartzes take to the grandstand to watch bulldogging.

WYOMING LAWYER

Harry Schwartz, of Sheridan: Meet a man and a town striking out together for a wide-open future in the wide-open West.

by STRUTHERS BURT

SHERIDAN, WYOMING, sits at the base of the Big Horns facing the rising sun. It is a pleasant town, a contented one, a nice place to live. You can tell this from the manners of the inhabitants, singularly smiling and agreeable. You can tell it from the quiet, tree-lined residence streets rising on a hill to the west of the town, huge cottonwoods shading the lawns of small, pretty, modern houses or of big, somewhat grim Victorian survivals, relics of the cattle barons. You can tell it, too, from the really lovely city park. The place has a pride in itself. Through the town winds a hurrying mountain stream. The tempo is friendly and leisurely and Far Western. The atmosphere is conservative. This is no boom town. There is history here, a sense of an important past.

To reach the house where the two young Schwartzes live—Harry Fletcher Schwartz and his wife, Leroy "Lee" Lewis, or rather the house where the four young Schwartzes live, for now there's Cuyler "Kay" Glenn, age 9, and Harry Hayter, age 8—you leave the business section of Sheridan, bleak, and ugly, and tree-denuded, as all American business Indians range down Main Street and old settlers' descendants take to horses and buckboard for the Bots Sots parade. Founded by cattlemen, Sheridan now has a population of about 14,500 and is the third largest town in Wyoming.

For Lee Schwartz, "shopping time is meal-planning time." Item: discount on overripe avocado decides her to have salad. Gardening, canning, freezing meat bargains slim family's home food bills to $58 a month.

With the Big Horns at the Schwartzes' back door, so are mountain vacations. Harry likes to pack a tent in the family's new car (a "stop-smoking" present to Lee) and take off for rugged, camping-out week ends.

Harry rents his office for $17.50 a month and shares secretary with another lawyer.

AMERICA EARNS

In 1947 the national income was $202,500,000,000—more than double what it was in 1929, a boom period. Off the road, from the shop and the assembly line, or out of his own till, here's what Mr. America brought home according to a recent Federal Reserve Board Survey.

OCCUPATION	AVERAGE FAMILY INCOME
Professional (lawyers, doctors, teachers, etc.)	$4,000.00
Managers and small businessmen	4,500.00
Skilled and semiskilled workers (carpenters, electricians, welders, etc.)	3,000.00
Clerical and salesmen	2,900.00
Unskilled workers (teamsters, construction, agricultural and factory laborers, etc.)	1,750.00

LAWYER HARRY SCHWARTZ EARNS $3300

From his private cases (less expenses)	$2,400.00
As city attorney	900.00

(Average Monthly Earnings—$275)

★ ★ ★

HERE'S HOW THE SCHWARTZES SPEND THEIR MONEY EACH MONTH

	Average
Food	$82.00	Insurance	$12.00
Clothing	18.00	Medical	2.00
Home payments	54.00	Recreation	12.00
Home improvements	28.00	Civic contributions	4.75
Coal	18.00	Car, transportation	39.00
Electricity	5.00	Reading matter	8.00
Telephone	2.65	Incidentals	8.00
Fuel oil	6.00		$299.40

A loan on his car made it possible for Harry Schwartz to meet his bills, which ran nearly $300 over his earnings last year.

"Keeping up with the Joneses is one item you don't have to add to a Sheridan budget."

sections for some unexplainable reason have to be—it's the only ugly part of Sheridan—and drive up the hill—butte, in reality—to the west; that is, toward the Big Horns. Almost at once you are in the shadows of the cottonwoods. The street climbs gradually. You cross the narrow mountain river—Goose Creek—which coils like a blue snake through the town, and appears here, there and everywhere unexpectedly, pass the city park, and begin to ascend sharply. Gay, one-story houses of a new development, each set back in its garden, climb with you. Presently you reach the top of the butte and the end of the road, and abruptly, almost breathtakingly, fifteen miles away across descending, rolling pastures and sagebrush-gray open range, rises the great green tumult of the Big Horns.

To the left, a little down that slope of the butte, is a fenced enclosure, a game reserve where elk and buffalo graze quietly, and at the crest of the butte, just beyond where the new development ends, looking out upon the Big Horns and surrounded by an ample lawn and garden, is a single house older and larger than the rest. It has no particular architecture. If anything,

Picture of a lawyer at work—on a partnership agreement for two ranchers. Being an attorney in Wyoming is like being a country doctor, because you handle all kinds of cases. Harry, one of 20 Sheridan lawyers, has a private practice, is also the youngest City Attorney town's history. The job of being legal right arm to mayor pays only $75 a month, but Harry, son of an U.S. Senator, is hoping it leads to a political car

Mutual aid in everything from boots to business is a Schwartz habit. "Lee keeps me from getting stuffy," says Harry. Says Lee, "He minds me so well."

it is the stucco-and-timber imitation Tudor popular in the early 1900's, but it is commodious and hospitable. It was once a ranch house when Sheridan was still a mile away at the bottom of the butte. At one end, the end facing the Big Horns, is an almost completed two-story addition—a garage on the ground floor, a many-windowed sitting room on the second. This is the work of Harry Schwartz and his son Harry Hayter in their leisure hours. The sitting room is to be a gathering place for the family, and especially a playroom for the children. When it is finished, Lee expects to put there her treasured and inherited grand piano and make of Cuyler Glenn an accomplished musician.

Whether this is possible Lee does not know, but apparently it is a compensatory dream to erase her own failure to take full advantage of a similar opportunity in her youth. She was given piano lessons, and plays adequately, but admits she didn't work at her music half as hard as she should.

Harry Schwartz bought the former ranch house a little over a year ago on a G. I. loan for $7500. Nowadays almost anywhere else in the country save the Far West a similar house would cost at least $20,000. It is in perfect condition and thoroughly modernized: kitchen, heating, electricity. Monthly payments, including taxes, amount to $54. Wyoming, always very kind to it's more important than ironing? "Plenty of gs," says civic-minded Lee. She lets wash pile up l family really needs it, then tackles job with hter, Kay. Housework headaches, however, do not include sewing; she makes Kay's clothes, most of her own. Their main ambition is to spruce up Harry's wardrobe with colorful ties and socks, but both admit—"He notices our dresses only when he doesn't like them."

A must on Lee's schedule: psychotherapy work at Ft. McKensie veterans' hospital.

"Pigtails are fine," says Kay, 9, "except when I have to braid them." Pleasanter pastimes include making breakfast and listening to radio chillers.

Harry Hayter, 8, likes bullfrogs next to horses. No. 1 furnace tender, he was No. 2 carpenter for new family playroom. Tool-handy boss was his dad.

Kay and Hayter have 25-cent weekly allowance each, see one movie a month. Lee admits, "I spoil them a little—but don't you think all good parents do?"

What it takes to build the good life Western style: young ideas, ambition, hard work—and fun along the way.

its veterans, has a veterans' tax exemption which cuts the total annual taxes down to about $29. As you get to know them, you realize more and more that this house, this home—"home" emphasized and in quotation marks—is typical of the young Schwartzes; a symbol of their vision yet solidity, their willingness to build slowly and patiently, their desire to build surely and well. The old ranch house is an answer to the prayers of any young veteran and his wife condemned for a while to the wandering homelessness of war, but it would not have been bought by the impatient or the short-visioned; by those who put immediate style and veneer above comfort and permanence and inherent possibilities.

PHOTOGRAPHS BY BRADLEY SMITH

Harry Fletcher Schwartz, city attorney, one of the youngest city attorneys in the country, and the youngest in the history of his adopted town, Sheridan (he is 33), is a native Wyomingite, still a comparatively rare condition. Only 37.7 per cent of Wyoming's population is native-born. He happened to be born, however, not in Wyoming but in Washington, D. C., February 1, 1915, where his parents were for the time being. His father, Harry H. Schwartz, is a prominent Casper, Wyoming, attorney who, from 1937 to 1943, served one term as Wyoming's junior senator (Dem.) and was afterward for a while Chairman of the National Mediation Board. Returning to Casper, his work in Washington accomplished, the elder Schwartz, far from retiring, resumed his law practice, and is today as active as ever, although well up in his seventies. At the moment the ex-senator is occupying his sparse leisure in an intensive study of philosophy.

His son speaks of him with affection, admiration and awe. Mr. Schwartz was born on a farm in Ohio of a family whose first American ancestor arrived in this country from Germany around the turn of the eighteenth century. As a farm boy he learned to do everything, and has an especial aptitude with his hands which seems to be a family characteristic, a fact which he conceals, except in an emergency, with an adroitness that interests his near relatives. "He is terribly afraid," comments his son reflectively, "that someone, or something, will interrupt his train of thought."

On his mother's side Harry Fletcher is Yankee English. His mother's father was a Boston shipyard owner.

Young Harry was the first of six children, three boys and three girls, and with their father as an example, the family is as legally inclined as it is native. Harry's next older brother is now a practicing attorney in San Francisco; one sister has just entered the University of Wyoming Law School. Another sister is married, while the two youngest children, a sister and brother, are still living with their parents in Casper. But the elder Schwartz, like so many experts, had misgivings in the beginning about his oldest son. He urged him to become a chemical engineer, as he thought at the moment that was where the future lay. Young Harry quietly and firmly went about the business of obtaining a law degree. He is a determined young man. You don't have to be with him long to discover that.

In 1932 he graduated from the Natrona County High School in Casper, and that fall entered the University of Colorado, majoring in prelaw courses. In 1937, graduating from the University of Colorado, he moved to Laramie two days after his wedding—a runaway wedding, incidentally—and Once a temporary summer ranger at Yellowstone, Harry is an expert woodsman. On the expeditions, everybody helps pitch the tent, Hayter builds the fire, Lee makes "mountain potatoes"—and it's full speed ahead for the fish fry.

"Handy with books but not with a saddle." Talking shop with rancher friends is all right, but Harry's interest in horses is strictly from the side lines.

Dress rehearsal for the rodeo—but one heap little Indian "no like." The Crow tribe live on a Montana reservation about 75 miles to the north of Sheridan.

"I used to be a tomboy too." As a teen-ager, Lee punched cattle on her father's ranch in New Mexico and knows how it feels to be at home on the range.

Up in the mountains, horizons grow tall and any man can find a pioneer in himself and a new world worth exploring.

began his studies at the University of Wyoming Law School, from which he was graduated in 1940 with a Bachelor of Laws degree.

He is a fairly tall young man, but stocky, 5′ 9″; and blond, on the edge of being rufous; clean shaven. He is serious, quiet and observant, although easygoing. He doesn't talk very much to begin with, but he is cordial and you like him at once. There is something very solid and satisfying about him. An underlying warmth. He has a hidden sense of humor which shows itself more in appreciation of what his wife and others say than in what he says himself.

While at the University of Colorado, for three summers he was a temporary ranger in Yellowstone Park. And that brings us again to Leroy Lewis, or Lee, her usual nickname, or "Honey," as her husband calls her.

Lee Schwartz is a most important part of the family, and you realize that the minute you enter the Schwartz (Continued on Page 114)

Take these HOT TIPS on serving

Libby's TWICE RICH* Tomato Juice

Cold-day Menu Starter

• Now's the time to serve America's favorite tomato juice winter-style. Libby's sunny-ripe juice makes such a swell warm-up drink—before a meal or between times. Heat—but don't boil—the gloriously ripe juice because you want to protect the precious Vitamins A, B_1, B_2 and C. Libby's, you know, is RICH IN VITAMINS. Sometimes, for a variation, you might add a Libby's Bouillon Cube to each cup of juice you heat. A stalk of celery makes a crispy-eating "stirring spoon" the youngsters will like. (No, it doesn't go limp in the hot juice. Try it and see!)

Winter Party Trick

• A wonderful way to greet skaters, skiers, or a sleigh ride party! Steaming mugs of this juice that is so RICH IN FLAVOR. Velvety-rich in consistency, too. Libby's sunny flavor just hits the spot on a blustering day. On each steaming cup, you might float a lemon slice or a swirl of whipped cream. For appetizers to serve on the side, try tiny "sandwiches" of tantalizing Libby's Vienna Sausages. Split them lengthwise—fill some with a slice of Libby's pickle, some with cheese—and broil. Delicious with the hot juice.

Libby, McNeill & Libby, Chicago 9, Ill.

Hear radio's greatest morning show. It's fascinating! "MY TRUE STORY" Mon. thru Fri. ABC Stations.

Try LIBBY'S CATCHUP AND CHILI SAUCE made from the same fine quality tomatoes as Libby's Tomato Juice.

IN ALL CANNED FOODS

Look to LIBBY'S for perfection

Fieldcrest® SHEETS

The Whitest white—
Famous for long wear

Quality Tested

Fieldcrest Sheets are quality tested at 23 points during manufacture to give you extra whiteness, extra wear, extra luxury.

TOWELS • BLANKETS • BEDSPREADS • LACE TABLECLOTHS
THERMOSTATIC BLANKETS • CURTAINS • HOSIERY • RAYONS

FIELDCREST MILLS, Division of Marshall Field & Company, Inc., 88 Worth Street, New York 13, New York

★ HOW AMERICA LIVES ★

Let's be Practical About Sex Education

By LESLIE B. HOHMAN, M.D.

Professor of Neuropsychiatry, Duke University School of Medicine

MY trip to Sheridan, Wyoming, to meet the four Schwartzes convinced me more than ever that even the best people fool themselves about sex education. Lee Schwartz is an intelligent young matron who, in every way in the world, wants to do the best she possibly can for her children. That, of course, includes proper instruction about sex. She has a nine-year-old daughter and an eight-year-old son, and a husband who is an energetic, helpful young lawyer.

Lee frankly admits that her colossal ignorance about sex didn't get her into difficulties because she had the very good fortune to marry Harry. Lee had had not one word of information about conception and came to womanhood with the idea that pregnancy could occur if a girl permitted a boy to kiss her. She had no parental information even about menstruation! It is hard to believe this, in these times, but I have heard similar stories so frequently that I know they are true.

When I began to ask Lee Schwartz about the sex education of her children, I met with polite, but definite, resentment. Later I realized it was not because she was too shy to talk about sex or thought I was intruding into her private business. She was resentful about the bad information current among women she knew and she hated the idea of instructing children by sitting down with them for formal talks about sex.

I think it is understandable that people hate to talk about anything when they feel ignorant of the topic, or shameful about it, or fearful. After Lee became calmed, she told me her two main principles for sex education. I think we can safely use them for all parents:

1. Tell children the facts about sex whenever and as soon as they ask questions.

2. Tell them these facts in language they can understand in a straightforward, simple manner.

Lee says her children are not much interested in sex and have asked very few questions. When they took their dog to a neighbor's for mating, the children went along. They were told that King, their dog, would be a father in fifty-six days and they would have a puppy dog soon thereafter. They showed no apparent curiosity or interest in seeing the actual mating. They showed some interest in the pregnancy of a neighbor and seemed puzzled about her going to the hospital, and especially why the mother had to stay in bed so long after the baby was born. They were told she was weak and needed to regain her strength. The only knowledge they have about conception is the information that a father and mother are both necessary to have a baby.

Now how certain can Lee be that these children have no more curiosity and interest than she seems to think or than they show her? I have no definite knowledge, but I do know about some other children; and Lee's husband, Harry, furnishes an excellent example from his own childhood.

When Harry was eight years old, he had no information about conception. A woman who lived near by was pregnant and a twelve-year-old boy took it upon himself to inform Harry in four-letter words that this woman and her husband had indulged in some lewd practices—otherwise she would not have been pregnant. By good fortune, Harry's mother overheard. She stopped her work and calmly, gently gave her son hon est information about mating between lo ing men and women who wanted childre It is clear that Harry's mother had not be asked questions and may well have thoug that Harry had no interest. I can assure y this is no isolated example. A careful stu of one of our leading schools revealed tha among fifty boys, those with the most i formation about sex talk and acts were fi boys whose parents were sure their so knew nothing about sex.

Of course parents must answer questio when children ask them. Parents also mu realize that often children do not ask qu tions, just as Harry did not. Furthermo they must realize that children are instruct by neighborhood children very early in th lives and that they do not come to pare to ask questions until much later, if at Take note that Lee did not ask questio and never got any information. Yet she followed the principle that children sho be instructed only when they ask questio

I believe parents can be reassured ab the danger of arousing curiosity. Of cou children will show curiosity about sex j as they show curiosity about everything their world. We must realize that this cu osity is one of the chief ways in which ch dren learn. Curiosity about a new sex fa lasts about as long as curiosity about a other new sort of fact. When a colleague mine decided to let his two-year-old daug ter come into the bathroom while he bathe her curiosity was very much aroused about a week. Then all interest in her ther's genitals disappeared. Probably h interest shifted to digging up the fall-plant bulbs or taking the medicine out of t bathroom cabinet.

The most prudish or embarrassed pare will admit that sex is an important matt in life. Yet many leave their children woeful ignorance because of the delusi that children are not interested. These p ents may comfort themselves in the bel that they are preserving innocence and p tecting their children against curiosity think we can draw a safe conclusion th whether we like it or not, it is not in hands of parents to decide whether child should have sex education. They are lik to get it even if parents decide against desirability of such instruction.

The only thing parents can decide whether they want the information to given exclusively by playmates, with ig rance and vulgarity, or whether they w to present clean, honest, straightforw sex education.

I think parents must face the hard real that part of their children's education is ing to come from the street. Street inform tion cannot be avoided, but it can be c rected by this rule:

3. Give your children sex facts en enough to forestall the street informe

Fathers of little boys may want to these same facts into four-letter words. L not get confused about this. I would advise parents to use four-letter words their only means of talking about sex w children. But I do want children to be a to understand the meaning of such words that when they hear street talk they will able to translate these words into th proper meaning. Why should parents ha so much embarrassment that they can bring themselves to say, "That's what kids call it, but the correct name is this.

If the parent does the teaching, the child as a sound background of clean facts against hich to judge the facts given by the street. emember that a child regards his parents s the prime and authoritative source of all nformation. He will reject the street talk if he parent will give him the chance to acuire clean and real information.

I would like to add a fourth rule:

4. Be prepared to be free and open bout sex. Talk and act in such a way hat your children will feel free to ask uestions.

Many parents think they are straightorward, but in actual practice they dodge hildren's questions, put them off, or give nswers which do not satisfy and only rompt children to get further answers from heir friends. I am convinced that many arents delude themselves in believing that hey are really willing to answer questions, et I have heard over and over, "Oh, you ouldn't understand." . . . "When ou're older, I'll tell you about ." . . . "Nice boys nd girls don't talk bout things like hat."

Actually, how oung or how old hould a child be efore he is given inruction? The anwer must be, "As oung as possible." is clear to anyone ealing with very oung children that hey are limited in hat they can unerstand. The wisest ethod of teaching hildren is to give hem as much inormation as their rowing, active inds will easily abrb. They are apt be interested in verything from ains to God and om turning on the ove to the mysters of the heavens ith their lightning nd thunder. When hey want to know hese things, we exlain as best we can. ur explanations are often oversimple and adequate, but we do the best we can. emember that when there are things hildren should know, we try to explain hose things as best we can. For example, e try to explain the danger of running nto the street, or the need for keeping ut of the way of rusty nails, or the undesirability of walking in puddles of water, nd so on. I would advise the same method talking about sex and body needs and are and body form.

If the child's mind is not ready to receive e information. all you have done is to add me more wasted words. On the other hand, it does sink in, you will have started him n the path to sound knowledge. He may eed this protection all too soon. To learn nything, the child must be instructed many mes—over and over again—before he fially comprehends. Education is always a ow process, but repetition will finally succeed in establishing facts in the child's mind. ust so with sex information. I have tried many times to teach young children about onception, but I have learned that it takes long time. I remember one time instructng a little three-year-old boy about a mother at carrying her kittens in her stomach and rying to use it as an example of how babies re carried. The next day, when he was sked where babies come from, he brightly nd eagerly said, "From the fire departent." A few weeks before, his pregnant nother was taken to the hospital in the firepartment ambulance that happened to be onveniently located just across the street rom his home.

So here is a fifth rule:

5. Sex education should begin at the same time other learning begins. Remember you can't begin too early to beat the neighborhood.

There is every reason why a child should not be overwhelmed by too big a dose of any kind of information. That goes for sex as well as for engines or electric-light plugs or switches.

I would strongly advise against the big-sized doses of sex information. The big-sized doses in actual practice are used only when parents have delayed much too long in giving instruction. If the child is ignorant, the hushed-voice, secretive session is terrifying and shocking. If he already has the information, he is likely to be embarrassed and unwilling to listen to a parent who has failed to give him information when he needed it.

6. Give sex instruction in small doses, making use of the opportunities that come up practically every day.

Sex instruction should be given with the same matter-of-factness and lack of embarrassment with which any other kind of education is given. Don't use a hushed, awesome voice and appear to be embarrassed. To be able to discuss sex with children openly and cleanly, the parent may have to rid himself of past prejudices with which he grew up. This is no easy task. For many men and women, it means learning for the first time the true facts of sex. If parents are ignorant, they should consult sound books which are available in most public libraries. A good way to learn about giving information is for parents to practice when they are alone together. They can learn to talk in a normal tone of voice about sex, and at the same time gradually develop a vocabulary of words with which to talk to children.

7. Practice how to give sex instruction after learning enough facts from authoritative sources to be in position to give sound facts and advice.

Parental attitudes exert a deep and lasting influence on children's attitudes in every field of human behavior. Honesty, religion, kindness, good nature, friendliness, temperateness, tranquillity are all more likely to be taught at the mother's knees and by the father's example than in any other way. It is equally true that attitudes about sex are derived in the same measure from the parents' example and attitudes.

I think parents should always bear clearly in mind that what they do not talk about has as important an influence on children as what they do say. It is equally true that their behavior in front of children influences their children's attitudes profoundly. Contrast the parents who always make the coming to or going from home the occasion for a loving embrace and kiss, and the couples who never show their loving by any kind of physical expression. Can you believe this has no influence on children and their feeling about physical warmth and affection? The combination of proper parental attitudes and sound knowledge will go a long way to help the child achieve a healthy, wholesome, adult sexual life. THE END

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Home-Coming

By Laura Benét

We shall return, love, wiser than before,
Rejoiced to find our weedy garden
sowed,
Beguiled by the mere sunlight on the door,
The trees beside the road.

Question me not with shaded eyes of doubt,
For natural things are sure
As gentians in the autumn, jeweled skies,
Four seasons that endure.

We shall come back, clasping each other's hands
Gaily, as children come
From holidays in unfamiliar lands
To the loved warmth of home.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

a beautiful piano with a magnificent tone

ONE name quality price

LESTER Betsy Ross Spinet

for years of pleasure

Start the New Year musically with the genuine Lester Betsy Ross Spinet. It will pay lasting dividends in musical pleasure for all.

Backed by one family's 61 years experience in building quality pianos . . . the Betsy Ross Spinet is renowned for exquisite tone, responsive touch and full volume.

Distinctively styled to add charm to every home; compactly sized to fit all rooms.

See the latest models at your dealer . . . who will gladly arrange convenient terms.

Guaranteed for ten years; made ONLY by the Lester Piano Manufacturing Company, Inc., builders of world famous Lester Grand Pianos.

Sold by Authorized Lester dealers

MAIL THIS COUPON FOR ILLUSTRATED BOOKLET

LESTER PIANO MANUFACTURING CO., Inc., LESTER 13, PA.

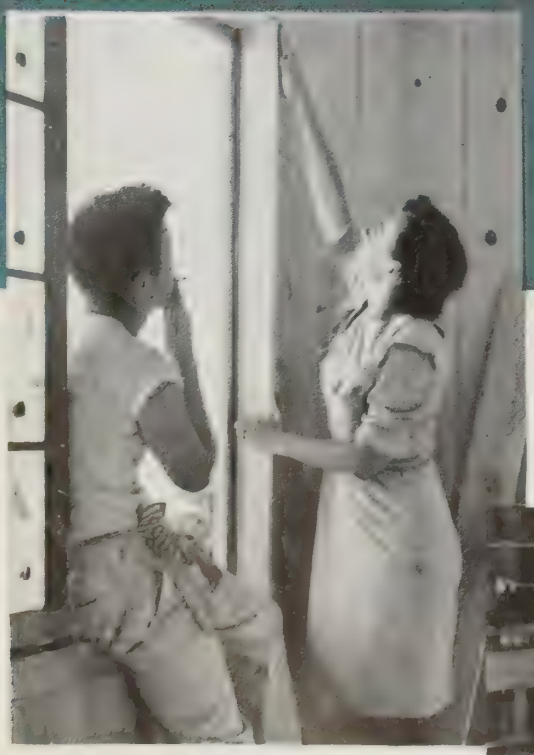
Send me your 24-page illustrated book showing piano arrangement in the home. (Enclose 10c for postage.)

Name_____

Address_____

City_____

Zone No ____ State_____ J 3P



Foreign Sales Representatives: H. A ASTLETT & CO , 27 William St , New York 5, N. Y.

Harry Schwartz turned his carpentry hobby into a sunny pine-paneled room for family and friends.

Day and Night Room

A living room by day, a guest room by night.

Why not let the whole family use the guest room between visitors?

Lee helped by holding boards, measuring and handing tools.

By night the new room becomes a comfortable guest chamber.

By HENRIETTA MURDOCK
Interior Decoration Editor of the Journal

HERE is Harry Schwartz's version of that extra room over the garage which most small-home owners dream of building someday. The family uses the new room as a retreat, a place to read, to work at hobbies and entertain friends. When there are overnight guests, the studio couch makes up into a comfortable bed and the chest opens to accommodate visitors' belongings.

Though an amateur with little experience, Harry Schwartz did all the construction and finishing himself.

The pine furniture is simple, sturdy and inexpensive, and the hand-blocked plaid fabric and linen rug suggest informality with gaiety and charm. The room could be added to any type house, in any section of the country, and be decorated in period or modern style.

OUR FIRST

JANUARY WHITE SALE

IN 6 LONG YEARS

Wamsutta Supercale

WAMSUTTA Supercale SHEETS AND PILLOW CASES

REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.

SHEETS & PILLOW CASES

YOU SAVE

$7.20 PER

DOZEN 72 x 108 (PLAIN HEM)

SUPERCALE IS BEST!

WAMSUTTA MILLS, New Bedford, Massachusetts

Distributors of Wamsutta-Somerset Towels, "The Three Weavers" Throws

Now available — Wamsutta Lustercale*, Lustersheer*, Batistes and Organdies

"I KNOW ENGINEERING . . . I Compared—Found Dexter Twin Built the Best"

"and I KNOW CLEAN CLOTHES . . . My Comparison Proved Dexter Twin Washes Cleaner, Quicker, Easier"

"that's why we both chose a

DEXTER TWIN TUB*

Exclusive Double Sudsing Gets Clothes Super-Clean—Does The Week's Washing in One Hour or Less—Saves Hot Water and Soap!

Dexter Twin does the most perfect wash you've ever seen—in record time and with money-saving economy. Its two washing tubs give you the unequalled advantages of exclusive DEXTER DOUBLE SUDSING —that washes cleaner—far cleaner and easier—without hand rubbing, soaking or pretreating. . . . PROVE IT YOURSELF! Your first washing will convince you that Dexter Twin is best by any comparison! See your Dexter Dealer for a FREE Demonstration today.

For You! Illustrated Booklet Shows How DOUBLE SUDSING Turns Out a Tubful of Clothes Super-Clean EVERY FOUR MINUTES!

Tells how easily you can enjoy this better washing method. Write today—Ask for booklet "WASH HOUR MAGIC." Your copy sent free and without obligation by return mail.

THE DEXTER COMPANY
DEPT. L19, FAIRFIELD, IOWA

FREE! WRITE TODAY!

WASH HOUR MAGIC with Double Sudsing

TWIN TUB Washers have been built by Dexter for almost half a century.

America's Finest Twin and Single Tub Washers Since 1894.

★ HOW AMERICA LIVES ★

Lucky Kay practices real pieces on the family piano instead of monotonous exercises. She is just as lucky to have a modern lamp that lights her music instead of shining in the eyes that have to last all her life.

Are You Light Minded?

By MARGARET DAVIDSON

"HARRY insists on good light," said Lee; and adds, "You can't buy your eyesight back." Outdoor workers usually have better eyesight than indoor workers, among whom most of us are counted. Artificial light keeps us from going blind like the fish in Mammoth Cave, and good artificial light means lamps properly proportioned to the job, ranging from night lights of a very few watts to large ones for close seeing, up to 300 watts. It means lamps correctly placed, combined with background lighting to avoid sharp shadows. It also means lamps with bulbs protected with shades and diffusing bowls to prevent eye-straining glare. Nowadays the Schwartzes do their homework by the eye savers pictured. Lee enjoys the difference in the way the whole house looks, finding that light is one of the cheapest decorators. All of them are shining proof that the light minded are surprisingly often the lighthearted as well.

Putting on her face...

is no longer a matter of a lick and a promise, in the light of dressing-table lamps like Lee's. Two 60-watt bulbs at face level behind translucent shades help to prevent frowning and eyestrain. White shades do not distort make-up colors.

After dinner...

when the table is cleared, Kay and Harry, Jr., have lots of light on their fractions when 100–300 watt bulb in the ceiling fixture is turned to maximum level. Diffusing bowl softens light to reduce glare. Right light can do much to start youngsters into adult life with strong eyes.

The men of the family...

don't like a light under a bushel. When they settle down to the evening paper they want fixtures like these, throwing some light directly on the page and some on the ceiling, thus wiping out contrasts between glare and shadow so tiring to the eye muscles.

Paying bills...

is a chore for Lee after a hard day. Adding up check stubs comes easier, though, when a desk lamp at her left, since she is right-handed, lightens the job. Lamp is tall enough to light desk top, has reflector bowl and opaque shade as eye-and-temper-soothing features.

PHOTOS BY JOSEPH DI PIETRO

In bed at last....

Lee can wriggle her toes and end the day with a good book. She looks as pretty as the picture above her in the light it sheds on her bedtime story. For this picture is also a new pin-up type of lamp, combining up-and-down, balanced light with a decorative flower design.

Hold it, Butch! Ladies Present

It's a safe guess all Butch needs is a 'change' . . . from itchy, half-clean clothes to things that are washed completely clean and sweet . . . with Fels-Naptha Soap.

This extra gentle laundry soap—an exclusive blend of mild, golden soap and active naptha—gets out every stain, every source of irritation. Leaves dainty garments soothingly soft and white.

Like other modern mothers, you'll find Fels-Naptha the perfect soap for doing a 'baby wash' cleaner and quicker!

GOLDEN BAR OR GOLDEN CHIPS

Fels-Naptha Soap

BANISHES "TATTLE-TALE GRAY"

MADE IN PHILA. BY FELS & CO.

Give him Homemade

APPLE PIE

(and put a slice of cheese on it)

You can make it...

quick and easy with the new

Pillsbury PIE CRUST MIX

9 full ounces—ample for a big, two-crust pie

© P.M.I.

Deep in the boyhood memory of every man is a love for homemade apple pie (even more so with cheese on it). Make it for your man. Easy, simple with the new Pillsbury Pie Crust Mix. You can't miss.

Tender, "short" crust
Rich flavor of fine shortening
Tempting brown color
Fast—fix while oven heats
Just add water, mix, roll out
Sure results

Pillsbury BEST XXXX Mixes

You and Ann Pillsbury can make a great team

Ann Pillsbury has developed a new pie crust mix in her kitchen to save you time in your kitchen, and give you perfect results every time.

★ HOW AMERICA LIVES ★

Mrs. Schwartz likes to shop in a small neighborhood grocery near her home. It's the kind of shop where the grocer gives you a taste of the cheese so you can decide whether or not to buy—knows his customers by name.

Quick, Easy and Fairly Frugal

By LOUELLA G. SHOUER

AFTERNOON meetings are frequently on Mrs. Schwartz's calendar. Quick, easy and inexpensive dinners for go-to-meeting day are handy little numbers to have in anyone's household. The casserole, salad and simple dessert type of meal is most popular at their house for in-a-hurry nights. If all three can be prepared—or partially prepared—before taking off for the afternoon, so much the better. We've kept this in mind in the following menus

Morning-for-Night

*Hamburger-Noodle Casserole
*Beet-and-Cabbage Salad
*Cinnamon Pears
Beverage

HAMBURGER-NOODLE CASSEROLE

Sauté ⅓ pound hamburger in 3 tablespoons shortening or salad oil until nicely browned, stirring frequently. Then add ½ cup chopped onions and cook until onions are golden. Be careful not to burn. Push beef and onions to side of pan. Add 2 tablespoons more shortening or salad oil and blend in 3 tablespoons flour. Add 3 cups milk or evaporated milk diluted with water. Stir until thickened. Season to taste with salt and pepper. Add a little dry mustard and Worcestershire sauce to snap up the flavor. Cook 1 eight-ounce package medium-wide noodles in boiling salted water until tender. Drain. Rinse under boiling water. Drain. Mix with the meat gravy. Pour into a casserole. Top with buttered crumbs. Bake 20-25 minutes or until bubbly and brown in moderately hot oven, 375°F. Serves 4. For 2, use ½ pound hamburger—halve the other ingredients.

BEET-AND-CABBAGE SALAD

Prepare 1 package lemon-flavored gel atin according to package directions Add 1½ tablespoons vinegar. Cool unti thick and sirupy in freezing tray o your refrigerator. Don't leave it i long or it will set. Now add ⅔ cu chopped drained canned beets or 1 ja chopped baby beets, 1 cup choppe raw cabbage, 1 tablespoon mince onion, 1 teaspoon salt and a dash o pepper. Mix well. Pour into squar pan. Chill until set. Cut in squares Serve on lettuce with mayonnaise Serves 4, or 2 for 2 meals.

CINNAMON PEARS

Drain sirup from 1 No. 2½ can pears To sirup add 1 stick cinnamon broke into pieces, the juice of 1 lemon and 1-inch piece of lemon rind. Boil minutes. Strain. Soften 1 teaspoo unflavored gelatin in 2 tablespoon cold water. Add to hot sirup. Pour ov pear halves. Chill. It won't really se but the sirup will be slightly thick ened—just a nice consistency. Serv 4. For 2, make up full quantity—se for 2 meals.

The Schwartz youngsters love to coo and Mrs. Schwartz believes in encour ging them. Desserts appeal to them ost. So far their repertoire includes crambled eggs, cookies, brown Betty nd puddings made from mixes. If you ave a hope-to-be cook in the family, t her try her hand on this pudding essert. It couldn't be easier. The main ourse will be your department.

★ ★ ★

Child's Play

*Hungarian Stuffed Eggs
*Quick Creamed Spinach
Lettuce Salad
Chocolate Scotch Pudding
Beverage

HUNGARIAN STUFFED EGGS

ard-cook 6 eggs. Shell and cut in alves. Remove yolks. Mash through eve. Mix yolks with 3½ tablespoons utter or margarine, 2 teaspoons dry read crumbs, 1 teaspoon prepared ustard, 1 tablespoon sour cream, 1 ablespoon minced parsley, ½ tea- oon salt and ⅛ teaspoon pepper. ill whites with yolk mixture. Arrange a greased pie plate. (Prepare this sh in the morning if you're going to out for the afternoon.) Spread eggs ith ¾ cup thick sour cream. Dot with utter or margarine. Sprinkle with acker crumbs. Bake in moderate en, 350° F., 15 minutes, or until ghtly browned. Serves 4. For 2, halve ost ingredients but use 2 table poons utter or margarine and 6 tablespoons our cream to avoid awkward meas- ements.

QUICK CREAMED SPINACH

ook 1 package frozen spinach accord- g to package directions. Drain. Chop ne. Add 1 can condensed cream of icken soup. The juiciness of the inach will thin it to just about right nsistency. Season with salt, pepper, teaspoon nutmeg and 1 teaspoon ated onion. Serves 4. Though this cipe could be halved for 2, you'd still ve ½ package spinach and ½ can of up to use up someway another ght. If I were you, I'd make up e whole business. You'll like it well ough to serve it twice; and you can't ll—there may not be a spoonful left.

CHOCOLATE SCOTCH PUDDING

1 package butterscotch pudding d 1 square chocolate and 2¼ cups ld milk. Stir over direct heat until ocolate melts and pudding thickens. avor with ½ teaspoon vanilla. Chill and serve garnished with coconut or chopped nuts. Serves 4. This is worth repeating, if you are just 2.

Each week when you do your main staple shopping, think of your shelf—that special spot in your cupboard where you keep the makings of a good quick main dish from canned products. Keep it current and many a time you'll be glad you were shelf-conscious. There's usually one night a week when a previously planned meal just isn't possible. You come home later than you planned, or the groceries didn't come. Anything can happen—often does. Canned meats, such as luncheon meat, corned-beef hash, and so on, are good things to have squirreled away, particularly when the budget's getting frayed around the edges.

★ ★ ★

For Shelf-Keeping

*Baked Pork Squares and Sweet Potatoes
*Curried Corn and Tomatoes
*Pear Waldorf Salad
Beverage

BAKED PORK SQUARES AND SWEET POTATOES

Open 1 can pork luncheon meat. Cut meat in quarters. Place in baking pan. Arrange canned sweet potatoes around meat. Blend ½ cup apple jelly with 2 tablespoons hot water. Add 1 tablespoon lemon juice, 1 teaspoon grated lemon rind and ½ cup brown sugar. Pour over the meat and potatoes. Dot with butter or margarine. Bake in a moderate oven, 350° F., for ½ hour. Serves 4. Halve quantities for 2. Put this dish in oven to bake first. Prepare the salad and curried corn and tomatoes. Baste potatoes and meat with glaze once or twice during the baking.

PEAR WALDORF SALAD

To diced fresh pears add diced celery, chopped nuts and a little lemon juice. Combine with salad dressing.

CURRIED CORN AND TOMATOES

Brown 1 medium-sized onion in 2 tablespoons butter or margarine. Add 2 tablespoons flour and 1 teaspoon curry powder. Blend well. Add 1½ cups canned tomatoes, 1 teaspoon salt and 1½ cups whole-kernel corn. Cook over moderate heat until slightly thickened. Serves 4. Halve quantities for 2.

PHOTOS BY BRADLEY SMITH

ith plenty of meat in their freezer, the Schwartzes rarely order meat hen they dine with friends in a restaurant. Fried chicken gets their der most often, as they have it at home only on special occasions.

Your family will love it as a pour-on sauce

Yes, as a sauce . . . a rich, zestful, ready-to-use sauce, heated just as it comes from the can! There are few foods that don't gain by adding tomato. It lends color and flavor to leftovers . . . economy foods . . . useful but too-familiar standbys. If you don't believe it, try meat loaf this way:

MEAT LOAF ANDALUSIA

1½ lbs. ground beef
½ cup water — Dash of thyme
¾ tsp. salt — 2 tbsp. minced onion
Pepper to taste — 1½ cups soft bread crumbs
1 can Campbell's Tomato Soup

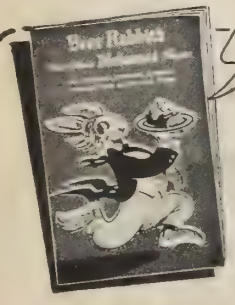
Combine lightly all ingredients but the soup. Turn into greased pan (about 8 by 4 by 3 ins.). Bake at 350° 1 hr., 15 min. Drain off excess fat. 15 minutes before taking from oven, pour on Campbell's Tomato Soup just as it comes from the can. 6 to 7 servings.

And as a cooking sauce, it livens up "Old Reliables"

Whenever a recipe calls for tomato sauce, the best and quickest way is Campbell's Tomato Soup, just as it comes from the can!

Clip this recipe for your food file.

I JUST COULDN'T KEEP HOUSE WITHOUT CAMPBELL'S TOMATO SOUP ...AS A SOUP...AS A SAUCE ...AND IN COOKING!



Campbell's
TOMATO SOUP

ONLY NEW ORLEANS MOLASSES HAS THIS SUN-RICH FLAVOR

Like sweet liquid sunshine on your tongue, Brer Rabbit New Orleans Molasses is a mouth-watering treat on bread, pancakes, waffles, French toast and cereal. That delicious flavor comes from the freshly crushed juice of southern plantation sugar cane.

TWO FLAVORS: Gold Label—light, mild-flavored; Green Label—dark, full-flavored.

SEND FOR MY NEW COOK BOOK

FREE! 50-page book. 124 valuable recipes. Brand-new. Substantial washable cover. Illustrated. Mail this coupon to: BRER RABBIT, c/o Penick & Ford, New Orleans 7, La., Dept. J-4.

*Name*_____
(Please print name and address)

*Address*_____

*Zone*_____

BRER RABBIT New Orleans MOLASSES

RICH IN IRON—NEEDED FOR GOOD RED BLOOD

GOOD MONEY IN WEAVING

Earn money at home weaving rugs, carpets, etc. from old rags or new yarn—in your community! No experience necessary. $1,000 doing it with easy running Union Looms costing less than $50.00! Send for our free booklet today.

UNION LOOM WORKS, 44 Factory St., BOONVILLE, N.Y.

YARN SAMPLE CARD

Over 200 samples finest quality yarns—all colors—send only 20c for handling—mailing. Dept. L. J.

SOFT-SPUN YARN CO. 219 Broome St. New York, N. Y.

Try THESE THRIFTY New C&B DESSERTS FOR Two!

SERVE HOT OR COLD . . .

. . . with your favorite sauce, or whipped cream. For delicious sauce recipes, see back of label. C&B Date Dessert is tender and rich, made of dates, spices and selected ingredients, subtly blended, and baked in the just-for-two 4-oz. tin. At your grocer's, or write Crosse & Blackwell, Dept. G, Baltimore 24, Maryland

2 kinds . .

DATE DESSERT

FIG DESSERT

So Easy on Your Budget . . . Ready to Serve . . . and SO GOOD!

Heart-shaped for 2-layer Sweetheart Cake. Perfect for birthday, anniversary and special occasion parties! 9 by 1¼ inches.

Set of 2 Aluminum Pans Only $1 Postpaid

Dept. L-1

BLUE RIBBON BAKEWARE, Lemont, Ill.

WYOMING LAWYER

(Continued from Page 104)

house. There is that give and take, that constant referring to each other between her husband and herself, that occasional teasing, that show an extremely devoted and understanding young couple. And this goes for the entire household. There is a warm circle of affection in which the two children, Cuyler Glenn and Harry Hayter, share. The Schwartzes like one another, and they listen to one another, and they have a good time together. And they respect one another, not on the basis of parents and children but on the basis of individuals, each with his or her common duties and rewards, which added together make for the solidity and happiness of what Benjamin Franklin spoke of as the smallest and first circle of government, the family.

Lee Schwartz is a graceful, charming person, short and slight. She is 5′ 3″ tall and weighs around 114 pounds. Her naturally curly light brown hair is cut short, and when she takes her glasses off you see how lively and shining blue her eyes are. She dresses becomingly, with instinctive good taste—she makes most of her own clothes. It is obvious that she has a sense of color, which probably comes from the fact that her favorite recreation is painting, at which she is good.

And now, while we are at it, we'd best describe the three other members of the family: Kay, Harry Hayter, and King, a huge Dalmatian pup, age 2.

King, despite his youth, is an eminently responsible person, who takes seriously his duties of guarding the family, and his spotted, muscular figure is formidable. However, he is quietly cordial if your credentials are good, and he has the reputation of being as well known and as well liked in Sheridan as the rest of the family.

Kay wears pigtails and is a slim, demure maiden with mature good manners and attentive respect for a stranger. Nothing escapes her. She sits up straight with her hands folded in her lap. She is a third-grader, a good student, and very useful about the house. She is already a good cook, and occasionally is allowed to prepare breakfast. Like her mother, she is fond of sewing, and has taken to painting. But, again like her mother, she is very much of an all-around person. Her interests are by no means confined to indoors. She is equally enthusiastic about riding, skiing and fishing. She is at the age, however, when one conceals one's deeper emotions with the casualness, and slight touch of bravado, of the blue-jeaned teens.

WHEN asked what her favorite pastime is, she replies lightly, "Listening to the blood-and-thunder radio programs when I get home from school," and adds, "You can quote me on that." A remark that causes a slight shudder on the part of her mother, as it does on the part of millions of American parents.

As an older sister, Kay has the guidance of Harry Hayter gravely on her mind. Harry Hayter has the quick, responsive grin of intelligent boyhood. He is confiding and energetic, and is a great help to his father about the house and grounds. He is official furnace tender during the winter months and all-year official collector of garbage. He has the family aptitude for using his hands, and is following in his father's footsteps as a carpenter, builder and cabinet-maker. Like Kay and his mother, he has taken to drawing and painting. All th Schwartzes have a distinct bent in thos directions. Harry Fletcher is an expert woo carver with a pocketknife. Harry Hayte has also taken it up. He is in the third grad at school with his sister, and is an equall good student.

LEE, like her husband, is a native F Westerner, but instead of being born into legal family, she was born into a ranchin family. Her father is a cattleman, and L was born June 20, 1917, in Winner, Sout Dakota. Winner, incidentally, got its nan because there was a contest between tw towns as to which should be the county sea and Winner won. Shortly after Lee's birt her father moved south, and the family live for ten years in Oklahoma and Colorado Tulsa and Denver—until, in 1930, Mr. Lew bought a large cattle ranch near Cimarro New Mexico.

There were two girls, Lee and her old sister Gwen, and they were very much li Jack Sprat and his wife, who preferred opp sites. Gwen preferred helping her mothe Lee preferred helping her father. Gwen a sisted in the housekeeping and stayed i doors; Lee rod punched cattle a lived out of doo But Leeisextreme tactful about t now, for her h band, Harry, is o of the few We erners who dor like horses, and quite frank in sa ing so.

Lee's educati began in the De ver public schoo and afterwa when her fami moved to the Ne Mexico ranch, s attended a cons idated count school four mil from her hom When she was 15 was sent to li with an aunt in T peka, Kansas, order to take a vantage of a be ter high school and obtain the credits nec sary for college. Two years later she enter Stevens College, Columbia, Missouri, wh she taught horseback riding and majored business administration.

Meanwhile, her older sister Gwen h entered the University of Colorado and b become engaged to a law student. The student's roommate was a certain Ha Schwartz, of Casper, Wyoming. In 1935 L still at Stevens, was invited to spend a w end with her sister, and that's how Schwartzes met—at a fraternity dance. T following year Lee, graduating from Steve transferred to the University of Colora but she states firmly Harry Schwartz h nothing to do with her decision. In fact. first week end they hadn't been particula impressed by each other. They thought e other nice but not startling. It just sho how much people can read their futur The following Christmas, Christmas of 19 they became engaged, although Harry h still three years of law school ahead of h and no money of his own.

Both fathers, Mr. Lewis and Mr. Schwa who had just been elected to the Uni States Senate, took the engagement ph sophically. They believed that "two yo people could live as cheaply as one," wh was truer when they married than it is n The families were startled, however, wh the following October Harry and Lee clop Like most engaged couples, they had drean dreams, and made elaborate plans for a f mal wedding in August when their fami

(Continued on Page 117)

A Steelworker's Family

How do you make do when you have seven children and $69 a week to beat the cost of living?

Steelworker Arthur Crouse, of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, brings home a fatter-than-average pay envelope. But his wife must stretch their dollars to meet running expenses, and she prays that tomorrow won't bring that rainy day.

To share the problems of a big family with a small income,

Meet the Arthur Crouses, of Pittsburgh, Pa.

HOW AMERICA LIVES

By ROGER BUTTERFIELD

The February Journal

Have you ever said: "I'm drinking too much coffee"?

YOU PROBABLY HAVE . . . if you're like most people who love a good cup of coffee.

For coffee is so enticing, so delightful, so hospitable a beverage that one cup just seems to lead to another.

And yet . . . and yet . . . you realize that you must be watchful, lest you reach the point where the caffein in coffee might make you sleepless, nervous, even irritable and "out of sorts." (With some people, the caffein in a single cup of coffee can have that effect!)

So, when you are nervous and tense . . . wakeful at night . . . you wonder, naturally, if coffee is to blame. Should you limit yourself to a certain amount? To certain times of day? Should you give up coffee altogether?

THE ONLY PERFECT ANSWER—DRINK SANKA COFFEE

Sanka Coffee brings you two great pleasures. The first is the rich, satisfying, and very special flavor-goodness that coffee-lovers get only from real coffee.

The second is the pleasure of never worrying about how much coffee you drink or when you drink it.

You can drink all you want—one cup or six; morning, noon, or midnight—enjoy it to the fullest, and never give a thought to possible caffein-effects!

ALL COFFEE—REAL COFFEE—97% CAFFEIN-FREE

The reason—as millions know—is that Sanka is wonderful coffee with the caffein taken out.

That's why Sanka gives you the enjoyment that real coffee and only real coffee can give. The same immediate sense of comfort and satisfaction—the warm, bracing cheer.

And yet Sanka will free your mind completely from the slightest question about your coffee-drinking habits.

Why not start drinking Sanka Coffee tomorrow? You have nothing to lose . . . and possibly a great deal to gain.

Sanka Coffee

"Real coffee...with the worry taken out"

Products of General Foods

THE WHOLE FLAVOR OF Florida is in it!

From the Land of Sunshine, Vitamins, and Health
—a drink that puts SPRINGTIME in your life.

Folks travel all the way to Florida—to build their health in its sunshine. Yet in the juice of Florida oranges, the invigorating glow of health is stored away—ready to be enjoyed by every member of the family every single day.

It's orange-juice time more often than you think! When you squeeze a glass of juice from tree-ripened Florida oranges, or pour from a can of luscious orange juice, you are treating yourself to natural vitamin C in rich abundance. Other vitamins . . . minerals too. Fruit sugars for quick energy. You are building resistance against fatigue. And you're arming yourself to fight colds. It pays to make Florida orange juice your daily stand-by!

FLORIDA CITRUS COMMISSION
Lakeland, Florida

FLORIDA ORANGE JUICE

FRESH  OR  CANNED

(Continued from Page 114)

ld be present. Four times the wedding s postponed because Senator Schwartz ld not leave Washington. All that summer and Harry waited for Congress to adrn. Congress has a habit of disappointing ple, including engaged couples. So in ober, 1937, Lee and Harry ran away and e married at Littleton, Colorado, by a tice of the peace whose name, approprily enough for a Far Western wedding, Davy Crockett. They took along as witses one of Harry's fraternity brothers and wife. That Saturday they had attended otball game between Colorado and Misri. They still do not know who won.

The Schwartz and Lewis families recovd promptly from the shock and became e more their calm and welcoming selves. erance and good humor seem to be charristic of both stocks. Lee adores her ther and father, also her mother-in-law l father-in-law. It is the same with rry. As for Lee's father, apparently he is en to the outbursts of sudden generosity racteristic of the cattleman, and also to love of indulging daughters common to h cattlemen and other male parents. til recently the young Schwartzes drove ancient sedan of the vintage of '41. Now y have blossomed forth with a beautiful oon convertible containing every known get. They are nervous about this and erly explanatory. The convertible is not eeping with their modest income. Lee's ner gave it to her on condition she would o smoking for fifteen months. She is ning the convertible the hard way, for husband smokes and so presents a conit temptation.

When you ask Harry what first attracted about his wife, he answers promptly, he has a wonderful-looking mother."

This needs further explanation. "What do mean? That Mrs. Lewis has a fine bone ucture, or something of the sort? That efore your wife will wear well?"

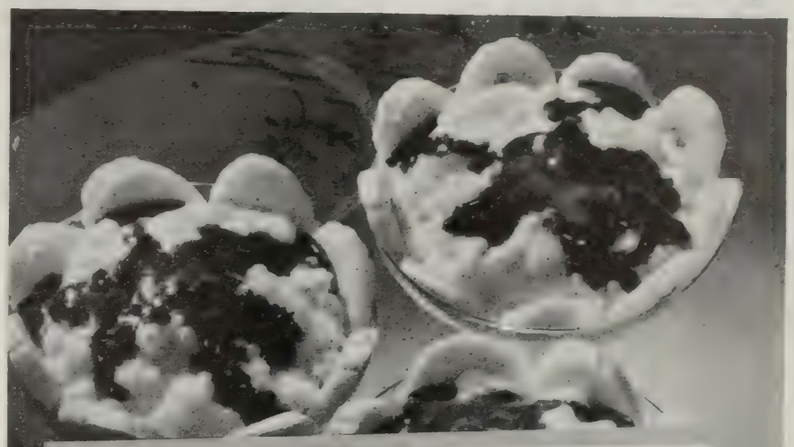
Exactly." And then he adds, "Buoyy—wit. Those attracted me at once. She os me from getting stuffy." Lee has made od job of it, for there's not a trace of finess about him. "Intelligence. Conality—we both like the same things." en you suggest, "Charm," he agrees rtily, showing that this has been in his d, but that he was too modest to say so. n answer to the same question, Lee re-, "Brains. Reliability. Constructive imagination. Ability to do things with his hands." She sighs happily. "Besides, he minds so beautifully."

Two days after the Gretna Green wedding at Littleton the newly married couple moved to Laramie, where Harry began his studies at the University of Wyoming Law School. They rented a three-room renovated tourist cabin. Nine months later Cuyler Glenn was born, and sixteen months after that, Harry Hayter. Lee was eager to assist her husband financially, but those first two years she was too busy housekeeping and having children. Like many young people, Lee and Harry believe in planned families, and they had determined not to have any children until Harry was well established in his law practice. As is so often the case, Nature was not co-operative.

An interesting comment on the changes brought about by the recent war is that in 1937 Harry was the only married student in his class at Laramie. In last year's enrollment there was not a single unmarried law student at the University of Wyoming.

Harry graduated from law school in 1940, passed his Wyoming bar examinations, and moved his family to Casper, where he took charge of his father's law office. This was an invaluable experience for a beginning lawyer, but when at the end of three years Mr. Schwartz returned to Casper, Harry was confronted with a problem. He could stay in Casper and coast to some extent upon his father's reputation, and be known as "Senator Schwartz's son," or he could strike out for himself. It is indicative of his personality that he chose the latter.

There was an opening in the Enforcement Division of the Office of Price Administration in Denver, so he transferred his family there. He remained in Denver eight months, meanwhile investigating various communities as places to settle and establish a practice. One hundred and sixty-two miles north of Casper, up Highway 87, which more or less follows, in the eastern shadows of the Big Horns, the famous old Bozeman Trail—the "bloody Bozeman" of the Indian-fighting decades of the 1860's and '70's—is Sheridan, a comparatively near neighbor of Casper as Far Western distances go, but a very different sort of town.



Casper is an oil town, with all that implies. A booming, teeming place filled with ugliness, sudden wealth and instability. Forty-four miles north are the Salt Creek fields, Midwest and Teapot Dome. In 1916 oil,

"It's terribly thrilling to feel you're improving humanity!"

GORGEOUS? NATCH!

(IT'S REAL, WONDERFUL TAPIOCA—GENUINE MINUTE TAPIOCA)

BANANA TAPIOCA CREAM

1 egg yolk
2 cups milk
3 tablespoons sugar
⅛ teaspoon salt
3 tablespoons Minute Tapioca
1 egg white
2 tablespoons sugar
½ teaspoon vanilla
2 bananas
Chocolate sauce

Mix egg yolk with a small amount of the milk in saucepan. Add remaining milk, 3 tablespoons sugar, salt, and Minute Tapioca. Place over medium heat. Cook until mixture comes to a full boil, stirring constantly—this takes 5 to 8 minutes. (Do not overcook . . . mixture thickens as it cools.) Remove from heat.

Beat egg white until foamy throughout; add 2 tablespoons sugar, 1 tablespoon at a time, and continue beating with rotary egg beater until mixture will stand in soft peaks. Add hot tapioca mixture, stirring constantly. Add vanilla. Cool, stirring after 15 to 20 minutes. Chill. Just before serving, dice bananas and fold into tapioca cream. Serve with a topping of chocolate sauce and additional banana slices. Makes a luxurious dessert for 6 people. So elegant to look at—such heaven to taste—you'll hardly believe it's so quick and easy to fix. And for all its homemade goodness—it's mighty thrifty, too.

• • •

P.S. for brides! If you're a novice cook—you may never have used real, genuine Minute Tapioca. (It was not available during the war years.) So discover it now! Join the long line of crackerjack cooks who make Minute Tapioca desserts their specialty. You'll find more recipes on box.

A product of General Foods

FREE! WONDERFUL NEW RECIPE BOOK

MINUTE TAPIOCA, Department S, Battle Creek, Michigan

Please send me a FREE copy of "Miracles with Minute Tapioca," containing over 50 recipes for creamy desserts—fruit pies that don't run—fluffy omelets and soufflés—tender meat loaves that slice without crumbling—rich soups and stews and scores of other chef's secrets.

Name_____

Address_____

City_____ State_____

Offer expires June 1, 1949. Good only in U. S. A. L 19

By letting you know when the water boils, this cheery kettle saves gas or electricity.

EARN A Singing Tea Kettle . . .

THIS KETTLE is made of solid copper with sparkling chromium finish. The natural finish copper bottom heats quickly and efficiently—2½ quarts capacity—and you won't burn your fingers on the cool bakelite handle.

It's yours, if you send us two 2-year Ladies' Home Journal subscriptions, sold at the full U. S. price, $5.00 each, to persons living outside your own home. Your own or your personal gift subscriptions will not count.

We cannot accept cash orders for kettle. This offer good in U. S. only, until March 31, 1949.

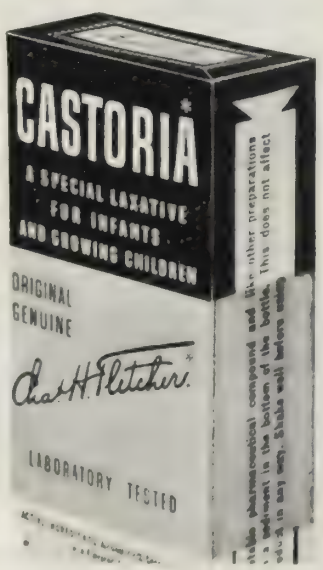
Send names and addresses of subscribers, together with your name and address and remittance to

CURTIS CIRCULATION COMPANY
819 Independence Square Philadelphia 5, Pa.

When tiny tantrums come from "Childhood Constipation"

...give Fletcher's Castoria!

"It's the laxative made especially for infants and children."



WHEN your baby shows his temper, and those unhappy tantrums come from "Childhood Constipation" . . . it's wise to give him Fletcher's Castoria.

Thorough and effective—yet so gentle, it won't upset sensitive digestive systems.

Made especially for children—contains no harsh drugs, will not cause griping or discomfort.

So pleasant-tasting—children love it and take it gladly without any struggle.

Get Fletcher's Castoria at your drug-store today. Be sure you see the green band and the Charles H. Fletcher signature on the package—then you will know that what you are getting is the original and genuine.*

Chas H. Fletcher

The original and genuine

CASTORIA

which had been discovered near Casper in 1889, came into its own and changed Casper from a sleepy cow town into a city; by the 1940 census the second in Wyoming—Cheyenne being first—but now actually the largest, a steadily growing city of about 33,000 inhabitants. Sheridan is a cattle town, a ranching town, with just a few conservative and prosperous industries. It was incorporated in 1884 and has grown slowly and solidly without any marked break in either its economy or the nature of its population. Sheridan has a population of approximately 14,500 and is the third largest town in Wyoming, a state which has no large cities. It was founded by well-to-do cattlemen, always a conservative group, while just a little south a colony of Englishmen founded the village of Big Horn, and still farther south, but not far, cattlemen and Englishmen founded the small and comely town of Buffalo. The Sioux had been gone from the Powder and Tongue rivers only eight years.

Along the Big Horns where Sheridan and Buffalo are, the country is fertile and for the Far West peculiarly gracious. Over the wide green valley and the great ascending pastures and cattle ranges travel slowly the shadows of Wyoming's cumulus clouds. Always to the west are the peaks and the huge dark green slopes of the Big Horns, purple where the canyons are.

With their usual good sense Lee and Harry Schwartz chose Sheridan as their future home. They chose it because of its schools, which are excellent; its climate, which is almost perfect; its size, which is neither too large nor too small; its people, who are quietly cordial and hospitable; and the opportunities it offers to a young professional man. Sheridan is old enough, and stable enough, sufficiently civilized to appreciate skill and brains; it furnishes a coherent background. But it is also Far Western, and so welcomes ambition, hard work and individuality. It has no caste or snobbishness, and expects young people to live simply and on what they earn.

Lee and Harry Schwartz moved to Sheridan in June of 1944. They rented a small furnished house—in those days you could do that—and Harry leased a small office and settled down to work night and day. Three months later he was drafted, despite three dependents, and was ordered to report immediately for training to the naval base at San Diego, California. Once more the four Schwartzes moved, Lee and the two children following Harry and living with him in a small apartment on the base for the nine months he was there. Lee worked in the Navy Engineering office as a file clerk at $45 a week, the children being taken care of at a day nursery. At the end of nine months Harry was ordered to transport duty in the South Pacific and Lee and the children went back to Sheridan.

HARRY'S transport duty was grim. He served on the U. S. S. Kingsbury, which was engaged in transporting casualties from Iwo Jima and other battle areas to the West Coast. But he took his "Mister Roberts" out by carving with a pocketknife, in his idle moments, exquisite little figurines out of salt-soaked driftwood. He has a collection of these in a corner cabinet in Sheridan.

On March 22, 1946, Lieut. (j.g.) Harry Fletcher Schwartz received his discharge from the Navy and rejoined his family i Sheridan. He rented a law office, the one h still has, for $17.50 a month on Sheridan main street, and he and Lee began to loo around for a permanent home. Present they came across the ranch house.

LAW in Wyoming is, on the whole, like th practice of a country doctor. Sheridan twenty lawyers handle every kind of case fro land and title settlements to criminal and civ offenses. Wyoming has a simplified judici system. Two courts, the Justice Court and th District Court, take care of everything. La in Wyoming is still a fairly friendly affair, a equity and common sense are much in ev dence. The majority of cases are settled o of court. Because the towns are small, th local bar associations are also friendly, a Harry Schwartz is deeply grateful to th older attorneys of Sheridan, always willi to assist their younger fellows with advi and the loan of their private libraries.

As city attorney, appointed by the may Harry's official duties include weekly me ings with the city council every Monda morning at nine; advice to the mayor on legal matters pertaining to the town; and t drafting of town or nances. In additio he defends the to against claims a suits and prosecu violators of the c laws. For this he ceives the munific salary of $75 a mon But that isn't all th is to it, by any mea

The appointmer a signal honor for young an attorn and a political spri board. Both t Schwartzes. Lee a Harry, are intens alive politically a civically, and unl all signs fail Ha has a distinguis political career ah of him. He has personality, the ba ground and the a bition. Until recen he was chairman the Wyoming Yo Democrats Asso tion. Both he and proclaim themsel as thoroughgoing erals; democrats w both a big and a li d. Harry is a direc of the Junior Ch ber of Commerce, in Sheridan a very ac and important body; a director of the wanis Club; and county chairman of National Foundation for Infantile P ysis. Lee is president of the Sheridan Ju Women's Club, is active in the Sheridan morial Hospital as a nurse's aide, and sp two afternoons a week in psychother work at Fort McKensie, the huge veter hospital just outside Sheridan where t are 1000 patients. She also heads nume drives and works alongside her husban various projects such as raising money the hospital and increasing recreational f ities for Sheridan's young people. Lee c go far in politics, too, if she wanted. oming is hospitable to women in any br of work. It is called "The Equality Sta

In 1868, when Wyoming was organized a territory, one of the first acts of the ter rial legislature was an equal-suffrage am ment, the first in the country. When W ming entered the Union in 1890 as the fo fourth state, it carried that amendment it—the first of all the states to do so. It the first state to have a woman gover Mrs. Nellie Tayloe Ross—now Direct the United States Mint—in 1925.

Harry at present is making approxim $3300 a year: $900 from his job as city a ney, $2400 from his law practice. On th family of four can live comfortably in S dan, even nowadays. As has been

Portrait of Mother and Child

By Margaret Fishback

CHILD

Why are women always saying,
"Come to lunch," when I am playing?
Why is mamma such a pest
Always when I'm busiest?
Just as I connect my train,
Presto, goes the old refrain,
Constantly the well-worn wheeze:
"Wash your hands, my darling, please!"

MOTHER

This is what I'd like to know:
Why do children always go
Rushing off to dig or play
Just as I'm about to say,
"Dinner's ready and the roast
Will be dry as Melba toast;
If you loiter, it's a crime"?
Still they take their own sweet time.

Knitted for Softness
Turknit
BABY BATH BLANKETS
Towels • Wash Cloths • Bibs
Absorbent and economical
Protect child from drafts after bath
Won't chafe tender skin
At leading stores
Turknit matched gift sets make ideal presents.
FREE
A copy of our 36 page pictorial booklet "How to Bathe and Dress Baby" will be sent free. Write PUTNAM KNITTING CO.
Dept. L, Cohoes, N. Y.

Kills Closet Odors makes air pine fresh in kitchens, cellars, closets, living rooms, bathrooms dispels bad odors
from fish, cabbage, onions, cauliflower, garlic, tobacco
WIZARD WICK
"Pull up the wick—stops odors quick"
ONLY 39¢
WIZARD WICK DEODORIZER
COSTS LESS! KEEP SEVERAL BOTTLES HANDY!

CASH OFFER!
WOMEN wanted to forward new and renewal subscriptions for Ladies' Home Journal, The Saturday Evening Post, Country Gentleman, Jack and Jill, Holiday and other popular publications. You can earn big commissions—devote spare or full time. For details write to
CURTIS CIRCULATION COMPANY
818 Independence Square, Philadelphia 5, Pa.

DISCOURAGE...
Prolonged and Persistent THUMB-SUCKING USE
THUM
TRADE MARK
50¢ and $1.00
AT LEADING DRUG COUNTERS
• Simple • Harmless • Effective

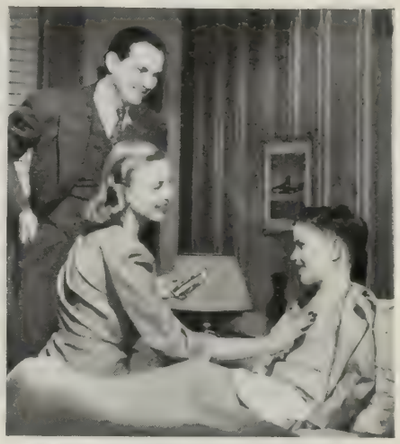
BIG MONEY
FREE SAMPLE
Name Imprinted Personal Notes
Sell "All Occasion" Greetings. 15 fast selling items. Complete line. Guaranteed to sell. Make up to 100% profit. Ask for on approval sample All Occasion Box.
HILTON GREETINGS, 147 Essex, Dept. A-1, Boston, Mass.

MATERNITY DRESSES
WRITE FOR FREE CATALOG
Smart, youthful styles for Morning, Street or Afternoon at low budget prices. Charming fashions with concealing lines for the mother-to-be. Also Maternity Corsets and Lingerie.
SPRING STYLES
CRAWFORD'S
DEPT. A, 729 BALT. AVE.
Kansas City 6, Mo.

there's no "keeping up with the Joneses"; young people are expected to start at the bottom and work up. Lee is an expert needlewoman and makes most of Kay's clothes, and her own summer dresses and outing things. She doesn't wear hats, so there's no cost there. She requires one suit and one formal dress a year, and these are frequently given her by her family. Around the house she wears blue jeans in winter, shorts in summer. Harry the elder requires a new suit each year, a few shirts and a couple of pairs of shoes. The children's heavier clothing lasts a long while, and that, too, is sometimes replenished when necessary by Lee's family. Lee's father likes to send presents of beef from his New Mexican ranch.

In two ways the Schwartzes have been singularly lucky. So far they have been an extremely healthy family. To date, doctors and medicines have cost them practically nothing. Their dentist bills are small, about $24 a year—no more, as a rule, than the fees for semiannual inspection. The children's teeth are also regularly examined at school. In addition to this, the Schwartzes eat lightly and prefer simple food—salads and fruit are their favorite dishes.

ANOTHER favorable factor in the Schwartzes' financial setup is that Harry's favorite recreations—his hobbies: carpentering, building and cabinetwork—are definitely constructive and money-saving. He is also a fair plumber and a good gardener. He and little Harry are outstandingly useful about the house and grounds. For instance, Harry senior has built most of the furniture in the ranch house, save for some heirlooms which Lee contributed. All the furniture in his and Lee's bedroom is his handiwork, including extremely modern built-in cupboards and roomy closets. In the dining room, a pleasant, sunny room with white plaster walls, Lee keeps the heirlooms presented to her by Harry's mother, Mrs. Schwartz: some antique brasses, a tea cart, teapots and trays, which during his career as a shipyard owner in Boston were given to Mrs. Schwartz's father by sea-captain friends. Here in Sheridan, Wyoming, these heirlooms have made part of the journey back, but overland, to their Oriental birthplace.



In her vivacity and her love of gay and pretty things, Lee shows her French and Irish blood—by descent she is English, French and Irish—but she doesn't buy until she can well afford it. She is as patient and careful as her more sober husband.

Naturally, the Schwartzes entertain infrequently—about twice a month—and then simply. They confine themselves almost entirely to buffet suppers. Nor have they any expensive tastes. Harry plays golf occasionally. They both belong to the Sheridan Country Club. The dues, however, are only $48 a year and membership is almost obligatory for a young professional man. Lee and Harry go to the movies once a week; the children once a month. Lee and Harry are both fond of dancing, but this is satisfied by the monthly dances at the country club, by dances at the Elks Club, and by informal parties at the houses of friends. About their only extravagance consists of magazine subscriptions. They are pretty consistent readers of both books and magazines, and so are the children. Lee makes a great deal of use of the Sheridan lending libraries. Nowadays, of course, Harry has to do most of his reading along the lines of his profession.

On weekdays the family arises at 6:30, and while Lee is cooking breakfast, the children clean their rooms, make their beds and dress for school. Breakfast is at 7:30, giving plenty of time for leisurely eating. Harry drives the children to school, arriving at his office by nine. Lee spends her mornings in housework and sewing, and has lunch ready for her husband at noon. The children carry lunches to school. After lunch, Harry returns to his office, and Lee has her afternoons free for her many outside activities. As a rule the children are home from school by 3:30 and entertain themselves with carpentering and wood carving on the part of young Harry and by painting and paper-doll making on the part of Kay, or else they go back again down the

COLDS
In a minute—relief from miseries begins

Rub MINIT-RUB on chest and back.

1. In a minute, Minit-Rub begins to stimulate circulation, begins to bring a sensation of warmth. That quickly helps relieve surface aches and pains.

2. In a minute, Minit-Rub's welcome pain-relieving action begins to soothe that raspy local irritation.

3. In a minute, Minit-Rub's active menthol vapors begin to ease that nasal stuffiness feeling.

MINIT-RUB also helps soothe pains resulting from neuralgia, sciatica, rheumatism and lumbago. Try it!

MINIT-RUB is wonderful for both children and adults. Greaseless! Stainless! Disappears like vanishing cream! Won't harm linens.

Get a tube of Minit-Rub today!

GREASELESS
STAINLESS
MINIT-RUB
Available in small and large tubes
PRODUCT OF BRISTOL-MYERS

LOOK ... 3 TIMES EASIER TO READ

BY stopwatch test, a Taylor Binoc Thermometer is 3 times easier to read than ordinary fever thermometers. Tells you accurately when fever warns of sickness. Should be in every medicine cabinet. Triple lens construction makes mercury stand out clearly. Special flat shape is easy to grip in natural reading position. Easier to shake down, can't roll, less apt to break. In both oral and rectal types at $2.00 and $2.50. At your drug store, or write Taylor Instrument Companies, Rochester, New York, or Toronto, Canada. Taylor Instruments Mean Accuracy First.

TAYLOR BINOC FEVER THERMOMETER TELLS WHEN TO CALL THE DOCTOR

Reveals Sweetheart's Name

"Yes, I'm practically engaged," says glamorous model, Allene Meacham. "My sweetheart is the greatest little wonder-worker in the world. It's Hopper White Clay Pack. Nothing like it to give a drab, faded complexion that smooth, young, dreamy look a 'close-up' demands." Ladies, you'll be crazy about White Clay Pack—and the thrilling difference it makes in 8 short minutes. When the day's tired lines leave you with that wearied older look, just pat on this luscious white clay. Thrill to its tingling, tightening action—to the way it smooths out tired lines, lifts weary sag, and sparks your skin with radiant, refreshing glow! Get Hopper White Clay Pack today. And for everyday care, use Edna Wallace Hopper Homogenized Facial Cream. At cosmetic counters.

KNITTING YARNS
POSTAGE FREE! MONEY BACK GUARANTEE! Direct from our own great factories
YARN HEADQUARTERS, Dept. 'L'
718 CHESTNUT ST., PHILA. 6, PA.
SEND TODAY FOR NEW FREE SAMPLE BOOKLET

Simplify your shipping problems —Mark shipments with Dennison
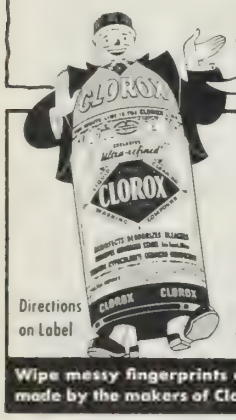
SHIPPING TAGS
One of many Dennison Handy Helpers for Home, School, and Office
On sale at stationery counters everywhere

Do germs lead a "hand-to-mouth" existence in your kitchen?



1. THE KITCHEN "JACK-OF-ALL-TRADES" IS THE DISHCLOTH. YOU USE IT FOR WASHING DISHES... WIPING THE DRAINBOARD, SINK, STOVE, REFRIGERATOR.

2. YOUR DISHCLOTH CAN EASILY TRANSFER HARMFUL GERMS FROM A DIRTY SURFACE TO A CLEAN ONE... PERHAPS TO DISHES. WHY TAKE CHANCES...

3. IT'S EASY TO MAKE YOUR DISHCLOTHS SANITARY WITH A REGULAR CLOROX BATH. CLOROX BRIGHTENS, REMOVES STAINS, DEODORIZES AND DISINFECTS. MILLIONS OF HOUSEWIVES USE CLOROX DAILY IN ROUTINE CLEANING OF KITCHEN AND BATHROOM. HELP PROTECT YOUR FAMILY'S HEALTH WITH CLOROX!

Directions on Label

CLOROX... FIRST WITH AMERICA'S HOUSEWIVES BECAUSE IT OFFERS BOTH:

GENTLER Bleaching Action... Longer Life for Linens!

There's no gentler bleach than Clorox in laundering. For Clorox is free from caustic and other harsh substances... made by an exclusive formula protected by U. S. patent!

GREATER Disinfecting Efficiency ...Added Health Protection!

Because Clorox is caustic-free, it works faster in killing germs... does a better job of disinfecting. Give your family the extra health protection of a Clorox-clean home!

CLOROX BLEACHES • REMOVES STAINS • DEODORIZES • DISINFECTS

There's only one CLOROX... it's always uniform... always dependable!

Wipe messy fingerprints off doors and woodwork with BOON... the ready-to-use liquid cleaner made by the makers of Clorox. BOON wipes dirt and grease from washable surfaces quickly, easily.

hill to the city park for outdoor sports with their school friends: swimming in the summer, skiing and skating in the winter. According to Lee, they also spend too much time listening to the radio. The evenings are spent as a rule in reading, studying and, again, listening to the radio. The family has no especial favorite programs except for Kay with her "blood-and-thunder dramas." The family possesses an ancient phonograph which Lee picked up, together with 500 records, for $5 at an auction.

The Schwartzes, as has been stated, are a coherent, home-loving group.

Lee and Harry believe firmly in discipline for their children; tolerant, kindly, but firm. They hold no commerce with so-called "liberal education." They believe in home training. Children should have appointed tasks and be kept to them. But Lee, being a mother, may have a small Achilles heel in this respect. When asked if she was never spoiled by her parents in her youth, she says firmly, "No—never," and then hesitates, and says, "Well, maybe just a little," and adds reflectively, "I think all good parents spoil their children just a little, don't you?"

Living in a small town has many advantages—also some disadvantages. But living in a Far Western small town has the great advantage of having all manner of outdoor sport near at hand, and at practically no cost. Like most Far Westerners, the Schwartzes take no regular vacations. The climate of Sheridan is an all-year-round one, the wilderness is only a few hours away, you live with magnificent scenery. The Schwartzes spend their week ends in excursions to the near-by mountains or in visits to neighboring ranches, where there are fishing, riding, shooting. Whenever possible they take a few days off and go camping in the recesses of the Big Horns or some other primitive area. Sometimes in the summer they go to the New Mexico ranch of Lee's parents, although Harry as a rule is too busy for that.

One may ask, especially if one is city-minded, why a young man of Harry Schwartz's distinguished antecedents and firm but quiet ambitions should choose a town like Sheridan to live in rather than seek the rewards of a great city. What rewards? It is just because he is ambitious, but also sensible and far-visioned, that Harry chose Sheridan and his native state. Immediately he is a man of importance, immediately he can begin to go places, immediately the whole state, and every circle in it, is open to him, and meanwhile he can live, until he makes a greater one, on an income that in New York or Chicago would mean comparative privation. In Sheridan he and his wife, and his children, lead a wide, constantly expanding, healthy and, what is most important, exciting life, for Wyoming is an exciting place to live. Even the air is charged with vitality and power. It is a curious place and a cosmopolitan one, and always has been. People from every state in the Union and from all over the world, and from every social class, come to live in Wyoming, and when they come they live in an almost perfect democracy. It is very rewarding and satisfying.

Here is the atmosphere of sombreros and high-heeled boots, and spreading ranches. This is the country of the Bozeman Trail of Fort Connor, Fort Reno, Fort Phil Kearney and Fort Smith. Of Crazy Woman Battlefield. Of the Hayfield and Wagon Box fights. Of the Fetterman Massacre. While just across the Montana line to the north-west, on what is now the Crow reservation is the site of the Battle of the Little Big Horn, where small white headstones under the blue sky, by twos, by threes, in little clusters and solitary, on the edge of swales and in hollows and on rising ground, march raggedly up to the summit where seventy-two years ago Custer and his Seventh Cavalrymen made their final stand.

Harry and Lee Schwartz answer the question of why they are in Sheridan. You ask what they would do if they could do exactly what they wanted. And they both say, and instantly: "Exactly what we're doing."

THOMASTON Fabrics SINCE 1900

SOFT Kitten-soft, that is! Woven of finest cotton, Thomaston Sheets bring years of sleeping comfort to every bed in your house! But luxurious-feeling as they are, these sheets are sturdily woven too—"take it" from the wash tubs and from daily duty and still come up smiling! All this, and at modest prices too!

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

Thomaston Sheets

Ask for THOMASTON SHEETS at your favorite store a quality for every purse and purpose.

KITCHEN IN A NUTSHELL

(Continued from Page 75)

under the counter on the other side and even has a freezing compartment with two ice-cube trays and room for six or eight packages of frozen food. The sink is recessed in the center of the one-piece counter top of acid-resisting enamel.

You might think there couldn't be any storage space in a five-by-six affair, but there is. Every inch of space is planned space, tailored to fit the utensil, tool or table piece that is best kept in that particular spot. And surprisingly enough, the equipment in this miniature kitchen is complete down to the last mixing bowl and saucepan.

Gray-and-black asphalt tile for the floor and black linoleum counter tops are as functional as the white kitchen unit. Lime green for the built-in cupboards and a gay apple-figured wallpaper in red and green give the kitchen individuality. The wallpaper, by the way, has been treated with a transparent wax rubbed on with a cloth. It can be cleaned by sponging with soapy water, important in a small space.

On a snowy January day, this little kitchen is as gay as June. The kettle is singing, hot scones bake in the oven, and a pot of wild-strawberry jam sits by the teapot. Tea for two! Young or old.

PHOTO BY STUART

For crowded kitchens—or bathrooms and service rooms, too—a cabinet which hangs on a door offers additional storage. Three-and-a-quarter-inch-wide shelves have built-up front panels to hold items in place when cabinet is opened. Hooks can be located to fit needs.

Can You Equal This Home for $2475

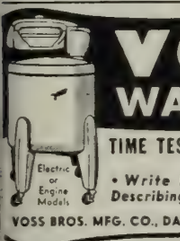
Shipped Direct from Our Mill

Save 30% to 40% on Your New Home..

Act Now!

on't pay several hundred dollars more than necessary hen you build a home! Buy it direct from our mill at r low factory price. We ship you the materials—lumr cut-to-fit, ready to erect. Paint, glass, hardware, ils, etc., all included in the price—no extra charges. ans furnished—also complete building instructions. No nder our customers write us that we saved them 30% to 40%. Prices subject to change without notice.

IG BOOK of ouse Plans Colors 25¢



Handsome Big CATALOGUE
Pictures wonderful homes in colors at money-saving prices. Designs to suit everyone. Send 25c for catalogue today.

LEWIS MANUFACTURING CO.
7091 Lafayette Ave., Bay City, Mich.

OO YOU CRY?

Have backaches and other pains caused by an over-soft bed de life miserable for you? If so just slip a Restll Bed Board under your mattress and enjoy ur rest . . . Soft beds are not good for anyone . a firmer bed induces invigorating sleep at very le cost. Excellent for Sacro-illiacs. Made of ractive, splinter-proof fibre for all size beds. arly 240,000 sold annually by leading Dept. res in 213 cities. Shipped elsewhere, chgs. paid. ite today for full particulars. Just say "Send ormation and free circular L-1." Address ST-WELL BED BOARD CO., 140 West 34th St., w York 1, N. Y.

VOSS WASHERS

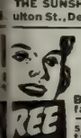
TIME TESTED SINCE 1876

Electric or Engine Models

• Write For Free Booklet Describing Exclusive Features

VOSS BROS. MFG. CO., DAVENPORT, IA., U. S. A.

urpee TUBEROUS Begonias 3 FOR 25¢



Camellia-Flowered
Exotic, large double flowers; loveliest of all plants for shady places, also prized for growing in pots. Very easy to grow. Lowest price ever. All colors mixed. Order NOW! Postpaid: 3 Bulbs 25c; 12 Bulbs $1.

W. ATLEE BURPEE CO.
415 Burpee Building Philadelphia 32, Pa. OR 415 Burpee Building Clinton, Iowa

SELL FAMOUS SUNSHINE $1 EVERYDAY CARDS
SIX FLORAL LINED ENVELOPES

NEVER BEFORE SUCH VALUES
to make BIG PROFITS in your spare with these sensational values. Exclusive line creations. Your friends, neighbors, ates will enthuse and buy these boxes ht. Samples on approval.
THER 1949 QUALITY CREATIONS plete line, Get-Well, Birthday, Gift s. Stationery, Decorative Napkins. No nience needed. It costs nothing to try. today for samples on approval.
THE SUNSHINE ART STUDIOS
ulton St., Dept. LE-1, New York 8, N.Y.

48 SUNSHINE NOTES $1.00
21 CARD EASTER ASST. $1.00

STAMPED LINENS at 1/2 PRICE

REE PAGE TALOG

Buy quality stamped goods direct from manufacturer—save one-half. Over 100 new items —pillow cases, seamless pillow tubing, show sheets, scarfs, bridge sets, luncheon sets, table cloths, show towels, bedspreads, aprons, infants' garments, imported Linens and Novelties. Complete embroidering instructions free. It's easy. Write:

MERRIBEE ART EMBROIDERY CO.
Dept. 254 22 W. 21st St., New York 10, N.Y.

AT ST! SOMETHING NEW and SENSATIONAL in EVERYDAY CARDS

Gorgeous Satin and Velour Designs
Show rich Satin and Velour Cards. Astounding value—16 for $1. Up to 100% profit. Imprinted Stationery Charmette. Napkins, 25 other assortments 60c to $1. SAMPLES on approval. Write today.

Make Money Easily

CO., 2801 Locust, Dept. 913-A, St. Louis-3, Mo.

NITTING YARNS

Finest Quality Yarns at Low Prices
Send 10¢ for Sample Folder to cover mailing cost

SUNRAY YARN HOUSE, Dept. JI
349 Grand St., New York 2, N. Y.

T ME OUT!
If You Want to Make Money!
eed live-wire women as Subscription Representatives! s a part-time job that will pay you Big Commissions. harge for particulars or supplies. Write at once to S CIRCULATION COMPANY, 817 Independence Square, Phila. 5, Pa.

KINFOLK

(Continued from Page 55)

"All right—in fifteen minutes."

She went out into the hall. Mrs. Su was still standing there, watching the door of the living room.

"I am going home," Louise said quickly. "Just tell Doctor Su I had to go on after all."

Alec was waiting for her, his coat collar turned up and his hat pulled down. "Hello," he said in a guarded voice. "You were a long time coming." He put his arm into hers, and they walked back to the street again. "Tell me everything."

Before she could reply, six or seven students coming along the half-lit street saw a girl walking with an American. They surrounded the pair swiftly and a flashlight revealed Louise's pretty face.

"You American man!" a student shouted. "Leave our girls alone!"

Alec felt himself pushed against a wall. He put Louise behind him to shield her. "We'll have to cut and run," he said to her over his shoulder. "But where will we go?"

"We'll have to go home," Louise said.

"Then when I start, you keep up with me," Alec commanded. "Come now—get ready—get set ——"

By the suddenness of their dash, by the swiftness of their pace, they took the students by surprise and got a head start. Both Alec and Louise were strong and long-winded. The chase was uneven and one by one the students halted and gave up. When the two reached the hutung no one followed.

"You'd better leave me here," Louise said. "This is our gate."

But Alec Wetherston had been thinking hard while his legs ran. He was deeply attracted to this pretty Chinese girl. "Look here," he said. "I'm not going to leave you, darling. I'm coming in to see that big brother of yours and tell him I want to marry you."

Louise looked up at him wistfully. Before she could speak they heard footsteps in the hutung. In the darkness they stood quite still, waiting, and again a flashlight was thrown upon them.

"Peter!" Louise gasped.

Without a word Peter jumped on Alec and tore him away. "You devil!" he cried.

In a second the two young men were rolling on the ground, locked together, and Peter, struggling up, seized Alec by the hair and beat his head against the cobbles.

Louise shrieked and fell upon Peter. "Jim! Jim!" she screamed for help.

Down the hutung doors opened and the next instant James and Chen and behind them Mary, carrying the lighted lamp, saw three disheveled young people rising from the ground. James separated them, commanded Louise to get into the house and led both the young men in behind her.

He turned to Peter. "What were you doing?"

Peter, his eyes still blazing at Alec, replied, "I had just passed a crowd of the fellows who said they had run after an American going with one of our girls. They can't stand that now, after all the things Americans have done here. I didn't dream the girl was my own sister."

"And you?" James said quietly to Alec.

"I was coming here to ask your permission to marry Louise," Alec said bluntly.

"Who are you?" James asked with the same fearful quietness.

"Alec Wetherston, formerly of the U. S. Army," Alec said in a firm voice. "Louise and I met the day she came to the chrysanthemum market."

"Mary, take Louise away," James said.

Louise allowed herself to be led as far as the door. There she paused, the tears wet on her cheeks. "I tell you I will marry Alec."

Mary pulled her away, and James went on quietly, "Mr. Wetherston, sit down please. I have no objection to my sister's marrying the man she wants to marry, but he must be a good man."

They were all sitting down now except Peter, who stood with his hands in his pockets, his hair on end.

BE SAFE · · BE SURE · · BE SATISFIED

Insist on this tag on upholstered furniture

Furniture manufactured by Hibriten Chair Company Lenoir, North Carolina

Remember, the combination of qualities offered by Duran upholstery covering is unique. All plastics are not of Duran quality. Insist on Duran tagged furniture and be sure of getting the superb beauty, long wear and easy upkeep of Duran.

Send for free Duran folder with sample.

THE MASLAND DURALEATHER COMPANY, 3278-90 AMBER ST., PHILADELPHIA 34, PA.

Join the CHIMNEY SWEEP users who

SLASH SKY-HIGH FUEL BILLS!
ENJOY A CLEANER, WARMER HOME!

—without furnace alterations, insulation, weather-stripping or storm sash!

Millions say there's "magic" in the way Chimney Sweep "eats up" soot, which steals costly, vital heat. Magic in the way it makes any fuel—coal, wood, oil or kerosene—go further and give more heat. And special magic in the drudgery you save, because your home and furnishings stay cleaner! Chimney Sweep also helps prevent dangerous chimney fires and coal gas explosions!

It's sensational how a few cents for Chimney Sweep every week often saves as much in heat and fuel as hundreds of dollars spent for weather-proofing. Even in insulated homes the saving is amazing! Save heat, fuel, money—have a cleaner, warmer, safer home! Get Chimney Sweep today—any hardware or department store or mail this coupon.

POWDER for coal and wood furnaces, stoves. Each application in handy envelope—just sprinkle on the fire! Safe, easy to use, economical.

LIQUID for oil burners and kerosene heaters. Just add to the fuel oil tank. Gives hotter, cleaner flame—reduces oil odors—saves fuel!

CHIMNEY SWEEP is used by industrial plants, hotels, apartments, 16 steamship lines and by leading oil companies in their ocean tankers.

G. N. COUGHLAN CO., DEPT. 1-L, WEST ORANGE, N. J.
Enclosed is $..... for the following Chimney Sweep
( ) 3-lb. packages Powder at $1.29 each, postpaid.
( ) 1-pt. cans Liquid at $1.29 each, postpaid.
Name .....
Address .....
City..... State.....

Now is the time to stock up on America's Most Popular Sheets

In these White Sale Days you'll find all kinds of "values" in the stores. But you'll find no better long-run value than Pequot plus-service muslins . . . or if it's luxury sheets you're looking for, than Pequot fine combed percales.

Just check these value features:

PEQUOT PLUS-SERVICE SHEETS PILLOW CASES

Extra long fibres • extra-close weave extra strength • extra beauty extraordinary wear plus double-tape selvages* and quick-pick projecting size tabs†
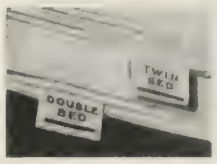
5 pastel shades and white



PEQUOT Percale PERCALE

Extra long fibres • extra combing exquisite weaving • smoo-ooth texture more than 200 fine combed threads per inch quick-pick projecting size tabs
6 pastel shades and white

Look at them . . . your eyes say buy Pequots! Feel them . . . your fingers say buy Pequots! Consider them . . . your intelligence says buy Pequots!

For four generations, women have been telling each other, buy Pequots. Day in, day out . . . year in, year out, Pequot's the peak of value. Sheet for sheet . . . muslin or finest combed percale . . . you won't find a better buy than Pequot!

Pequot Mills, Salem, Mass.

†Projecting size tabs for quick finding on the shelf.

*Double-tape selvages to give extra strength.

PEQUOT SHEETS
so good-looking so long-wearing

"I guess nobody is perfect—not these days." Alec was beginning to feel better. Louise's brother looked like a regular fellow.

"Please tell me everything," James said sternly.

"How do you mean—everything?"

Chen spoke. "The little boy in the hospital ——"

"I guess you know," Alec said simply. "I guess it's nothing different from lots of other fellows during the war. Only I came back. I guess that was my mistake."

James leaned forward and looked at the American. He liked this tall, angular young man. His face was honest, and for an American the features were delicate and quite good. It might be that Louise would never marry a Chinese.

"You want to marry my sister?"

Alec lifted his head. "I've been thinking it all out," he said. "I want to marry her and go home. We'll take the baby with us. She's told me all about herself and she knows all about me. People aren't as old-fashioned as they used to be. You can't marry a negro, but most people don't mind a Chinese."

Peter burst at this. "Don't mind a Chinese!" he bellowed. "But we mind Americans, let me tell you. We've had about enough of Americans." He rushed from the room.

James spoke with sudden clarity. "Tomorrow you can come and tell me about your family and your situation. If I am satisfied I will tell Louise that she may marry you."

Alec lifted his head and showed a face gone radiant. "I want to thank you, sir," he stammered. "I wish I knew how. I'll come around tomorrow—here?"

"To my office in the hospital, please," James said. "Then we will see the child together. Louise is very young for the care of so small an infant. But I suppose she can learn."

The wedding took place quietly. Alec and Louise went to the American consulate one afternoon with James and Mary as witnesses and there the marriage was performed. Peter would not go and Chen had stayed with the baby.

That night the bride and groom, with the little child, took the train southward to Shanghai. It was a strange wedding party, and yet a happy one. James and Mary and Chen saw them off and stood until the train disappeared, shades drawn against possible bandits and only the great engine headlight flaring.

Gazing after the moving train, James buttoned his coat about him tightly. "Now I must cable pa."

Mary clung to his arm as they turned to go home again and Chen fell in beside her. "I know we have done right," she said. "It doesn't matter what pa says."

"Louise would never have been happy here," Chen said. "It takes a certain kind of person to live in China now."

"What kind of person?" Mary asked.

"Someone who can see true meanings. Someone who does not only want the world better, but believes it can be made better, and gets angry because it is not done. Someone who is not willing to hide himself in one of the few good places left in the world. Someone who is tough!"

Doctor Liang was very angry. James' letter had come by air mail and had thus reached him some two weeks before Louise could be expected. Who knew what this new fellow was, this Alec Wetherston? James had put the address of the family in his letter. Doctor Liang had a flair for a good address, and he knew that this one, although on Park Avenue, was only partly good. Very wealthy people would not be there. He decided to ignore them, refusing to recognize his own secret fear that they might not be pleased with a Chinese daughter-in-law.

To his wife he spoke with complete frankness, and in the height of his irritation at fate, he bullied her a good deal in small ways.

"It would be very pleasant now, would it, if this soldier's family did not like to connected with us?"

"On the other hand, they might like she suggested reasonably. "For example, we not ask why this Alec does not object Chinese wife? Doubtless his parents have no strong objection."

The reasonableness incensed Doctor Li He tasted his coffee and set the cup d again. "How strange that after twenty y you still cannot tell good coffee from b

"But I don't like coffee, Liang," she jected.

"That has nothing to do with it."

She sighed. She must prepare to bear her own shoulders the brunt of her husba displeasure. She brooded in silence, her downcast, while he finished his scram eggs, broiled kidneys and the bad co munching as she did so a piece of toast. munching next annoyed Liang. He loo at her and compared her large, somew flabby face with Violet Sung's exquisite

"What a noise you are making with toast!" he exclaimed. "It sounds like a crushing grain."

She stopped and looked at him acros table.

"Swallow it," he said violently.

She held her handkerchief before her and swallowed. The bit of toast she had holding in her hand ready for the next she put down. She sat neither eatin speaking until he had finished his brea and, rising, went with dignity to his s and closed the door.

Behind his closed study door Doctor L sat moodily staring out the window. No in his philosophy prepared him for wha now happened. He did not know what t Louise had become no longer important that she had chosen to defy him and n an American. Neither was the man in tant. He could, for his own part, liv though neither of them existed. They c come here and pay their respects an would greet them carelessly, as though n ing mattered. Children were disappoin One produced them and cared for them paid huge sums in school fees and then did what they liked. It was America spoiled them. In the old China childre mained subject to their parents as long a elders lived. For this they were recomp by becoming elders in their turn. That C he knew, was gone. It was already pa when he himself was young, when he insisted that he would not have an illit girl for his wife. But he believed that th wise ways would return. A nation tha not organize its generations in proper tionship was doomed to disintegration

All this did not help him at the mo The important thing, he discovered aft had sorted his thoughts, was what the erston family were like. Were they e mediocre? Should he approach them or s he wait for them to approach him? He answer none of these questions, and his he knew, would not even understand w asked them. It would be her nature t over at once to see the man's family a on a footing of immediate and absurd f liness which might involve him later sorts of obligations unsuitable to his pos If they proved to be poor and crude, f ample, they might even seize the c to be connected with a famous man, t a Chinese.

In his indecision he took up the re of the telephone and dialed the numb Violet Sung's apartment. He waited moment and then heard her voice rather drowsy. "Yes?"

"Violet?" he said very softly. "I forgive me for calling you so early. have had bad news. I need you."

"Tell me," she said with the warm her voice which was so charming to hi

"My youngest daughter has unexpe married an American. The letter cam morning. His family, unfortunately pe is here in New York."

"How strange," she murmured.

"Yes, so I feel it," he agreed. "N must have your advice. What shall I

Chase him away with new double-action VANiSH. Cleans quickly... leaves your bathroom fresh and sweet. Buy new VANiSH in the big blue can and you'll never be "old-fashioned" again... you'll go modern with new VANiSH!

New VANISH KILLS TOILET ODORS AS IT CLEANS

ouble Your Money Back Guarantee double-action VANiSH doesn't all we say it will, return partly used can to us. We will refund double the money you paid.

SON DUNAWAY CORPORATION, Dover, New Hampshire

Now create many lovely and unusual things like the distinctive pansy coaster shown—made by embedding real pansies in Castolite—the "magic" liquid casting plastic. Comes crystal clear, or may be dyed to produce gorgeous color effects. Make really different jewelry, book ends, picture frames, candle sticks, figurines. Embed real flowers, butterflies, coins, medals, photos, for novel plaques, paper weights, tiles, other arts and crafts. Use only home utensils. Follow simple step by step method. New pleasure, fine profits are possible. Send 25c for exciting new Home Project Manual showing how to get started. Write today. The Castolite Company, Dept. A-21, Box 391, Woodstock, Illinois.

LEARN AT HOME TO BE A PRACTICAL NURSE

You can learn practical nursing at home in spare time. Course endorsed by physicians. Thousands of graduates.

HIGH SCHOOL NOT REQUIRED

50th year. One graduate has charge of 10-bed hospital. Another saved $400 while learning. Equipment included. Men, women, 18 to 60. Easy tuition payments. Trial plan.

CHICAGO SCHOOL OF NURSING
Dept. 281, 41 East Pearson Street, Chicago 11, Ill.
Please send free booklet and 16 sample lesson pages.
Name_____
City_____ State_____ Age_____

She hesitated a moment, then she repeated his question. "What shall you do? But what can you do if they are already married?"

"Yes, that I know," he said a trifle impatiently. "But how shall I behave with the family? How can I know what they are and how they will feel? Doubtless they know too now, and perhaps they will be expecting me to—or ought I to wait for them?"

"Where do they live?" Violet asked.

He gave the mediocre address and she considered it thoughtfully and so long that he asked rather piteously, "Can you suggest anything?"

"I will go to see them," she said at last. "I will call upon them, saying that I am a friend of your family."

He was relieved and deeply grateful, for it was in excellent Chinese tradition—a go-between, so to speak, someone who would break the blow of compulsory acquaintance.

"Who but you ——" he murmured, breaking his sentence there. Who but you would be so kind, so beautiful, so understanding—any of these things could be said. But he preferred not to be explicit.

She laughed a soft, wistful laugh. "I am really not much use in the world," she said. "I'd like to be of use to you."

"Of such use," he said gravely, "that I cannot live without you."

The house felt empty after Louise had left it. While she was there each separate member of the family had felt her discontented presence and each had tried to please her in some small way, to make her smile at least for the moment. Now there was no more need for such effort. When the four came home at their various times, they could go their own ways, give greeting or not, and they had no duty to a lonely little sister.

That Louise was gone made only one of the reasons for restlessness through the winter that now came upon the city. The old landlord, who had during those months kept prudently to his promise not to ask for the rent in advance, forgot himself in his need and became troublesome to them. The manservant had come to young Wang and had put to him the matter of money.

"My old lord and mistress are very poor indeed," he told Wang. "It would be a good deed if your master were to forget the signed paper and give him the month's rent in advance."

When Chen came home—and it was a cold, bitter, dry night at the end of the year—James told him what the landlord asked, and Chen grew angry. "We had better move away," he said. "Once these old opium lovers swallow down their shame and begin to beg we shall have no peace."

Listening to this, James now decided to speak what was in his mind. He looked around at them all. It was winter, and to save themselves they had put on padded Chinese garments. Only thus could the intense cold of the house be borne. Here in the middle room which they all shared, there was the foreign stove which they had found at the Thieves' Market, a little one which blazed red when coal was put into it, and turned cold soon after. This room was the only place which held any heat except the kitchen. And there the grass-and-reed fuel gave only a quick warmth that passed even sooner. Padded cotton shoes on their feet kept them from frostbite. They looked no whit different from the people on the streets.

"The time has come, I think, for us to move to the village." James said. "I know we thought of spring. But the cost of food and fuel will soon be beyond us. We cannot be worse off there than we will be here."

Money was indeed becoming worthless this winter. There was no true money. What the people used were basketfuls of paper printed in America with Chinese letters and figures, signifying gold and silver that did not exist. All that James and Mary and Chen could earn barely paid for their food and rent and fuel, besides wages to the ones who cared for them. There was nothing left for clothing or pleasure. And soon, as the paper stuff grew more abundant and the figures were printed higher, even this would not be enough.

"Why should we wait for spring?" Mary exclaimed. "There is food in the village, and there is plenty of room. I want to go now."

James turned to Peter. "What do you say, brother?" he asked.

To his surprise, Peter lifted his head, which so often he held down as though he were thinking of something secret and far from them all. "I am ready to go," he said. "I shall be glad to get away from here, at least."

Chen slapped his two hands on the table. "It is all folly," he declared, "but I will follow you three fools." They laughed and the thing was decided.

Yet so large a move could not be done in a day. First Uncle Tao must be written to, and then the hospital must be told of their decision to leave. Thus it was not until early February that they ate their last meal in the city house, mounted their hired mules and began the long ride southwest to the ancestral village.

"Robberies, shootings, stabbings—you should have the children for a day!"

Your OLD RUGS
CARPETS, CLOTHING
Save up to ½

It's All So Easy! Write today for big Free Olson Rug Catalog (and Decorating Guide) that tells how your materials are picked up at your door and shipped at our expense to the Olson Rug Factory, where . . .

By the Olson Process we sterilize, shred, merge materials of all kinds—reclaim the valuable wools, etc., then bleach, picker, card, spin, redye and weave lovely, deep-textured in rug sizes for all needs up to 16 feet seamless, and any length, in:

New Two-Sided BROADLOOM

Solid Colors — Florals
Two-tones — Ovals
Tweeds — Leaf
Early American and Oriental Designs

We Guarantee to please, or pay for your materials. Over 2 million customers. We do not sell thru stores or agents.

Celebrating Our 75th Year!

FREE RUG BOOK

Write for beautiful Olson Rug Catalog & Decorating Guide in full colors—26 model rooms—full information.

Chicago New York San Francisco

MAIL COUPON OR 1¢ POST CARD TO-DAY

OLSON RUG CO. N-33, CHICAGO 41, ILL.

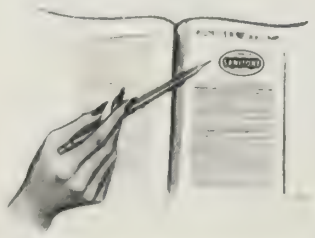
Please mail Free Olson Catalog of rugs, decorating helps, model rooms in colors:

Name_____
Address_____
Town_____ State_____

© ORC. 1948

This is one New Year's resolution I'm going to keep. For there is no other dry cleaning like wonderful Sanitone dry cleaning. Why don't you, too, resolve to get more for your money? By every comparison, Sanitone cleaning is better dry cleaning!

—more dirt removed!



—spots are gone!

—odorless!

—holds press longer!

—costs no more than ordinary dry cleaning!

This sign identifies your Sanitone cleaner. It is your Seal of Satisfaction. Look for it in your local classified telephone directory. Call your Sanitone cleaner today!

SANITONE

DRY CLEANING SERVICE

Sanitone is a division of Emery Industries, Inc., Cincinnati 2, Ohio

The air was pure and dry as desert air, and the sun shone through it as through glass. The landscape sparkled with light and distance was shortened and the rim of the earth seemed near. On this day the houses were clear and the people no less clear in blue and gray and flicks of red. The very brown of their skins was rich and lively.

As the sun rose higher, the spirits of the riders rose too. They were young, they had set forth on adventure, they had cut themselves clean from all that had been before. James was deep in thought. His mind was already in the village. He must begin small. For a month or so he would seem to do nothing. Then he would heal a sick child, and then a few more, and then he would find a room for a clinic and this room could become two and three until in a simple way it was a small hospital.

In the same small quiet way must Mary begin her school. Nothing must be done with noise or fanfare. They were only Liangs coming home to their kinfolk. Chen was their friend. Chen would advise and keep the accounts. He would begin from the first to ask a little money for medicine. He had brought with him a little dispensary, loaded in boxes upon the backs of two mules, and Mary had brought some schoolbooks.

He repeated to himself like a song, like a ritual, like the rhythm of his heartbeat, that he must go slowly each day and win his way. The dream was a hospital; not a great foreign building, but low, the walls of earth and the roof of common tiles, so that when the sick came in it would not frighten them. What had seemed impossible in the city now became plain to him.

"It is well enough for you two," Chen was grumbling to Mary; "you and Jim know what you will do. But I am here for nothing. This is all folly, I tell you. I am the son of a villager and I know that village people cannot be changed unless you catch them young and drag them away. They like their faces dirty and they do not want to bathe themselves."

"We will change all that," Mary said briskly.

"Ah," Chen said sagely, "do not think that you will do all the changing! They will also change you."

So the day passed. They rode steadily except for stopping for the noon meal and again at sunset. It was well on to midnight before they came near to the ancestral village. The gate was locked and young Wang beat upon it with a loose brick he found and raised such a clatter that every dog inside the walls snarled and bayed his belly out. This woke the watchman, who looked out with terror shining on his face in the light of the paper lantern he held. Who but bandits and communists would come to a village at midnight?

"We are of the Liang family," James called to him. "Do you remember us? Look at my face!"

The watchman stared. "Eh, you bring too many with you."

"My sister, who came before, my younger brother, my friend and our serving man. The rest are muleteers," James replied.

"The inn cannot hold all these muleteers."

Young Wang came forward at this moment. His hand came out clenched about a roll of bills and he went close to the gate and somehow the money met the watchman's hand and after a moment the gate swung open. Thus they went in single file down the street and so came to the ancestral house. The middle son of Uncle Tao slid back a little panel and looked out.

"It is I, Cousin Brother," James said.

The gate was thrown wide then, and the cousin stood holding his robes about him. "Come in," he said. "Welcome, even at this hour. We knew you were coming one day or another, and we have been expecting you."

It was a pleasant welcome and they all came in while the cousin ran to wake the women. Millet soup was heated, water was boiled for tea and in the middle room all gathered to eat and drink, each feeling somewhat shy because of the new life ahead. Kinfolk they were, and yet they were strangers, too, now that they were to live together under the same roof.

All tiptoed as they passed Uncle Tao's room until they heard his great rumbling cough and then they paused and looked at one another.

"Can it be he has been awake this whole time?" the eldest kinswoman whispered.

For answer there came a second great rumbling cough from Uncle Tao. After a long few minutes of waiting they crept on, each to his bed.

Uncle Tao lay listening to their footsteps. He knew very well what had happened. The first dog had wakened him. Mischief made him cough when he heard them pass his door. Let them know that he was awake and would not get up!

A pleasant home, Violet Sung told herself, a pleasant woman, this mother of Alec Wetherston, and Louise was lucky. "Doctor and Mrs. Liang will be pleased when I tell them how you feel," she said in her sweet, deep voice. With her instinctive gift she appeared a gentle, somewhat simple-hearted young woman before this gentle and very simplehearted older woman. "You can understand that they have been a little troubled at such a quick marriage. Not everyone would be so generous as you have been. We Chinese pay great heed to the mother-in-law. Therefore it was natural that I should offer, on behalf of my friends, to come and see you first."

Mrs. Wetherston looked troubled. "I do hope," she said with pathetic emphasis "nobody will think of me as a mother-in-law!"

Violet smiled. "To us a mother-in-law is a revered figure. A son honors his mother and the son's wife must both honor and obey.'

"Oh, I don't want to be obeyed!" Mrs. Wetherston exclaimed. The mother of five children, of whom Alec was the youngest, she had already eight grandchildren. "I've always said that I would love the people my children married and I intend to love Louise.' She paused and her good, wrinkled face blushed a dull pink. "What really grieves me is that my boy didn't tell me about the other one—the first wife, who died, you know—the baby's mother. I can't understand——" Her lips trembled, and Violet, who comprehended all men, hastened to comfort the mother who could never believe that her son were only men.

"A first love is sometimes very deep," she said.

"There was even a child."

Violet felt danger about her. The innocence of American women was frightening and she could not disturb it. "I am sure you

What Will Your Dime Buy?

THE need for funds to fight polio is greater than ever before. Here's why:

1. There are more polio patients to be cared for. The 1948 toll is estimated at 20,000 new cases.

2. The cost of polio care has risen. Hospital costs have gone up 30 per cent since 1946.

3. Large-scale research must begin immediately. A preventive vaccine, as well as a drug or compound to arrest the progress of the disease, has yet to be tried and proved.

JOIN THE 1949 MARCH OF DIMES

THE NATIONAL FOUNDATION FOR INFANTILE PARALYSIS

120 Broadway, New York, N. Y.

urpee Ostrich Plume ASTERS
GIANT fluffy flowers, so double the curled and interlaced petals remind you of ostrich plumes. Lovely colors—crimson, rose, blue, violet, white. Long stems, fine for bouquets. Wilt-resistant plants.
50c-Packet Seeds FREE
To get acquainted, we'll mail this big 50c-Pkt. of Aster Seeds free, and the new Burpee Seed Catalog. Send a penny postcard for postage.
W. ATLEE BURPEE CO.
412 Burpee Bldg. Philadelphia 32, Pa. OR 412 Burpee Bldg. Clinton, Iowa

AHLIA FLOWERED
NNIA COLLECTION
these huge, gorgeous, prolific etal zinnias. Order our special tion of 6 full-size packets, in a range of beautiful varieties olors. Special price 25¢
FOR FREE SEED BOOK
L. OLDS SEED CO.
PT. 50 MADISON 1, WIS.

Burpee GIANT SNAPDRAGONS
Special! 3 PACKETS 10¢
Rust-Resistant Real 75c value, the 3 best colors--Pink, Yellow, Red, a 25c-Pkt. of each! Exquisite spikes 2 to 3 ft. tall. All 3 Packets Seeds for Ten-Cent Dime Today! Burpee Seed Catalog FREE.
W. ATLEE BURPEE CO.
414 Burpee Building Philadelphia 32, Pa. OR 414 Burpee Building Clinton, Iowa

FREE NURSERY BOOK
FERRIS
80th ANNIVERSARY EDITION
Our finest catalog and guide in 80 years. ... FERRIS Northern Grown EVERGREENS, Shade Trees, Ornamentals, Flowers, Shrubs, Bulbs, Fruit Trees, Berry Plants; etc. Write—it's FREE!
EARL FERRIS NURSERY
675 Bridge St. Hampton, Iowa

ANT AGGY ASTERS
RED ★ WHITE ★ BLUE
3-15c Packets. One each: Hearts of France Red, Snowball White and Blue Gem. Gorgeous 5in. Blooms 2½ in. thick, on stately stems. Send 10c Today for these gorgeous asters and Big Seed, Plant and Nursery Catalog. FREE
R. H. SHUMWAY SEEDSMAN
BOX 549 ROCKFORD, ILLINOIS

RICAN VIOLETS
Large, healthy plants out of 3 inch pots. Blue Girl (Pat.), Lavender Lady, Pink Beauty (Pat.), White Lady (Pat.) each $1.25
Blue Girl Supreme, Blushing Maiden, Dorothy Wise, Dwarf Lavender Pink, Pink Beauty Supreme (Pat.) each $2.00
...orking and postage on orders less than $5. We pay postage ...ders over $5. Order today, send check or money order. ...) VIRDANS PLANT TONIC, $1.00 postpaid. Makes ... gals.
45 FARMS Box 123-L PHELPS, NEW YORK

REE FLOWER BOOK
Write today for free illustrated book—cultural directions, pronouncing index, germination table. 3000 varieties—old and new. Many rare kinds. Yours for the asking. Send a postcard today!
Geo. W. Park Seed Co., Greenwood 5, S. C.

Burpee Fluffy Ruffles GIANT PETUNIAS
Exquisitely ruffled and fringed ... up to 5in. across. All colors mixed. Send 10c for 50-Pkt. Seeds, Today! 25 PKT. 10¢
W. ATLEE BURPEE CO.
413 Burpee Bldg. Philadelphia 32, Pa. OR 413 Burpee Bldg. Clinton, Iowa

ARING AGE PLANTS & TREES
Write for FREE New Catalog. 40 pages of Bargains in fruit trees, Everbearing strawberries, Raspberries, Grapes, etc. State inspected, 90% guaranteed to grow. SOUTH MICHIGAN NURSERY
BOX 191, NEW BUFFALO, MICHIGAN

ughan's
ening Illustrated
...D with up-to-date gar- Instructions, this beau- ...ok pictures in full color ...est, loveliest flowers you can grow. Includes this year's introductions. 250 color plates. ...2500 varieties of roses, dahlias, annuals, perennials. Offers seeds, bulbs and accessories of ...much standard Vaughan's that supplied to the ...since 1870. Also seed holders, insecticides. ...or it today. Mailed FREE on request.
SPECIAL FOR 1949. Giant Scabiosa, a new type of this lovely flower. Blossoms are 3" spheres of broad-fringed petals in soft tones of coral, salmon, rose, blue. Packet of seed with catalog, 10c.
SEND FOR FREE CATALOG
...HAN'S SEED STORE
...111, 10 W. Randolph St., Chicago 1, Ill.
47 Barclay St., New York 7, N. Y.
...send me a FREE copy of your beautiful ... Enclosed is 10c for packet of New Giant ... seed.
Name
...ess

son will tell you everything when he comes," she said, pressing Mrs. Wetherston's plump hand. "Meanwhile it is good that Louise is Chinese, perhaps. She will look like the baby's mother, and if I were in your place, dear Mrs. Wetherston, I should just forget that she is not."

Mrs. Wetherston was comforted. When Violet Sung first came in she had been afraid of her because she was beautiful and well dressed, but now she saw that she was only a dear and charming girl, in spite of being Chinese.

"I hope that Louise will be like you," she said, clinging to Violet Sung's soft, ringed hand.

"She is much better than I am," Violet said, smiling. "Much younger, much prettier."

"But you are so understanding. You really aren't like a Chinese!"

These words, said so innocently, fell into Violet's heart like a dart thrown by a child. They made a little wound which she quickly concealed. "Good-by, dear Mrs. Wetherston," she said. "I will tell my friends how kind you are."

In the street again she took a passing cab and went directly to Doctor Liang's apartment. In the family distress Mrs. Liang had subdued her jealousy and now it was she who met Violet at the door.

"Come in, come in," she said warmly in English. "Tell us all about something." She pattered into the living room ahead of Violet and as she passed the closed door of the study she raised her voice. "Eh, Liang! Violet Sung got here."

THERE was no answering voice. Doctor Liang heard her and was displeased at the rude summons. He did not, therefore, move for some five minutes, then walked with slow dignity into the living room.

"Forgive me," he said to Violet. "I was just finishing a stop-short."

He had taught her the necessary qualities of the four-line poem thus named, and she smiled at him. "You must let me read it."

"Now, Liang," his wife broke in, "don't talk some poetry. Sit down. Miss Sung wants to tell us how is Wetherstons."

In her eagerness she was to Doctor Liang's perceptions more than usually vulgar. To quiet her, therefore, he sat down and prepared to listen.

Violet proceeded very gently. "You are fortunate. The home is a good one. It is not too rich, but there is money. The mother-in-law is kind, and she wishes to do well, but she believes that her sons are all good and great men, and Louise must learn the wisdom of agreeing with her."

Mrs. Liang cried out at this, "Our Louise? She cannot agree with anybody. What do you say, Liang?"

"Please go on, Miss Sung," he said.

Violet could not quite ignore Mrs. Liang. "If you will allow me, I can perhaps help Louise a little—I am so much older, and yet not so old as to be entirely of another generation."

"We would be grateful," Doctor Liang said in a stately voice.

Mrs. Liang looked from one to the other and, comprehending neither, remained silent.

Violet went on, "The mother-in-law, wanting to be kind and correct, is determined that she does not mind her daughter-in-law being Chinese. But in her heart she minds because it is something strange. I told her Louise was very American—is indeed by birth a citizen—and this comforts her somewhat but not wholly. She hopes to invite you to dinner."

Mrs. Liang brightened. "I like to go and see."

Doctor Liang rose. "Thank you very much, Miss Sung," he said formally. "You have done us a great service. Let us be glad that the family is respectable. It is useless to pretend, however, that I am pleased."

"Please wait," Violet said. "It may all turn out very well. I believe that blood and body difference do not matter if the minds and hearts are the same."

Congratulations, sir! Your bandaged beak is a badge of honor!

It's a symbol of service . . . a sure sign that you, like most of us these days, have been keeping your nose to the grindstone—working your hardest just to keep your family living the way you want them to live.

But what of the future? Your nose can't take it forever. Someday you'll want to retire, to follow the hobbies and take the trips and do the things that you've always dreamed of doing.

That's going to take just one thing—MONEY! And will you have it when you want it?

You will if you're buying U. S. Savings Bonds automatically—on the Payroll Savings Plan where you work, or on the Bond-A-Month Plan at your bank.

With either plan, you're heading for real financial security. Month after month, regularly as clockwork, your money is saved for you. All you have to do is sit back and watch the Bonds pile up.

It's just about the easiest, surest, fastest way of building financial security that anyone ever dreamed up. And with U. S. Savings Bonds, you make money while you save it. Every $75 Bond you buy today will be worth $100 in just 10 years!

Of course, you can always buy Bonds at any bank or post office. But the best way, the sure and steady way, is to buy 'em automatically!

Start doing it now! Keep on doing it! And in no time flat, you'll find that you're well on your way to a permanent separation of nose and grindstone!

AUTOMATIC SAVING IS SURE SAVING
—U.S. SAVINGS BONDS

Contributed by this magazine in co-operation with the Magazine Publishers of America as a public service.

Your face is your fortune cherish it with TUSSY RICH CREAM

Use this treasured formula every night. Its golden richness softens and refreshes the driest, tiredest skin. Smooth it on lavishly, massage with it, leave it on overnight. See how it helps little flaws and fatigue lines. See how Rich Cream coaxes your complexion to creamy smoothness. The emollient night cream with the golden touch—Tussy Rich Cream. $1, $1.75, $3 plus tax. With other Tussy preparations at fine cosmetic counters.

TUSSY rich cream

Mrs. Liang agreed to this with enthusiasm. "Miss Sung, you say true. I also! Liang, I am not like you. I will gladly see my daughter, and I am feeling nice to her husband. I say everything is not too bad."

Doctor Liang ignored this. He spoke only to Violet. "I suppose," he said with a slight smile, "that it is only natural for me to perceive certain superiorities. Will you forgive me if I go back now to my studies?" He bowed and walked out of the room, conscious that Violet was looking at him thoughtfully.

In the ancestral village the four sat talking. They had been here for nearly a month and under James' command had done nothing, apparently, except receive all who wished to come and see them. The first small signs of the northern spring had shown themselves. In the court a small bare lamay bush had begun to show buds of waxen yellow even before there was a leaf, and the brown buds on the plums were beginning to swell.

"I must begin to do something," Mary declared. As usual when they were together she spoke in English, and as usual James reproved her.

"Please, there is nothing we need hide, and if they hear us speaking a foreign language it makes them think us foreign."

"You are overcareful," Chen said lazily. "They know we speak English."

"I shall begin by teaching a few of our own Liang children," Mary said. "Then others will join us. And I shan't ask Uncle Tao."

"I think I shall not begin on our own family," James said thoughtfully. "And I will ask Uncle Tao."

Chen laughed. "We shall see how far each of you goes."

Peter had been listening and now he suddenly broke forth as though he could not contain what was in his thought. "You are all foolish. As if it matters what you do in one little village to a handful of people among so many millions!"

His angry young voice stilled them in the midst of their pleasure in the spring and in one another.

"What do you suggest?" Mary asked.

"It's all rotten," Peter cried. "Nothing will be any use except a clean sweep from top to bottom. The dirt—the disease—the stupidity!" He stared at them all in a sort of rage. "I shall never forgive pa as long as I live—letting us believe that everything was wonderful. No wonder he doesn't come back!"

"I suppose you wish you hadn't come back," Mary flung at him.

"I don't wish that. If this is the way things are I'd rather know it."

"Still you wish they weren't," Mary argued.

James intercepted these flying arrows. "We all wish that some things were different," he said. "It is like coming home from college and discovering that your parents can't read and write. But they are still your parents. We have to take our people as they are and change them as we can."

"They won't change," Peter muttered. "They've been like this for thousands of years."

"I suppose we have to prove to them that change would be better," James said.

"How can you prove anything to a lot of dolts?"

"WHAT else can you do?" Mary demanded.

Peter gave her a strange dark look. "There are other things."

They gazed at him with blank looks and he rose to his feet impetuously.

"Oh, I don't belong here and we all know it. The sooner I go back to the city the better it will be for us all. I can board at the college."

He went into his own room and shut the door. They were silent for a moment after this. Chen looked very grave. He sat on the high threshold of the door, his hands clasped about his knees, and he gazed out into the barren court surrounded by the low wall.

"The innocents!" he murmured. "We must pity them. But they are terrible in their innocence—and dangerous."

"What do you mean?" Mary asked.

"Peter is American," Chen said. "He h been brought up an innocent. He believ that anything can be done and done quickl You do it by force, either of money or arm What can the innocent understand of t long slow years, the thousands of year What can they know of the incorruptit people?"

"Are the people incorruptible?" Ma asked. Her voice was soft and wondering a not at all like Mary's voice, usually brisk a firm.

"There are corruptible men, but no c ruptible people."

"You give me hope," James said.

They talked long together that day. Th planned how they would begin, in what sm ways, with what few people. They would gin at once, tomorrow, Mary gathering children together, James setting up his sm clinic. They would let the people of the cestral village lead them, and as they the selves were led, they would lead again.

"And Peter?" Mary asked.

"Peter must do as he wills," James sa

IN Peking, spring came late and week af week cold winter nights still covered the c On one such night the sky clouded s after sunset and snow began to fall. M poets of ancient times had written po about snow falling upon the roofs of palaces, but today the palaces were em and poet and emperor were dust.

Peter, pressing his face against the sm dirty windowpane of his friend's room, the lamplight reflected only upon large snowflakes that tomorrow would make classrooms chill, the streets slippery. Her side this heatless room the temperature already freezing. Like most students, friend Chang Shan had contrived a s stove to boil hot water to drink, or at b for making a little tea. The hot wa poured into cheap pottery bowls, k their hands from being too chilblained writing, and the same hot water in t stomachs gave them momentary war within.

Peter looked at Chang Shan. He was a t very thin young man of twenty-two. Any could see that he had tuberculosis, as m of the students had.

James and Mary, he felt, would not this friend. Chang Shan was an absolut When anything was not good, he believe its total destruction. Thus he believed in the destruction of the old family syste the president of the university, of all capi ists, of the Chinese written language, of in tion, of the high cost of living, of the standard, of Confucianism, the classics the government. It was only a matter of t until Chang Shan would be caught by secret police and killed.

"You will not believe me when I tell that the place where my father live warmed in every corner, by pipes carr hot water," Peter said.

"It is a pity you do not return to father," Chang Shan said. He was readi badly printed book and he did not look

"I do not know why I cannot retu

"You are weakening again," Chang S said scornfully. "You have been wet-nu on Confucianism. You are, I suppose, superior man."

"You are too unjust," Peter said bitt

"I am most unjust, then, to mys Chang Shan now suddenly looked at window. When he saw the reflection of light upon the falling snowflakes, he go quickly. "The night is dark and even police will not be out," he announced. "I going to the bridge."

Chang Shan never asked anyone t with him to the bridge. He merely told a students that he was going. Usually b he reached the bridge two or three ot would follow him. They would work i lence, digging into the yellow clay, mak hole big enough for dynamite. If they had the pure dynamite that Americans u it would not have taken them so long. they had only the poor stuff left by the anese in a warehouse. The bridge was h Built centuries ago of marble and gra

© King Features Syndicate, All Rights Reserved

SINCE THEY WERE BABIES—
HE QUINTUPLETS always used this for coughs of
CHEST COLDS

Quintuplets have always relied on sterole to relieve coughs, sore throat aching muscles of colds. No other rub ny price gives faster relief! Musterole helps break up congestion.
n 3 strengths: Child's Mild Musterole, ular and Extra Strong for grown-ups.

MUSTEROLE ®

EYE-GENE
FELY Relieves TIRED, SMARTING
ES In SECONDS!
derful EYE-GENE! Just drops in your eyes that are or irritated from wind,
, overwork, lack of sleep
moke—will relieve, rest,
sh, clear them in seconds.
it every day. EYE-GENE e and gentle. 25¢, 60¢, and ye-dropper les at ggists.
st on
-GENE!

Dull morning look...

Snap back with dazzle!

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping
IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN
SATISFACTORY OR A REFUND OF MONEY

Cash's WOVEN NAMES
The Mark of Safety for Everything You Own
...$3.50
...$3.00
...$2.40
...$1.80
CASH'S HUGH NEEDHAM
fy distinctly. Protect positively. The red marking method for Home, School, Camp, Travel.
our dealer, Cash's So. Norwalk 4, Conn.

SPECIAL INTRODUCTORY OFFER...
80 DuPONT NYLON THREAD KIT
DIRECT-TO-YOU FROM MILL
Only $1.69
For All 12 Assorted Colors or 6 Black, 6 White
Amazingly strong DuPont NYLON. (#60) Practically unbreakable. Fine enough for delicate sewing, tatting, quilting. Keeps buttons on tight.
NO MONEY—Try at Our Risk. Send name, address, 12 assorted colors or 6 black, and 6 white. On arrival postman only $1.69 (2 kits, $3.29) plus C.O.D. postry 10 days—money back if not pleased. Cash en- we pay postage. Limited offer. WRITE TODAY.
LEEWARD PRODUCTS
K31A • 189 West Madison Street • Chicago 2, Illinois

SPARE HOURS BRING $$$
Sell EVERYDAY CARDS
Easy earnings showing smart Everyday Greeting Cards to friends, others. Fast-selling 14-card $1 Assortments of Birthday, Get-Well and other cards pay you up to 50c profit. Other assortments, retail 60c up. Stationery, Gift Wrappings. Send for a Sample Box on Approval. ACT NOW!
PHILLIPS CARD COMPANY
501 HUNT STREET NEWTON, MASS.

ERNITY DRESSES $2.98 n 80 square percale checks & prints
"Styled by Jonabelle"
SEND FOR Circular
HOUSE, Room 1188 Arcade Bldg., 812 Olive St., St Louis 1, Mo.

WOMEN! EARN MONEY SHOWING
FREE SAMPLE STOCKING and Amazing Fit Service
Mail coupon... ask for free outfit with sample stocking. Enjoy taking orders for Yours-Truly Nylon Hosiery. Sensational Individual Customer Fit Service to fit every type of leg: short, long, extra long, slim, stout, average. Earn money of your own. No experience needed. Mail coupon. Send letter about yourself.
AMERICAN HOSIERY MILLS
Dept. L-156, Indianapolis 7, Ind.
Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping
IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN
SATISFACTORY OR A REFUND OF MONEY
American Hosiery Mills, Dept. L-156, Indianapolis 7, Ind.
Send me FREE, Complete Selling Outfit with FREE Sample Yours-Truly Nylon Hosiery. Letter about myself enclosed.
NAME.....
ADDRESS.....
CITY..... STATE.....

it was as strong as the day it had been finished. But the students were planning to blow it up in protest.

In protest against what? They said in protest against their rulers. Actually it was in protest against their whole life, against their tuberculosis and their poverty and the miserable teaching they were given when they were hungry for true knowledge; in protest, too, against their wretched childhoods and against their own ambitions, never to be fulfilled. But the students did not know all this. They blamed only their rulers, who, they insisted, had sold the country to white imperialists.

Alone now in Chang Shan's room, Peter determined that he would not follow his friend. Yet he felt so lonely that he was terrified. He did not want to see his parents again. Neither did he want to see his American friends. He was impatient with James and Mary. The paltriness of what they planned, the folly of finding satisfaction in it! There was something splendid in Chang Shan's determination to destroy. Chang Shan was not a communist. They, too, he said, should be destroyed.

For sheer need to have something clear and definite, Peter now sat down at the table and began to write on a piece of paper.

"Our country is foul," so he wrote in English. "We must make it clean. Our country is rotten. We must ruthlessly cut away what is rotten and burn it up. A prairie wind, a prairie fire, that is what I see. After the fire the ashes, the clean ashes. Who will light this fire? It can be lit by a single match held in a human hand."

He sat a long time in thought and he kept seeing the flame blazing into a fire as wide as the world. Chang Shan was right. He rose, and catching up his padded coat from the bed, wrapped it about him and went out. He walked through the snow with his head bent that the wet might not creep down his collar and chill him. He felt his shoulder seized. He looked up and saw a fierce, wet face under a ragged felt hat.

"Are you going to the bridge?" a voice whispered in his ear.

When the secret police spy upon children playing under a bridge they dress themselves as common men, in ragged hats and dirty robes. These robes are better than smart uniforms, for there is room under the skirts for pistols and knives and ropes.

Peter nodded yes, and the next moment he felt a round, cold piece of metal at his temple. Upon a roar of thunder he felt himself lifted from the earth into heaven and then he knew no more.

"DEAR Mr. Liang," the president of the university wrote to James some weeks later. "For a number of days now your younger brother has not appeared in his classes. Neither has his roommate, Chang Shan. Unless you have further information, the name of your brother will be removed from the roll of this university."

Upon receiving this letter, James went at once to Peking. He called upon the proud and dignified president, who as a great scholar and a famous man received him with courtesy but without interest, and then he went to the little room and there he found some of Peter's clothes. The padded coat was gone, he saw, and this made him wonder whether Peter had run away with Chang Shan. On the other hand, his toothbrush was there, and his hairbrush and comb and such small things as are needful for daily life.

But a shabby student who had been hanging about the door now drew a bit of paper from his pocket. "This was found," he whispered. He could not read English and he had not dared to show the paper to anyone.

James saw Peter's handwriting and he took the paper and read it.

"Does it tell you anything?" the student asked.

"Nothing that I did not already know," James replied.

HE put the paper in his pocket, and after a few more such fruitless days he went back to the village with his miserable news.

"He will write to us," Mary insisted. "Wait—and we'll hear."

"Nevertheless, I should tell our parents," James said gravely.

But he did not tell them of the bit of paper upon which Peter had written the words of destruction. When the letter was gone James sat reading again and again those words, and slowly he began to believe that Peter was dead. But how and by whose hand?

Mrs. Liang took the Fifth Avenue bus downtown. The day was gray, but it neither rained nor snowed and she walked across town to Park Avenue and to the Wetherstons' home. She liked Mrs. Wetherston very much and the two had become good friends. True, she thought the American lady was too fussy about the baby, but this was natural since it was her own grandchild, though by an unknown woman. She herself was more interested in the child Louise would bear before the year was over. Mrs. Wetherston hoped this child would be a little girl, but Mrs. Liang wished for a boy. It was true that Alec was not her son, but it was nice to have a tall young man call her mother, and it could be said for the Americans that both mothers-in-law received attention, and not only the mother of the son, as in China.

Mrs. Wetherston opened the door and Mrs. Liang produced a small gardenia that she had bought on the street.

"You always bring me something. Is that a Chinese custom?"

"Only when we like," Mrs. Liang replied. She spoke in a loud voice in order to help Mrs. Wetherston to understand her English. "Suppose we don't like somebody better, we don't bring something else."

Mrs. Wetherston laughed. "Come in and sit down. I'll have some tea made."

"No, thank you." Mrs. Liang remembered Peter and the smile faded from her face. "I must talk to Louise, please, Mrs. Wetherston. I have bad news of my younger son. He is gone away, maybe dead, but I don't think so."

Mrs. Wetherston's look was instantly concerned. "Oh, my dear—dead? But I can't believe it."

"Who knows? I want to ask Louise how was Peter when she saw him before."

"Of course." Mrs. Wetherston tiptoed to a door and knocked. "Louise dear?" she called. She had grown fond of the young girl. She was lively and gay and yet docile. When Alec was not in the house she stayed alone in their rooms, but when she did join the family she was good-natured and talkative enough to give life to the home again. "You mustn't be afraid of me, dear," she had told

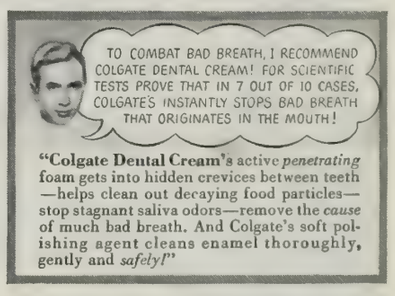
Song of Thanks

By Eleanor Graham Vance

For sunrise gold and sunset red,
For blue sky arching overhead,
We thank Thee, Heavenly Father.

For pickle-sour and sugar-sweet,
For all delicious things to eat,
We thank Thee, Heavenly Father.

For kittens, puppies, lambs and such,
For all soft, furry things to touch,
We thank Thee, Heavenly Father.



For singing girls and shouting boys,
For things that make a lovely noise,
We thank Thee, Heavenly Father.

For rain-washed dust along the street,
For lilacs smelling fresh and sweet,
We thank Thee, Heavenly Father.

It's All History—but No Dates!

"Colgate Dental Cream's active penetrating foam gets into hidden crevices between teeth —helps clean out decaying food particles—stop stagnant saliva odors—remove the cause of much bad breath. And Colgate's soft polishing agent cleans enamel thoroughly, gently and safely!"

LATER—Thanks to Colgate Dental Cream

COLGATE DENTAL CREAM
Cleans Your Breath While It Cleans Your Teeth!

Always use COLGATE DENTAL CREAM after you eat and before every date

Louise after the first few days. "And I don't want to be obeyed."

"I am not afraid," Louise had said sweetly, "and I like to obey you." No one knew how grateful she was to be in this kind house, where everything was clean and comfortable, and she could take a hot bath whenever she wanted it. She liked to sit in her room and Alec's and look around it and think, This is really my home. I belong here. I am American.

Now she heard Alec's mother's voice, even in her sleep. She slept a great deal so that when Alec came home she could stay awake as long as he liked.

"I am here," she called softly and opened the door and saw her own mother. "Why, ma!" she said.

"I shall leave you two alone," Mrs. Wetherston said, and went away.

Louise drew her mother into her room. "Ma, what is the matter? You've been crying."

Mrs. Liang began to cry again. "Peter," she sobbed.

Louise looked stricken. "Is he dead?"

"Why do you say that?"

"Oh, I don't know. Yes, I do know. Ma, he was unhappy."

"Why?"

"He hated everything there too much."

"Then why didn't he tell us and come back here?" Mrs. Liang asked.

"Ma, if you want the truth from me, it is this—Peter hated it but he wanted to stay too. He was afraid of pa."

"Afraid of him?" Mrs. Liang cried. "Why, when I am always there?"

"He blamed pa," Louise said. "Once when we talked together he told me pa had told lies about everything. He was angry and he was ashamed and it was all mixed up in him. He wanted to be proud of his country, and there were things to be proud of, he had thought, and so he began worrying when he couldn't find them." Louise looked thoughtfully at herself in a long mirror opposite the chair where she sat. "Maybe I would have been that way if I had been a boy instead of a girl."

Mrs. Liang rebelled at this. "You can't talk like that, Louise. Many women in our country do very much."

"I guess I'm American," Louise said. "Women here are taken care of."

"You are too selfish. What about poor Peter?"

LOUISE looked away from the mirror. "I just don't know what to say, ma. Students disappear, you know, if they do anything except their books. And Peter belonged to some clubs and things. He never brought his friends home—I don't know why."

Mrs. Liang's heart froze. She had heard stories whispered even at parties and dinners. Newcomers said —— "You think maybe Peter is ——"

"I just don't know, ma," Louise repeated. She saw her mother's face melt into weeping and she began to weep too.

The money which his father had sent James used to begin the search for his brother. Young Wang went with him everywhere. Shrewd and accustomed to getting what he wanted and using money freely since there was hunger everywhere, he was led to the palace gardens, not because of one dead lad or two, but because the old wells there had been used long ago for such things as death.

Then there came a day when a vender told of a gateman who told of a beggar who told of a night when he had heard voices muttering and whispering about a well. James spent all that his father had sent, but American money was true money and this fortune James offered the beggar in exchange for his brother's body.

He and young Wang went to the gardens on a dark night, and in the small cold hours, when the owls hoot in the trees, the beggars brought three water-soaked bodies and laid them under an ancient pine. James rose an took from his pocket the small flashlight h had brought with him from America, an this light he threw upon each dead lad. Th first he did not know, and the second he di not know. But the third was Peter.

No one in the whole city would have dare to bury these bodies, but under the ancie pine the earth was soft and rich. Your Wang had brought a spade and began to d swiftly. Soon he had made a bed, narrow bu wide enough for three and at the bottom lay upon the stout old roots of the tree.

THE beggars helped to lift the lads, a James stooped to hold his brother's hea Then young Wang covered them, and whe the earth was smooth he spread over the the deep pine needles which had fallen ye after year since the old Empress herself di and was buried.

Before dawn they were on their road aga to the ancestral village. James could n quickly enough be quit of the city. Upon t surface of his mind as he rode along t thought of such things as what to tell h parents and what to tell Uncle Tao. To h parents he would say that he had foun Peter dead and had given him burial. T Uncle Tao he would only say that Pet would not come back again. Beneath su surface thought he dwelt hour after ho upon the meaning of Peter's death and h it had come about and why. It would ta his lifetime to answer all he asked hims this day.

"Eh, you are back again," Uncle T rumbled, when he saw James come in. "I you find that young m chief?"

"Yes, I did," James sa and he tried to smile. " will not come back, Un Tao. I arranged everythi in the city."

"If he likes the city do not want him here Uncle Tao said. A lad ca running in now with t bacco and Uncle Tao to it in his hand, felt it and smelled it. "Wh do you want to do here, eh?"

"What would you like me to do, Un Tao?"

"Anything—anything," Uncle Tao sa He was feeling amiable tonight, having eat well. "That is," he said after a long draw smoke, "you are not to meddle with t land. You young ones who have been school, you cannot understand the land."

"There is only one thing I can do wh will be useful to you," James said w proper caution. "I see that many of our t ants look sickly. Surely they cannot d day's work. If you will allow me, I will to discover what their sickness is and I it."

Uncle Tao's small eyes half closed. " cutting!"

"Not without your permission."

"Well, well," Uncle Tao replied. "H will you begin?"

"With your permission I could take on the empty rooms and keep it as a medi room. I have a few medicines which brought with me when I came, and whe need more I can get them through the hospital. To that room the sick ones come."

Uncle Tao turned this over and over in mind. "What if you kill someone?"

"I will kill no one," James said.

Uncle Tao wagged his head. "You wo be blamed, and then I as your eldest relat would have to pay for it."

"Consider," James reminded him. "W a tenant declares himself sick and can work, then I will see if he is truly ill, or o pretending. Moreover, there are the childr It is a pity for children to waste away. A the women who die in childbirth."

"You cannot concern yourself w women," Uncle Tao said firmly.

"A doctor concerns himself with all hum life," James replied.

Thus coaxing and persuading, James Uncle Tao to the place where he agreed t James might use a room which had a doo

"I can't quite diagnose your case," said the doctor. "I think it must be drink."

"All right, doctor," replied the patient. "I'll come back when you're sober."

You Can Get
uick Relief From Tired Eyes
KE THIS SIMPLE TEST TODAY

TIRED? You can soothe and refresh them conds with two drops of safe, gentle ıe in each eye. You get—

K RELIEF. Instantly your eyes feel re-ed. Murine's scientific blend of seven in-ents cleanses and soothes eyes tired from ork or exposure to sun, wind and dust.

IURINE
R YOUR EYES

New!
ntiphlogistine
RUB A-535
FAST-ACTION RELIEF from the miseries of
HEST COLDS • SORE THROAT
OUGHS • ACHES and PAINS
ew fast-action Antiphlogistine Rub A-535 arts relieving discomforts of chest colds d muscular aches and pains the moment it rubbed in . . . and it rubs in fast. Almost once you feel warm, comforting relief as e pain-relieving medications take hold. In a national survey, 8 out of 10 families ote that Rub A-535 was better than any bs, liniments or balms formerly used. easeless, won't stain clothes.
AT ALL DRUGSTORES • GET IT TODAY.

Amazing New Plan!
DRESS for YOU FOR ORDERING 3 !
Thrilling new plan! Your choice of gorgeous new dress in your favorite style, size and color —given to you for sending orders for only 3 dresses for friends, neighbors or members of your family. THAT'S ALL . . . and your own dress is included without paying one cent.
FREE SAMPLES! Write for big Style Presentation showing scores of latest fashions with actual sample fabrics in wool, rayon, cotton dresses; lingerie, hosiery, children's wear, sportswear, suits, etc. No money needed.
EARN CASH TOO—Up to $22 in a Week IN SPARE TIME! You can get complete wardrobe and EARN CASH TOO . . . up to $22.00 in a week IN SPARE TIME—EASY! Write today.
ORD FROCKS, Dept. W-9012, Cincinnati 25, Ohio

N SPARE MOMENTS INTO SPARE CASH
show friends this wonderful line of greeting Sensational new 15-card Assortment sells for $1.00, pays up to 50c cash profit. Many other assortments retail 60c to $1.00. Also Personalized "Charmettes" Notes, Napkins, Floral Stationery, Gift Wrappings. SEND TODAY for Samples on approval.
ARTISTIC CARD CO., INC.
106 WAY STREET • ELMIRA, N. Y.

SEND FOR FREE BOOKLET!
BUY SHOECRAFT SALON SHOES DIRECT VIA MAIL!
TALL GALS FAMOUS FIFTH AVENUE SHOES IN SIZES 2½ to 13, WIDTHS AAAAA TO C. MONEY BACK GUARANTEE IF RETURNED UNWORN WITHIN 10 DAYS.
SEND PENNY POSTAL TODAY FOR FREE 24 PAGE BOOKLET L3. EXTRA EXTRA LONG NYLON HOSE NEWEST COLORS SIZES 11, 11½, 12—ONLY $1.95 PR.
Sheecraft Tall Gal's Fifth Avenue Shoes
503 Fifth Avenue, New York 17, N. Y.

its own to the street. He was weary indeed by the time Uncle Tao had reached his permission and so he rose to go, when Uncle Tao stayed him again.

"Now your sister ——" So he began and James sat down once more. "Your sister is one of those new ones." Uncle Tao laid aside his pipe, now grown cold. "She makes a disturbance in our village. Already I see my daughters-in-law are growing forward. The youngest one spoke to me the other day—such a thing has not happened before. I speak to command her, but I do not expect a reply."

James smiled at this. "What shall I do with my sister?"

"She should be married," Uncle Tao said in the same solemn voice. "Women who are not married go about cackling like hens who lay no eggs."

James did not reply to this. It would make a disturbance indeed if Uncle Tao stepped in to arrange a marriage for Mary! Yet this is what Uncle Tao now prepared to do.

"In this village," he said, "there is a very decent fellow who does not belong to the Liang blood. His father came here as a peddler and then settled himself as a tailor. The son is a tailor also. I will speak to the father."

James made haste to avert this catastrophe. "Uncle Tao, let me speak to my sister. If I fail I will come and tell you."

"Well, well," Uncle Tao granted him. "But let it not be too long."

The next day, after sleep so deep that he was ashamed of it, James began the clearing of the room Uncle Tao had given him. Plenty of help he had, for the place was full of children eager to see any new thing. These children he put to work so pleasantly that they thought it all a game, and thus were carried out old baskets of rubbish and broken furniture and rags and papers. James bought lime from the village store and he mixed it with water and brushed the walls and sprinkled the floor. The children stood amazed to see him do everything himself, for they were not used to their elders' so bestirring themselves. None had seen Uncle Tao so much as fetch his own pipe. When after this James bought boards and nails and put them into shelves, they were even somewhat ashamed of him.

By now all the ancestral Liangs wondered at these new Liangs and their friend Chen who had dropped upon them from the skies. Behind their backs, be sure, there was much talk about them, but the three went zealously about their business, full of faith that the ancestral village could become a place where all were clean and healthy and learned.

It was a healing thing they did, and the first to be healed were themselves. The spring came and went and summer spread over the land. Uncle Tao slept like a vast half-naked Buddha under the date tree, and at night the whole family moved their beds into the courts and slept there and the village street was lined with such beds. It was a gay season, for children ran about together and women gossiped and men sat late drinking hot water and tea and fanning themselves so that when they burst into sweat they were cooled. Day after day James rose early and let the sick come to him before the sun rose too hot. The fame of his healing spread over the countryside and people came to him from a long distance away and Chen helped him always, so that they worked together as closely as two hands.

The village was split in two by the time the mid-autumn festival came, and some were with the new Liangs and some were against, and those who were against were all for Uncle Tao and the old ways; it was known that Uncle Tao did not like so much learning in the village and Mary found her schoolroom half empty.

James was beginning to understand that sickness and health, that ignorance and learning, poverty and comfort, war and peace, sorrow and joy were all fruits of human confusion or of human wisdom. Here in this one small village set in a spreading countryside was the whole world.

Yet he could not discover how he was to do anything in the midst of such ignorance and

One Permanent Cost $15...the TONI only $2

Make your first New Year Resolution—a Toni Home Permanent! Yes, decide right now to give yourself a Toni and have lovelier, more natural-looking waves than ever before! But first you'll want to know:

Will TONI work on my hair?
Yes, Toni waves any kind of hair that takes a permanent—including gray, dyed, bleached or baby-fine hair.

Is it easy to do?
Amazingly easy. Instructions in each Toni kit show you how with simple step by step pictures. It's easy as rolling your hair up on curlers. No wonder more than 2 million women a month use Toni.

Will TONI save me time?
Toni puts half-a-day back in your life. For you give yourself a Toni wave right at home—and you are free to do whatever you like while the wave is "taking."

Will I go through that "frizzy-stage"?
Not with Toni. You'll have a frizz-free, natural-looking wave right from the start. For Toni is not a strong, hurry-up salon type solution. No, it's a gentle creme lotion which coaxes your hair into curls . . . leaves it soft as silk, with no kinkiness, no dried out brittleness, even on the first day.

How much will I save with TONI?
You save money not just once with Toni—but every time you give yourself a lovely Toni wave! For the Toni Kit with plastic curlers costs only $2. You can use the plastic curlers again and again. So, for your second Toni Wave, all you need is the Toni Refill Kit. It costs only $1 . . . yet there's no finer permanent at any price!

How long will my TONI Wave last?
Your Toni Wave is guaranteed to last as long as any $15 beauty shop permanent or your money back.

Which Twin has the TONI?
Attractive Frances and Bernadette Hanson live in New York City. Frances, the twin on the right, says! "I want a permanent that's soft and lovely right from the start. And that's just the kind of wave Toni is!" Bernadette says: "We're Toni Twins from now on."

NOW over ~~1~~ 2 million women a month use Toni

WANT $50 QUICK

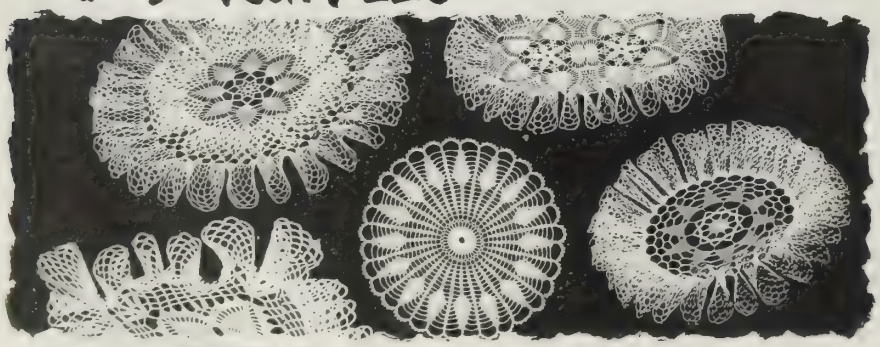
Easy to sell All Occasion Greeting Cards. Sell only 100 boxes — make $50. Complete line of Birthday, Easter, and Wraps. Also famous Lillian Grow Floral Notes. Call on friends, neighbors. All Occasion Box on approval. Sample name imprinted Personal Notes free.

HERTELART, 305 W. Adams St., Dept. A-2, Chicago 6, Ill.

FREE SAMPLE
Name Imprinted Personal Notes

YARN FREE SAMPLES and DIRECTIONS

All wool 2-3-4 ply Knitting Yarns. Rug Yarns. Unexcelled quality; lowest prices. Buy Direct—Save Money.

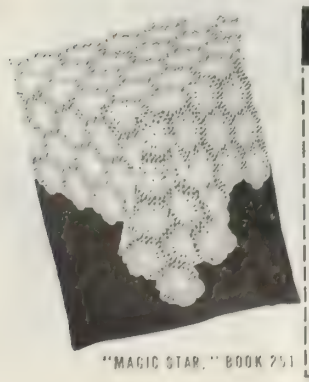


BARTLETT YARN MILLS, Box R, Harmony, Maine

For Quick Earnings SELL Everyday Cards

Fast profit-maker for you! Everybody buys these smart Everyday folders for Birthdays, "Get-Well", etc. 14 beauties, $1. You make fine profit. Other big value assrts. Write NOW for samples on approval.

Southern Greeting Card Co., Dept. B-21, 216 S. Pauline Street, Memphis, Tenn.



NEW! QUICK! EASY! RUFFLES AND PINEAPPLES

Make these RUFFLED Doilies at tiny cost 10¢ BOOK SHOWS HOW 12 exciting new doilies, including sensational "ruffles," in book No. 252. So quick, easy to crochet! Also 10 exquisite tablecloths—see "Magic Star" below. Wonderful edgings, chair sets, bedspreads . . . all in new 10 cent books. Get at art needlework counters, or mail coupon TODAY!

The Three Great Names in Sewing: J. & P. COATS, CLARK'S O.N.T. THREADS, CROWN D-A ZIPPER

"MAGIC STAR," BOOK 251

NEW! NEEDLEWORK BOOKS! JUST 10¢ EACH
MAIL COUPON TODAY!

The Spool Cotton Co., P. O. Box 1257, Newark 1, N. J.

Please send me the books checked, at 10¢ each. I enclose . . . .

- ☐ No. 252, Pineapple Pageant (Ruffles and Pineapples)
- ☐ No. 251, Tablecloths
- ☐ No. 244, Bedspreads
- ☐ No. 243, Potholders
- ☐ No. 242, Chair Sets
- ☐ No. 241, Learn to Crochet
- ☐ No. 236, Edgings
- ☐ No. 170, Learn How (Knit, Tat, Crochet, etc.)
- ☐ No. 234, Learn to Knit
- ☐ No. 245, Woolens for Babies (Knit, Crochet)
- ☐ No. 246, Sweaters 2-6 Yrs. (Knit)
- ☐ No. 247, Sweaters 8-16 Yrs. (Knit)

NAME . . . . . (Please Print)

ADDRESS . . . . .

CITY . . . . . ZONE . . . . . STATE . . . . .

stubbornness as the people had. Some were grateful for what he did, and when he saved a child for a mother, he was warmed for a moment by her joy. But while he could speak very kindly to the people who came to be healed or whom he met on village street or country road, he felt no link of flesh or spirit with them. He grew more solitary as the months passed, and this frightened him. Could there be no bond between himself and his own people?

In this state of mind he looked with new eyes at Mary and Chen. For a long time he had not talked with them except of the day's needs as they arose. Mary had moved her school outside the Liang house, and once it was outside these walls, others in the village dared to come to it, and her room was full again. Mothers sent their little sons to Mary, hoping that with learning these lads need not be only common farmers and muleteers and carriers.

Mary, therefore, was happy. James watched her and he could discover in her lively looks not one hint of any discontent. And Chen, too, was happy. Asking no profound questions of himself, he did the day's work well, and he it was who taught the village ironmonger to make a knife so keen of edge that it could lance a boil or cut out a surface ulcer.

One day in midwinter James discovered the cause of Chen's content. There was no warm place in this whole village for people to wash themselves. A bathhouse therefore became a dream of Chen's and he hired two men to come with their mallets and pound down earth into walls. He devised a stove in one corner and a pipe to carry hot water from a caldron to a great round wooden tub and a drain to carry the soiled water away into a ditch in the village street. The fame of this miracle went everywhere.

Chen took much pride in the bathhouse, and he explained to all who came how easily it had been made, how cheaply, and how any man who had a little energy to spare could make his family such a bathhouse. When women saw in what comfort their menfolk came home after a hot bath in winter, they went to Mary and asked why one should not be made for them, and so a bathhouse was made for the women, too, and thus bathing became the fashion, and the village felt itself as good as any city.

Uncle Tao would not bathe at all at first for fear of getting cold, and for fear, too, of seeming to yield to Mary, but when he saw how well his sons ate and how sweetly they slept when they were cleaned, he mustered up courage and one day before the new year he declared himself ready for a bath too. He decided that it should be at high noon o sunny day when there was no wind, and waited some ten days or so before he foun day good enough. Then he was anxious ab what he should eat, and James advised h to eat nothing until after the bath.

On the chosen day when the sun was h over the roofs, Uncle Tao allowed himsel be led into the bathhouse, and two tena helped him to undress and Chen saw to pouring of the water and James stood b help him get into the tub. At first Uncle was fearful that he had done a foolish th but while James and Chen scrubbed him with soap he began to feel better and g cheerful.

"To bathe is a good thing," he said, l ing about at them all from the tub. course it cannot be done quickly and lessly. Nor should it be done too often."

When he was clean he ate with g pleasure and then he slept and when he w he was so comfortable in all the mountai his being that he commanded his w household to be bathed, from his eldest down to the smallest grandchild. This ca much trouble, but Chen was well pleas

"Behold me!" he cried to James, pointed with his thumb to his breast have made a successful revolution."

How could Chen be so happy with small things? This James asked hin Chen was no small-minded man, neithe he dream small dreams. Sometimes whe two friends talked into the night Chen c for a while to make his jokes and then J saw him for what he was, a sober-mi large-thinking man, who was making far beyond the daily tasks.

"You keep me in heart," he said one evening to Chen. "When I grow weak think that perhaps Su and Peng and are right, and that these villagers are be our strength to help, when I fear tha centuries are stronger than we are, t think of you."

"Jim, I have something to say and not say it."

James looked up, surprised. "You have always spoken to each other Chen."

"Yes, but this is about something Chen swallowed, clenched his hands tog on his lap and plunged in. "I want to Mary."

"Eh?" James said stupidly.

"You heard me."

"But you are always laughing at James said, still stupidly. "And you q how often!"

"Married people always quarrel."

(Continued on Page 132)

"Doesn't she look nice now that her daughter is old enough to tell her just what to wear?"

How do you measure a bargain in towels?

BY price alone? Certainly not. If you're a good housekeeper and careful shopper, you know that a bargain in towels (or anything else, for that matter) depends just as much on satisfactory service and pride of ownership as on a low price tag.

Of course, you do look for savings. That's why you like to shop during January White Sales. But even in White Sales you look for quality first. You want towels you know will wear well, stay pretty . . . towels you'll be proud of for years. Chances are you look for Martex quality towels because you know you can always depend on the name Martex as your guarantee of the utmost in value—whatever grade towel you buy.

Yes, any towel with the famous Martex label has extra wear and extra service woven right into its thick, thirsty terry. And the colors stay lovely after years of wear and washing. So this January, when you shop during the White Sales be sure to ask for Martex! That's the surest way of getting a real "bargain" in towels.

P.S. You'll find one or more of the famous Martex designs pictured below at extremely attractive savings in your favorite store's White Sale.

Martex
REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.

THEY DO WEAR LONGER

Martex Towels—A product of WEST POINT MANUFACTURING COMPANY • WELLINGTON SEARS COMPANY • Selling Agents • 65 Worth Street, New York 13, N.Y.

A sagging abdomen slows your mind as well as your body!

LOSE THAT SAG IN A SPENCER!

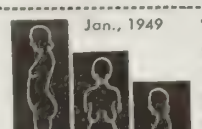
Your Spencer will give you a beautifully poised figure. Enjoy that liveliness of mind and body that adds sparkle to personality!

Your Spencer Body and Breast Supports will be individually designed, cut and made to meet your needs alone. Every Spencer is guaranteed never to lose its shape. A support that loses its shape loses its effectiveness.

Send Coupon for Free Information

Send coupon below for fascinating booklet or ask any dealer in Spencer Supports to show you how a Spencer can help you. Spencer dealers are expert, specially trained corsetieres. Look in telephone book under "Spencer corsetiere" or "Spencer Support Shop."

Also Surgical-Medical Supports



Thousands of doctors prescribe individually designed Spencer Supports as aid to their treatment of many abdominal, back or breast conditions. See your doctor.

In her Spencer Body and Breast Supports designed just for her.

Would You Like to Make Money

in a professional type of business? Experience not needed—we train you. Profitable—interesting. Check here ☐ for information.

Also made in Canada at Rock Island, Quebec.

Jan., 1949

TO: ANNE SPENCER SEND TODAY
Spencer, Incorporated
141 Derby Avenue, New Haven 7, Conn.

Please send your free booklet. I have marked my posture problem at left.

Name (Please print)

Street

City & State

SPENCER INDIVIDUALLY DESIGNED SUPPORTS ®
FOR ABDOMEN, BACK AND BREASTS

(Continued from Page 130)

"Ah, but Chen, you two do not act like people in love!"

"And have you been in love?"

How seldom James thought of Lili, how resolutely he had put her away, and yet now he remembered that love had wrapped him about in a dream. Mary and Chen did not walk in dreams. She was busy and brisk and she commanded Chen to do this and that and Chen laughed at her and sometimes he made a great show of obedience and sometimes he only laughed and did nothing, and when she flew at him he pretended terror. It was not at all what had been between him and Lili.

"I have been in love," James said gravely.

"Did she die?"

"She married someone else."

"What a fool she!" Chen exclaimed cheerfully. "Well, better luck for me, Jim. But the thing is—how can I tell Mary?" He sat with his legs spread wide, his face so rueful that James burst into laughter himself.

"You tell her everything else. Why can you not tell her this?"

But Chen was grave. "No, no, this is different. How do I know she thinks of me as I wish her to do? It may be that she will need a little education—you know, someone to say to her for instance, 'Eh, Mary, this Chen, who is such a rough joking fellow—at heart he is different. He is rather good. He is very faithful'—some such thing, Jim."

"Shall I say this to her for you?" James asked.

"Will you, good brother?" Chen said quietly. "That is what I want to ask."

"Why not? I will say that and much more."

Chen got up and looked through the court. "The light is still behind her window," he said. "Eh—how can I sleep now until I know?"

"But how will you sleep if she does not want you?"

This could not be answered. Chen was suddenly pale. "I must know," he said.

"Then I will ask her," James said, and he went to do it.

Mary was brushing her long, straight, black hair when she heard the knock on her door. She opened it and saw her brother.

"I want a few minutes with you, Mary."

"Come in," she said. "But what is it that can't wait until tomorrow?"

THEY were speaking in English, and somehow in this language he found it difficult to say what must be said, and he dropped back into Chinese. "I come for a strange thing."

"What is it?"

"I am a go-between, a marriage broker, and I bring an offer."

"Don't be silly!" she exclaimed.

"Is it silly? Perhaps it is," James replied. "For I told him to come to you himself, and he cannot. He is shy of you when it comes to love."

Did Mary know of what he was talking? He thought she did.

"Chen loves you, Mary," he said simply and he spoke these words in English.

She sat gazing at him, her cheeks pinker.

"And do you say nothing?" James asked.

"I am trying to find out how I feel," she said. "I think I . . . feel happy."

"Good. Take a little longer."

They waited and he saw her eyes drop to her small bare feet. "I didn't have time to put on my slippers. My feet are getting cold."

"Where are they? I'll find them for you."

"No, they're here, under the bed." She found the slippers and put them on.

"You ought to be careful on these earthen floors." James rose. "Well, shall I tell him that tomorrow you will tell him yourself?"

She raised her long straight lashes. "Yes," she whispered. She turned and picked up her brush again and he stood watching for an instant the dark mist of her hair.

"I want you to be happy, Mary," he said at last.

"I am always happy," she said with the look of sweet firmness which he knew so well, and he left her to go back to Chen.

MARY lay quietly in her bed. The moon shone outside and the room was not quite dark. She shut her eyes and thought of all the people she knew. Chen's face came first against the dark curtain of her eyelids. What she wanted the schoolroom made she had gone to Chen, not to James. They had worked but it had seemed like play. Chen made her laugh. Sometimes he made her angry, but then it felt good to be angry with him. She felt comfortable with him. She could be herself with him. What this being in love? I will ask him tomorrow, she thought.

Shopping List for Alison

By Marjorie Lederer Lee

What do we need for Alison?
Not a blanket, not a hat;
Not a bunting pink with bows,
Or woolen bootees for her toes;
She's got that.

What do we need for Alison?
A quiet voice and gentle ways?
Perhaps a robin round with song—
Or could you bring an emerald throng
Of summer days?

We need a love for Alison
To last the time when summer's gone;
And while you're shopping, just for fun
Ask for a star (a little one)
To wish upon!

It was not easy [illegible] a man and a woman to be alone in [illegible] ancestral villa[illegible] Tongues wagg[illegible] quickly, and it [illegible] taken for granted [illegible] man and woman w[illegible] interested only [illegible] their differing sex. [illegible] was necessary even [illegible] a new Liang to wo[illegible] while she talked w[illegible] a man. So Mary [illegible] next day in the afte[illegible] noon cleaned James[illegible] room while she talk[illegible] to Chen.

"Is this being [illegible] love?" she aske[illegible] when she had told hi[illegible] all she felt.

"If you are co[illegible] tent to be with m[illegible] it is enough to beg[illegible] with," Chen said jo[illegible] ously. "I cannot e[illegible] pect a good girl li[illegible] you, Mary, to beha[illegible] like a wild weste[illegible] woman."

"But you mu[illegible] promise to let me go on teaching."

"I promise," Chen said instantly. "M[illegible] than that, I insist upon it."

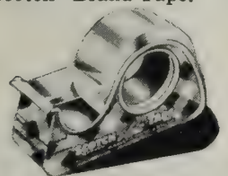
"I might want to stop," Mary said.

"I shall forbid it!" Chen exclaimed. [illegible] eyes were twinkling. Then he laughed. "Y[illegible] shall do exactly what you want to do, n[illegible] and forever," he said tenderly.

She stood looking at him doubtfully, a[illegible] so adorable was her face, the eyes so big a[illegible] black, her mouth so full and red, that he [illegible] distracted with happiness. He looked hast[illegible] about and saw no one in sight. Overco[illegible] with himself, he stepped forward impe[illegible] ously and took her in his arms, broom and [illegible] and kissed her exactly as he had seen su[illegible] things in American movies. Both [illegible] astounded at what he had done.

"Do you mind?" he asked humbly.

She stood transfixed, gazing at him a[illegible] clutching her broom in both hands. S[illegible] shook her head at his question and her ey[illegible] were entranced.



Doctor Liang felt relief at the news ab[illegible] Mary. There was pride in his relief, also, [illegible] until his daughters are married a father [illegible] an uneasy sense of duty not yet done. He h[illegible] never wholly reconciled himself to his Am[illegible] ican son-in-law and was openly glad th[illegible] Mary had chosen properly. He examined t[illegible] handwriting of Chen's letter, and said [illegible] Mrs. Liang:

"This fellow is not a scholar. Nevertheles[illegible] there is a certain rude strength in his st[illegible]

Tape it easy!

MEND BROKEN TOYS with clear, firm-holding "Scotch" Brand Tape.

REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

SCOTCH BRAND Cellulose TAPE

SEALS WITHOUT MOISTENING TRANSPARENT AS GLASS

Buy It At Your Favorite Store

Tips on everything from removing fingernail polish to mending window shades in our new booklet "Tape It Easy!" Send for your free copy today to Minnesota Mining & Mfg. Co., 937 Fauquier Ave., St. Paul 6, Minn.

©1948 3M CO.

E SAMPLES - 100% VIRGIN WOOL KNITTING YARNS

Quality all wool hand knitting yarns at direct-to-you LOW PRICES. Send for FREE samples.

IDSHIP HOUSE, Dept. 79, WINCHESTER, MASS.

In a Woman My Age Become a Hotel Hostess?

Even Though She Has No Previous Hotel Experience?

If you like to step into a well-paid position as or Club Hostess, Executive Housekeeper, ment Hotel Manager or Assistant Manager? d you like to be able to look forward happily to ture? The success of Lewis graduates from 18 to LOVES you can—though you never had a min- experience in hotel work.

Marion Prentice Wagner Secures Position Though Without Previous Hotel Experience

"At 50 I had to earn my own livelihood and decided to enroll in the Lewis School. Soon after graduation, the Lewis Employment Bureau placed me in a fine position. Now I am Executive Hostess of this beautiful hotel. Words can't express my gratitude to the Lewis Training that made possible this wonderful new career."

P INTO A WELL-PAID HOTEL POSITION

FREE Book Gives Fascinating Facts

REE Book, "Your Big Opportunity," explains ou can qualify for a well-paid position. It tells how re registered FREE of extra cost in the Lewis nal Placement Service; shows how you can be a Certified Employee—certified to "make good" placed in a position. Mail the coupon NOW!

rse approved for Veterans' Training.

S HOTEL TRAINING SCHOOL 33 SUCCESSFUL YEAR
, PA-524, Washington 7, D. C.

ne the Free Book, "Your Big Opportunity" with- bligation. I wish to know how to qualify for a aid position.

.....

.....

.....Zone....State.....

Check here if eligible under G.I. Bill of Rights

He has temper and power. I hope Mary will not quarrel with him immediately."

Mrs. Liang did not reply. She was absorbed in reading Mary's letter, which was written simply and plainly so that she might read it easily.

"Dear beloved ma," Mary had written. "Please forgive me for engaging myself without your or pa's knowledge. James will tell you how it all happened. Chen is his best friend and his family lives in the country as ours does. Ma, I wish you could come here for our wedding. There are many things I would like to ask you before I am a married woman."

At these words Mrs. Liang began to weep.

"What is the matter now?" Doctor Liang asked.

"Mary needs me," she said.

"What for?"

"You would not understand if I told you."

Doctor Liang looked dignified at this. "I am not stupid. I have what is considered a good mentality."

She continued to weep. "Liang," she said, "let us go back to the ancestral village just for our daughter's wedding."

He looked horrified. "After all these years?"

She said pleadingly, "There are things I should tell Mary."

Doctor Liang looked displeased. "Whatever you tell her can only be out of your experience with me," he said. "This will not help her at all with such a young man as has written this letter."

"I want to go home," she said stubbornly.

The upshot of all this was that a week or two of steady dejection on the part of Mrs. Liang wore him down to such a low point of resistance that he agreed to let her have her way. He was deeply wounded at the signs of joy which she showed upon this permission, and was comforted only when he had talked over the whole matter with Violet Sung.

They met now quite regularly two or three times a week, varying their meeting places, so that no gossip would arise about them. Each place was a small, quiet restaurant in some part of the city. The routine was the same. They ordered a meal, or perhaps only tea, and they sat long, talking about their thoughts and never about their lives.

On the day when he had finally given his permission to his wife, however, Violet, with her delicate, feeling instinct, perceived that he was unhappy.

"Wen Hua, why are you sad?" she asked him.

She was looking even more beautiful than usual. She wore a new frock of a dull black silk and a black coat lined with scarlet, and a small scarlet hat. He saw this added beauty across the small table between them.

"It is nothing," he replied, trying to smile.

"Of course it is something. You cannot deceive me."

He began therefore to talk. "I suppose I dread loneliness," he said very gently. "The mother of my children wishes to leave me for a while to return to our ancestral village. My elder daughter is to be married to a young Chinese doctor who is my son's friend. This is all good. But my work keeps me here. Yet I do not like to think of three months in my lonely house." He sighed. "Well, I know I am a friendless man. My children have left me. Now my wife, their mother, wants to leave me."

"She will come back," Violet reminded him.

"Of course—but still ——" He broke off. "It is a strange thing that one can live a lifetime with a woman without loving her, and yet ——"

"In a way you do love her," Violet said generously. "Wen Hua, you are so complex. I understand you better than you understand yourself."

"Then explain me to myself," he murmured. It was delightful to lean toward this lovely woman and hear himself explained.

"You are like the lotus," she said earnestly. "You need to plant your roots deep into the earth beneath the waters before you can flower and fruit. Your . . . the mother of your children has been your earth." Her exquisite face turned the palest of pearl pink. "I ought to be grateful to her, and I am. For it is I who have enjoyed the flower and the fruit."

He was much touched by this sweetness and generosity. "You always teach me something good," he said. "I will be generous too. I will let her go. But be kind to me. While she is gone let us see each other often, very often, Violet!"

"Yes," she murmured, "yes."

(To be Concluded)

ANYTHING BUT LOVE

(Continued from Page 37)

wanted to walk the six miles home, which he emphatically did not. He had tried to borrow a dime for the subway from one of the guests, but he had given it up after the third man he approached looked at him threateningly and fingered a knife stuck in his sash. There was no use endangering international relations.

A tug slid by on the river and hooted at him.

"That's right," Bill said aloud. "Go ahead and razz me. I'm past caring."

Behind him a voice inquired softly, "Are you speaking to me?"

He whirled so quickly that he almost knocked over a teakwood stand covered with tiny porcelain figurines. He was not built for whirling among porcelain, rather for pivoting and plunging among padded knees and cleats.

The girl noted this with a frankly admiring glance. She looked up and smiled appreciatively at his thick, sun-bleached hair and into his eyes that were especially blue against his sun-tanned skin.

"You are a typical American, are you not?" she said finally.

He said nothing. He had never been struck dumb by a girl before, and perhaps under different circumstances he would not have been so affected by this one. But to hear her speak the first familiar words he had heard for almost two hours, since Dwight had left the room, and then, in the grip of the blackest mood he could ever remember, to see her!

She was little, with a small, pointed face and dark, heavily fringed eyes that looked brown at first glance but turned out to be a deep, almost violet blue. Her hair was black and she wore it short and perfectly straight, with a bang across the forehead, like a child. Unlike the other women in the room, she was not dressed for a party. She had on an extremely simple white sport dress that set off the even, glowing apricot tan of her skin, and she wore no jewelry.

Bill stared at her, his heart thudding, and tried to figure out what she was. She spoke English without an accent, yet she emphasized her words a little oddly, in a way that seemed neither American nor British. He could tell nothing from her looks, because she looked nothing like any girl he had ever seen before. She looked, he thought, like a wood nymph—and the thought surprised him, for his mind did not generally run to anything so poetic as wood nymphs.

"Hello," he said at last weakly.

She laughed. He had read about tinkling laughs, but this was the first time he had ever actually heard one. "Hello," she said. "Are you one of the American delegates?"

"Me? Golly, no." All at once he felt better, more himself. He grinned. "Until you came along, I couldn't communicate with a person in this room, even by sign language. That's why I was talking to the boat."

"But there are many English-speaking people here."

He shrugged. "They certainly kept out of my way."

"Come, then." She held out her hand. "I will introduce you."

He took her hand, but he did not move. "Never mind," he said. "Introduce me to

There's Nothing Quite Like Alka-Seltzer for HEADACHES

ACID INDIGESTION DISCOMFORT OF COLDS MUSCULAR ACHES and PAINS

Next time you have a headache, take Alka-Seltzer for really fast relief! Remember, there is nothing quite like Alka-Seltzer. Here's why:

(1) Alka-Seltzer contains one of the world's most effective pain-relieving agents. (2) This pain-relieving agent is protected by valuable alkaline buffers for increased effectiveness. (3) Alka-Seltzer's fizzing effervescence speeds its pain-relieving action and so helps bring really fast, pleasant relief.

No wonder so many thousands are turning to Alka-Seltzer for relief of headache pains! Why don't you?

Sold at all drugstores, U. S. and Canada.

I'm a safety-first girl with Mum

Smart girl, not to let lovely snug-fitting wool become a trap for underarm odor. You stay nice to be near because your charm stays safe with Mum!

Even in winter, there's a heat wave under your arms. Odor can form without any noticeable moisture. And remember—a bath only washes away past perspiration, but Mum guards against future underarm odor.

Product of Bristol-Myers

Mum safer for charm

Mum safer for skin

Mum safer for clothes

Mum checks perspiration odor, protects your daintiness all day or all evening.

Because Mum contains no harsh or irritating ingredients. Snow-white Mum is gentle—harmless to skin.

No damaging ingredients in Mum to rot or discolor fine fabrics. Economical Mum doesn't dry out in the jar. Quick, easy to use, even after you're dressed.

you, and I'll introduce you to me, and let's let the other United Nations get together in their own way."

He could not remember how or when they got away from the party, but presently they were sitting on a bench in Central Park, watching the ducks sleeping on the lake. She told him her name was Faith, and wrinkled her nose in disgust.

"Such a solemn name, is it not? But my parents were missionaries. That explains it."

"Faith," he said. "It's a beautiful name. Missionaries? From what country?" He was conscious of talking jerkily, monotonously, as in a dream, but he could not seem to stop. "Where were you born, Faith?"

She laughed. "In Wahoo, Kansas," she said.

"In Wa—where? You mean here in this country? Kansas, U. S. A.?" He stared at her. "You're kidding. Golly, you don't even talk like an American. You couldn't have come from any such place as Wahoo, Kansas. I never heard of it."

"Did you ever hear of a place called Hunan? No? Well, you see there are many places of which you have not heard. Hunan is in the Orient, and I was raised there, from a tiny child, after my parents died in a hurricane. I have never been back here until a few weeks ago, when I secured a secretarial position with the United Nations." She spoke precisely, like a precocious little girl, but her mouth, forming the words, was soft and smiling. "Now I have introduced myself," she said.

"But you speak English. If you were raised in the Orient, and never came back ——"

She told him that her foster father had been educated in the United States and had always spoken only English to her. "He knew I should return to my own people someday," she said.

Bill understood, now, why she was so different, so fascinating. She was an American. She had the coloring, the bone structure of an American. Yet there was something quaint and faintly mysterious about her. Oriental—that was it.

"If I knew where Dwight was right now," he said ardently, "I'd find him and kiss him."

"Dwight?"

"He's the one who made me go to that party."

It took her a minute. Then she said, "Oh, I see." She looked at him anxiously. "You are not falling in love with me, are you?"

He grinned, his eyes crinkling up in a way that a good many girls had found irresistible from the time he was twelve. "One will get you two that I am," he said. "Why sound so worried? I'm a nice guy; my family's nice—none of us has ever been in jail since old Uncle Ed got himself hanged for piracy back in 1810; I work for one of the biggest firms of accountants in the city, and ten years from now it wouldn't surprise me if they made me a partner, in plenty time for us to save up to send the kids to college ——" He broke off because she was looking at him with disapproval, and that was the last way in the world he wanted her to look at him.

"You are joking, are you not? These are no things to joke about."

He took her hand. He was always taking her hand, on any pretext. It was a peculiarly satisfying experience.

"I'm not really joking," he said. "That's the American way—you'll get used to it. We do a lot of kidding to cover up, because we're embarrassed about our feelings." He looked at her, and he could see nothing at all about her that he would want to change. "I suppose it sounds crazy to you that I could be serious after knowing you only a couple of hours, but that's the way it is."

"My foster parents in Hunan did not know each other at all before they were married," she said. "They met for the first time at the altar."

"No kidding!" He laughed and shook his head. "I've heard about such things, but I never really believed them. What if they hadn't liked each other? What if they'd hated each other on sight?"

"They did," she said calmly, "but they soon changed. Their parents had selected them for each other with great care, so that as soon as they became better acquainted and realized how well matched they were, a deep affection grew between them."

She had slipped her fingers out of his and clasped her hands together in her lap, and she sat very straight on the edge of the bench looking at him with large, serious eyes. She reminded him of the first girl he had ever been in love with, back in high school, not because she was at all like that girl, but because she aroused the same sort of feeling in him, the same sort of fresh, reverent emotion.

"I HAVE no one to arrange a marriage for me," she said, "so I shall have to do it for myself. That is why I came back to the United States now, because it is time for me to marry and I wished to select an American."

Bill grinned and retrieved her hand. "Golly, Faith, honey," he said, "American girls don't go around admitting that they're out to snare a husband. They all are, you understand, but they never, never say so. The idea is to pretend that the guys have to run after the reluctant girls and use all kinds of strategy to get them." He patted her free hand. "However, you don't have to bother about all that. You've found your man."

She continued to regard him gravely. "I think perhaps I have," she said. "I had decided upon a typical American to offset some of my shortcomings in that direction, and I believe you are that. You are certainly a fine physical specimen. You seem to be most good-humored, and I believe your intelligence is sufficient to enliven the long evenings when we are old, without being so great as to find no meeting ground with mine. If what you say is true, you are financially sound." She nodded soberly. "Yes, if further investigation proves you to be all that you appear, I think you are precisely the man I am looking for."

His grin, which had started out as an appreciative acknowledgment of her humor, became a little uneasy, a little fixed, as she went on. "Say, honey, you're quite a kidder yourself," he said in a strained voice.

A faint line of bewilderment appeared on her smooth forehead. "Have I made a joke? I did not intend one." She turned to him anxiously. "Is it perhaps that you do not consider me a suitable wife, after all? If you are thinking of the difference in our backgrounds, it seems to me that would furnish certain zest. There would be so much we could tell each other, so many things to ——"

She looked so appealing, so in need of protection, that his uneasiness dissolved in a flood of tenderness. If she had been any other girl, he would have kissed her, very thoroughly and expertly, but he felt as he had about the girl in high school, and never again since: that he must protect Faith even against himself.

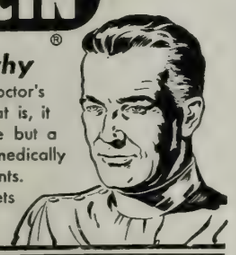
"I think you're wonderful," he said in a shaking voice, "and now I'm going to take you home. It's very late."

She lived at a women's club, not far from where they were. They walked there almost in silence, holding hands, and Bill knew he loved her because he was so happy with her that way, just walking, just holding hands. He did not think at all. It was like the blissful, floating sensation that comes right before sinking into sleep, except that he had never been so wide-awake.

"Good night, Faith," he said to her at the door. "It's been . . . terrific."

She looked frightened. "Terrific?"

"That's slang for . . . stupendous, marvelous, wonderful. Will you have lunch with me tomorrow? And dinner?"



WITH THE CHILDREN

"A wonderful feeling is to go barefooting."

"God is everywhere. He is even in our bathroom. I know because the other morning my daddy knocked on the bathroom door and said, 'My God, are you still in there?'"

"Some people ask to be teased without talking or being pesty. You just look at them and you feel you have to tease them to change their faces."

—KATHRYN COFFEY GLENNON.

PAIN
of headache, neuritis and neuralgia RELIEVED incredibly fast
the way thousands of physicians and dentists recommend—ANACIN®

Here's why
Anacin is like a doctor's prescription. That is, it contains not one but a combination of medically proved ingredients. Get Anacin Tablets today.

DAINTY BEAUTY CREAM DISPENSER for your favorite Face or Hand Cream
Keeps your favorite cream always ready for use. A light finger pressure brings up comes the cream in the exact amount you want. No waste, no fussing with lids or jars. Made of durable plastic. White, yellow, pink, green and blue.
At your favorite Dealer or Order Direct $1.00 Each Postpaid State Color
I-ODORAL, INC.
Corliss St., Pittsburgh 20, Pa.

ELECTRIFY
your SEWING MACHINE

COMPLETE MOTOR KIT $16.75
Postpaid except on C.O.D.'s
A Wonderful Gift for Any Woman
FITS ANY MAKE SEWING MACHINE EASILY ATTACHED IN SECONDS
ANYONE CAN DO IT
MONEY-BACK GUARANTY
Complete Universal AC-DC motor kit, 7-speed foot control, rheostat, steel pulley, round belt, cord set, motor bracket, simple instruction sheet. 1/10 H.P. 1/2 AMP. Sewing machine electric lamp valued at $2.75 given with every order at no extra charge.
STATE MAKE of machine and if handwheel turns to you or away from you.
SEWELL DISTRIBUTORS, Inc., Dept. 14
114 Canal Street · New York 13, N.Y.

Knitting Yarns BY MAIL
Cliveden offers you quality yarns of all types, in a large variety of colors — bright and gay, or soft and delicate—yarns to glorify your finished work.
WRITE FOR FREE SAMPLE CARD
and see for yourself before you order, the lovely texture of the yarns spun in our own mill. You'll find just what you want for infants' wear, sweaters, afghans, etc. Experienced knitters have chosen Cliveden yarns for over 40 years.
WRITE DEPT. E-1 CLIVEDEN YARNS 7TH ARCH ST. PHILA. 6, PA.

"Yes," she said. "I wish to see a great deal of you." She spoke with a certain crispness, not at all longingly. "Oh, and there is one more thing. I have only a very small dowry, for my foster parents lost a great deal in the war, but I plan to save most of my present wages, and this way ——"

He was halfway down the subway steps before he remembered that he still had no dime. He started to go back and ask Faith to lend him one, but he decided that would be a very unromantic way to end their first evening.

On the long, dreary walk across the park and up to 157th Street and Riverside Drive, he had plenty of time to think. Faith's face began to fade a little around 98th Street, and by the time he got into the 130's, he could no longer call up any of the feelings that had made him fool enough to walk rather than ask a girl for a dime.

What kind of girl was she, anyway, looking him over as though he were a prize bull she was considering buying? She had never, he remembered now, said a word about having any feeling for him, finding him attractive, even liking him. Her only mention of love had been when she had asked him in alarm whether he was falling in love with her. Why had the idea alarmed her if she was angling for him? She should have been tickled to death.

He tiptoed into his apartment finally at three-thirty in the morning, without waking his mother and father, and fell into bed. His last conscious thought was that he had better steer clear of that girl, Faith, because there was something funny about her and before he knew it he'd be involved in it. Maybe, he thought sleepily, before his thoughts broke apart into blackness, she was some kind of spy. . . .

He awoke with his heart hammering and the feeling that he was too late for something. He sat straight up in bed for an instant, staring at the clock with its hands bisecting the face. Twelve-thirty . . . twelve-thirty . . . lunch! With a leap that left the springs shuddering, he jumped up, ran out into the hall, and began thumbing wildly through the telephone book.

She was home. She answered the phone. "I have been waiting," she said. "I would have telephoned to you, but I wished to make sure that you were dependable about appointments." Her voice was even sweeter over the wire, soft and a little husky. He did not pay much attention to what she was saying.

"I didn't want to disturb you," he said. "Some people sleep so late on Sundays, and I thought I'd better wait. I'll be there in an hour, honey."

He rang off and sat there in his rumpled pajamas, gazing beatifically at his bare feet. It was a moment or two before he became aware of his surroundings and noticed that his mother and father were in the living room, watching him over the tops of the theater section and the magazine section respectively.

"Hello," he said. "That was Faith. I think I'm going to marry her."

"High time too," his father replied. "You must certainly have known her since last night, and here it is almost one o'clock the next day."

"What is she like, dear?" his mother asked, her eyes filling with tears of emotion. "Did you meet her at that U. N. party Dwight took you to?"

Bill contemplated his toes again, with the same rapture as before. "She's like no one I've ever met. Golly, she's wonderful."

"And does she think you're wonderful too?" his father wanted to know.

"Of course she does," his mother said complacently. "All girls think Bill is wonderful—why shouldn't they?"

Bill sprinted suddenly into his room and began dressing. As he dressed he talked loudly, a little breathlessly, through the partly open door.

"Faith's different," he said. "She has already pretty much decided to marry me, but not exactly because she thinks I'm wonderful—I mean she's not swooning over me or anything, yet. It's the way she's been brought up." He stretched his neck to button his collar, and his voice, though somewhat strangled,

Tonight!..Show him how much lovelier your hair can look...after a

Lustre-Creme Shampoo

NOT A SOAP!
NOT A LIQUID!
BUT KAY DAUMIT'S
RICH LATHERING
CREAM SHAMPOO
WITH LANOLIN
for Soft, Shimmering Glamorous Hair

4-oz. jar $1; smaller jars and tubes, 49¢ and 25¢.

No other shampoo gives you the same magical secret-blend lather plus kindly LANOLIN . . . for true hair beauty.

Tonight he can SEE new sheen in your hair, FEEL its caressable softness, THRILL to its glorious natural beauty. Yes, tonight . . . if you use Lustre-Creme Shampoo today!

Only Lustre-Creme has Kay Daumit's magic blend of secret ingredients plus gentle lanolin. This glamorizing shampoo lathers in hardest water. Leaves hair fragrantly clean, shining, free of loose dandruff and so soft, so manageable!

Famous hairdressers use and recommend it for shimmering beauty in all "hair-dos" and permanents. Beauty-wise women made it America's favorite cream shampoo. Try Lustre-Creme! The man in your life—and you—will love the loveliness results in your hair.

Kay Daumit, Inc. (Successor), 919 N. Michigan Ave., Chicago, Ill.

If you are over 25

Beware of Dry Skin

FROM ABOUT 25 ON—the natural oil that keeps skin soft and supple gradually decreases. Even before 40—a woman may lose as much as 20% of this oil skin needs.

Little signs warn when dry skin is creeping up on you. Watch for flaky spots—for tiny, dry lines. They say your skin needs more care—more oil.

Replacement help is at your fingertips with Pond's Dry Skin Cream. Three features make it extra softening. 1. Rich in lanolin—most like your own skin oil. 2. Homogenized to soak in better. 3. A softening emulsifier.

Arrests Dry Skin Two Ways:

Lanolin-Softens by Night—after your regular cleansing, smooth rich-in-lanolin Pond's Dry Skin Cream generously over face. Leave a few minutes, then wipe off lightly so a soft film is left to help your skin all night. Your dry skin seems to "drink up" this rich cream. See how tiny dry lines are smoothed so they don't show.

Lanolin-Protects by Day—smooth on a very light touch of Pond's Dry Skin Cream before you make up. Protects your skin against dryness all day. Keeps your skin soft, smooth looking.

Rafaelle, Duchess of Leinster says:

"Pond's Dry Skin Cream is perfect for softening"

Get this truly remarkable dry skin corrector—today! You'll find lanolin-rich Pond's Dry Skin Cream never leaves your skin sticky. Instead—it smooths on with a delicious softening feeling. Use this cream generously every day for a week. See if this isn't the finest help for correcting dry skin you've ever used. Get your jar of Pond's Dry Skin Cream today.

Dry Skin? This is the Answer went on. "For a while there last night I didn't like the idea, but in the light of day I see there's really nothing to it. She's already convinced that I'm an all-right guy. All I have to do now is make her fall in love with me, and everything will be fine. It's simple—I don't know why I was worrying."

"I don't either," his father called from the living room. "Why would you worry over anything as simple as that?"

"That's right, dear," his mother echoed. "Worrying will only put lines in your forehead." She added to his father, in one of her stage whispers that were louder than any shouting, "Explain it to me after he's gone, will you, dear?"

"Who do you think I am?" his father inquired. "Einstein?"

Bill took Faith to a place he knew in the Village. It was in a cellar and the lights were dim and there was a violinist in a gypsy costume who played all the time, except for brief intervals when he sat by himself at a corner table, sadly drinking coffee. Down there you couldn't tell whether it was Saturday night or Sunday morning, and Bill had had great success there with all sorts of girls at all hours of the day and night. If you tipped the violinist he would stand at your table and play something slow and romantic, and when he had finished the girl would turn and look at you meltingly.

After he had played for Bill and Faith, she did not turn at all. Bill could see only her profile, the cute tilt of her nose and the edge of her captivating mouth. But when she began to speak, he thought her voice shook a little.

"You will not be a partner in your firm in ten years—perhaps you will in fifteen," she said. "But that is all right. I am not used to a great deal of money and have no need of it. A pleasant disposition is much more important, and your friends all agree you have that. Also, it is nice that you like baseball, for I have enjoyed many games in the Orient and I am most anxious to see the Dodgers play."

"Hey!" Bill said, rising half out of his seat. "Where did you find out that I ——"

"WHILE I waited for you this morning, I telephoned to several people." She looked at him with wide, appealing eyes. "You do not mind?"

"Of course I —— No," he said, sinking giddily under that look. "No, I guess I don't mind. Only over here girls usually count on finding these things out gradually for themselves, as they get to know a fellow."

"But I cannot afford to waste the time," she said, "in case you are not suitable. I wish to be married early so that I can have five children and be still young with the last, and I am already nineteen years old." She smiled at him. "You have, I hope, no objection to five children?"

Bill sighed. "I have no objection to anything," he said hoarsely. "Heaven help me!"

He saw her every night that week. He took her dancing and to theater and concerts and for a ride on the Staten Island ferry. He sent her notes and flowers and exerted all the charm he had. By Saturday night he could not see that he had gained any ground at all—she still talked like a careful prospective purchaser and he still felt like a prize bull.

But Saturday night was suddenly different. From the moment he called for her at the club, he could sense the difference. She wore a new dress, something soft and clinging, and she had a misty, faraway look in her eyes.

"Hello, Bill," she said, and there was such warm eagerness in her voice that his heart turned over. "I am so glad to see you."

They went dancing on one of the roofs. She had only learned to dance on the ship coming over, but she was born for dancing. She followed him as though she had been doing these steps all her life, sweet and weightless in his arms.

"Golly, you're wonderful, honey," he murmured.

"You are wonderful too, Bill," she said softly. She shook her head a little, as though to clear it. "I do not know what is the matter with me. All day I have been feeling so strange." She smiled up at him hazily. "Hold me more tightly, please, Bill."

He complied, grinning happily. This was it. The good old personality and know-how had come through for him the way it always did. He shouldn't have doubted it for a minute. It couldn't have worked on all those girls who hadn't counted through the years, and then let him down with the one girl he really wanted. They could be married as soon as she was ready. Now that he was sure she wouldn't be marrying him just because his credentials were okay, there was nothing to stand in their way.

They left the roof and walked over to Central Park hand in hand and found the same bench they had sat on that first night. There was a new moon planted low in the sky and they sat and gazed at it in silence. He did not want to move too fast. He did not want to spoil anything. After a few minutes he put his arm around her, and he felt her tremble a little.

"It is a beautiful moon," she said huskily.

"It's you who are beautiful, Faith—golly!"

"I do not know what is the matter with me," she said again, and then without warning she flung herself against him and began crying wildly on his shoulder. "Oh, yes, I do know. I do," she sobbed. "I have tried to fool myself, but I cannot any longer. I love you. From the beginning I have loved you."

Women, he thought tenderly, are crazy. "It's all right, sweetheart," he said aloud. "It's wonderful. Because I've loved you from the beginning too." She only sobbed louder. "We'll be married as soon as you say," he told her. "Right away, if you want."

She shook her head violently. In a minute she sat up and blew her nose in his handkerchief. "No, Bill," she said sadly. "No, we can never be married now. It is all spoiled."

He stared at her. "Spoiled? Why? What are you talking about?"

"We love each other," she said heavily.

"Sure, I know. Isn't that wonderful?"

"No, it is not. It is terrible. Where I was brought up, when a man and a girl fall in love they are not permitted to see each other again. There is no one here to forbid me, so I must forbid myself. We shall not meet aga Bill."

Bill ran his fingers frantically through hair. "Look, honey," he said, "you'll have spell this out for me; I'm a little thick. love each other, so we don't meet again. that what you said?"

She nodded. "Oh, Bill, can you not s When two people fall in love they do know what they are doing—they have sense, no judgment—it is as though they w not right in their heads. Where I have co from, people in this state are not permit to make such an important decision as to married, for they are not competent." sat up, away from his arm. "I have been c vincing myself that you are exactly the n I have been looking for, but how can I kn if it is true when I am crazy with love you?"

Bill took in little gulps of air. Now ev thing has happened to me, he thought. A is turning me down because she loves me.

"Faith, listen," he said gently. "You not in the Orient now. This is Amer Here ——"

"Yes, I know," she said. "Here the peo marry when they are crazy with love, and soon as they become sane again they fi and are unhappy and leave each other. I not want such a marriage."

HE argued with her for an hour with budging her. He talked until his throat dry. Toward the end, he began literally p ing out his hair. And then finally he got idea. If she could see a young American c ple, in love and happy, maybe she w change her mind. If she saw how swell it c be —— But what couple could he scare u the last minute like this? She was not g to let him see her after tonight. He had t something right away, now.

"Dwight!" he said suddenly, out l "Dwight and Ella! They'll be home—the just the ones. Golly, come on, honey, w going visiting."

"But Bill, I do not wish to ——"

He gave her what he hoped was a br and tragic smile. "Surely you can humor in this small thing, Faith, since you breaking my heart."

He stopped in a phone booth on the and gave Dwight a rapid briefing. "L I'm in love with a girl who won't marry because she's in love with me, so I'm brin her over to prove that it works out all ri so you and Ella act just as loving and ha as you can, will you? And you can fo about that ten bucks you owe me."

Dwight assured him that had already forgotten about ten bucks and that Bill was of his head and Dwight di know what he was talking ab "But bring her over, by means," he said. "Any gi yours is a girl of mine."

Bill went on with some givings. Maybe this was such a good idea after Dwight and Ella were c about each other, had ever since their high-sc days, but you had to unders them. If you were brought u the Orient, it was possible you might not understand t at all. However, he had n ing to lose.

"You'll like these peop Bill said, as he rang the be their apartment. "I've kn them both for years, and the been in love with each o ever since I've known th Blissfully happy too."

She said nothing, only sig a little, and the sound tou him so that he began to p Let them act all right, let them it over, let it work.

Dwight and Ella came to door beaming, their arms aro each other, and Bill's h lifted. Good old Dwight! might have known that a

(Continued on Page 138)

"Now are you convinced I'm not too good for you?"

Textron's romantic midriff slip rich with Alençon-type lace. About 4.00.

Mantilla Beauty in your own Dress Size

Romantic as a mantilla, exciting as a flirting fan . . . Textron's newest dress-sized slip with the lacy bodice trimming. Of finest rayon crepe, soft as a moonlight serenade and sized just like your dresses at bust, waist and hips for dream-world fit. Mystery Black, Snow White or Pink Angel in dress sizes 12 to 20. At leading stores throughout the country.

TEXTRON INC., Textron Building, 401 Fifth Avenue, New York 16, N. Y.

TEXTRON

REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

USES • HOSTESS COATS • MENSWEAR • TRICOT LINGERIE • WOVEN LINGERIE

DISCRIMINATING PEOPLE PREFER

HERBERT TAREYTON

MRS. WILLIAM E. BENJAMIN II, beautiful young society matron, is noted for her discriminating taste in dress . . . is equally discriminating in her choice of cigarettes.

Discriminating people prefer Herbert Tareyton because they appreciate the kind of smoking that only a cork tip can give. The cork tip doesn't stick to the lips . . . it's clean and firm. And discriminating people prefer Herbert Tareyton because their modern size not only means a longer, cooler smoke, but that extra measure of fine tobacco makes Herbert Tareyton today's most unusual cigarette value.

THERE'S SOMETHING ABOUT THEM YOU'LL LIKE

Copr., The American Tobacco Company

(Continued from Page 136)

who could talk nine languages would get the idea.

"Well, hello," they said in unison. "Do come in."

Bill made the introductions, and Faith said, "We are not intruding? It is late for a call."

"Not at all," Ella said. She looked adoringly at Dwight. "We have so much to say to each other that we stay up till all hours and just never seem to have enough time together."

They made a handsome couple. Dwight was dark and impressive and looked like the young ambassador he was always pretending to be, and Ella was slim and fair with a shrewd, high-cheekboned, attractive face. She took Bill into the kitchen and asked him what it was all about.

"Dwight says that you want us to act lovey-dovey, but he doesn't quite get it," she told him. "He says you told him that this girl won't marry you because she's in love with you, but of course he must have got it wrong the way he usually does."

"He got it right," Bill said, and tried to explain.

"Never mind," Ella said in the middle of it. "Maybe I'll read my lines better if I don't know the plot. Anyway, she's cute."

When they got back into the living room, Dwight and Faith were chattering away in a foreign language. Dwight, Bill noticed, had put on some sort of cummerbund where his sport shirt met his gabardine slacks.

"Is it not wonderful," Faith said to Ella, "for a young man to get so far as your husband has?"

"I don't know," Ella said. "How far did he get?"

Dwight looked sullen. "She means in the U.N., darling."

"Oh," Ella said. "Well, his possibilities are unlimited in a foreign language, because I understand only English. He might even get to be president of the General Assembly, and I couldn't stop him."

ORDINARILY Bill enjoyed Ella's quips at Dwight's expense. Without them Dwight would have become unbearable, a boastful stuffed shirt. Ella kept him down to earth, and they understood each other. But Faith could not know that. She would think Ella had no use for Dwight.

"Ella," he said hastily, "remember the school picnic when Dwight picked you the first violets?"

"The first —— Oh, yes. Yes, of course. Dwight darling, will you ever forget that picnic?"

It went very well for a while. Ella and Dwight cooed at each other and exchanged fervent glances and held hands, and Bill, watching Faith, thought she seemed impressed. Then, all at once, everything went to pieces.

The phone rang and Dwight answered it. "Yes," he said. "Who? . . . Mr. Lie? . . . Why, yes indeed, Mr. Lie, I shall attend to the matter personally. . . . You know you can always count on me. I'll have the papers in your office the first thing Monday morning." He hung up and turned to Faith. "That was Trygve Lie," he said. "Matter of utmost importance and secrecy—called me up himself at this hour, so you can imagine ——"

Ella gave him a look and strolled over to the radio and turned it on and tuned it. After a minute or two a strong, Norwegian voice filled the room.

"If you didn't have such a rotten memo darling," Ella said to Dwight, "you wo be much more impressive. Mr. Lie is spe ing at that meeting tonight, remember? was his business with you so urgent that broke off in the middle of his speech to you?"

Dwight looked at Faith out of the co of his eye and turned dark red. He parti larly liked to put on a big front for a pre girl, and Ella particularly liked him not Someday, Bill thought, Dwight would up, and be a much nicer guy as a result. he wished Ella would hold off while Fa was here.

BUT Ella and Dwight had forgotten about everything. They did not even see Bi frantic facial contortions. Once they re got going, they seemed unaware that th was anyone else in the room.

"You're always running me down," Dwi said. "Most wives build their husbands but not you—oh no, you ——"

"Build you up! Why, darling, you're pr tically out of sight now, and you did it yourself," Ella t him.

Dwight smiled sm ingly at the ceil "She's not even clev he said. He lowered voice confidentially changed to one of eight other langu with which he wa miliar, and then really blew up.

"Stop that!" shouted. "Stop it, coward! Talk a me in English, li man, so I can an back!"

They went on f good while, with Dw switching langu every few minutes Ella doing all righ English. Bill trie get Faith out, but shook him off. She sitting straight u her chair, her mou little open, liste and watching in f nation. Well, that that, Bill thought terly. He'd cooke own romantic g all right, but good. Golly, what a fool h to have brought Faith here.

It ended the way it always did. All at the room was very quiet. Ella and Dw stood a few feet apart, staring at each o Then they both started talking at meanwhile rushing together.

"Oh, darling." . . . "Gosh, sweetheart "It's all my fault—I'm a shrew." . . . it's mine—I'm a fool." . . . "Oh, darling. "Oh, sweetheart."

Faith got up quietly and signaled t that she wanted to leave. Ella and D were so wrapped up in each other that did not even see them go.

"Well," Bill said heavily when they outside, "now you've seen it. An A ican love match. I guess ——" He off because of the way she was looki him, her hands clasped together, her lit up.

"Yes," she breathed, "I have see Never have I seen anything like it. Such such—such . . . splendid anger! And when it was over ——" She shook her in slow wonder. "How sweet it must b two who are in love to each blame hi after such anger, and murmur endear in each other's arms."

He took several quick steps toward "It's nice other times too," he said. instance, when you've been thinking going to part and never see each other and then all of a sudden you find every is okay."

After a long time she spoke. "My parents in the Orient do not know wha are missing. Golly!" she said. THE Joseph F. Johnston, long-time U. S. Senator from Alabama, liked nothing better than to don a pair of old overalls and work in his garden. One afternoon a stranger came to call on Mrs. Johnston, found the senator on his hands and knees weeding flowers.

"How long have you worked for the Johnstons?" she demanded.

"Twenty, maybe twenty-five years ma'am," he drawled.

"Do they pay you well?"

The senator hid a grin. "About all I get is my clothes and meals, ma'am."

Eagerly the visitor suggested, "Come and work for me, then. I'll give you your meals, your clothes, and a good salary besides."

He shook his head regretfully. "Sorry, ma'am, but I can't. I signed up with Mrs. Johnston for life."

The lady was shocked. "You poor fellow!" she exclaimed. "I'll see that you get justice. So you've spent twenty-five years in peonage, eh?"

Senator Johnston shook his head. "No, ma'am," he protested, "where I come from, we call it marriage!"

—WEBB B. GARRISON.

★PINEAPPLE WAKE-UP

Make every morning in '49 a "good morning" by starting off with cheerful, chilled Dole Pineapple Juice. It's healthful, it's good, and such a gay way to greet wintry gray mornings—delightful, refreshing, noon and nighttime, too! Bring sunshine indoors daily with Dole, the morning favorite of millions.

Sparkling pineapple sunshine—

★PINEAPPLE PORK CHOPS

Papa loves pork chops, and so will the rest of the family when they're done this way! Glaze red apple rounds and juice-rich Dole Pineapple Chunks in butter or margarine and brown sugar, then deck each chop with the hot glistening fruit. It's sunny flavor the family never knew!

from the tropics to your table—DOLE

★CRANBERRY NEST SALAD

When the bridge club meets at your house, be an ingenious hostess by serving this wonderful tropic salad. Heap individual molds of cranberry gelatin with drained, new-style Dole Crushed Pineapple, and top with a fluff of whipped cream cheese. Have you discovered how really different Dole Crushed Pineapple is these days? Crisp-cut in tiny cubelets—try a can!

★By Patricia Collier, DOLE HOME ECONOMIST
Hawaiian Pineapple Company, Ltd.
215 Market Street, San Francisco 6, California

Your little baby can do it, too!

LOOK AT 4-months-old Elizabeth Ann Harkrader! With her doctor's blessing, she was chosen for a very special test to prove that babies thrive on Clapp's. She was started on iron-rich Clapp's Baby Cereals, which helped keep her in radiant health. And she is all smiles at feeding time.

HERE IS Libby Ann at 7 months! Isn't she living proof that Clapp's builds bouncing babies? She eats Clapp's Strained Foods. She loves their taste and texture. And how she goes for each new variety of Clapp's! She has gained over a pound and grown ¾ of an inch every month.

AT 10 MONTHS, Libby Ann's sturdy little body is just thriving on Clapp's. She's got energy to burn, thanks to her well-rounded Clapp's diet. The Clapp's vitamins and minerals have helped give her straight bones and firm flesh and muscles—just as the makers of Clapp's knew they would!

13 YEARS OLD, Libby Ann is indeed a credit to her early Clapp's feeding. She has lots of pep for her studies and her hobbies. Why not start your baby on Clapp's today! See for yourself how she takes to those wonderful Clapp's Baby Foods. See how she'll thrive right in front of your eyes!

CLAPP'S BABY FOODS

THE FIRST BABY FOODS

Products of American Home Foods

(Continued from Page 142)

he tried to explain the intricacies of cost accounting and overhead, they both wound up in a welter of confusion. Margalo envisioned satisfied customers, dining merrily on roast beef and Yorkshire pudding. But she was totally unable to cope with such abstract matters as interest and amortization.

This morning she looked so pleased with life that Ben once more postponed the final hour of reckoning. But he knew with dismal certainty that it would have to come soon, and when it did there would be no more Casserole Kitchen.

Margalo poured his coffee, and put a pitcher of heavy cream and a platter of butter squares on the glossy mat in front of him. She said contentedly, "Florence doesn't have to be at the library until noon today, so I'm going right over."

"What for?"

"To talk, of course, to find out ——" Margalo hesitated then, and flushed slightly. "I know you think I meddle too much. But some people just never arrange things for themselves."

"Maybe you're right, honey. It's risky, but there are times when it works."

"This time it's sure to," she said. "I saw Roger, Ben. He's exactly right for her, and the dinner was perfect, and Florence looked lovely. I can't imagine anything going wrong."

BEN savored the bacon. "Freeport already has seven weddings scheduled for June," he said. "But I'm sure the Herald can make room for one more."

"Oh, Ben, it isn't a joke! You just don't know what it's like for a girl to live entirely alone."

"Neither do you."

"I can imagine."

Ben smiled wickedly. "You may not realize it, but the trend of conversation is very complimentary."

Margalo poured him a second cup of coffee. "Men," she said cheerfully, "relate every conversation to themselves. It's their ego."

An hour later, driving across town, she tried to imagine Florence not as the rather prim and austere young woman who doled out books at the library but as a glowing bride, with orange blossoms and a mammoth bouquet. It was vaguely disappointing to find Florence looking just the same, and wearing the familiar library costume of brown suit and brown felt hat.

"But I thought you didn't have to work until noon!" Margalo exclaimed in surprise.

Florence smiled politely. "The dinner was wonderful, Margalo," she said. "Thank you so much. I have the dishes all washed and packed away in these baskets."

Margalo was puzzled. Certainly there was nothing radiant, or even happy, about this pale, withdrawn girl who was even now pulling on a pair of brown fabric gloves. She said, "Can't we talk awhile? I mean, I would love to hear about everything."

Florence hesitated. "I'm not on duty until noon. But I thought I'd put in extra time cataloguing stuff in the cellar."

Margalo's heart sank. A future bride shouldn't be putting in extra time in the cellar. Besides, there was about Florence this morning an aura of prim reserve that was almost like a rebuff. Without being asked, Margalo walked in and sat down on the sofa.

"I should think you'd be too tired to do any extra work. I mean, after last night."

"Oh. I'm not tired at all! Roger left at ten o'clock."

Ten o'clock—the earliest polite moment for a guest to leave! Margalo knew then that something had gone drastically wrong. She looked around helplessly for a clue. But the apartment looked just the same—colorless, subdued and exceptionally neat. Even the flowers were beginning to fade.

She thought of the dinner. She said, "I hope the duck wasn't overcooked. I mean, Ben came in just then ——"

"Oh, no, the duck was delicious. It couldn't have been better."

"But perhaps Roger doesn't like duck. Steak might have been better."

"Oh, no, Roger likes duck. He had two helpings."

My celebration's for

The ONLY NURSER with the ANTI-COLIC* NIPPLE

TRADE-MARK

NEW! COMPLETE! The Davol "Anti-Colic" Nurser is better for baby, easier for you.

1. "Anti-Colic" Nipple is constructed like the maternal nipple. Its short flesh-like tip and firm sloping shoulder encourage the natural sucking action baby needs for proper development of mouth and jaws.

2. Slimmer bottle is faster to fill and clean. Easier to hold.

3. Rubber seal keeps nipple and formula sterile in icebox; while traveling.

4. Plastic collar holds nipple firm.

$1.75 for Layette Set of six complete nursers; individual nursers, 30¢. At your favorite drugstore.

DAVOL Anti-Colic* NURSER

*Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

FREE: Booklet, "Baby Feeding Made Easy," answers your problems on baby feeding. Please use this coupon.

Department L9-1
Davol Rubber Company
Providence 2, Rhode Island

Name.....

Address.....

City..... State.....

When Baby Expected..... Baby's Age.....

TUMBLE-PROOF For Precious Baby

BABEE-TENDA* Safety Chair for Feeding or Play

Banish fear of falls. Your lively young squirmer is snugly secure in this sturdy low chair. Cushioned swing-action seat, patented safety features. Folds for easy carrying. Converts to many use junior table. Doctor approved.

Grand Gift for New Mothers

Send for FREE FOLDER... See phone book for authorized agency or write today for illustrated folder and full details.

GUARANTEED BY PARENTS' MAGAZINE

THE BABEE-TENDA CORP. Dept. 5-1 750 Prospect Ave. Cleveland 15, Ohio

© 1948 Reg U.S. Pat Off

Margalo lapsed into bewildered silence. She knew Florence wanted her to leave. The evening had been a failure, and Florence was planning to bury her disappointment in a musty stack of library books. You could see that determination in her face. Her pretty greenish-brown eyes were strained, but there was a brusque sort of pride in the way she stood, stiff and unyielding, at the door.

Margalo made one last effort. "What was he like?" she asked. "I mean, was he interesting? What did he talk about?"

Reluctantly, Florence sat down on the edge of a straight chair. "Mostly he talked about economics."

"Economics?"

"You know. Inflation, and the rising cost of living. And he talked a lot about how important it is to be economical and to save."

"And that's all he talked about?"

"Well, just about. And of course I told him I agreed with him, but he said people had different standards about such things." Then she added, in that same rather prim voice, "He's really very intelligent, Margalo. I think he has a big future."

Margalo nodded uneasily, because dimly she was beginning to understand. And she thought that Roger sounded rather like a stick. But after all, Florence was fashioned from the same mold. Florence, too, liked to live with subdued colors, and put in extra time cataloguing books. But perhaps the evening had been too lavish, so that her real personality had been reversed. Now Roger thought that Florence was extravagant and light-minded—the kind of girl who wore velvet housecoats and served oysters for dinner and decorated her house with spring flowers out of season. No wonder he'd delivered a lecture on economy, and then gone home at ten o'clock!

Florence stood up abruptly. "Thanks again, Margalo. I'll help you put the things in the car," she said; and Margalo asked:

"You didn't happen to mention that I cooked the dinner?"

"Gracious, no! You told me not to."

There it was again—her own conniving, turned into a boomerang! Margalo suggested anxiously, "Why don't you, Florence, next time you see him?"

Florence turned away and hurried out the door. "Roger is awfully busy," she said. "He told me himself that he's working nights for his M.A. and hardly ever goes out."

The perfect brush-off, and not one that a girl as proud and reserved as Florence Dunhill would ever be able to overcome!

All the way home in the car Margalo berated herself. Why hadn't she made a simple casserole of breaded pork chops with tomato sauce? Or better yet, she should have let Florence cook the dinner herself, even if it all came out of cans. In her zeal to create perfection she had put Florence in the worst possible light.

With growing horror she contemplated the dinner as it must have occurred. First the fancy hors d'oeuvres, then the oysters, ordered specially from New York. Florence, overeager and a little self-conscious, in the velvet housecoat; and Roger at first surprised, then bewildered, and finally convinced that Florence wasn't, after all, the friendly, modest girl he'd been attracted to in the library, but someone from a totally different world, who could never share his simple tastes, or his small income either.

Drearily she worked on the refreshments for the Mothers' Club. It was one thing to be stupid about your own life. But when you messed up other people's! Ben was right: it was a dreadful mistake to interfere.

Finally an unimaginative supply of cakes and sandwiches was packed away in the basket. And it was just at that moment that Margalo hit on a possible solution. She thought of Florence down in that musty cellar—a bewildered, lonely Florence, who would go on, year after year, hiding her shiny hair under a succession of brown-felt hats. Certainly something had to be done, and this time there must be no mistakes.

Warily she examined the plan from every angle. Then she went to the phone, called the high school and asked to speak to Professor Penfield. His voice when they located him sounded rather formal.

She explained her problem quickly. She had a small home business, she said, a Casserole Kitchen, and the account books were all in a mess. She thought possibly, in his spare time, he would check them over; of course she would pay the usual charge.

"I know it's a lot to ask," she said, rather breathlessly, "but you were recommended very highly, and I don't believe it would take long."

He sounded interested, though not overeager. "I've done quite a bit of that sort of thing," he admitted.

"This afternoon at five, then?" she said, and gave him her address.

As soon as she'd put down the receiver she hurried to take the things to the Mothers' Club, then returned to the house and went straight to the big desk in the living room. There she searched through a number of overstuffed drawers, and took out all the bills to be sent, the bills to be paid, the checkbooks, bank statements, receipts and other business data. She had thought she would have to simulate confusion to make her request seem plausible, but when everything was assembled it was surprising how formidable it looked.

That done, she wrote a new bill and put it in a prominent place on top of all the others. This bill was made out to Miss Florence Dunhill, Bleecker Street, Freeport, Vermont. Under the name and address she listed the order: deviled oysters, roast duck, asparagus mousseline, potato puffs, chiffonade salad, strawberry mousse and almond wafers. Underneath that, in parentheses, she wrote (linen, silver and flowers included) and on the right-hand side she indicated the amount: $2.00. When Roger Penfield saw that he would know, at least, that Florence wasn't extravagant!

It is better to light a candle than to curse the darkness.
—OLD PROVERB.

He arrived promptly at five, his dark suit neatly pressed, his manner very businesslike. Margalo greeted him warmly.

"To save time I got out all the papers and things," she said, and took him into the living room.

"I hope I can be of some assistance," he said stiffly. But when he surveyed the desk she thought she detected a gleam of anticipation under his rather restrained manner. "You use double entry?" he inquired.

"Double entry?"

"A system of bookkeeping," he explained—so severely that she felt almost like one of his students. "Without it how can you estimate profit and loss?"

"Oh, but I make lots of money. Today, for instance, the Mothers' Club is paying me eight dollars for a few hours' work."

But Roger looked unimpressed. "Labor is a relatively small item in a business of this sort," he said, and sat down at the desk.

Hastily Margalo pushed forward the sheaf of bills. "These haven't gone out yet, though people usually pay very promptly."

"You have no accounts receivable?"

"Accounts receivable?"

Roger sighed and picked up the top bill, glancing at it casually. He started to lay it aside, then looked again, obviously noticing for the first time the name and address of the client. He read the bill thoroughly this time, then said in astonishment, "Two dollars, for a dinner like that!"

Margalo explained glibly, "That was an introductory order, good for just one week. Florence Dunhill was the only customer to take advantage of it."

"And well she might," he said. "Anyone would be a fool not to!"

Margalo laughed. "Florence is very clever about bargains. And you see, I had to think of some way of attracting new customers."

"A rather costly method, nevertheless." He laid the bill on one side, but glanced at it thoughtfully several times, and his manner when he turned to the other papers had a sometimes I shrink from the publicity!

• No wonder Daddy's gaga. Mother smooths on New Mennen Baby Oil with Lanolin—right down to your pretty pink toes. What a sleek beauty treatment . . . what a safeguard! Diaper rash, chafing, chapping—not for you, honey child!

• Better get used to it, baby. As long as mother uses flower-fragrant New Mennen Baby Oil you'll be the big love-interest around here! It has a scent as fresh as spring flowers . . . voted favorite by mothers in recent tests.

say Mom—am I as pretty as you?

• Can't help looking pretty when you're happy, comfy . . . with softer, smoother New Mennen Baby Powder! Use it between oilings to help blot up perspiration, chase away prickles, itching. So snowy and fragrant—babies adore it!

a girl's gotta have glamour!

• . . . and baby gets it with safe, double Mennen protection. So cleanse and lubricate with New Mennen Baby Oil after baths and at diaper changes. Between oilings, dust on cloud-soft, refreshing New Mennen Baby Powder. Buy baby both—today!

They're both new!

Mennen

Baby Oil with Lanolin

Baby Powder

sudden briskness, almost as though some secret uneasiness had vanished from his mind.

Margalo looked at him with happy relief. "I have an apple pie in the oven," she said. "Wait and I'll get some."

When she came back with the tray, Roger was hard at work. So hard at work, in fact, that he ate absent-mindedly, while adding up columns of figures—a sure way to ruin a good digestion. But finally he pushed the tray and the papers aside, and sat back in his chair.

"Mrs. Barnes," he said sternly, "what you need is a complete financial housecleaning—cost estimates, price revision and all the rest of it. Have you ever stopped to compare outgo with income?"

Margalo felt flustered. In her eagerness to show Roger the bill, she hadn't realized that he would take the job so seriously. She said, "Ben does all that. He spends hours at it."

"Too many hours!" Ben said from the doorway. She hadn't heard him come in, but there he stood, and on his face was a look of mingled astonishment and purest happiness.

Margalo said, in surprise, "Why, Ben!" And then she added hastily, "This is Roger Penfield, the new professor at the high school. He was just going over the books."

Roger stood up. "I didn't mean to sound officious, Mr. Barnes ——"

But Ben waved that aside. "On the contrary! I don't know why we didn't think of something of this sort before."

Roger relaxed. "Actually, there's no reason a business like this can't make money."

"But it is making money!" Margalo protested.

Ben took her hand and squeezed it reassuringly. "Honey," he said, "if Mr. Penfield is agreeable, let's put him on the pay roll. Then he can handle the business end of things, and we won't have to bother."

Roger accepted with enthusiasm, looking, Margalo thought, almost the way she felt when she undertook one of her favorite and most complicated dishes. "I'll come over tomorrow," he said, "and start setting up the books." But after that he left rather quickly, and she thought she detected a purposeful look in his eye.

Ben watched him go, then turned to his wife. "What an inspiration! Honey, how on earth did you think of it?"

Margalo started to explain. But by that time Ben had her in his arms and was kissing her thoroughly. He let her go, finally, but he still kept hold of her hand, and his gray eyes were warm with relief as well as love.

"Let's celebrate!" he said. "Drive over to Chester and dance till midnight. Would you like that?"

"Oh, Ben, of course I would!"

She ran upstairs at once and changed to the new silk suit and cherry-red blouse that she'd bought with some of the Casserole Kitchen money. It wasn't until they were ready to leave that she saw suddenly that there was a fatal flaw in her plan; and if she didn't fix it somehow, Florence would be worse off than before.

Hastily she went to the phone, and when she heard Florence's voice she said, with embarrassment, "This is Margalo, and I'm awfully sorry, but I'm going to have to charge you for that dinner after all—to keep the books straight, you know. I'm sending a bill for two dollars, and calling it a special introductory offer."

Florence sounded surprised, but she said at once, "Oh, that's all right; I know it was worth a lot more." Then she added, rather breathlessly, "Roger called up just now, Margalo, and asked me to go to the movies with him tonight. He said he wanted to celebrate because of a new part-time job."

Margalo put down the receiver and smiled confidently at Ben. "You know how it is," she said. "People in love always celebrate at the drop of a hat!"

THE UNTILLED ACRE

(Continued from Page 12)

find companionship. We all know one another. When I lived for a while in New York, I knew far fewer really civilized people with stimulating minds than I do right here in Sioux City.

"If you have troubles, in a town like this, your friends help you. In New York I knew I could starve and nobody would even miss me.

"I think people read more in the smaller cities than they do in the big ones. The cost of living, heaven knows, is high enough, but we get more for our money, and have more to spend on good magazines and books. Altogether there's less reason to be afraid of life in the smaller places."

Then she added, "But, of course, you probably think this is part of the 'chicken-patty circuit.'"

Remembering the excellent sirloin steak I had had the night before in another city, at a dinner sponsored by a women's club, I assured her that I did not, and that after spending most of my life in great cities—in Chicago, New York, London, Berlin, Vienna and Paris—I fully expected, and by my own choice, to end my days in a Vermont village, among just the kind of people with whom I had grown up. The village will not be so remote; no village is today. The New York newspapers arrive in the morning; the radio tells me all it tells anybody else; a car will carry me long distances, very cheaply, according to my whim. But my neighbors will be neighbors, and not anonymous persons whom I pass on the stairs, or see in the elevators; and my New York friends also will come to visit me, sometimes querying, "Don't you get bored?" and—oftener—"I must say I envy you so much peace and quiet."

Boredom, I think, is in oneself. The changing seasons, the sunsets, the sky, northern lights, a garden, cannot conceivably be boring. Nor can a great book or an amusing one—and (if I may so confide) all writers put their best selves in their books, and the books are usually more interesting than they are. A kitchen is not boring, nor is it boring to put together a meal for oneself or the unexpected guests who drop in from the neighborhood. And every village produces its dramas. The most exciting murder case I ever followed—and a case that would baffle a Sherlock Holmes and fascinate a Dostoevski—played itself out in a courthouse in a most demure small town, where lilacs bobbed their fragrant heads into the open windows. Not that I have any morbid interest in murder. But in a small town a murder is a murder, and not one of several headlines in a newspaper, recording the violences of the anonymous. I knew this murderer, and he was the last person in the world I would have dreamed would do such a thing, and someday, I have thought for years, I would write a story about it. It certainly wasn't boring!

Nothing, it seems to me, can be more healthy for America than a movement of youth to re-immigrate into it, into its open spaces, or relatively open spaces, bringing back to them the energies, ideas, optimism and progressiveness of youth, and winning from them the stability that comes with roots. "The Great American word," said an American poet, Robinson Jeffers, "has never been enmasse; it has been Independence." The vast metropolises do not favor independence; it flourishes best where there is elbow room, and where men are judged for what they are, because people know who they are.

Therefore, I would recall to the eager, ambitious, energetic and intelligent young people of our country, yearly leaving our colleges and universities, the words of Thomas Wolfe: Look Homeward, Angel! One of the half-dozen most brilliant young novelists of our age, though he afterward wandered far afield, drew all the sap and glow and poetry and satire of his work out of the soil that nourished him and in which remained forever planted the roots of his mind and spirit.

This country is wide enough for all, if we but rediscover it, and today's pioneer may find his untilled acre very near the exact spot where he stands.

THE END

Fight Measles the New Way

By Dr. Herman N. Bundesen
President, Chicago Board of Health

I first started practicing medi- there wasn't much we doctors do, once an epidemic of measles , except to urge mothers to keep n as comfortable as possible and dangerous complications would of the most communicable of all seases, measles is especially diffi- at because the most contagious s before any symptoms whatso- In those days it was impossible hild, therefore, without isolat- letely from contact with other an easy thing to do.

hers and some doctors, indeed, ie attitude that there is no use trying to protect children when measles comes to the neighborhood, usually in late spring or early summer. "Let's have it and get it over with," they have said, knowing that the child who has had measles is usually immune from another attack.

I have never taken this view myself, and I still think that it is wrong. I have seen too many children suffer from grave complications following measles to give up without a fight. It is true that most children eventually do get measles, but this is far from being a good reason for welcoming or inviting the disease for your infant or preschooler. On the contrary, any postponement is likely to be a gain; the older and stronger a child gets, the greater is his resistance to aftereffects, and the less apt he is to be seriously ill.

And now we have another weapon besides isolation to help us, in a preparation called measles globulin. A protein substance made from the blood of persons who have had measles, it can be given after exposure has taken place. It may keep your little fellow from getting measles this time. If it doesn't do this, in nearly every case it greatly lessens the severity of the attack.

In one neighborhood that I know about, for example, measles struck hard last June. Within a few days, children in seven homes in a single block were taken sick. When the first measles sign went up in the neighborhood, five of these seven mothers acted fast, called their doctors and had globulin injections given to their children. The other two mothers belonged to the "let's-get-it-over-with" school, and did nothing.

When the mothers compared notes, it developed that the five protected children all had light cases—pale rash, mild fever, little discomfort, speedy recovery. The children of the two "do-nothing" mothers, on the other hand, were miserable for days, with fevers ranging up to 104°, itchy rash, sore throats, burning eyes and nagging cough.

It doesn't always happen this way, of course. Occasionally a protected child may nedical weapon called measles globulin, an attack for your child ıed. or prevented till he is old enough to resist its complications.

EFUL young mothers Iaine to California tell t Doctor Bundesen's ooklets have been of atest help to them in for their own babies. t eight booklets cover by's first eight months. ll for 50 cents. The eries of booklets cov- baby's health from nths to two years— ooklets for 50 cents. klets will be sent ; be sure to tell us want the first book- mplete book on the he baby, a neces- pplement to the booklets, OUR BA- 1345, is 25 cents. A n breast feeding, A FIRST DUTY TO THE No. 1346, sells for ddress all requests teference Library, OME JOURNAL, Phil- , Pennsylvania.

MYRON DAVIS

Baby Expecting a Mother

Ahhh! There she comes with more of those naturally good Gerber's. Tots certainly go for them—and doctors approve them.

Lip-smacking starts with the first tiny tastes of Gerber's Cereals (often baby's first spoon-fed food). Soon after, Gerber's Strained Soups, Fruits, Vegetables and Desserts bring delicious, nourishing variety. When baby graduates to finely chopped Junior Foods —you pay the same low price for Gerber's!

Now! Gerber's Meats. Extra-good addition to your infant's meals. And all ready to eat!

They're ARMOUR Quality Beef! Veal! Liver!

Far less expensive than home-prepared meats for baby! Gerber's Strained and Junior Meats come in one size can —at one modest price!

FREE samples of 3 special Baby Cereals. Write to Gerber's, Dept. 81-9, Fremont, Mich.

Babies are our business... our only business!

Gerber's BABY FOODS
FREMONT MICH OAKLAND CAL

3 Cereals • 20 Strained Foods • 15 Junior Foods • 3 Strained Meats • 3 Junior Meats

have severe symptoms, and in some epidemics the infection is fairly mild even in unprotected children. Usually, however, it works the other way. The idea I want to leave with mothers who are reading this article is a simple one: You can improve the odds in your child's favor by asking the doctor to give measles globulin—a single injection that takes only a few seconds to give. The injection must be administered within four to six days after a known exposure to the disease. It is especially important for a child under three years of age, for any youngster who is ill, or for one who is suffering from the effects of some previous illness.

But, you may ask, if exposure occurs before any signs of illness appear, how can one tell when the globulin should be given?

The answer is that it isn't possible to know definitely in every case. If little Johnny next door shows up with a rash the day after he played indoors with your Jimmy, there's no doubt that direct exposure took place. If four or five days have intervened, Jimmy may have avoided infection, but you will be wiser to protect him anyway. If a week or more elapses between the day they played together and the day Johnny gets sick, and you know Jimmy couldn't have been exposed anywhere else in the meantime, you can assume that he has escaped the disease.

Fortunately, the virus that causes measles operates on a fairly predictable timetable throughout the course of the illness. Mothers who know what the timetable is can plan their children's activities more intelligently when measles threatens. Ordinarily, the period of incubation—from date of infection to onset of fever—is about ten days. The last few days of this period and the first few days after fever starts—nine or ten days altogether—is the contagious or communicable time during which the disease is easily transmitted from one child to another, carried on droplets of moisture discharged from the mouth and nose.

A slight fever, more often than not unnoticed unless mother is on guard and watching closely, is the first sign that the infected. Then the eyes are likely t red and watery, frequently with pu the lower lids. Within a day or two child is sneezing and coughing, with nose and sore throat—all the indica developing cold. This is the peak municability; if Jimmy remem Johnny was sneezing or coughing they played together, you know expect!

Measles rash begins the third or after the cold symptoms are defini red spots appear on the face or h ears. Soon these enlarge, deepen in spread down the body, finally co arms and legs. As the rash gro mounts, often to 103° or 104° in u children. The sick child's skin ma draw, and the eyes often burn unc when exposed to light. (Drawn dark glasses will help if this is the eyes are not affected, it is not n darken the room, but strong ligh avoided; so, too, should activ strain the eyes.)

The rash lasts for about five da begins to fade, peeling and flaki fever drops and the other appear. The cough, however, linger for another week, or even the youngster in bed for at least the rash appears.

In addition to early protect possible, the mother's respo measles are to keep the child and amused when the disease i and to guard against overexert valescence starts. Measles low ance of the affected areas to o particularly pneumonia, influe fections. I have seen many happened because children w get up and go out too soon aft measles. The safest method doctor to write the rules for period, and then be sure the r obeyed!

I will never spoil him by holding back my love...

"My love and praise, given freely, help him grow in spirit. My doctor tells me they are as important as giving the special care his body needs to grow soundly...

"To make sure that he builds a well-shaped head, a fine, full chest, a strong back, straight legs and sound teeth—I will give my baby enough Vitamin D every day."

A wholly natural source

Time-proven, reliable cod liver oil is a source preferred by many physicians for the Vitamin D your baby needs to build sound bones and teeth. Soon after birth, start him on Squibb Cod Liver Oil. Give it regularly every day. It is a wholly natural source not only of Vitamin D, but also of important growth-promoting Vitamin A

Be sure to get Squibb Cod Liver Oil for your baby today.

Protect yourself, the older children! This winter have the whole family take Squibb pleasant Mint-Flavored Cod Liver Oil.

It supplies the extra Vitamins A and D so often needed these winter days. Pleasant, easy to take. Ask now for Squibb Cod Liver Oil, Plain or Mint-Flavored. Give it regularly.

SQUIBB cod liver oil

preferred by more mothers than any other cod liver oil

THIS IS A SNOW-CHEAT

By Munro Leaf

Snow-Cheats try to take all the fun out of wintertime play. W are not spoiling other children's sledding fun by "dumping trick like this one. This very unfunny Snow-Cheat is p ting stones in the center of snowballs which it is goin throw at someone. It usually tries to make snowballs of slushy ice, and you can easily see why everyb hates a Snow-Cheat.

YES WERE YOU A SNOW-CHEAT THIS MON

JOURNAL

February, 1949
25 cents

PUBLIC LIBRARY

The Magazine
Women Believe In

WE CAN MAKE LDBIRTH SAFER
by J. D. Ratcliff

'H BE NOT PROUD
by John Gunther

Journal Contents

JOHN GUNTHER

"I was a Chicago boy, educated in the public schools there, and I remember writing pieces about the Russian revolution even when I was in high school. I went to Europe for the Chicago Daily News in 1924 and worked for the News there for twelve years. Since then I have followed the world's turmoil where it led me, witnessed death and destruction, interviewed the common, the great and the notorious of nearly every country. In several books I have reported all this, and it all shrinks to small proportions beside the deeply personal meaning of Death be Not Proud." (Page 38.)

CECILY TEAGUE CROWE

"I am married and have one daughter, seven years old. I have a private pilot's license and would rather fly than eat (except at Ruth Mills Teague's farm, which is also my father's, W. D. Teague, industrial designer). When I was my daughter's age I began writing stories to go with my illustrations. I planned to be an artist then, but chapged careers at fourteen and wrote a novel about an aviator. I would rather write than eat or fly." (Sarah and the Seaplane, page 40.)

FLORENCE JANE SOMAN

"I was born in Rock Hill, South Carolina, but, in spite of warnings from townspeople that New Yorkers froze in the streets, we moved to Brooklyn when I was very small. My Southern accent disappeared with my milk teeth. Since then I have written six stories and sold five. First Dance (page 34) is my first JOURNAL story. My husband, a corporation lawyer, says our home isn't big enough for two careers, so he wonders if I'd mind if he gave up his."

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ February, 1949

Vol. LXVI, No. 2

Book Condensation Complete in This Issue

38 Death be Not Proud, John Gunther

Fiction

34 First Dance, Florence Jane Soman
36 Reprisal, Marian Sims
40 Sarah and the Seaplane, Cecily Teague Crowe
42 Point of No Return (Third part of five), John P. Marquand
52 Kinfolk (Conclusion), Pearl S. Buck

Special Features

11 The Barbarism of Divorce Laws, Dorothy Thompson
11 I Was Proud to be a Scout, Maj. Gen. Curtis E. LeMay, USAAF
31 Twenty-one Plus and Minus, Gerard Mosler
44 People are People the World Over, John Godfrey Morris
58 We Can Make Childbirth Safer, J. D. Ratcliff
59 If You Ask Me, Eleanor Roosevelt
133 How America Lives: Meet a Steelworker's Family, Roger Butterfield
140 What Makes a Child Unsociable?, Gladys Denny Shultz

General Features

5 Our Readers Write Us
14 Under-Cover Stuff, Bernardine Kielty
23 Fun for Defense Forces . . . New Jersey Plan
23 Recreation Volunteers Needed, Margaret Hickey
24 Reference Library
26 Making Marriage Work, Clifford R. Adams
28 Ten Ways to Get a Date (The Sub-Deb), Edited by Maureen Daly
33 Fifty Years Ago in the Journal ● Journal About Town
76 Diary of Domesticity, Gladys Taber
170 Let's End Dental Crippling, Dr. Herman N. Bundesen
179 This is a Bundler, Munro Leaf
180 Ask Any Woman, Marcelene Cox
183 Bringing up Parents, Dr. Barbara Biber

Fashions and Beauty

46 The New Hand-Knits, Wilhela Cushman
48 There's Something About Her, Wilhela Cushman
50 The Journal's Little Gem of a Wardrobe, Nora O'Leary
143 Personality Brush-Up, Dawn Crowell Norman

Food and Homemaking

56 Poet's Kitchen, Gladys Taber
60 Fine Food Country Style, Ann Batchelder
62 Line a Day, Ann Batchelder
80 Conversation Piece, Ruth Mills Teague
144 A Dollar a Week Per Person for Meat, Louella G. Shouer
172 Quick and Easys for Two, Louella G. Shouer

Architecture, Interior Decoration and Garden

54 Connoissuer's House, Richard Pratt
124 Bridal Quilt, Henrietta Murdock
187 Gloxinias, Richard Pratt
188 How to Grow Gloxinias

Poetry

67 Winter Path, Berniece Bunn Christman
70 Nostalgia, Eleanor Alletta Chaffee
83 Nancy Mary at Mount Vernon, John Ackerson
88 Meeting, Julia Collins Ardayne
96 Old Woman, Edwin Martenet
104 Chez Alison, Marjorie Lederer Lee
115 Waking, Patrick MacDonogh
127 Coasting Hills, Helen Howland Prommel
146 Home-Coming, Dan G. Hoffman
157 How the Heart Dies, G. M. White
166 Prairie Born, Viola Perry Wanger
177 Low Comedy, Georgie Starbuck Galbraith
185 Sailing to Poughkeepsie, Joan Aucourt
189 Valentine, Elizabeth McFarland
198 Song of Content, Lucile Stubbs Graham

Cover Design by Al Parker

LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, copyright 1949 by The Curtis Publishing Company in U.S. and Great Britain. All rights reserved. Title registered in U.S. Patent Office and foreign countries. Published on last Friday of month preceding date by The Curtis Publishing Company, Independence Square, Philadelphia 5, Pa. Entered as Second Class Matter May 6, 1911, at the Post Office at Philadelphia under the Act of March 3, 1879. Entered as Second Class Matter at the Post Office Department, Ottawa, Canada, by Curtis Distributing Company, Ltd., Toronto, Ont., Canada. SUBSCRIPTION PRICES: U. S. and Possessions, Canada, Newfoundland, Labrador, Costa Rica, Cuba, Nicaragua, Dominican Republic, Guatemala, Haiti, Mexico, Panama, Philippine Islands, Republic of Honduras, Salvador, Spain and South America except the Guianas, 1 yr., $3; 2 yrs., $5; 3 yrs., $7; 4 yrs., $9. Other countries 1 yr., $6. Remit by money order or draft on a bank in the U. S. payable in U. S. funds. All prices subject to change without notice. All subscriptions must be paid for in advance. UNCONDITIONAL GUARANTY. We agree, upon request direct from subscribers to the Philadelphia office, to refund the full amount paid for any copies of Curtis publications not previously mailed. The Curtis Publishing Company, Walter D. Fuller, President; Arthur W. Kohler, Vice-President and Advertising Director: Mary Curtis Zimbalist, Vice-President; Cary W. Bok, Vice-President and Treasurer; Lewis W. Trayser, Vice-President and Director of Manufacturing; Benjamin Allen, Vice-President and Director of Circulation; Robert E. MacNeal, Secretary; Richard Ziesing, Jr., Manager of Ladies' Home Journal. The Company also publishes The Saturday Evening Post, Country Gentleman, Jack and Jill, and Holiday.

Change of address: Send your Journal change of address to LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, Independence Square, Philadelphia 5, Pa.

at least 30 days before the date of the issue with which it is to take effect. Send old address with the new, enclosing if possible your address label. The post office will not forward copies unless you provide extra postage. Duplicate copies cannot be sent. The names of characters in all stories are fictitious. Any resemblance to living persons is a coincidence.

The LION'S ROAR

Published here monthly . . . Column No. 115

The greatest star of the screen!

Perhaps like us, you regard February as the longest month of the year. There seems to be no vernal hint in the air, no dickie bird's song.

★ ★ ★ ★

So we pass along a suggestion. Just hie yourself off to see M-G-M's aptly titled "The Sun Comes Up". Truly it's as if the sun had broken through the clouds, shining bright and clear and warm.

★ ★ ★ ★

For it's a picture that speaks in the simple, straightforward language of the heart. You see it. You live it. And you love it.

★ ★ ★ ★

The distinguished author of "The Yearling", Marjorie Kinnan Rawlings, displays once again her great understanding of people, real people—vital, stubborn, proud, searching.

★ ★ ★ ★

A woman who plunges into her career to fill the void where love should have been. A boy who discovers the adventure and happiness of growing up, in the devotion of a dog.

★ ★ ★ ★

As the concert singer, Jeanette MacDonald lends lustre to the role. Her famous voice is richer than ever.

★ ★ ★ ★

Lloyd Nolan is the hard-bitten, soft-hearted writer who helps the sun come up on love.

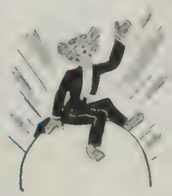
★ ★ ★ ★

Claude Jarman, Jr. (of "The Yearling" fame) and Lassie are the typical boy and his dog.

★ ★ ★ ★

Lassie's last minute rescue of her master from the blazing orphanage will be remembered for years as one of the great action thrills of the screen.

★ ★ ★ ★



And rounding out the well chosen cast, Lewis Stone and Percy Kilbride.

★ ★ ★ ★

Special mention must be made of the tasteful use of Technicolor. In bold, vibrant strokes it brings to the theatre the grandeur of the Santa Cruz mountain country.

★ ★ ★ ★

Director Richard Thorpe continues to hit his stride, following his delightful "A Date With Judy". The excellent screen play comes from William Ludwig and Margaret Fitts. Producer Robert Sisk, responsible for the memorable "Courage Of Lassie" and "Hills Of Home", adds another to his roster of magnificent motion pictures.

★ ★ ★ ★

"The Sun Comes Up"—and brightens a great entertainment day!

—Leo

Suddenly, on every hand—

This luxury polish! So low priced!

FURS BY ESTHER DOROTHY

Wondrous NAIL BRILLIANCE BY CUTEX only 25¢ *

If you love luxury — utter luxury — you're the Nail Brilliance type.

No other polish offers so much . . . not even the most expensive polishes! See how many extras! Steady-based beauty of a bottle. Long-handled "artist's" brush for smooth-and-easy application. Miracle wear! Ten devastating, fadeless colors!

So pure, too! Even women whose skins are allergic to other polishes can safely use Nail Brilliance.

Suddenly—on the prettiest lips—the new Cutex Lipstick!

Imagine! A lipstick as wickedly flattering to your lips as Nail Brilliance is to your hands! Silkier-than-silk texture! Clinging-vine cling! Vibrant color-intensity! Colors to complement Nail Brilliance . . . compliment you. Only 49¢.*

*PLUS TAX

Our Readers Write us

Are Divorcees Glad or Sorry?

Bladensburg, Maryland.

Dear Editors: I wonder if a poll among your readers would show whether most divorced wives who marry again are glad or sorry they made the move. There are a great many women contemplating divorce who ask themselves this question. If after the honeymoon is over, the second marriage is merely a repetition of the first, what is the use of divorce? If, on the other hand, many women say they benefit by the change, much uncertainty would be cleared up for those who think they would be better off away from their present husbands.

Most sincerely,
FRANCES M. BELL.

Mother Tells the Truth

East Orange, New Jersey.

Dear Editors: I wish I could personally thank Val Teal for the story, Father Tells the Truth, and all it meant to me.

I wish that every woman who sees herself reach and start to pass middle age might read it. I am homely, fat and often sharp—but my nineteen-year-old daughter says not. I am impatient, critical and often overbearing, but my nearly twenty-one-year-old son tells me I never let him down. I have lost my enthusiasm for going to parties, worry endlessly about money, fret my husband needlessly—but he always gives me the last kiss as he leaves in the morning and the first when we meet at home when the day's work is over. No, I am not pretty. But the love of those around me makes me feel beautiful.

Most gratefully,
HELEN C. KIRKUP.

Growing Old Gracefully

Laredo, Texas.

Dear Editor: The LADIES' HOME JOURNAL and I are twins, both born in November, 1883. I must admit that I did not read the first few copies, but have not missed one since I started. The fiction has always been of the highest type and the continued stories keep me waiting impatiently for the next installment. My grandchildren now enjoy reading the LADIES' HOME JOURNAL. Sincerely, BESS TRAYLOR.

Policy and Hearsay

Marissa, Illinois.

Dear Editors: I am glad you do not advertise liquor. I notice an increasing number of your stories have their characters drinking. I have heard that the liquor people pay an author as much to insert such incidents as the magazines pay for the articles.

MRS. L. E. MCCLINTOCK.

Someone who knew nothing about writing must have started that rumor. The charge is not true.—ED.

Gay Mending

Battle Creek, Michigan.

Dear Editors: One day, in one of those delightfully rebellious moods we women get when our power has been underestimated (during which we usually accomplish some unprecedented miracle just because we're tired to death of routine), I decided to mend my sheets with colored material. Doggone it, if my thrift was the only pleasure I got from mending, why not cry it from the housetops? Out from my workbasket came a big piece of brilliant pink cotton—almost shocking pink, and right down the alley of my mood. Why not make the patch heart-shaped, as long as the day was one for innovation and the hole in the sheet could be covered neatly with a heart? It looked so gay and fresh that the next sheet in the to-be-mended pile seemed pale and anemic by contrast—it needed a dash of color too.

Several weeks later, at bed-changing time, a sheet turned up bearing a bright patch—the heart-shaped one—and I laughed at the memory of my rebellious mending day as I tucked the corners in neatly. My husband laughed when, wearily heading for bed, he saw the large heart turned back over the covers. The children laughed when they opened their beds to find a green leaf or a bright diamond winking at them. My neighbor laughed on washday when she saw my clothesline tattletale gay, and said, "Why didn't I ever think of that!"—a woman's tribute of tributes.

Now I'm an old hand at these cutout tricks. Flowers go on my sheets, notes of music, stars, bright red cherries, colored balls or just snowflake shapes of any gay material that comes to hand. Once I even sewed a doll-shaped mend on the pillow for one of the children when she was ill, although the pillowcase didn't need mending. Kitten faces go on the holes in the knees of the children's overalls. An apple covers a tear in a little girl's dress that I otherwise couldn't properly conceal. My husband's shorts have patches of every hue. Somehow our philosophy about wearing mended clothing or sleeping on mended sheets has become a gay one.

Sincerely yours,
JEAN AYERS HAUGHEY.

Terrible Housekeeper

Saint Joseph, Missouri.

Dear Editor: Having neglected my housework to read your newest magazine, I feel moved to neglect the work even more and write to you. There is something very personalized about the JOURNAL which makes me feel like pouring out my troubles.

I'm a terrible housekeeper. I try, but I can't seem to find what it is that makes a good housekeeper good. Maybe I'm lazy, but even when I try my house still looks "Terrible housekeeper" and family.

awful. Having two baby boys, nineteen months and four months, and living in a two-and-a-half room apartment doesn't help, but I feel I'm to blame. I can't seem to get my day tangled out. No plan for housekeeping gives allowance for running

Look what's washable this winter!

The charm of so many clothes this winter is that, for all their brightness and delicacy, they're washable. But that means with care. Just one careless washing with strong soap can fade bright colors and ruin the fit of nice washables. But when you wash your nice things gently in Ivory Flakes, colors will actually perk up . . . clothes wear longer . . . and fit better!

Keep your colors lovelier with this special care

GAY WESKITS AND SKIRTS keep their perky brightness longer with Ivory Flakes care. Pure, mild Ivory Flakes is one soap that fashion designers recommend for all fine washables.

GIRDLES are under control when you give them frequent sudsings in Ivory Flakes. They'll keep their springy, clingy fit and wear longer, too.

NYLONS need nightly washing and the gentlest care! Ivory Flakes will help them wear and wear . . . and keep that new, fresh look up to twice as long!

Accessories by Waller-Duff, Ltd. in wool jersey by Princeton Knitting Mills

BRIGHT ACCESSORIES in the winter scene will be lovelier if they're sudsed in Ivory Flakes—it's 99 44/100% pure. There's no milder, safer soap than Ivory Flakes.

If it's lovely to wear...It's worth Ivory Flakes care

"Fan-Flair"

Brassiere by

MUNSINGWEAR*

Prettiest way to proud bosom beauty... the wonderful uplift and youthful separation this Munsingwear bra gives you!

"Fan-Flair" stitched cups support you beautifully, firmly. And for easy, comfortable fit... there are under-bust elastic inserts.

Munsingwear's quality eye chose the fabric—nylon satin and nylon embroidered marquisette.

In Portrait Pink and Tempera White.

A, B and C cups; $3.50.

At fine stores everywhere.

*REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

Also ask for Munsingwear Hosiery · Foundation Garments · Sleeping-and-Lounging Wear

Davy to the toilet every hour or feeding the baby every four hours. Dishes and diapers pile up—and ironings—and then the house is dirty again and what have I done with all my time.

Good housekeeping is supposed to slip on you like the ring at the altar—but it certainly didn't in my case.

Sincerely,
MRS. DAVID VEQUIST, JR.

Birthday Greeting

The Duke's Cottage,
Rudgwick, England.

Darling Junie: It is your birthday again, and it takes me back in mind to that morning when you were born, in Maymyo, Upper Burma. All the birds began to sing, I remember, as you arrived. And the Burmese brokers down in the delta said, commiserating with your papa, because, as you know, the East holds daughters cheap, "We hear, sir, that you have another little calamity."

People keep commiserating me because all my children are so far away. "How sad for you," they say, "and how you must miss them." I was thinking the other day how funny it is that I don't look at it in that way at all. I just feel very proud of you both, that when your chance came to get about and see the world, you took it. So many people miss their opportunity of making good, because they dither on the brink, afraid to launch away because of the crocodiles. Also, I feel very glad that neither of you has ever felt it was your duty to sit at home and look after me! That you both knew I could fend for myself and lead my own life, not hanging onto you. That is about the best compliment children can pay their parents, to my mind, for the maternal coil can be very suffocating.

Love from MOTHER
(Dorothy Black)

Mother Thwarts Marriage

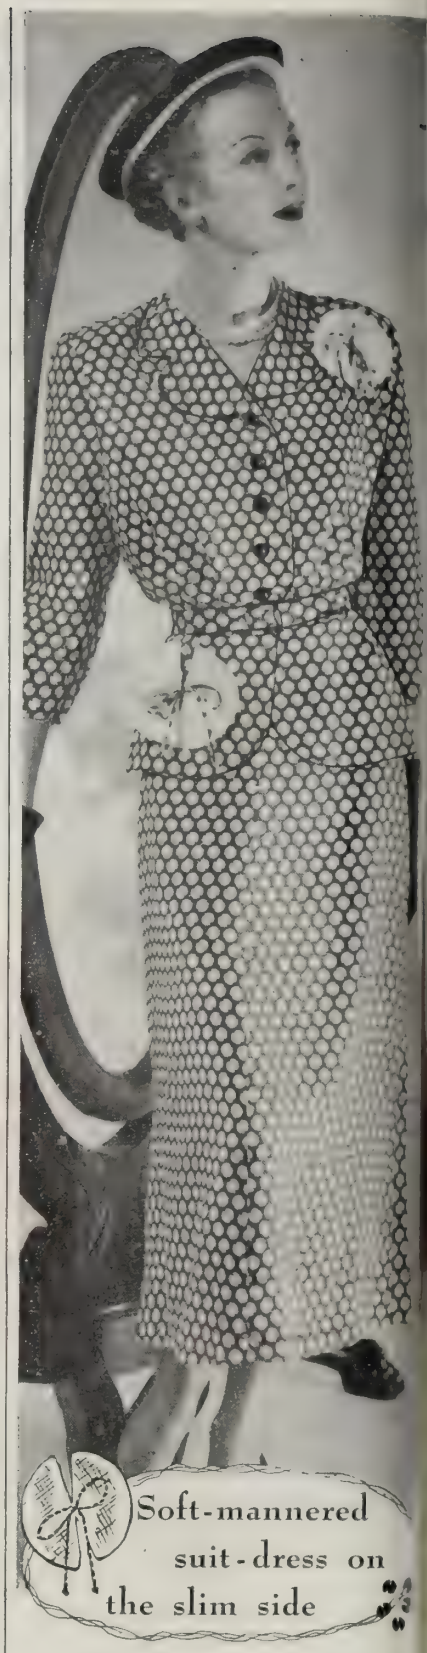
Stoughton, Massachusetts.

Dear Editor: I have made reasonable progress in the world and feel able to enter into marriage with success. I've been engaged to a fine girl for nearly a year now.

The engagement is going to pieces because of the girl's mother. I have been building a truly beautiful, comfortable little home for us, but she pointedly refuses to speak one word about it. Always when we go out there is a negative sentiment, never "Have a good time, kids." She absolutely refuses to discuss wedding plans.

She has fed her daughter a constant stream of warnings that she must do what mother tells her to do, in spite of the fact that the girl is 25 and I'm 26. How can we strike at the roots of her childishness, fears and selfishness, and convince her it is right and natural for a mature daughter to marry in happiness?

Sincerely,
(Name Withheld)



When boys and girls reach 21, custom and the law presume they can decide for themselves whether to marry.—ED.

Do Animals Weep?

Santa Monica, California.

Dear Editors: I wish to call your attention to a mistake of Gretta Palmer's in her article Why Do Women Cry? She says "man alone has lachrymal glands . . . animals never cry." Let me quote Miss Ida M. Mellen, noted biologist and former assistant to the late Dr. Raymond Lee Ditmars at the Bronx Zoo: "All cats have lachrymal glands and all can cry. A number of animals shed tears. You have read of the crocodile tears, and the hippopotamus is said to shed tears of blood during parturition, and to sweat blood in its agony. Any animal that sheds tears is suffering

(Continued on Page 8)

Soft-mannered suit-dress on the slim side

Martha Manning Dresses

No. 6168...Martha Manning's favorite suit-dress for a season-long standby! Important, too, for the young slimness it lends the half-size figure with long-revered, long-peplumed jacket... for its proportioned sizing! White pique "ruffs" on Black, Brown, Navy or Grey Washable Martinique Rayon Crepe. 14½ · 20½.

About $13

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

There are Martha Manning Dresses in Misses' and "Illusion" Half Size

For name of the store nearest you, write

MARTHA MANNING · Dept. LH-4 · ST. LOUIS 3

Smoke a LUCKY to feel your LEVEL best!

Luckies' fine tobacco picks you up when you're low . . . calms you down when you're tense!

ies' fine tobacco puts you on the r level—the Lucky level—to feel your best, do your level best.

at's why it's important for you to remem- ıat LUCKY STRIKE MEANS FINE TOBACCO ld, ripe, light tobacco that makes a thor- ly enjoyable smoke. No wonder more ıendent tobacco experts—auctioneers, buyers and warehousemen—smoke Lucky Strike regularly than smoke the next two leading brands combined.

Light up a Lucky! Luckies' fine tobacco picks you up when you're low, calms you down when you're tense. So get on the Lucky level where it's fun to be alive. Get a carton of Luckies and get started today!

COPR., THE AMERICAN TOBACCO COMPANY

.S./M.F.T.—Lucky Strike Means Fine Tobacco

CHAP-PROOF* your hands with TRUSHAY

RED ROSES to spice a pastel negligee? Fashion says, "Bravo!" But red hands? Fashion says, "No-no!" And they're so needless now!

Even if you do dishes or brave wintry winds, you can keep your hands smooth and lovely with different Trushay.

For Trushay has a unique "beforehand" extra that guards against chapping. Yes, you can use Trushay two wonderful ways!

To soften and smooth. Just a few drops make your hands feel like satin! Use fragrant, creamy-rich Trushay any time!

To chap-proof. Smooth on Trushay before doing dishes, light laundry, or before going outdoors. As long as Trushay is on your hands, they're protected against water chap and weather chap!

For evening-soft hands all day long... begin today to use Trushay!

TRUSHAY

PRODUCT OF BRISTOL-MYERS

The lotion with the "beforehand" extra!

* Applied before exposure to hot, soapy water or wind and weather. Trushay protects hands against the red, rough, dried-out condition known as chapping. When soap-and-water tasks are prolonged—or weather is severe—renew application at more frequent intervals.

(Continued from Page 6)

from a pitiful grief indeed." I'd like to tell Miss Palmer of the reaction of our Burmese cat to the death of his companion, a huge alley cat, Nug. When my husband went into the living room, Sean, the Burmese, was sitting on an ottoman, all hunched over as if drawing into himself, and tears were streaming down his small dark face. Nug lay on the floor, dead of a heart attack.

Yours truly,
MRS. JOHN F. JUDGE.

Roger Conant, curator of the Philadelphia Zoo, says animals have glands which secrete in excess when eyes are irritated. He has never known an animal to weep tears in sorrow. Mamma Hippo has a tough time at hippobirth, but the reddish fluid that exudes from her pores is not blood.—ED.

Teen-Ager Wants Respect

Baltimore, Maryland.

Dear Editor: I am fifteen years old, at the height of my "adolescence," and I resent most articles on so-called "teen-agers." The teen-agers most writers portray are all alike—and they are all perfect idiots. They all stuff themselves with sundaes, get bumps, swoon over movie stars, and get starry-eyed over a perfectly inane boy-next-door (like Oogie in A Date With Judy). They all talk ridiculous slang. In all of my fifteen and a half years, I have never, except in movies, in stories and on radio programs, heard teen-agers use worse slang words than "divine," meaning marvelous, or "fast," meaning someone who "gets around" a little too much. A little slang enlivens a language, and soon becomes part of it—a continual stream of jargon is absurd and cheap. I don't like all the teen-agers I know. Some are immature (like some adults I know).

My plea—directed not so much to your magazine as to a general public attitude—is, either treat adolescence, its problems and confusions, sympathetically, and with at least an attempt at understanding, or leave the subject alone.

Very truly yours,
One of those silly "teen-agers."

Ten-Year-Old Poet

Main Rd at Maple Ave
Vineland, New Jersey

Dear Sir,
I am in the sixth grade and for years I have been interested in poetry. So I am sending you one of my poems. People said you should try your luck with some magazine co., they told me to try the Ladies Home Journal, so I am inside is my poem

Skating Ala Mode

I went skating on the frozen river.
I went skating on the glassy rink.
I went skating on the kitchen floor
In the water that dripped from the sink.

I went skating on a Dutch canal.
I went skating with a Holland band.
I went skating in the bathroom tub
On the soap that slipped out of my hand.

I went skating down the steep Swiss Alps.
I went skating, yodeling all the day.
I went skating down the cellar steps
On the skates I didn't put away.

SYLVIA ANGLE, Age 10½.

Instantly . .

make YOUR lips more beautiful!

Here is the most important charm discove since the beginning of beauty. A lipstick last that actually can't smear—that re won't rub off—and that will keep your li satin-smooth and lovely. It isn't a lipstick all. It's a lush liquid in the most roman shades ever! And so permanent! Put it on dusk—it stays till dawn or longer. You c use it to prevent cream lipstick from smearin too. Just brush on a coat of Liptone after lipstick.

And CHEEKTONE . . Roses in your cheeks without rouge. A marvelous preparation. The effect is absolutely natural and lovely. Lasts all day.

liquid liptone

—Mail Coupon for Generous Trial Sizes—
PRINCESS PAT, Dept. 982
2709 South Wells St., Chicago 16, Ill.
Send Trial Sizes. I enclose 12c (3c Fed. tax) for each one th
☐ English Tint ☐ Regal
☐ Medium—rich red ☐ Gay Plum—☐ Gypsy—deep red ☐ CHEEKTONE—"magic
Name
Address
City State

This Oh-so-delightful "must"— to Guard the Glory of your Hair!

YES, countless thousands make Listerine Antiseptic and massage a part of regular hair-washing routine. If you're not one of them you ought to be.

This delightful aid does so many things to help you be proud of your hair.

It goes after oily film, floats away loose dandruff flakes, and combats scalp odor. But, most important of all, it kills millions of germs associated with infectious dandruff . . . that troublesome, persistent disorder so prevalent among women.

Once entrenched, it can also raise hob with the health of your scalp . . . the looks of your hair.

Because of its quick, cleansing germ-killing action, Listerine Antiseptic is a wonderful precaution against infectious dandruff, as well as an effective twice-a-day treatment once the condition has started.

For the glory of your hair, for the health of your scalp, make Listerine Antiseptic and massage a regular part of hair-washing. Also, it's an intelligent routine for your husband and children who are by no means immune to infectious dandruff.

Listerine Antiseptic is the same antiseptic that has been famous for over 60 years in the field of oral hygiene.

LAMBERT PHARMACAL CO., St. Louis, Mo.

"The Bottle Bacillus", scientifically known as "P. ovale", called by many dermatologists a causative agent of infectious dandruff.

LISTERINE ANTISEPTIC

for

INFECTIOUS DANDRUFF

P.S. Have you tried the new Listerine Tooth Paste, the Minty 3-way Prescription for your Teeth?

Be lovelier... all over!

You can be lovelier from head to toe with the Camay Beauty Bath!
Bathe every day with new Bath-Size Camay and you give your arms, your back, your legs true complexion care. You'll rise from your bath clean, refreshed—your skin just touched with the flower-like fragrance of Camay, the Soap of Beautiful Women!

NEW LOVELINESS HEAD TO HEELS!

PURE, MILD, LUXURIOUS LATHER!

BEST BEAUTY BATHS EVER!

DESIGNED FOR THE BODY BEAUTIFUL!

BARE YOUR BACK WITH CONFIDENCE!

LEAVES A FLOWER-LIKE FRAGRANCE!

Bath-Size Camay

for your CAMAY BEAUTY BATH!

Ladies' Home Journal

Bruce Gould and Beatrice Blackmar Gould. Editors

I Was Proud to be a Scout

By MAJ. GEN. CURTIS E. LE MAY, USAAF

A NUMBER of years lie between the job of leading the 20th Air Force on a bombing operation and leading a patrol of Scouts in Troop 54 in Columbus, Ohio. Yet, it is not hard to find numerous occasions where the Scout oath and law have entered into the career I have followed.

I was not an exemplary Scout. My record of advancement in scouting was never brilliant. Like all boys who are boys, I thought up my share of devilment to get into. I was 13 when I joined a group of friends in Troop 54. From then on, my initiative was bent to a more constructive path.

I think that all boys who participate in scouting are on the road to a better way of living, to being better men. It isn't a great step from being a good Scout to being a good man. I still think of Scouts as the offspring of the famous frontier soldiers who conquered the Indians, the seasons, the mountains and the deserts to mark the boundaries of the United States. Those "scouts" rode at the head of the advancing column to lead the way into new horizons. Clark and Rogers, Custer, Cody, Carson, Houston and Boone—many famous men were scouts.

The Boy Scouts of America are the pioneers of today. A new time is before them. We have found that we are close neighbors with all the nations of the world. I see in the world-wide scouting program a means of education in the art of living with one another—a lesson in how to be a good neighbor and friend.

We live next door to the world. To be a good neighbor, a friend—this is a must for the preservation of humanity in lasting peace.

Since I enlisted as a Flying Cadet in September of 1928, I have found much use for the motto "Be Prepared." Carrying out the concepts of the Scout motto is not always easy. For instance, getting the first B-17 units ready for Europe required hard, grinding work that wore on nerves, mind and body. We flew at first with a lively interest, then until it was boring, and later just routine. Those men were strong and came through. When the excited pitch of battle gripped their minds, the muscles reacted in the routine for which they had been schooled. Consequently we were lucky in escaping with few losses in those first missions.

During these years in the Army Air Forces I have come to know more and more the meaning of the words of the Scout oath and law. That is why I know that the challenge facing the youth of today will be met. It is the job of the young man who stands behind the symbol bearing the eagle, the fleur-de-lis and the scroll of "Be Prepared" to keep himself fit to be a leader, to scout ahead.

Scouting helped me wear the stars of a general in the AAF. If I, as a man, were to meet myself, as a boy, back in the streets of Columbus, I would tell that boy this story I have related to you.

I liked my scouting. I was proud to be a Scout.

The Barbarism of Divorce Laws

By DOROTHY THOMPSON

IN early December, 1948, District Attorney Hogan, of New York, and his assistant, Mr. McDonough, opened a great exposé of what was called the "divorce mill," arresting "hot" lawyers, private detectives and "professional corespondents," all of whom, for money, had furnished the evidence for phony divorce cases under the laws of the state of New York. Sordid tale after sordid tale was spread through the newspapers. Divorces already granted were in jeopardy. But just what the purpose of the exposé was, or is, was not apparent. If the purpose was to reveal law evasion, nothing more was exposed than every adult knows. If the purpose was to uphold the law, it will be in vain. The only constructive purpose that could be served is to mobilize opinion for a change in the law.

In New York State, divorces can be granted only on the ground of adultery. This means that a couple wishing to separate can do so only if one or the other has provably committed adultery. The offended partner can then sue for divorce in a court of law, provided he or she can produce conclusive evidence. This means that the suspicious partner must put a detective on the track of his or her spouse, to burst in and discover the partner in an intimate situation with another man or woman.

People are a good deal more civilized than this law. A man whose wife has left him, he suspects—or knows—for another man, nevertheless does not want his wife's name, and perhaps his children's mother's, besmirched. He may dislike and even hate her, but the mere fact that he loved her once, and that she has been his wife, impels him to a certain chivalry. Public opinion also impels him. However irrational it may be, public opinion is more lenient toward adultery committed by a man than by a woman. Therefore, whoever is at fault, it is usually the husband who assumes the fault. Although adultery may accompany the breakup of a marriage, it is seldom the cause of the breakup. The adultery is the result of an estrangement

Executive Editor, Mary Bass ● Managing Editor, Laura Lou Brookman ● Associate Editors: Hugh MacNair Kahler, Bernardine Kielty, Ann Batchelder, Wilhela Cushman, William E. Fink, Alice Blinn, Richard Pratt, Henrietta Murdock, Louella G. Shouer, Mary Lea Page, Maureen Daly, Dawn Crowell Norman, John Godfrey Morris, Joan Younger, Lonnie Coleman, Margaret Davidson, Nora O'Leary ● Contributing Editors: Gladys Taber, Louise Paine Benjamin, Gladys Denny Shultz, Barbara Benson, Margaret Hickey ● Assistant Editors: John Werner, Charlotte Johnson, Donald Stuart, Ruth Mary Packard, Ruth Matthews, Alice Conkling, June Torrey, Lily Glendinning, Dorothy Counselman Selby, Joseph Di Pietro, Anne Einselen, Glenn Matthew White, Betty Niles Gray, Jan Weyl, Jeanne Scribner ● Editorial Assistants: Alice Kastberg, Iris Wilken, Betty Coe, Jeanne Lenton Tracey, Cynthia McAdoo, Eleanor Pownall Simmons, Adrina Casparian, Virginia Price, Marion Plummer, Lois Witherspoon, Philippa Herman, Jeanne Stiles, Elizabeth McFarland, Polly Toland, Leone Seastrom, Elizabeth Crawford, Elizabeth Goetsch, Joan Aucourt, Marthedith F. Stauffer.

You'll never Squeeze Again!

...once you taste

Snow Crop

Frozen Orange Juice

Why squeeze . . . when SNOW CROP Orange Juice is so quick . . . so good . . . so easy? SNOW CROP brings you the juice of luscious oranges at their peak . . . tree-ripened . . . tree-fresh. Makes the grandest juice you ever tasted in just forty-five seconds. And what a big money-saver! Always ask for SNOW CROP, the original frozen orange juice concentrate.

Insist on Snow Crop for controlled quality...lower prices

For the best in frozen fruits, vegetables, fish and poultry . . . at lower prices . . . always insist on SNOW CROP. You'll find every one of SNOW CROP'S forty frozen foods tops in freshness and quality at real budget-saving prices. You're sure when you ask your grocer for SNOW CROP Frozen Foods.

A SUBSIDIARY OF CLINTON INDUSTRIES, INC.

Snow Crop
FROZEN FOODS

that has already occurred. A wife already wounded and lonely drifts into another relationship; a husband already irritated and bored does the same. Usually both are at fault—or neither. In many cases the whole marriage has been a mistake, from the beginning, because it was contracted in a short period of romantic passion between two basically incompatible natures. Each may be a perfectly decent person and recognize the other as such.

Suppose a boy has been brought up by a mother who is an excellent housekeeper. His home has always been clean, the floors shining, the curtains washed, a definite smell of cleanliness about the place, the tablecloth immaculate, the beds made with taut-stretched sheets, the meals punctual, and everything where you ought to find it. This all seems to him perfectly natural. It is the way "everybody" lives. It doesn't matter whether his home has been poor or well-to-do; he takes it for granted that there is always, in every home, this immaculate order.

He meets a girl—say a "career" girl—in a city, away from her home. He sees her in restaurants, meets her in the park, goes with her to concerts, shows and parties. She is perfectly charming, pretty, amusing; has lovely legs; is warm and understanding; plays the guitar and sings American, English, Scottish and Irish ballads; attracts attention, but obviously likes him best. A dream of a girl! He proposes, she accepts, and he thinks he is the luckiest dog in the world. He is madly in love.

They furnish a three-room apartment. He has a job and comes home at six. Nobody has washed last night's dishes; nobody has removed the signs of last night's party. The dinner isn't cooked, or even bought. She throws her arms around his neck, cuddles close to him, calls him her "darling" and her love, takes him out to shop at the delicatessen, and around nine o'clock even produces a tolerably good meal. When they go to bed, the blankets and sheets are twisted as they were that morning. He simply hates it. Eventually he hates her, and when she gets out her guitar to play those ballads which once enchanted him, he simply hates them. She may have had the most powerful sexual attraction for him in the beginning, but the marriage has a poor chance.

Nothing in life is more wonderful than faith—the one great moving force which we can neither weigh in the balance nor test in the crucible.
SIR WILLIAM OSLER: British Medical Journal.

BEFORE you begin to say, "Well, that only proves every girl should be brought up to be a good housekeeper," consider the situation in reverse. A boy is brought up in a home something like that depicted in Margaret Kennedy's Sanger family, or George Kaufman's You Can't Take it With You. A Bohemian family—and these exist not only among artists but in all classes of society, among farmers not at all uncommonly, in certain racial groups more common than elsewhere. The family is lusty, warm, amusing, has a strong sense of solidarity, is unreckonable, eats when everybody pleases, or when anyone thinks to put together a meal, is extravagant, rather splurging on one bang-up dinner and eating bread and milk thereafter than budgeting for a week. A boy brought up in that atmosphere meets a girl brought up in the other. She charms him because she is pretty, takes such an interest in him, is shy, and has uncommonly pretty legs. He proposes; she accepts; they marry. He comes home bringing her a bunch of flowers, and she says, "But, darling, we can't afford it. We haven't money even for a roast this week." He is dashed. He rushes into the house to embrace her, and she screams, "Darling, wipe your shoes first." He throws around his clothes and she hangs them up with a martyred air. She spends her life trying to reform him, and he resents the reform with all his nature. He thinks she is petty, crabbing, dull and boring. That marriage is also off to a bad start.

I have purposely taken superficial examples of incompatibility, which lead to deeper rifts, rather than more profound ones. The women and men maddened by mistaken choices have to find comfort. The women tell their stories to other men; the men to other women. Each eventually finds a sympathizer in someone of his own background. Out of sympathy grows attraction, out of attraction love, out of love, the adulterous slip—but the adultery is implicit in the incompatible marriage.

This is not a romantic interpretation of the reasons for divorce, nor even a Freudian one, but from long observation I know it happens every day. And since it is difficult for anyone over sixteen to reform in his habits, however his character may develop such situations are usually hopeless.

FINALLY, all these parties conclude that life is intolerable and they must divorce.

But under our barbaric divorce laws, marriage may not be dissolved by mutual consent, but it is necessary for one to accuse the other of shocking misconduct—infidelity, desertion, physical or mental cruelty in a whole bill of particulars.

Civilized people, unless their religion compels them, do not try to maintain a marriage, even when they still love their partners, if once convinced beyond doubt that the relationship is intolerable to the other. Catholics, who do not accept divorce, do recognize intolerable incompatibilities and sanction legal separations. Neither of the couple, under such circumstances, can marry again.

Those who are not under such restriction may refuse a divorce for a time, in the hope of restoring happy relations. This, if not motivated by vindictiveness, is wise. Others may refuse it for less commendable reasons. Under the laws of most states wives and husbands have considerable legal rights in their partners' estates, and the younger partner may harden in the expectation of getting a share of the other's property at some later date—property which he or she may have contributed nothing whatever to create. Some become so corroded with wounded vanity that, though they know their marriage is irreparably lost, they will do all they can to prevent the spouse from ever being happy with anybody else. Others, especially women, may divorce or not according to whether they calculate to obtain a larger allowance from a separated husband than from alimony.

But civilized people, of reasonable mind and generous heart, settle the matter between themselves. This in itself, however, is illegal. It is "collusion." It must be hidden. The farce of an accusation must be maintained.

Where adultery is the only legal ground for divorce, a farce is arranged to suit the nature of the law. The husband, whose wife has consented to a divorce, sees a lawyer—naturally one on the shyster side, since the object is to mock the law—and a case is created. Perhaps the husband has a woman friend whom he intends to marry when he is free, but he certainly is not going to risk dragging her into a scandal. Perhaps there is no woman in the case at all. But under the law, there has to be.

His lawyer fixes it up. He rents a hotel room for his client, hires a woman to furnish the evidence, and brings in a private detective who is theoretically employed by the suspicious wife. The husband and the woman he has never seen before and will never see again register at the hotel as husband and wife, and go to the room. She withdraws into the bathroom to undress and put on a negligee; he later does the same; and they sit down to conduct a halting conversation, have a few drinks, or play a game of gin rummy until the detective breaks in, discovers them together in undress, and brings forth the evidence for the wife to use before the court. The

(Continued on Page 116)

"I put wings on breakfast —with this quick, can't-fail coffee!"

Lady, your husband will murmur "Strictly from heaven!"—when he gets his coffee pronto and just right every morning. That's the magic of Nescafé*...!

Magically convenient! Just measure Nescafé to suit taste—add piping hot water and stir. Coffee's ready—perfect coffee! No guesswork for strength you like. And as easy to make coffee for the whole family as to make a single cup.

Magically fresh! With all the flavor and "lift" of freshly brewed coffee. Because Nescafé's choice, selected coffees are freshly brewed by experts. Then all the goodness is sealed in by added carbohydrates until you release it in the cup, fresh every time.

You'll spend less time in the kitchen when you serve Nescafé—for breakfast, lunch, dinner, or any time between. Always keep a jar on hand. Get Nescafé today—in the regular size or big economy size jar.

Heavenly Easy-to-get Breakfast

FRESH-FROZEN ORANGE JUICE
No squeezing

READY-TO-EAT CEREAL WITH FROZEN PEACHES
No cooking or peeling

NESCAFÉ

No pot, no grounds—just add piping hot water

If you like good coffee, you'll love Nescafé! Try it—see why more people drink Nescafé than any other instant coffee!

NESCAFÉ makes coffee right— every morning, noon or night!

Nescafé cuts coffee bills, too!

Serve Nescafé as your regular coffee—and save! Even a small jar makes about as many cups as a pound of ordinary ground coffee—yet costs less in actual cash.

BIG ECONOMY SIZE JAR SAVES EVEN MORE!

*Nescafé (pronounced NES-CAFAY) is the exclusive registered trade-mark of The Nestlé Company, Inc. to designate its soluble coffee product. It is ...ed of equal parts of pure soluble coffee and added carbohydrates (dextrins, maltose and dextrose) added solely to protect the flavor.

Indeed that is a cute chapeau
But now you better save some dough!

Serve Kraft Dinner often

IT MAKES DELICIOUS THRIFTY MACARONI-AND-CHEESE

When the budget simply must be stretched for that too-pretty-to-be-resisted bonnet, serve Kraft Dinner often as a hearty main dish. It's mighty good eating for so few pennies a serving. Tender, fluffy macaroni cooks to a "T" in just 7 speedy minutes. Luscious Kraft Grated is added in seconds. Tasty? Definitely! Get some tomorrow! See why smart homemakers call Kraft Dinner their favorite budget-stretcher!

Cooks in just 7 minutes!

ACME

Cornice jumping provides fun for the ski experts. Bruno Engler gets a running start downhill, then lifts himself into space at crest of opposite slope.

Under-Cover Stuff

By BERNARDINE KIELTY

IN Mrs. Roosevelt's column, If You Ask Me, for January, there was an error which the JOURNAL editors caught too late. Although the item referred to was changed as soon as the error was discovered, some copies of the magazine had unfortunately already gone through the presses. It is for readers of those copies that this correction is made.

A questioner assumed inaccuracy in an Under-Cover statement, and Mrs. Roosevelt underlined that assumption with, "That is pure exaggeration." The facts which were questioned by the inquiring reader, and denied by Mrs. Roosevelt, concerned the eccentricities of Mme. Chiang as a White House guest, and were mentioned in this column in a review of A PRESIDENT IS MANY MEN, by Merriman Smith. They are to be found on page 210 of Mr. Smith's book, and are further corroborated in an article by Mrs. Nesbitt, the Roosevelt housekeeper, in The Woman's Home Companion, October, 1946, page 23. . . . All the details of this incident are exceedingly trivial, but the accuracy of this column is not.

●

As one who got a black eye—of all things—on a skiing expedition and so blamed skiing, we take great pleasure in quoting Robert Ruark on the subject: "Once upon a time I was dumped into Denver, Colorado, into the heart of the ski country. There the children are born with barrel staves strapped to their feet, and the adult with the unfrostbitten nose is a sissy. I want to come out against skiing, as the most involved way I know of to fracture your fanny while dying simultaneously of pneumonia. It is unbelievable the lengths to which generally sane adults will go in order to make themselves miserable. It is a disease, I think, inaugurated by too many magazine covers and movie shorts depicting people soaring birdlike off peaks, and it is increasing annually to a point where it has become a sort of national vice, like love."

●

Another water item. Do you know how much water there is in one cubic foot? Seven and one half gallons. And every time you flush a toilet one cubic foot of water is consumed—seven and one half gallons!

The above fact was culled, not from the World Almanac, but from H. Allen Smith's LARKS IN THE POPCORN, of which so much more will be heard in this column that you'll either be sick to death of it, or go buy the book. Smith (LOW MAN ON A TOTEM POLE and LOST IN THE HORSE LATITUDES) is full of information in this opus. No nonsense, now that he has moved out of the city and become a country squire. How to learn to drive is one of his practical hints. He claims that it took his wife six months to learn how to drive the car,

(Continued on Page 16)

REPRINTED COURTESY THE SATURDAY EVENING POST

"You're learning swell, Helen. Remember, other cars are just as scared of you as you are of them."

SHARE THE FAMILY FUN

"fresh up" with Seven-Up!

BE A "FRESH UP" FAMILY!

Dad's like a kid again when Bill and Bobby bring out their construction set. And Mom and Betty can't resist a little "experting" on the sidelines. At all-family affairs 7-Up is a welcome part of everybody's fun. For 7-Up—the all-family drink—is a good friend of youngest and oldest alike.

Be a "fresh up" family . . . every member can be a "7-Up Steady." Enjoy good times together as you all "fresh up" with 7-Up. Notice the clean taste of 7-Up as its lively sparkle rolls over your tongue. Don't gulp your 7-Up. Sip it slowly! Order a case today wherever you see those famous 7-Up signs—and "fresh up" with 7-Up as often as you like!

You like it... it likes you!

COPYRIGHT 1949 BY THE SEVEN-UP COMPANY

This two-toned beauty comes out high, light and handsome—thanks to the double action of Calumet Baking Powder. Calumet gently raises your batter twice. First in the mixing bowl—and later in the oven—holding it high and light as a summer cloud!

Is he cr-a-z-y about chocolate cake? N'white cake, too!

Then give him both together—a luscious big slice of Chocolate Swirl Marble Cake. It's guaranteed to make him say—"Darling, this is one cake I could eat forever."

Yes, it's a gorgeous chocolate-and-white cake—and so easy to make! For Calumet's double action will help you all the way from the mixing bowl to the dessert plate!

Just take a bite and see why so many expert cakemakers swear by Calumet, the "double-acting" baking powder.

Notice, too, how the recipes for the new chiffon cake call for double-acting baking powder—which, of course, means Calumet. It's really wonderful for all your baking . . . biscuits, muffins, waffles. Come on, outshine yourself—try Calumet!

CHOCOLATE SWIRL MARBLE CAKE

1 square Baker's Unsweetened Chocolate, melted
1 tablespoon sugar
2 tablespoons water
¼ teaspoon soda
3 egg whites
4 tablespoons sugar
2 cups sifted Swans Down Cake Flour
2½ teaspoons Calumet Baking Powder
¾ teaspoon salt
½ cup shortening
1 cup sugar
*Milk (see below for amount)
1 teaspoon vanilla

*With butter, margarine, lard, use ¾ cup milk. With vegetable or any other shortening, use ⅞ cup milk.

Combine melted chocolate, 1 tablespoon sugar, water, and soda; blend. Cool.

Beat egg whites until foamy, add 4 tablespoons sugar gradually, and beat only until mixture will hold up in soft peaks. Set aside.

Sift flour once, measure, add baking powder and salt, and sift together three times. Cream shortening, add 1 cup sugar gradually, and cream together until light and fluffy. Add flour, alternately with milk, a small amount at a time, beating after each addition until smooth. Add vanilla. Add egg white meringue and beat thoroughly into batter. To ¼ of batter, add chocolate mixture, mixing only enough to blend.

Use 10 x 5 x 3-inch pan which has been lined on bottom with paper, then greased. Put batters by tablespoons into pan, alternating plain and chocolate mixtures. With knife, cut carefully through batter once in a wide zigzag course. Bake in moderate oven (350° F) 1 hour and 10 minutes, or until done. Spread with your favorite white frosting.

CALUMET BAKING POWDER

Double-acting... for Double-sure Success!

Calumet is a product of General Foods and a year and a half to learn how to drive the fenders. So Alfred, the garage mechanic, told him how he teaches women to drive. He takes them out to a country road, gets them into the driver's seat, has them shift immediately into reverse and start backing. They do nothing but back for two days—they back up for miles, back around corners, back into driveways, back to a curb. Then, after these two days of backing, Alfred lets them try going forward, and lo! it is the easiest thing in the world. They're drivers.

(Continued from Page 14)

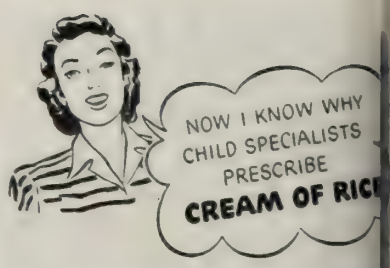
On their New Year's Day, which falls in February, the Chinese pay all their bills. If they don't settle, it's bad. They lose face. Consequently those Chinese who want to side-step their creditors have taken to hiding out that day in public bathhouses, with the result that bathhouse operators now double their rates for New Year's.

It's a phenomenon worth studying—the tides of cultural interest that sweep over the country: what impetus gets them going, and what turns them back. In the past ten years or so books have been in enormous demand. Not only best sellers, but books of specialized knowledge, collections of every kind, travel books,



"Boy! You certainly can ask the questions!"

knitting books, novels light and heavy. Magazine business has soared. People have wanted to read. Music, too, has become increasingly popular. Orchestras are being organized and supported in dozens of smaller cities. Serious music, for the first time in our history, has got a big popular hold. But the most striking development of the past year is the sudden interest of the general public in art. Museums have been trying for generations to stimulate it. But now, suddenly, fine art has taken hold. The big show of German paintings sent around the country may have had something to do with it. Hundreds of thousands of Americans saw the paintings of the old masters then for the first time. But the significant thing is that interest has not flagged. Prints are selling as they have never sold before, and it is safe to say that the old calendar chromos are coming down off the walls and French impressionists taking their place.

This immersion in art—painting or music or good books—is as wholesome as a good old-fashioned sermon. It builds up a resistance against the cheap and the vulgar and the surface-thin, which is very important in this day of too-easy slogans and propaganda.

One of the choicest small art books to come to this desk is DEGAS DRAWINGS. The color reproductions are beautiful,

(Continued on Page 18)

1. QUICKER NUTRITION
2. MORE ENERGY
3. EASIER TO DIGEST

3 advantages over any wheat, oat, or baby cere

Gives more nutrition faster. New life gins to pour into the system in a minutes! Gives more energy! And ...Vita B_1 B_2 and Niacin are added—plus iron—for rich, red blood and better growth! Is easier to digest! Many doctors recommend Cream of Rice as one of baby's first cereals.

Test data available upon professional request.*

READY IN ONLY 5 MINUTES!

FOR EXTRA RICH BROWN DELICIOUS

GRAVY

Use KITCHEN Bouquet

Here's the gravy secret go cooks have known for over years—Kitchen Bouquet offe the easy, never-fail way to g extra rich, brown, delicio gravy! Kitchen Bouquet ad no artificial flavor — simp steps up true, rich meat taste. Helpful recipe folder with every bottle.

*Today millions are enjoying Yellow Durkee's in quarter-pound prints!

In 30 states and the District of Columbia, Durkee's Margarine looks as good as it tastes. In these states, millions of lucky people are buying Durkee's all colored a luscious, table-ready yellow.

Mild and sweet and always country-fresh—it's the finest of spreads and the best for all your cooking and baking. Every pound contains 15,000 units of Vitamin A. Now on sale yellow in Alabama • Arizona • Arkansas • Colorado • Florida • Georgia • Idaho • Indiana • Kansas • Kentucky • Louisiana • Maine • Maryland • Massachusetts • Missouri • Mississippi • Nebraska • N. Jersey • N. Mexico • Nevada • No. Carolina • No. Dakota • Oklahoma • Rhode Island • So. Carolina • Tennessee • Texas • Utah • Virginia • W. Virginia • Dist. of Columbia.

If YOUR State Laws Prohibit Yellow Margarine . . .

. . . you can get Durkee's fine Margarine—without the 10¢ Federal Tax—in either of these two ways:

1. In the easy-coloring package with the color capsule in the bag.
2. Uncolored, in the money-saving package so familiar to you.

DURKEE FAMOUS FOODS

Glidden

Elmhurst, L. I., N. Y.; Chicago, Ill.; Norwalk, Ohio; Berkeley, Cal.

$20,950 GIVEN IN PRIZES
FOR Presto COOKER "Quickies"

HERE'S ONE!

More Food for what you pay... More Leisure every day with easy, safe, wonderful to use

More homemakers have purchased these best-kitchen-helpers than all other makes of pressure cookers combined. PRESTO COOKERS are the world's fastest-selling pressure cookers because they are unexcelled for cooking results, quality of construction, efficiency of performance, and beauty of design.

NATIONAL Presto REG. U. S. PAT. OFF. COOKERS

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping — REPLACEMENT OR A REFUND OF MONEY IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN

Illustrated is the new "FRY-MASTER"! Presto COOKERS are available in 9 models or matched sets of 2 to 5 units.

TOUGH OLD BIRDS OR BUDGET MEAT... WHEN PRESTO-COOKED, BECOME A TREAT.

A PRESTO-COOKED VEGETABLE, DONE IN A MINUTE... HAS MORE FLAVOR AND VITAMINS IN IT.

FOR BABY'S HEALTH AND BABY'S PLEASURE... PRESTO-COOK HIS DAILY MEASURE.

write a Presto COOKER "Quickie"

$20,950 GIVEN IN PRIZES!

1,054 PRIZES AWARDED AS FOLLOWS:

1st Prize $1,000 in Cash | 3rd Prize $500 in Cash
2nd Prize $750 in Cash | 4th Prize $250 in Cash
50 Additional Cash Prizes of $50.00 Each
1,000 Prizes of 1 "Companion" PRESTO COOKER Each

Here's a cute little contest you'll want to cut in on. Read the PRESTO COOKER "Quickies" in this advertisement. Then write one yourself.

It should be easy for you to win one of the 1,054 prizes in this simple, fascinating contest. No labels to send. Contest ends midnight March 31, 1949.

FREE ENTRY BLANK! GET YOURS NOW, AT YOUR PRESTO COOKER DEALER.

NATIONAL Presto REG. U. S. PAT. OFF. COOKER

GIVEN ... with Every PRESTO COOKER ... at no extra cost, a beautifully illustrated, 128-page recipe book, with easy-to-follow, illustrated instructions for PRESTO Cooking and Canning.

EXCLUSIVE!...Only PRESTO COOKERS have the Pressure-Tru, 5-10-15 lb. indicator. Safe! Sure! Simple! ... for hi-speed cooking and pressure canning.

Dealers displaying this emblem feature the complete line of PRESTO COOKERS, service and replacement parts.

PRESTO COOKERS are priced from $11.95

BUY ONE OR A SET OF THESE KITCHEN TREASURES ... FOR COOKING JOY AND EATING PLEASURES:

© 1949 N.P.C. CO.

"VEGE-MASTER" 3-quart. (Choice of 2 models.) Ideal for the all-alone homemaker.

"COOK-MASTER" 4-quart. (Choice of 2 models.) Holds 3 pint jars for canning.

"MEAT-MASTER" 6-quart. (Choice of 2 models.) Holds 5 pint jars for canning.

The "FRY-MASTER." For tastier, more appetizing, more easily digested foods, fried faster.

COOKER-CANNERS. Available in 3 sizes ... 12-quart, 16-quart and 21-quart. All equipped with 5-piece accessory set

Made by the World's Largest Manufacturer of Pressure Cookers and Canners.

NATIONAL PRESSURE COOKER COMPANY, General Offices and Factory: Eau Claire, Wisconsin

Branch Factories: Menomonie, Wis.; Los Angeles, Calif.; Wallaceburg, Ont., Canada

(Continued from Page 16)

and they're so bound—a picture on every other page—that they can be removed and framed. In this series (either out now or about to be out) are also Toulouse-Lautrec, Van Gogh and Matisse.

●

"Comic Striptococci" is the new disease that strikes children who read too many comic strips. We recently heard about a boy of four who picked up his seventeen-year-old brother's comic sheet and looked at the pictures. Later the same day his mother found him in the yard, stark naked under a tree, with a knife in his hand. When she rescued him and asked why he undressed and what he was doing with a knife, he showed her the comic book with a picture of a naked white man surrounded by Mongols, one of whom had a long knife and was about to cut off the white man's tongue.

REPRINTED COURTESY COLLIER'S

"Now will you stop saying how cute we are and pass over your dough?"

●

This department's favorite reading—the choice stems strictly from curiosity—is letters, journals, autobiographies, in this order because of the self-consciousness content, or rather lack of it. Letters, interestingly enough, seem to be the most natural. We were particularly delighted with a list of books which were discussed earlier this winter on Invitation to Learning (CBS). The program was called "By Their Words," and thirteen famous people were presented through their memoirs. Whether or not you heard the program, you'd enjoy reading the books—if you, too, have a bump of curiosity. Among them were William Allen White's AUTOBIOGRAPHY; ELLEN TERRY AND BERNARD SHAW—A CORRESPONDENCE; Jane Addams' THE LONG ROAD OF WOMAN'S MEMORY; Richard Wagner's LETTERS; Gandhi's AUTOBIOGRAPHY; George Moore's HAIL AND FAREWELL; Dwight Eisenhower's CRUSADE IN EUROPE.

Lest anyone make the mistake that Eisenhower's Crusade in Europe is "for men only," we want to emphasize that this is not the fact. Women will read it with intense personal excitement. It is a book for every JOURNAL reader—in a way, the autobiography of each one of us who lived through those war years. With every event recounted we are thrown back ourselves into those hard-living days. We remember with terrible vividness how we felt in 1942 when our ships were being sunk daily by the U-boat packs, and our boys lining up for the Navy and Merchant Marine. We remember the black fear that hung over us all when France fell and England was blitzed nearly out of existence. "None of us, not even the most sincere and analytical," says Eisenhower, "can recapture in his own heart and mind the fears and worries of those

(Continued on Page 21)

Some rice cooks like a witch's brew,

With double toil and trouble.

To make rice right get RIVER BRAND

And save yourself the trouble!

Many meals and many kinds of meals out of every package. Soup, main course and dessert dishes—all are easy to prepare and delicious.

The wonderful new rice you've been hearing about save time and fuss ... retain nutrients ... use this simple, tested recipe

HOW TO COOK RICE RIGHT

1 cup RIVER BRAND or CAROLINA BRAND Rice, 1 tsp. salt, 1½ cups cold water. Wash thoroughly in 5 or 6 waters and place in 3 qt. pot with tight fitting cover. Place over moderate heat and bring to vigorous boil. This should take 8-10 minutes. When steam and foam begin to escape, turn heat down as low as possible and cook the rice until tender—about 20 minutes. All water should be absorbed. Keep in warm place until ready to serve. Serves 5 to 6.

This tested recipe and 6 others on every package of River Brand and Carolina Brand Rice.

Milled and packed by RIVER BRAND RICE MILLS, INC.

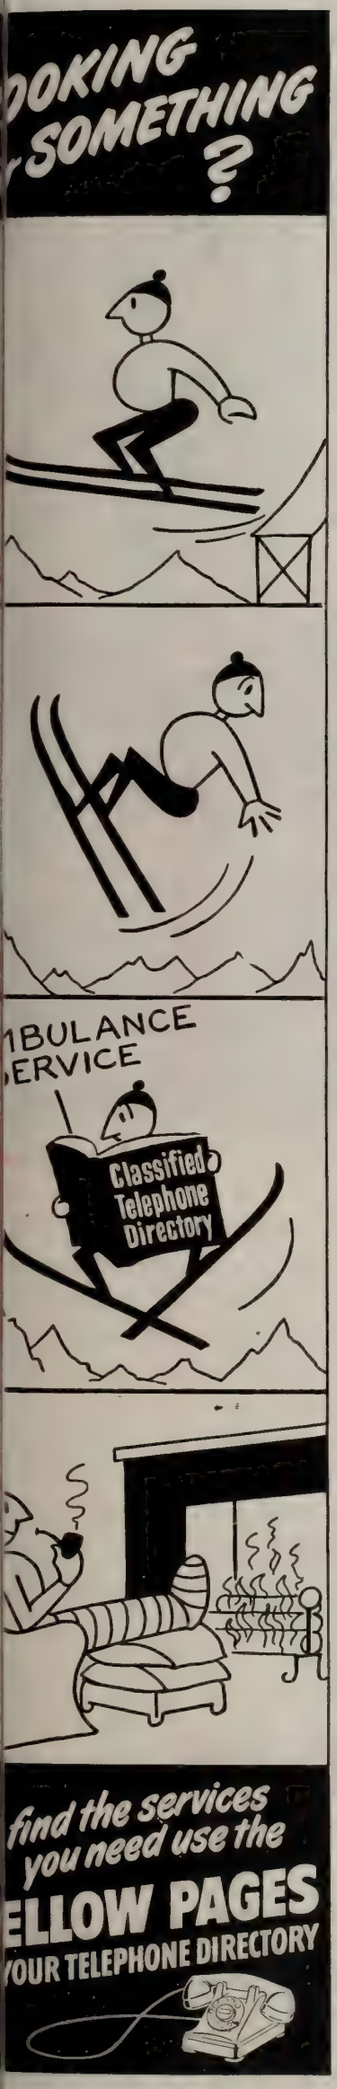
ugaring-off Party in Vermont in 1850." The young folks loved to invade the sugar camp and enjoy fresh-made maple sugar cooled in the snow.

The real maple sugar flavor you've longed for!

For Vermont Maid Syrup, our skilled blenders select maple sugar that is unusually full-flavored; then blend it with cane sugar. This blend gives you, at moderate cost, real maple sugar flavor that is uniformly rich and delicious.

Enjoy Vermont Maid Syrup today. Your grocer now has it in attractive glass jugs, ready for your table.



Penick & Ford, Ltd., Inc., Burlington, Vermont.

© 1948, P. & F., LTD., INC.

TOWLE
Captures in Sterling
(and holds forever)
Your taste . . . your tempo
Your way of life
TOWLE
STERLING

(Continued from Page 18)

days." But we do recapture them now, with his help.

We also recapture our own mistakes, and blush to remember how wrong most of us were most of the time. We remember the old sneer, popular in so many circles, about "tying up with the Fascists"—the old Murphy-Vichy-Darlan line! We are filled with shame to recall our arrogance in insisting on a second front, when we knew nothing whatsoever about what a second front meant in terms of protecting our soldiers' lives and defeating our enemy!

The immediate effectiveness of Crusade in Europe lies in its clarity and its comprehensibility. No military historian has written a more complete step-by-step account of a war with so few technical passages. There is not a page of the book that the most unmilitary-minded housewife cannot understand. At last the jigsaw puzzle of the great European campaign is straightened out in our minds. But this is much more than a military history—much, much more. Few books of our time present a greater number of highly important personalities at such close hand. Yet this is no "Inside the Great War." Here the figures are in action, and the judgment, if any, is made not by General Eisenhower, but by the reader. It is not the effect of these persons upon himself that he writes about. It is their effect upon the war.

The Supreme Commander had to stand up to Churchill, he had to be patient but firm with Roosevelt, he had to put Patton on the mat. He does not whitewash mistakes, and he does not donate paragraphs of praise. But oh, the trouble he had! With politicians, the higher ranking, the greater the trouble! With columnists, frightening the men on the eve of battle with their wild prognostications! And the constant dragging trouble with the impatient public, necessarily uninformed on some vital matters, but so often deliberately misguided by prevalent slogans!

Yet the war went on and was successfully won. It is the outstanding epoch in modern history, the most significant passage in our own country's history since the Revolution. We cannot let this opportunity to understand it pass us by.

"People who are not in love," says Marcel Proust, "fail to understand how an intelligent man can suffer because of a very ordinary woman. This is tantamount to expressing surprise that anyone should be stricken with cholera because of a creature so insignificant as the comma bacillus." This is one of the bits from THE MAXIMS OF MARCEL PROUST, edited and translated by Justin O'Brien.

BY PERMISSION, COPYRIGHT 1945 THE NEW YORKER MAG. INC.

"It's not that I don't love you, Allen. It's just that I don't want to get round-shouldered."

LESTER Betsy Ross Spinet

perfect piano choice

Bring the beauty of piano music into your home with the genuine Lester Betsy Ross Spinet. It will inspire children and adults to play . . . will be a lasting source of entertainment and relaxation for all.

Built by the same family for 61 years . . . every Betsy Ross Spinet is a triumph of piano design and construction; a lasting investment in true musical excellence.

Famous for glorious tone, responsive touch and full volume . . . today's models are styled to blend with every decorative plan; sized to fit every room.

See . . . hear . . . and play the latest Betsy Ross Spinets at your dealer . . . who will gladly arrange terms to suit you.

Guaranteed for ten years; made ONLY by the Lester Piano Manufacturing Company, Inc., builders of world renowned Lester Grand Pianos.

a beautiful piano with a magnificent tone

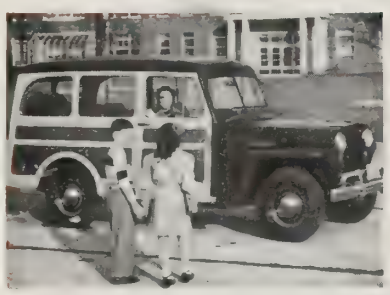
ONE name quality price sold by America's foremost piano dealers

MAIL THIS COUPON FOR ILLUSTRATED BOOKLET

Lester Piano Manufacturing Company, Inc., Lester 13, Pennsylvania

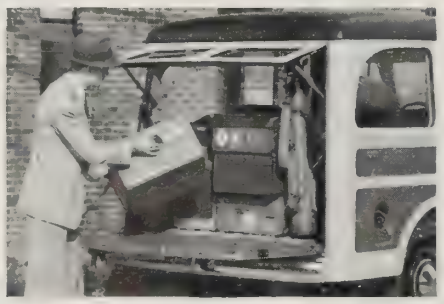
Send me your 24 page illustrated book showing piano arrangement in the home (Enclose 10c for postage)

Name _____



Address _____

City _____



Zone No. _____ State _____ —3Q J

Foreign Sales Representatives: H. A. ASTLETT & CO., 27 William Street, New York 5, N. Y.

Was ever a car so busy!

A grand car for children—only two doors and an all-steel body and top for extra safety. Big windows keep rear-seat riders from feeling "closed-in".

There's more usable luggage space in the 'Jeep' Station Wagon—ample for everything the whole family needs for vacation and camping trips.

Women particularly love the easy handling and parking of the 'Jeep' Station Wagon. It turns in less space, and there is wide vision forward and all around.

Sticky fingers, muddy shoes—even dogs on the seat—needn't worry you. Upholstery, interior panelling and the floor of the 'Jeep' Station Wagon are washable!

Any family who owns a 'Jeep' Station Wagon will tell you it's the busiest car they ever owned because it is the most practical and useful.

You can't imagine a car more perfect for families. It is wonderfully smooth riding and easy to handle and park. There is lots of room in its all-steel body . . . big windows all around . . . and hardy, easily-cleaned seat materials.

The 'Jeep' Station Wagon has big carrying space at the rear, making parcels or luggage accessible from inside or out. And if there's something large to haul—a bicycle, chair or mower—you can let down the tailgate or even remove the rear seats.

Economical? Yes, indeed—on upkeep as well as running costs.

See a Willys-Overland dealer for the car that fits family needs.

'Jeep'

Station Wagon

WILLYS-OVERLAND MOTORS, TOLEDO • MAKERS OF AMERICA'S MOST USEFUL VEHICL

Fun For Defense Forces . . .

ecreation Volunteers Needed

MARGARET HICKEY

ORALE" is a word we use a good deal in time of war. During the years 1941 through 1945, civilians worked hard to keep high the morale of the men defending our country. lay the word seems remote—as does our obligation to share the ntry's program of defense. Morale has great significance, how-, for the 250,000 young men who will soon be drafted to serve in Army and Navy. And the word is close to the families of these ng men, who know that a peacetime military force is often left iout wholesome and healthy facilities for normal recreation. hat is your community doing to keep these young men from ig touch with civilian life? Have you a part in this program? se new men in uniform, generally in their formative years, need simple, friendly services which civilians can give. It may be a sant place to read in off-duty hours, or a snack bar where soft ks and homemade cookies are dispensed. These are the little gs which help morale. The USO, the Red Cross, the community ice clubs, the churches—each should have a part in the business eacetime morale, and there is a place in this program for you.

This Town is Friendly

ransplant 2700 sailors, plus 1000 wives and children, from all s of the country, into a little community of 1762 inhabitants, what is the result? Ordinarily, one might think, all 3700 new-ers would be highly uncomfortable and homesick. Green Cove ngs, Florida, met this difficult situation successfully. Rated as olated area, 26 miles away from the nearest big town—Jack-ille—Green Cove Springs closes up tightly at 10 P.M. There is movie, but no evening bus or trains.

ubs, religious groups and individuals banded together to d the sojourners the recreational advantages of a big-city. The USO co-operates with all these groups. The icemen's Center, in the Methodist Church, is the center tivity. Between two and three thousand persons visit the er each month. Navy wives bring their own lunch and d the afternoon learning various handicrafts. There are weekly es, with hostesses transported from near-by Jacksonville for single sailors. There are Sunday-night suppers with fried en and cream gravy as only Southern cooks can make it. e are the carpentry shop, a music hour, educational movies, skits, birthday parties, beach picnics, a Bible school.

re is a pattern of superb community co-operation. Green Springs was determined to make its naval visitors welcome.

Good Times in Philadelphia

uated conveniently at 17th and Locust streets, the Philadel-United Service Club has drawn thousands of soldiers and s into its hospitable halls for over thirty years.

vice weekly a dance orchestra plays in the club ballroom; a evening there is a square dance with an old-time caller. y night at ten o'clock there are refreshments—punch, e and cookies. Sixty men may be accommodated in the bed-s, for as little as 75 cents per night. For a dime you can use utomatic washers and driers provided in the laundry.

aj. Gen. Floyd L. Parks, the Army's Chief of Public Informa-urges skilled volunteers—men and women—to help out with y shops, soldier shows, music and sports. "To fill this great the Army has invited the Red Cross to assist in recruiting nteer talent from local chapters to aid the Army's on-post al Services recreational programs at posts, camps and sta-throughout the United States."

THE END

New Jersey Plan

MRS. WILLIAM GROBLER was still sitting before her desk at eleven o'clock one November night, back in 1917. From time to time she stared off into space, then turned back to the paper before her and wrote hurriedly. It was three hours later that she finally completed a letter of several pages, sealed it in a large envelope, and addressed it to the War Department.

Maie Grobler lived in Moorestown, New Jersey, then, as she does today. Since her home was only a few miles from Camp Dix, she saw a good deal of the thousands of young men who had just been called into the service of their country. She and her husband worried about the sort of things these young men turned to in off-duty hours. They saw them lounging idly about in the near-by towns or hanging around pool halls, cheap restaurants. Mrs. Grobler believed that, if war must be, then civilians should do their best to keep these young men in uniform in touch with the influences they were missing in their own homes. Why couldn't the women of near-by communities, also interested in the welfare of such young men, provide a meeting place with homely, wholesome activities for them?

That was the way the highly successful Community Center, Inc., at Camp Dix, New Jersey, was begun. The Army agreed with Mrs. Grobler. They notified her that she had their approval to begin just such a service. It has kept the men at Dix in touch with home influences—beginning in 1917, again in 1940, and is ready to do so again whenever the Army calls. Right now the fine building occupied during World War II is operated by Army Special Services. (Continued on Page 121)

PHOTO BY MORRIS ENGEL-SCOPE

This trainee has worked hard all day, and now with an off-post pass he stands at the bus stop in Wrightstown, adjacent to Fort Dix, wondering where to go, what to do. During the war, Community Service had the answer.

Dorothy Cox designed it...

Crisp cottons lead the fashion trend for 1949 . . . top designers recommend starching with LINIT* to keep cottons crisp, fresh and charming . . . LINIT, the superior starch, makes a thin, fluid mixture that penetrates the fabric, restores its lovely finish . . . once you use LINIT for starching you will always prefer it —for perfect results, for ease of ironing.

THE NEW Crisp LOOK
This Lovely
RESORT-SUMMER FORMAL designed by Dorothy Cox for The McMullen Company will soon be featured (about $50) in smart shops everywhere. For stores nearest you, write LINIT Starch, Dept. DC, 17 Battery Place, New York 4, N. Y.

...adds the finishing touch to dresses, blouses, children's clothes, housecoats, men's shirts, curtains, bed and table linens. Directions on every LINIT package. All grocers sell LINIT.

Reference Library

What Do Sub-Debs Talk About?

WHY, all sorts of things that interest a wide-awake gal—careers and dates, fellows and the latest hair styles. They're interested in personality and looks, and all of them love a party!

When the Subject is Careers

Here are twenty-one booklets packed full of pros and cons, possible salaries, qualifications and countless details on careers that are open to Sub-Debs today.

2440. MODELING . . . . . 10c.
2441. HOME ECONOMICS . . . . . 10c.
2442. JOURNALISM . . . . . 10c.
2443. SECRETARIAL WORK . . . . 10c.
2444. FASHION DESIGNING . . . . 10c.
2445. TEACHING . . . . . 10c.
2446. NURSING . . . . . 10c.
2447. LIBRARY SCIENCE . . . . . 10c.
2448. LAW . . . . . 10c.
2449. FINE AND COMMERCIAL ART . 10c.
2450. PHYSICAL THERAPY . . . . 10c.
2451. THEATER . . . . . 10c.
2452. SOCIAL WORK . . . . . 10c.
2453. MEDICINE . . . . . 10c.
2454. AIRLINE HOSTESSING . . . . 10c.
2455. DANCING . . . . . 10c.
2456. MUSIC . . . . . 10c.
2457. MERCHANDISING . . . . . 10c.
2458. PUBLIC RELATIONS . . . . 10c.
2459. ADVERTISING . . . . . 10c.
2460. RADIO . . . . . 10c.

When Personality is the Question

1022. HOW TO BE POPULAR. The goal every Sub-Deb seeks. 5c.
2275. DON'T SHY AWAY. Confidence for the faint heart. 5c.
1539. DO GIRLS LIKE YOU? They like a really popular gal. 5c.
1514. PERSONALITY REPORT CARD. A chart to check your rating. 5c.

With a Party to be Planned

1515. FUN OUTDOORS. Ideas for outdoor parties. 5c.
2254. IT'S A DATE FOR A PARTY. An idea for twelve holidays. 5c.
1504. LET'S EAT. New ideas to solve the eats problems. 5c.
1376. PARTIES TO GIVE. Suggestions for different parties. 10c.
2210. LET'S HAVE A PARTY. And make it a party that's fun. 5c.
1691. HALLOWEEN ANTICS. Hints for the biggest fun night of all. 5c.
2307. DANCE DOIN'S. A big help for the dance committee. 5c.
1303. LET'S DANCE. More ideas for your next prom. 5c.
2271. BANQUETS TO GIVE. Plans for twelve big events. 10c.
1377. GAMES TO PLAY. To keep the gang busy. 10c.

If Men are Under Discussion

1192. GENTLEMEN PREFERRED. Hints for the fellows on all sorts of etiquette and general behavior problems. 5c.
1668. KNOW YOUR GIRL. Have fun with all the gals. Here's how. 5c.
1546. IF I WERE A MAN! What a gal likes in a date. 5c.

When Date-Ability is Considered

1658. DO BOYS LIKE YOU? You certainly hope so. Why not make sure? 5c.
2269. HOW ABOUT A DATE? What gal doesn't want to hear this? 5c.
1532. KNOW YOUR MAN. Be a good all-around date. 5c.
1669. GOING STEADY. Going steady must mean you like a certain fellow very much. Hints to help you keep things running smoothly for a long, long time. 5c.
1228. RATING FOR DATING. Check up on your date appeal. 5c.

When Looks are in Mind

2324. COUNT YOUR CALORIES. Are you eating too much or too little? 5c.
1207. MIRROR MAGIC. If your complexion is a problem, this may be your answer. 5c.
2268. GLAMOUR FOR GLASSES. Wear them and be smart. 5c.
2277. FACTS ABOUT FIGURES. Take care of those extra pounds. 5c.
2322. CLOTHES CHECKUP. What colors and fashions should you wear? 5c.
2253. LET'S BE LOVELY. Special hints to help you. 5c.
1378. THE WAY YOU WEAR YOUR HAIR. New styles for Sub-Debs. 5c.

We will gladly send any of these booklets if you'll order by name and number. They will be mailed anywhere in the United States and Canada upon receipt of stamps, cash, check or money order. Do not send stamped, addressed envelopes or Savings Stamps. Readers in all foreign countries should send International Reply Coupons, purchased at their post office. Please address all requests to the Reference Library, Ladies' Home Journal, Philadelphia 5, Penna.

They're young . . . they're fun . . . they're NEWS! Avondale

Companion Colors

Because Avondale fabrics are dyed-in-the-yarn, you get the exact same colors in solid shades and stripes.

See how you can make a change-about wardrobe with Avondale chambrays in Companion Colors. The same stay-fast, dyed-in-the-yarn colors are woven into solid shades and stripes . . . and the pattern is woven through so that both sides are bright. Soft, Avondale chambrays are easy to handle, drape and sew . . . sturdy, they smile through washings and wear. They're Sanforized* all cotton . . . in a range of qualities and prices . . . in ready-to-wear and piece-goods.

Look for the yellow tag that identifies these Avondale Carol chambrays in Companion Colors.

AVONDALE

dyed-in-the-yarn fabrics—the stay-fast colors are woven-in

58 Worth Street, New York 13

*Residual shrinkage less than 1%.

Start with the star of your wardrobe, a pert young dress, in solid color Carol chambray. . . . Add matching Carol chambray stripes, in a separate petticoat, to make it long and party-pretty.

Vogue Patterns—Dress-3259, Petticoat-6359

Use another matching Carol chambray stripe to tailor the same dress for town—with a saucy jacket, and pouch bag. . . . Then, take to the solid color again, for gloves and a jaunty beret.

Vogue Patterns—Jacket-6668, Bag-9837, Gloves-9334, Beret-6124

Making Marriage Work

By CLIFFORD R. ADAMS

Ph. D., The Pennsylvania State College, Department of Psychology

If your husband is susceptible to flirtatious females, here are some ideas you might consider.

Susceptible Husbands

HAVEN'T you often, at a get-together, seen some female make a bid for the attention of another woman's husband? Usually she herself is married, though not too happily; conceited, frivolous, and often not very pretty. She probably isn't seeking a serious affair; what she wants is an exciting diversion to build up her ego.

But what about the wife's feelings? Perhaps she realizes that her husband loves her and that this cocktail twosome will probably be ancient history in a few hours. At the same time, she is hurt; and if the couple's behavior is blatant (especially likely after drinks have weakened inhibitions), her evening is ruined. What's worse, she can't get rid of a nagging uneasiness, for she knows that serious affairs often have trivial beginnings.

Many husbands simply shrug off the advances of provocative females. However, there are others who are particularly susceptible to plays for their attention, just as there are some men who are particularly susceptible to alcohol. And, like the social drinker who becomes an alcoholic, the social flirt may become a philanderer.

The wife who has a susceptible husband usually develops some kind of technique for meeting the situation. Some wives make an excuse (a headache, a forgotten appointment) for leaving the party early. This transparent device fools no one, especially not the husband.

Another wife joins the tête-à-tête, clinging to her husband like a leech. But this, too, is unsatisfactory, for he resents it and may take to going out alone. Nor is "making a scene" likely to help.

What, then, can she do? Of course, if the husband has reasonable basis for dissatisfaction with her, that is another story. But suppose she is a genuinely good wife—an efficient homemaker, a steadfast partner and an attractive companion—and still her husband is an easy conquest for every flirtatious female he meets?

Before attempting to figure out a plan of action, try to understand the man himself. Underlying his susceptibility there is almost always a basic emotional immaturity. Such a husband is like an adolescent child: his affections and emotions are easily swayed, and he constantly yearns for new experience and adventure.

Coupled with the husband's emotional immaturity may be other contributing factors: job dissatisfaction, overwork, lack of outside recreation, infrequent dating before marriage. Because so many things enter into susceptibility, any plan a wife develops must be both remedial and preventive.

Once you understand the reasons for his behavior, perhaps you can correct them. But this is a long-range program. Meanwhile, if yours is a susceptible husband, here are some ideas you might consider:

- After leaving your wraps at a party, rejoin your husband. Mingle with the guests, moving about as a couple, until everybody has been greeted.
- If friends your husband enjoys are present, maneuver him into their group and get a discussion under way on some topic that genuinely interests him. This may absorb his attention all evening.
- Avoid seeming to keep him in tow, but be around when and if his drinking shows effect. This may slow down the drinking, and brake his approachability.
- Spot the stray females. If one of them seems inclined to make overtures toward your husband, join her and keep her occupied. You can also keep other guests moving in her direction.
- If a woman does get your husband cornered, set up a distraction. Start a game, such as charades; ask him to tell a favorite joke, or to demonstrate a new parlor trick—any tactful device for interrupting will do.
- Or divide the woman's attention. Take over some unattached male and introduce him to her. She may prefer him to your husband—in any event, she now has three persons to cope with.
- Perhaps you can invent a reasonable excuse for getting him out of her clutches. If the host needs help in the preparation of refreshments, have him ask your husband to lend a hand.
- If another tantalizing female is available, trot her over to meet your husband. An element of risk is involved, but again two attractions may offset each other.
- Desperate remedies, though generally undesirable, are sometimes necessary. In emergencies, one wife I know contrives an "accident." A drink or a plate of food is somehow upset on the adversary, who is forced to retire from the field. This drastic lesson may not teach the husband—but it is likely to teach her!

These methods won't solve your problem, but they may relieve it, especially if applied with patience, tolerance and a sense of humor.

Ask Yourself: Are You Jealous?

Whether you are single or married, jealousy can make you very miserable. Answer these questions with a thoughtful "Yes" or "No."

1. Do you fear losing your mate to another woman?
2. When at a party with him, do you ever feel lonely?
3. Do you often ask him to justify his actions?
4. Are you suspicious of his interest in other girls?
5. Does it bother you when he praises another woman?
6. Are you troubled by his seeming neglect of you?
7. Would you like to make your mate jealous?
8. Are you afraid that you are unattractive?
9. Does his behavior often make you want to cry?
10. Did you have few dates before meeting your mate?
11. Do you keep any record of the "hurts" he brings you?
12. Are you afraid you two may break up sometime?
13. Do you have many moods or temper outbursts?
14. To be happy, must you have much praise and attention?
15. Does insomnia often follow something he says or does?
16. If you lost him, would you be through with men?
17. Does he seem overcritical of you?
18. Is it hard for you to make friends?
19. Is your mate unusually attractive to women?
20. Does he seem to disregard your feelings and wishes?

If you have 15 or more yes answers you are probably a very jealous and unhappy person. A score of 9 is average. With a high score, try to achieve more confidence in yourself; otherwise you may unfairly accuse your mate of fickleness or susceptibility!

Building Self-Confidence

SUCCESSFUL living—and success in marriage—depends greatly upon confidence in self. Without this quality, your thinking will often be confused, and so will your actions.

A confident wife meets her everyday tasks and responsibilities with serenity. When a problem arises, she faces it squarely, decides it as promptly and as well as possible—then resists futile worry. Her habit of thinking ahead minimizes disorder and confusion.

Emma is just the opposite. Dominated in youth by her iron-willed mother, Emma has always been unsure of herself. Whether choosing a hat or planning the next meal for her family, Emma wastes time and energy because she cannot make up her mind. The brown hat or the navy; meat loaf or lamb stew—the simplest decisions confuse and worry her because she doesn't trust her own judgment.

Much as this complicates the household routine, the psychological effects on her family are worse. Yet if she only knew it, Emma has the qualities of mind and heart that would enable her to be a competent and valued wife and mother. Conscientious, intelligent and affectionate, she is also at least as attractive as the average. But her good traits are largely wasted because she herself doesn't believe in them.

It isn't easy to build self-confidence, but the possible gain more than justifies the effort involved. If you are unsure of yourself, here are some steps which you might try:

- Evaluate your appearance. Sitting in front of the mirror, compare yourself with your friends—your hair, your skin, your features. Aren't you honestly about as good-looking as the average?
- But don't be satisfied with this. Set out to make the most of your good points, and to minimize your bad ones. Develop a new hair style, experiment with make-up; and if you're overweight, diet. Use your clothes to enhance your appearance, not merely to make you presentable. Even a meager wardrobe responds to attention.
- Next, take inventory of your activities, including household duties as well as outside pursuits. Compare yourself with other wives of about your age, income and educational background. You undoubtedly excel in something. Whatever your skills and talents—baking pies, arranging flowers or making clothes—learn to be proud of them.
- At the same time—and this is equally important—don't try to ignore your weaknesses. Admit them, remember that other people have faults, too, and then set out to improve. If your poor bridge game is a handicap, get a self-teacher and bone up. If you're shy among strangers, force yourself to open the conversation a few times—you may soon find it pleasant.
- And this leads us to the hardest step of all: convince yourself that every normal person lacks confidence in some respects. Inside, many of your friends are just as timorous as you are. Try to think about their feelings instead of worrying about your own. For self-forgetfulness is a long step toward self-confidence.

Do You Agree?

Can a man who loves his wife be physically attracted to another woman?

Yes; in fact, he might be attracted to several, particularly if his relationship with his wife is not completely satisfying. That does not mean he loves the other woman.

My Dream Came True in LONDON

When Tom Kissed My Hand

"M'Lady, a token", Tom teased. Then he bowed low and kissed my hand right in the middle of Piccadilly Circus! I thanked Jergens Lotion a thousand times for keeping my hands so smooth... 'cause I know Tom noticed them...

When we went to the Tower of London, Tom held my hands so tightly. "These soft, little hands are more precious than the Crown Jewels!" he said.

Later that evening, we watched the Thames glide by Westminster Bridge. "You hold my heart in your sweet, adorable hands... forever," Tom whispered. And as we kissed... I knew it would be forever for us.

It's fun being Mrs. Tom! Tom buys my Jergens Lotion now! After all, it started this handkissing.

Kissable hands are softened, smoothed... protected with today's super-creamed Jergens Lotion. Actually two ways finer, it protects your hands longer; keeps them softer and smoother. Being a liquid, Jergens Lotion quickly furnishes the softening moisture thirsty skin needs. Doctors rely on two special ingredients for skin softening. Your Jergens Lotion contains both!

Hollywood Stars use Jergens 7 to 1 to keep their hands soft and ever young. Keep your hands lovelier the way the Stars do. Still only 10¢ to $1.00 (plus tax). Never oily or sticky.

Now yours—Jergens Beauty Kit! Contains generous samples of Jergens Lotion, Powder, Face Cream and Dryad Deodorant! Send 10¢ to The Andrew Jergens Co., Box 6, Dept. 45A, Cincinnati 14, Ohio. Sorry, offer good in U.S.A. only, expires Dec. 31, 1949.

More Women use Jergens Lotion than any other Hand Care in the World

Ten ways to get a Date!

UNLESS you've just been elected Miss Super-Date of 1949 by the local Casanova crowd, unless you're booked up solid from now until the last dance of your senior year, or unless you're just plain not interested in boys (cross your fingers when you say that!), use this list for future reference. It's a list of pretested, boy-approved ways to get a date that any girl can use. No guaranties offered, but you can make every suggestion work—if you're smart enough to work it right. Here's how:

1. Do nothing at all. Just keep well groomed and appealing at all times. Make yourself available in the usual places: at school, the corner drugstore, the library reading room on Wednesday nights. Never forget a first name, smile when you're smiled at and keep your fingers crossed. Out of the clear blue sky (or maybe it's because there was a moon that night), a boy will ask you for a date. If he comes riding up on a big white horse in a crew cut and a jacket by Brooks Brothers—honeychile, you're daydreaming. But if he pulls up at the curb in a secondhand convertible with a familiar smile and a football sweater in your school colors, it's a dream come true! You've got the date you wished for.

2. Sadie Hawkins started it and now it's a national habit. You ask him for a date. Don't call him on the phone "just to talk," don't suggest a movie, a basketball game or a stop-over at the corner casbah, since these are traditionally boy-asks-girl dates. Get your Sub-Deb club, church group or special crowd of gal pals to plan a definite kind of party—a turnabout party to which girls ask boys—and then give him a ring. To do the thing up in proper Dogpatch style, you might even pick him up at his door, with vegetable corsage in hand, for the big evening! But the important thing is, you've got a date—and you got it all by yourself!

3. Yes—we recommend blind dates. But you're going into this thing with your eyes wide open! A blind date, arranged through friends, is an acceptable type of teen-aged dating—and a good way to meet new men. So if you really need a date, or just a change of talent, for the big dance—ask one of your girl friends to arrange it. Or make yourself ready, willing and at the front door by eight o'clock if someone suggests, "There's a friend I'd like you to meet." Let's face it; some of the smoothest boys in the world you haven't even met yet—are you willing to take a "blind" chance?

4. Want to make a date, a friend and a compliment at the same time? Then save your best invitation, for the biggest school party or the top Hi-Y Club dance, for some lucky fellow whom you haven't dated—at least, not yet. Boys are flattered by important dance bids, and don't overlook the shy guys on your "possible" list, for nine out of ten teen-aged boys like to go on dates. For a big party, make a date by phone or in person a week ahead of time; for a big dance, a fellow needs at least two weeks' warning (and two weeks' extra time to think over what a nice gal you are!).

5. The "love thy neighbor" rule wasn't made to guide a girl's date life, but sometimes it helps. Keep your eyes—and the right smile—on the boy next door, the fellow who delivers the groceries on Saturday and the chap who works part time at the fountain at the corner drugstore. Some of the characters you've known since your sandbox social days can grow up suddenly and turn into interesting date material for lonesome nights. So don't neglect old friends—you can meet some of the nicest people in some of the most familiar places!

6. And what's a good girl friend for if she can't help you out once in a while? Of course you can't latch onto any beau boy who's already been spoken for, but maybe Susie will be willing to share John and an evening with you. Make the suggestion subtly: "Why don't you and Johnnie come over to my house tomorrow—we can all listen to records"; or come right out and say it: "If you and John are going to the movies Friday, do you think he might get someone for me?" It's a rare girl friend whose boy friend doesn't have a boy friend who'd also like to have a girl friend—and the whole thing can be simpler than you think, once you try it!

7. Comes a time in every gal's life when she has to begin doing things for herself. When's your next birthday coming up? Any birthday is good for a party; or try a holiday; or even a plain old Saturday night will do. All you need for props is a little background music or a few games, some popcorn and soft drinks and a few fellows and girls on the party list. And since you're playing Elsa Maxwell, j. g., this time, you can make the rules for the evening. That's right. Those three extra men on the list belong to you!

8. Do you believe in advertising? Well, a high-school gal can't put up billboards or use singing commercials to build up a date reputation, but she can get herself talked about in the right way and in the right places. Nobody can discover you sulking away at home, but if you're "seen" you'll likely be "talked about." And if you're talked about, fellows will want to ask for a date. So get with the crowd, get out where you can be looked at. Join the smooth girls in the cheering section for after-school basketball games, try reciting more often in English class, join a club which really interests you and get to know the other members. Popular girls are seen and heard.

9. Afternoon coffee at your house with Mrs. Jones may not be your idea of the most exciting way to kill an hour, but Mrs. Jones is a good friend of your mother, she's interested in you and, come to think of it, doesn't she have a son just your age? In trying to patch up your date life, don't forget family friends, your mother's chums, neighbors with nephews or teen-aged cousins who could fill in a dateless dance evening. Sometimes you don't need a date that's strictly dream stuff, but a date that will simply "get you there"—and you'd be surprised how handsome a cousin can look to the other gals on the dance floor!

10. Heard from Montgomery Clift lately? Any news from Gregory Peck? Well, then—how are things with Peter Lawford these days? No word from old Pete either? After all the letters you wrote, the pictures you clipped out of fan magazines, and that invitation you sent him for the sweater hop? Then let's cross this type of useless "date dreaming" off the list (too much gloomy wishing and hoping can become a teen-age habit) and get busy on the suggestions above. "A boy in your home town is worth two in Hollywood," as the old saying goes, and if you're a smart girl—list in hand—you'll get going!

THE SUB-DEB

EDITED BY MAUREEN DALY

In as little as 3 Minutes!

PRELL REMOVES DANDRUFF...

LEAVES HAIR RADIANT!

Doctors' Examinations Proved It!

Yes, examinations by a group of doctors proved that Procter & Gamble's new, different, emerald-clear Radiant*Creme shampoo with the patented cleansing ingredient removes unsightly dandruff in as little as 3 minutes! They proved too, that regular Prell shampoos control such dandruff. After a Prell shampoo your hair and your scalp are really clean—scientifically cleaner than with the finest, most expensive soap shampoo you can buy, cream or liquid.

And What Glorious, Glamorous Radiance After Prell!

Your hair simply shines with sparkling loveliness when you shampoo with Prell—more such loveliness than ever possible with any soap shampoo—even the most expensive cream or liquid. And your hair is soft, smooth, manageable—easier to curl and to set, easy to do in any style. Get a tube today!

CREATED BY PROCTER & GAMBLE

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

*T. M. REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.

attering radiance for every shade of ir—fair, dark, or gray—from this new, fferent, marvelous Radiant-Creme.

Look at the sparkle from their Prell-washed hair! And Prell is fun to use from that handy tube—there's no liquid to run down and get into your eyes!

What lather! Prell goes farther than any other known shampoo—cream or liquid—because it's more concentrated!

Now— JUST WHEN SEWING CAN SAVE YOU THE MOST...
The finest SINGERS ever made!

JUST WAIT TILL YOU GET a look at the beautiful brand-new SINGERS!

Try them. See how smoothly they stitch, how evenly—on any fabric from organdy to corduroy.

You'll know in a minute they're the finest machines ever made. Machines that make it easier than ever to sew smart clothes at a saving.

And to help you stitch your way to style, your SINGER SEWING CENTER offers lessons, notions, dress forms. Do come in as fast as you can!

So Many Beautiful Models! Choose Yours Now!

• SINGER has a style to fit your home, a price to fit your budget. Period and modern designs from ~~$89.50 to~~ $300. Easy payment plan. Liberal allowance for your present machine.

• De Luxe Modern Desk is typical of SINGER's finest cabinet models. Stitches forward or backward. Goes over pins. Has non-glare spotlight, easy threading. Matching stool available.

• SINGER* Featherweight Portable. Outsells any other model in the world. Weighs 11 pounds. Does work of a full-size machine. Comes in handy carrying case.

• Basic attachments come with new SINGER. Many others available, including zipper foot, hemstitcher. Buttonholer, above, makes non-fraying buttonholes in a jiffy.

• Need sewing supplies? Get them all at your SINGER SEWING CENTER! They'll cover buttons, make belts, too. Give course of lessons as a gift with new machine. Choose your SINGER now!

• This glamorous soft-shouldered gown was made from Vogue Pattern # S-4830. You make it as you learn, in 8 two-hour lessons at your SINGER SEWING CENTER.

FOR YOUR PROTECTION!

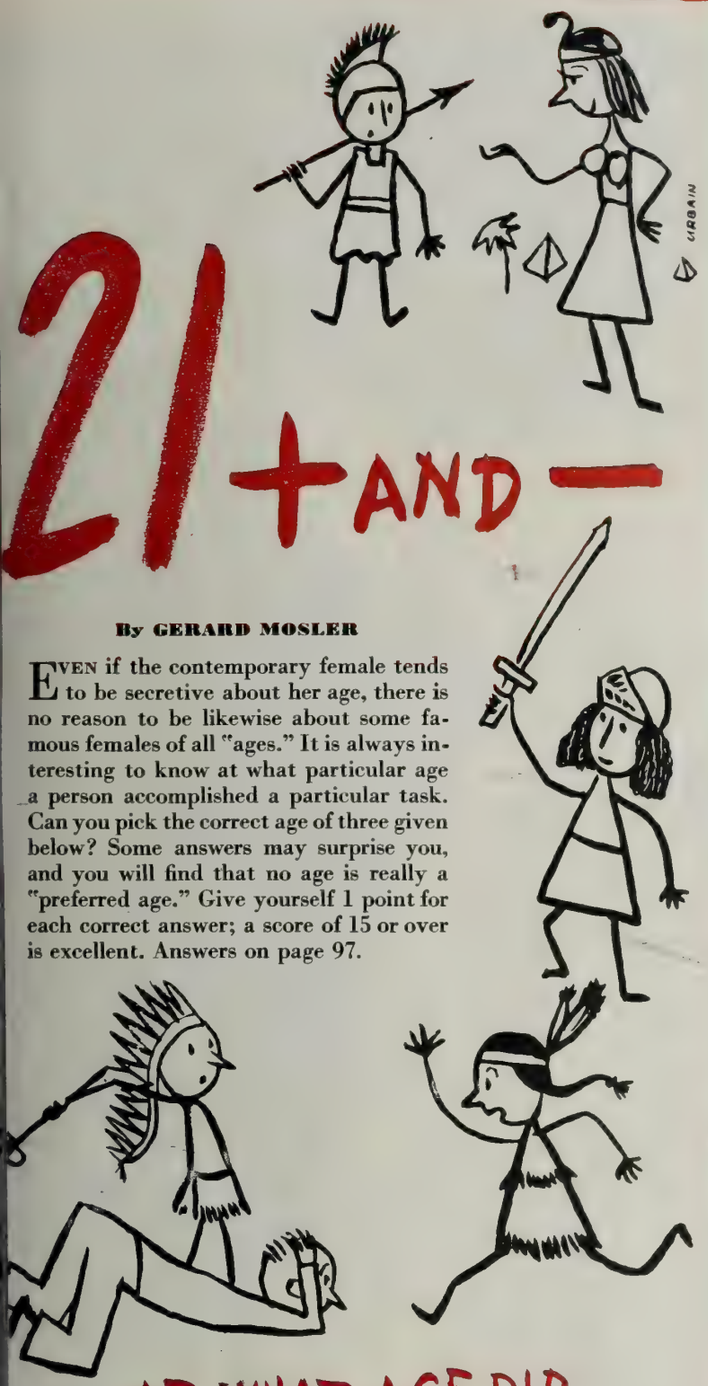
* SINGER sells its sewing machines, vacuum cleaners, and other products only through SINGER SEWING CENTERS, identified by the Red "S" on the window, and never through department stores or other outlets.

See classified telephone directory for address of your local SINGER SEWING CENTER.

SINGER SEWING MACHINE COMPANY.

Here's the SINGER SEWING CENTER at 282 Third Ave., Chula Vista, California.

Hundreds more from coast to coast. There's one near you!



*Reg. U. S. Pat. Off. by THE SINGER MANUFACTURING CO.

SINGER SEWING CENTERS

THERE'S ONE NEAR YOU TO SERVE YOU

Copyright, U. S. A., 1949 by THE SINGER MANUFACTURING CO. All rights reserved for all countries.

By GERARD MOSLER

EVEN if the contemporary female tends to be secretive about her age, there is no reason to be likewise about some famous females of all "ages." It is always interesting to know at what particular age a person accomplished a particular task. Can you pick the correct age of three given below? Some answers may surprise you, and you will find that no age is really a "preferred age." Give yourself 1 point for each correct answer; a score of 15 or over is excellent. Answers on page 97.

AT WHAT AGE DID...

	A	B	C
1. Cleopatra charm Antony?	18	28	38
2. Lady Godiva ride naked through Coventry?	18	28	38
3. Héloïse leave Abélard and take the veil?	20	30	40
4. Joan of Arc liberate Reims?	17	22	27
5. Lucrezia Borgia marry for the fourth time?	22	32	42
6. The great Elizabeth defeat the Spanish Armada?	45	55	65
7. Mary of Scotland escape from prison?	25	35	45
8. Pocahontas save Capt. John Smith?	12	17	22
9. Catherine the Great become empress by strangling her husband?	23	33	43
10. Marie Antoinette marry the French crown prince?	14	19	24
11. Harriet Beecher Stowe write Uncle Tom's Cabin?	29	39	49
12. Florence Nightingale make nursing a dignified profession?	23	33	43
13. Victoria of England become queen?	18	28	38
14. Elizabeth Browning publish her first verse?	22	32	42
15. Susan Anthony get arrested for leading women to the polls?	32	42	52
16. Mary Baker Eddy begin to teach Christian Science?	34	44	54
17. Eleonora Duse act her first Juliet?	9	14	19
18. Sarah Bernhardt play in spite of the loss of one leg?	53	63	73
19. Jane Addams found America's first and most famous settlement house?	29	39	49
20. Marie Curie first isolate a decigram of pure radium?	25	35	45

SINGER PRESENTS

The all-new cleaner with Dual Suction

At last! Dual suction! The new SINGER* Vacuum Cleaner is the first to bring you two fans instead of one! The most amazing dirt-getting action you ever saw!

NEW! NEW! NEW! MORE WONDERFUL SINGER FEATURES!

No more foot-pedal acrobatics. Magic handle adjusts to any position you like.

No stooping. Cord outlet lets you pull out cord as you need extra length.

No stumbling over excess cord. Cord-control button reels cord in — gets it out of your way as you clean.

Exclusive "floating" brush gently loosens deep imbedded dirt. Adjusts automatically to most any rug thickness.

Extra cleaning power for heavy jobs. Two-speed switch for light and heavy cleaning.

So easy to store! Hangs flat in closet.

So easy to carry with midway hand-grip!

5 inches high! Gets under most furniture!

This speed-cleaning marvel is the product of 19 years of experience—TRY IT TODAY!

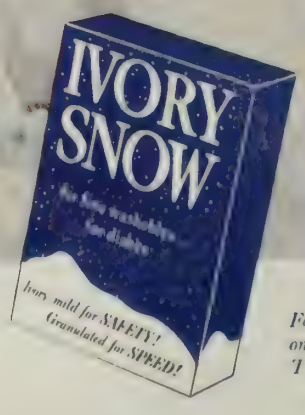
For your protection. Singer sells its sewing machines, vacuum cleaners, and other products only through Singer Sewing Centers, identified by the Red "S" on the window, and never through department stores, dealers or other outlets.

Singer Vacuum Cleaners are sold only at your —

SINGER SEWING CENTERS

THERE'S ONE NEAR YOU TO SERVE YOU

Copyright, U. S. A. 1948, 1949, by THE SINGER M'F'G. CO. *Reg. U. S. Pat. Off. by THE SINGER MANUFACTURING COMPANY



SAFE... IN SNOW

Now... filmy nylons can stay lovely longer with Ivory Snow!

Sheer as sheer can be! That's the charm of your lovely nylons. And yet these filmy, fragile beauties are so safe with Ivory Snow care every night. Just what they need, to help guard soft colors, sleek fit, and reduce stocking runs!

Made especially for your loveliest things, Ivory Snow is the new fashion in soaps! It's 99⁴⁴⁄₁₀₀% pure, and granulated for instant suds, even in cool water. So convenient, so economical to use, too! There's just no finer soap made. Wonderful Ivory Snow!

Follow direct on the packa
They've teste

Your hands will tell you why your loveliest washables are safe in Ivory Snow. Prove how kind it is. Just wash dishes with Ivory Snow, as millions do. When you see how it pampers your hands you'll KNOW it's safe for fine fabrics and dainty colors!

IVORY SNOW

...the only soap both Ivory-mild and granulated for efficien

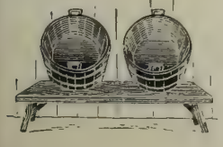
Fifty Years Ago In The Journal

IN February, 1899, the American flag was first raised at Wake and Guam. In the Philippines, Dewey shelled Manila to quell natives resisting the new American rule. President McKinley signed the peace treaty with Spain, and a great blizzard stopped all trains between New York and Washington, D.C.

"Numbers of wives and daughters will talk only about fashions, society and servants at the dinner table," remarks the February, 1899, JOURNAL. "The head of the household lapses into silence, returning mentally to his own world, where he lives alone. American women direct the conversation in their households, not the men."

Length of suits: "Street dresses are made to touch the ground, and some even have a suspicion of a train, I am sorry to say," remarks style expert Emma Hooper.

Advice to the bride: "Be sure that your hair is arranged pompadour and fluffy at the sides."



New York young men are too imitative of one another," criticizes the JOURNAL. "Their hair is all cut to a line, parted to a line, and plastered. They have fine, square shoulders, carry themselves gallantly, and regard but little those who stand between them and their goal."

What it Means to be Engaged: The engaged girl should know how to broil steak, roast a chicken and cook vegetables. She should know how to bake a loaf of bread, and enter into a slight acquaintance with the principles of plumbing."

Wages: "In a big Eastern city, unskilled laborers get from $6 to $7.50 a week. Carpenters can make as much as $20 a week, tailors about $10, and paperhangers $15 weekly."

Stone marten neck scarfs cost from $15 up."

"Don't risk the baby's health by using rubber nipples," runs a JOURNAL advertisement. "They are neither clean nor sanitary. Use a sterling silver nipple—noncollapsible, nonabsorptive, $1."

Journal about Town

PHOTO BY MODERN STUDIO, OLD TOWN, ME.

Laurell Crawford, with five admiring sisters, makes her debut for the camera.

Gossip about people you know, editors you like and what goes on in New York.

ANYONE who has seen the dead-line dates which stare up sternly from each editor's desk here at the Workshop, or who could watch the new monster miraculous presses which turn out 4½ million JOURNALS each month and mustn't ever be kept waiting, would understand why the Crawfords, of How America Lives in December, appeared without their new baby, who arrived just too late to have her picture with them in that issue. But here she is now, with her five sisters, in the Crawford cabin up in the Maine woods where, as you can see, her parents will never be without a baby sitter.

•

Speaking of which, Betty Hoffman, who writes some of our How America Lives articles and others, and has two youngsters, tells us how she's finally solved the problem of the housewife who's a writer as well. "I bring the baby sitter, an elderly widow, over to my house; then I go to her house and get to work."

•

If the Crouses look natural, on pages 134–38, especially the five boys, you can lay it to Joe Di Pietro, who even before he unpacks his camera makes himself one of the family. Never had a chance to use his jujitsu in the Navy, where he served in Capt. Edward Steichen's famous photographic unit; but ever since, on the JOURNAL, it's come in handy as a relaxer for self-conscious kids, as here with Kenneth Crouse; and with girls as well as boys, Joe says.

PHOTO BY DAVIDSON

Cameraman Joe Di Pietro shows Kenneth Crouse a jujitsu trick.

Early last winter, Bruce Gould in a taxi got to talking with the driver, who turned out, in the course of the conversation, to be in the habit of taking cookies and things to Army hospitals on his time off. As a consequence the driver called at the Workshop kitchen here the next day, where a big batch of Louella Shouer's best was ready for him. Which was the last seen of him, until a week ago, a year later exactly, he turned up at the kitchen again. "I had Mr. Gould in my cab last night ——" he began. "Yes, we know," said Louella. "Your cookies are waiting for you."

•

Birthdays this month run the gamut. Theater—Katharine Cornell, 16th; music—Jascha Heifetz, 2nd; writing—Kay Boyle, 19th; business—David Sarnoff, 27th; Government—James Forrestal, 15th; and radio—Jack Benny, 14th.

•

In a survey made to determine the proportions of the average girl at the JOURNAL Workshop, the beauty department came up with the delightful discovery that if it were possible to produce a living composite of the results, we could send her off to Hollywood to star in glamour pictures, launch her on a successful modeling career or, even better, show her on a JOURNAL cover! But, the beauty editors add, for any woman who succumbs to that "second helping" in the belief that pretty figures belong to a chosen few, we give you these proportions polled from JOURNAL Workshop secretaries, telephone operators, assistants, messenger girls and editors, to show you that the shortest distance to a pretty figure is a determined detour around desserts! Survey shows our composite is 5 feet 5 inches tall, weighs 126 pounds, and has a 34-inch bust, 26-inch waist and 36-inch hips, blue eyes, brown hair. . . . Just about right.

•

When Gladys Denny Shultz visited her son at Harvard recently, two other boys were always on hand whenever she went to her son's house room, politely explaining that they were detailed there as chaperons. Seems the college authorities are a little skeptical of "mothers"; there have been a number lately who were unexpectedly young and pretty.

Pioneer women in Philadelphia are being seen in pink automobiles. The theory is that men will return to chivalry, forgetting their present roughhouse tactics; and more practically, your husband will never be caught borrowing your car. . . . The mortality rate in rheumatic fever has dropped 80 per cent since 1920, largely because of the development of chemotherapy. The disease is much more prevalent in the North and West than in the South. . . . New $20 bills will show President Truman's new balcony. . . . The mortality rate for bachelors is 42 per cent higher than for married men.

Beauty and brains go together in any language. The girl who posed for Al Parker's illustrations for Pearl Buck's Kinfolk is Helena Kuo, writer, lecturer and linguist. Most recently she has translated The Quest for Love of Lao Lee, the new book by Chinese novelist Lau Shaw. She is not a professional model and wants it known that she did not pose for the girl-in-a-tub illustration.

First Dance

ILLUSTRATED BY

Coby Whitmore

Eileen found her voice at last. "I—I can't believe it. I just can't picture you not beautiful."

The first scar on a woman's heart is the birthmark of experience

By FLORENCE JANE SOMAN

BILL'S voice was unenthusiastic over the telephone. "I guess your grandmother told you," he said, "I'm a freshman now at State. As a matter of fact, that's why I called. Our class is giving a prom on the twenty-seventh and I wondered if you'd like to go with me."

Eileen stared unseeingly at the pattern of the wallpaper. "Okay," she said. She cleared her throat. "Okay, that'll be fine. . . . I mean I'd love to go, Bill; thanks for asking me."

"That's all right," he said. "Well . . . I'll get in touch with you before then. So long."

"So long." She carefully replaced the receiver, took out her handkerchief and mopped at her hands, which were wet with perspiration.

I don't believe it, she thought, I just don't believe it.

For a few moments she remained motionless, then the driving pressure of her happiness impelled her to her feet and she began to wander about the room, hugging her thin shoulders. She stopped abruptly and lifted rapt eyes. "Thank You, God," she whispered.

She moved toward the mirror and her eyes grew critical as she gazed at her reflection. She turned her head slowly from side to side, thrust her face close to the glass and then backed away for a full-figure view. Her shoulders slumped dejectedly.

I wish I were pretty, she mourned.

Her fingers wandered over the thinness of her neck and chest. Sometimes she dreamed that she had ten pounds of flesh in a pail that she could slap on her body and mold with her hands like a sculptor, adding a little here and there, cushioning bones, filling hollows, rounding out curves where there was now a boyish spareness.

She sighed, then her joy in the present leaped up within her and she turned and ran from the room. The soft folds of her ballerina skirt whirled behind her as she clattered down the steps.

"Grandma!" she yelled. "Grandma, where are you?"

Her grandmother's calm voice drifted up from the sun porch and Eileen found her there a moment later, her fleshy back bent over her begonias.

"Grandma," she said, flopping into a wicker chair, "that was Bill Severn on the phone! He asked me to his Freshman Prom!"

"I told you he would," said Mrs. Mathews, pulling off dead leaves and placing them in her cupped apron. "Now we'll have to get you a real pretty dress."

"Oh, yes! The dress."

Eileen's eyes were luminous. She leaned back and saw herself on the night of the twenty-seventh, floating in loveliness down the stairs with Bill staring up at her in surprise. "Why, (Continued on Page 126)

Mimi's frank opinion, expressed over a chocolate soda, made him squirm. "Personally, I think it's the most childish thing I ever heard of!"
It's not fair to ask a guy to give up this much just for a girl!

REPRISAL

By MARIAN SIMS

He stood in the street with his thumb raised in the traditional suppliant's gesture, and cursed mechanically at the cars that swerved to pass him. He was fourteen and a half and beginning to elongate into the shambling, reedy stage, but his face was still rounded and occasionally sweet, with curving lips and long-lashed blue eyes. His hair was a curious color: dark at the roots, while the ends had the sheen of polished brass. (His mother had given him hell about the hair, but he had been deterred from further experimentation by boredom rather than authority.) His costume was the uniform of his tribe: wrinkled corduroy trousers, scuffed and shapeless moccasins, a striped, malodorous jersey which he wore in preference to any one of a dozen immaculate shirts in his bureau, and in spite of his father's acid comments.

Thumbing from the street was against the law, of course, but old Healy had finished herding the littler kids across and had straddled his motorcycle and departed, so there was nobody to stop him from standing where he damn pleased.

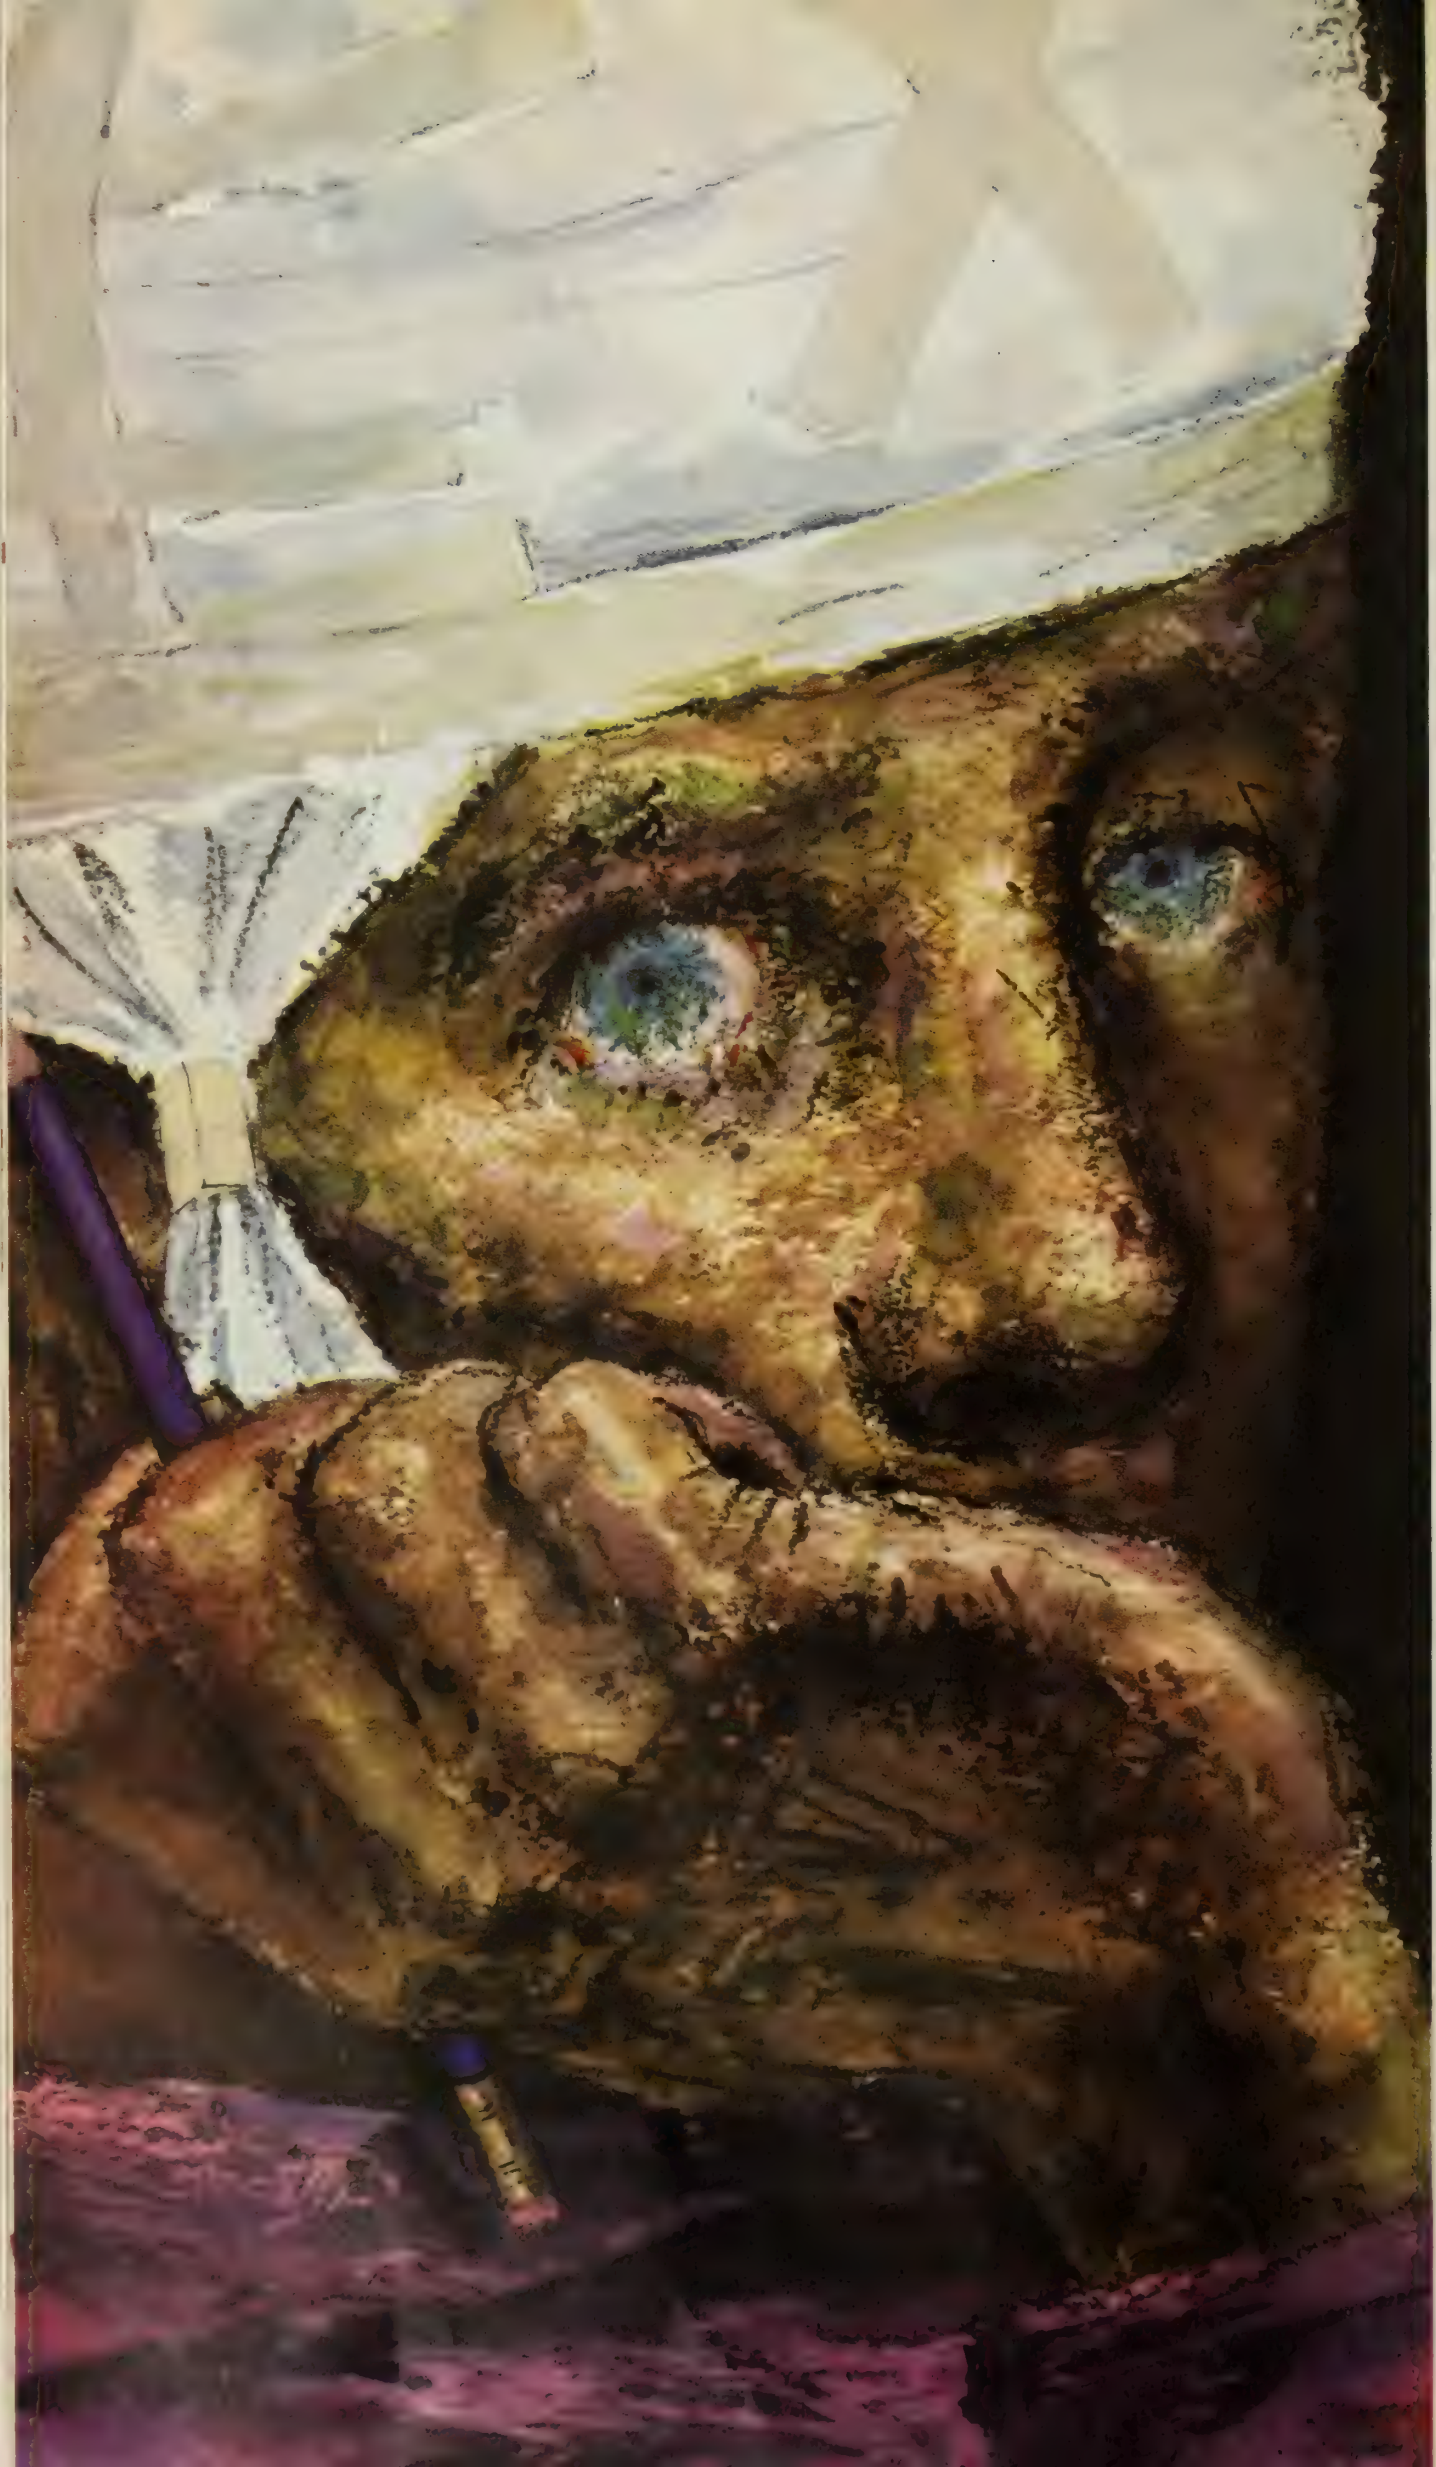
He had been kept in for thirty minutes (because the old bag who was his home-room teacher couldn't see a joke through a telescope) and the rest of the crowd had already gone, probably by the method he was trying to use now. He had bus fare—all the gang had—but the bus crawled and groaned a tortuous route; and besides that, honor and custom demanded that you save your bus money for worthier or more attractive purposes. The metal token in his own pocket was already ten days old, but if he had anything to say about it the token was going to stay where it was and build up another ten days.

He inched farther into the street, pasted on a charming smile, and swiveled his thumb at an approaching car. The driver—a hard-boiled Joe in a gray hat—swung sharply to the left and yelled at him:

"Get back on the curb, you little fool!"

The winning smile came off fast and a scowl took its place. "Aah, go to hell!" He snarled it futilely at the car's taillight and swung back to face the oncoming traffic.

He had luck with the next one: a woman about his mother's age, only prettier. She stopped to let him lunge in, then shook her head at him. "I wish you boys wouldn't stand in the street like that. You're liable to get run over and you make people pull so far to the left to get around you."



He had heard all that before, but he gave her a disarming smile. "Yes'm, I know it. I usually stand on the curb, myself, but I got out late today and you can stand back there all night long and not get a lift."

Then she started asking all the usual fool questions—about what grade was he in and what was his favorite subject and did he play football. That was the bad thing about catching a ride with a woman. She always had to talk and she never could drive an automobile. Creeping along at twenty-five or thirty and inching up to stop lights like they might explode in her face. He tolerated her, largely, until they were half a block from The Joint.

"I'll get out here," he said. "Much obliged." His thanks were perfunctory because he was through with her.

When she had driven away he walked rapidly toward The Joint. No use letting her know his destination; she might be one of those dopes who were always beefing about the place and trying to close it up. Yapping about how they sold beer to minors and the owner ought to be prosecuted. All that boloney. (Continued on Page 188)

ILLUSTRATED BY PRUETT CARTER

D

Johnny and Frances, his mo spent much of their long sun together in Connecticut, working out a personal religi
a simple philosophy for living
Later, when a brain tumor cl the door on Johnny's future,
Frances wrote in her diary:
"Look Death in the face.
Death is a part of life, like bi but not the final part."

ILLUSTRATED BY JOSEPH BIRREN

ath be not Proud

Is it right to try to find happiness after a child has died? Parents who must face that question may find hope in this memoir to an only son, and perhaps understand that even a child can leave a legacy to the living.

By JOHN GUNTHER

THIS is not so much a memoir of Johnny in the conventional sense as the story of a long, invincible struggle between a child and Death. It is not about the happy early years, but about his illness. It is, in simple fact, the story of what happened to Johnny's brain. I write it because many children are afflicted by disease, though few have to endure what Johnny had, and perhaps they and their parents may derive some modicum of succor from the unflinching fortitude and detachment with which he rode through his ordeal to the end.

Johnny was conceived in California, carried across the bosom of the American continent and the Atlantic Ocean by his mother, and born in Paris, on November 4, 1929. We moved to Vienna when he was a few months old, and he went to kindergarten there and had splendid holidays in the Austrian Alps. We moved again to London when he was six, and he had a year and a half in England. Then we returned to the United States. Johnny went to the public school in Wilton, Connecticut, and to several other schools, including Lincoln in New York City, which he loved with all his heart, and finally to Deerfield Academy, in Deerfield, Massachusetts. He died on June 30, 1947, when he was seventeen, after an illness that lasted fourteen months. He would have entered Harvard in that autumn had he lived.

I must try to give you a picture of him. He was a tall boy, almost as tall as I when he died, and skinny, though he had been plump as a youngster and he was always worried about putting on weight. He was very blond, with hair the color of wheat out in the sun, large bright blue eyes, and the most beautiful hands I have ever seen. Most people thought he was very good looking. Perhaps as a father I am prejudiced!

When he was about thirteen he had a talk with a doctor who asked him to list the things he "wished" most. His answers were, first, happiness and, second, to do some good for the world. Then he added a third—an extra week's vacation!

The doctor asked what he would like most if a magician could change everything by the whisk of a wand. Johnny replied with sharp knowledge of his own defects: (1) To be a bit more talkative. (2) To be a better athlete. (3) To stop putting things off. (4) To be tidier.

Finally to the question "What three things bother you most?" Johnny made an omnibus answer: "School problems, studies, sports, and relations to other boys." He added, "Relations to parents" and then changed his mind: "I do not think this bothers me."

Johnny and Frances were indeed marvelously close, and he saw much more of us together than a child usually sees of divorced parents. He spent the winter and spring holidays with me in New York, and the summers with Frances in Connecticut. But I saw him frequently in the summer too and almost always for a week or so at the beginning and end of each summer, and Frances similarly saw him a great deal in New York in winter. We overlapped all the time. For years, though I traveled widely, I managed to arrange almost every job and itinerary to be with him during his holidays.

When he uttered that childhood wish—"to do some good for the world"—he was reflecting all the gifts that had been given him of goodness, gentleness, and warmth of spirit; he was one of those who thought earnestly that he owed the world a living, not vice versa. But he never got a chance, and the world is much the poorer for it. But it is time now to go on to what I want to tell.

JOHNNY came home for the Christmas holiday in 1945, and he looked fit and fine. He was lengthening out physically and otherwise, as children do all of a sudden. We saw a lot of each other, and just before getting on the train to return to school in January, he exclaimed, "Pop, that was the best ten days I ever had!" He didn't often confess personal emotions so freely, and I was pleased. Then in March, 1946, he came down again for the spring holiday. Frances and I took him to several Broadway shows. He went to lectures on atomic physics. Frances took him to the public dinner given by the City of New York to Winston Churchill—it was the first, and last, time he ever wore a dinner jacket borrowed from his uncle. He monkeyed with (Continued on Page 87)

★ Copyright, 1949, by John Gunther. This is a condensation of the book shortly to be published by Harper & Bros. ★

Sarah and the Seaplane

By CECILY TEAGUE CROWE

SARAH took as quiet a shower as it was possible to take, and dressed quickly in a red shirt and white shorts. Then she took off the shorts and the red shirt and put on a lilac-colored linen frock that no one would notice, because her mother had had it made for her by a dressmaker in Boston. She was thinking of a man named Henry as she would not dare to think of him when very soon she sat close beside him. Under her bedroom window she could hear the confident "Che-wink!" of the bird which approached the house only in this still, confident hour of dawn and never was heard again during the day, and on her dressing table the little clock pitter-pattered as though on tiptoe. She wished fervently to believe that Henry's soul was as beautiful as his face and golden limbs, that he had a soul at all, but she suspected in the traitorous reaches of her consciousness that he had not.

Remember, she told herself bitterly, for heaven's sake remember the carburetor heater this morning.

She paid brief and disdainful attention to her face and clean light hair, but these were prettier than she believed, for she was nineteen and did not acknowledge the delicacy of youth. She had large, soft eyes, which she avoided in the mirror because they took her by surprise and frightened her, gazing straight into her, the private being she wished no one, not even herself, to behold.

Then she went quickly down the back stairs, holding her sandals in her hand. She pushed through the pantry door to the kitchen, a vast, varnished, inconvenient room possessing, for some reason long ago invalidated, two stoves with towering hoods. Ineptly she made herself orange juice and tea; she was on a diet—not because she was anything but slender, but because it signified enhancement and above all a moral victory.

Irene came down from her quarters, white and rosy as only the dark-haired Irish can be after a devout night's sleep, and as ill-humored. "Hah," she said, finding Sarah in her kitchen.

"Good morning, Irene. I woke up so early, I made myself something. I ——"

"Hah." Irene's thick hands and arms moved automatically over pots and range switches. "You don't fool me."

Sarah stood cool and motionless as marble. "What do you mean?"

"Yes, I know where you're going, yes, and your mother will make short work of you; you can't keep a secret like that in a New England summer resort. Why didn't you take up water skiing, like Miss Gwen-Ellyn?"

"Gwen-Ellyn!" And Sarah forgot herself, and trembling, put a slice of bread in the old-fashioned electric toaster, and cried, "But, Irene, it's beautiful, it's the only beautiful thing I have to do, and ——" She stopped herself. She finished quietly, "And she is not my mother."

"Ah, the love of God, your adopted mother, your stepmother, your aunt, your mother's best friend; what difference does it make? She is Mrs. Gillis and you are Miss Gillis and always a nice, quiet girl."

The toast began to burn then, but Sarah did not touch it. At last she murmured, "Yes. That just about sums it up."

"Ah, be off with you. I won't tell. Now the lazy Bridget comes down. Begone!" And as Sarah scuttled away Irene muttered something about the greater peace of life on Beacon Street.

Quietly Sarah backed the old car out onto the gravel drive, screened by firs from the sprawling, gabled, green-and-dark-brown house. Her mother's windows were in another wing. The house had been built in 1896 by the late Mr. Gillis and had been called "The Camp"; now with the adjustment of economic levels it was called "the summer home," but it was no less ugly.

And then, driving along the back road to town, Sarah suddenly felt quite merry. The spaces between morning sun and wet grass shimmered like gauze; the sun slanted low, straight across the rooftops of farmhouses, and made extended tracts of shade that still smelled of night, ferny and cool. The old car shattered the morning stillness, and one or two farmers recognized her and waved, and she waved back, laughing, and they laughed, too, almost as if they shared her conspiracy.

But when she reached the outskirts of the little white village her breath shortened and the terrible sick pressure began to beat upward from her chest into the base of her throat. She continued on her way, taking a circuitous route around the shopping center to the old mill wharf, but she felt that what she was doing was impossible; she could see herself doing it, with the eyes of Mrs. Gillis, and for some unjustifiable reason this made it seem obscene.

Then she stopped the car on the rise behind the old mill, and she could see the innocent yellow wing of the seaplane bobbing lightheartedly over the bright morning water of the lake, and the renegade blood darted forth to her finger tips, flooding away guilt, and she grinned, welcoming again her startling upsurge of joy; and even the proximity of Henry did not inhibit her.

He was sitting on the piling of the wharf, waiting for her. He wore faded khaki trousers and a white T shirt, the short sleeves measuring his biceps, and his golden head drooped. She stood still and looked at him.

(Continued on Page 174)

Sarah was scared of life; but the time comes when it isn't possible to be afraid any more.

ILLUSTRATED BY [illegible]

"You're my girl," Hank said. He lifted her off her feet, and they laughed until their sides ached.

Point of no Return

By JOHN P. MARQUAND

A woman wonders:
Will the town talk?

A man asks:
Will she be brave enough to listen?

CHARLES GRAY had not thought for a long time about his home town of Clyde, Massachusetts. He had been absorbed by his life in New York, by his wife, Nancy, and their two children, and by desperate competition with a business rival for promotion to a bank vice-presidency.

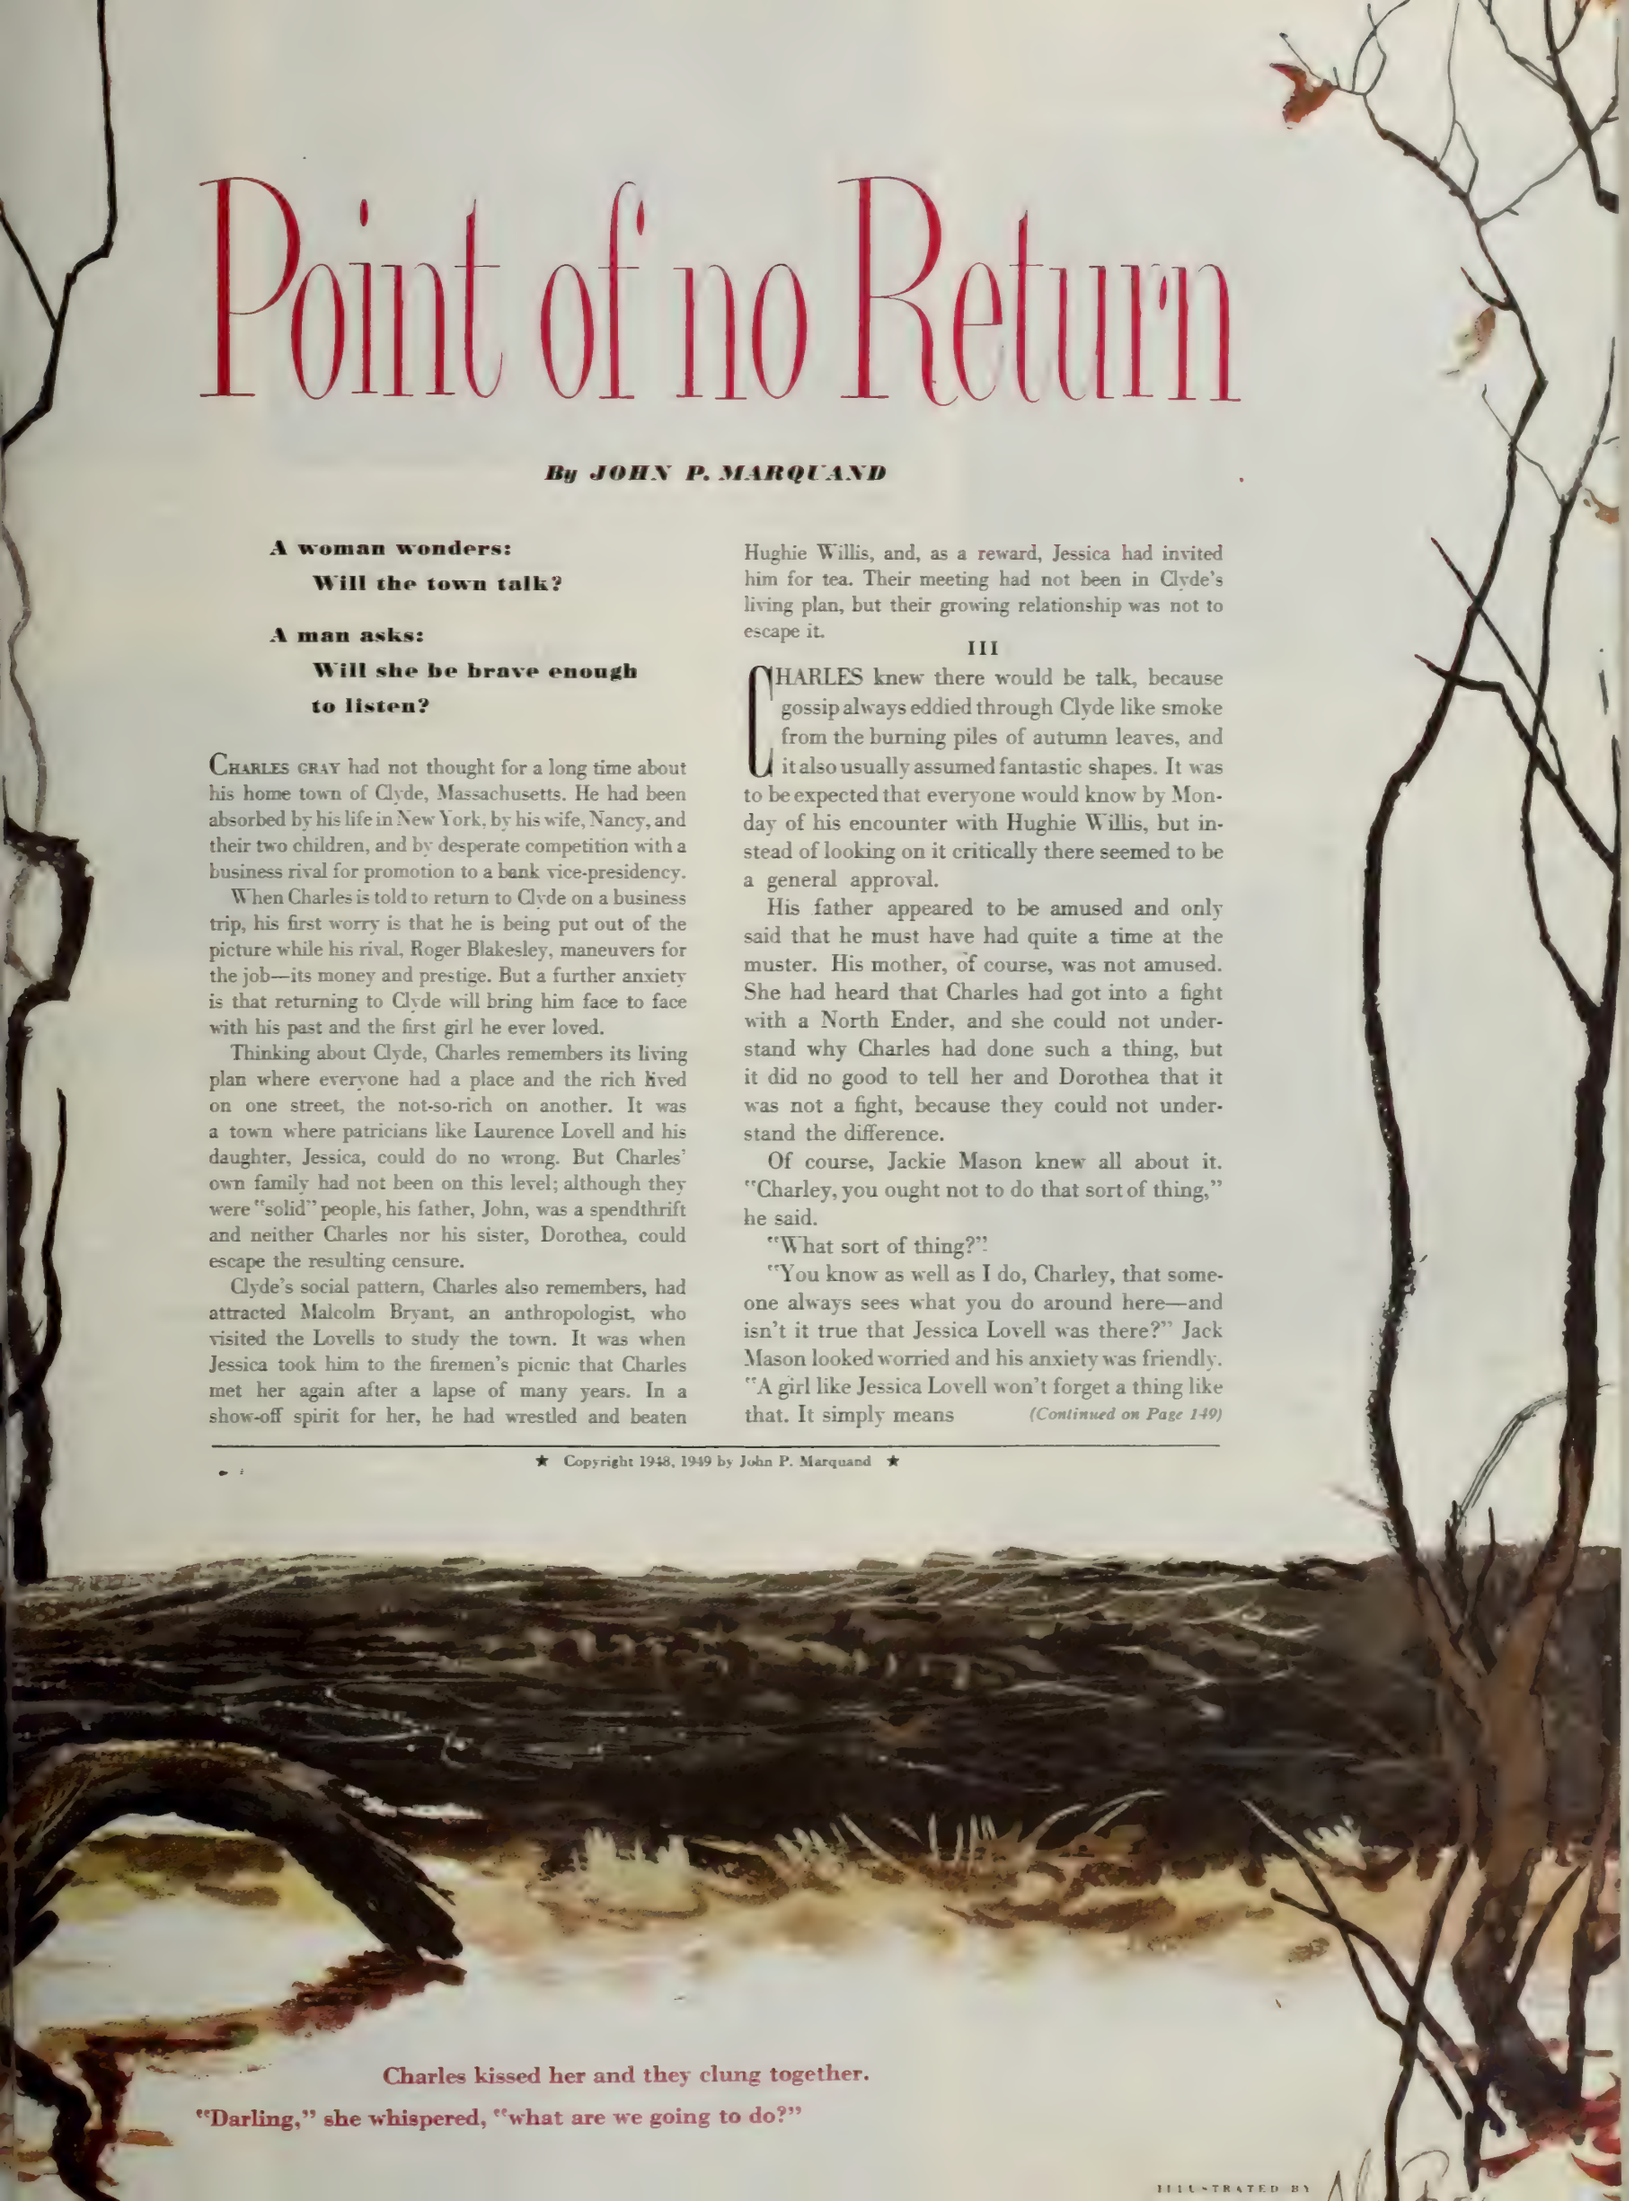
When Charles is told to return to Clyde on a business trip, his first worry is that he is being put out of the picture while his rival, Roger Blakesley, maneuvers for the job—its money and prestige. But a further anxiety is that returning to Clyde will bring him face to face with his past and the first girl he ever loved.

Thinking about Clyde, Charles remembers its living plan where everyone had a place and the rich lived on one street, the not-so-rich on another. It was a town where patricians like Laurence Lovell and his daughter, Jessica, could do no wrong. But Charles' own family had not been on this level; although they were "solid" people, his father, John, was a spendthrift and neither Charles nor his sister, Dorothea, could escape the resulting censure.

Clyde's social pattern, Charles also remembers, had attracted Malcolm Bryant, an anthropologist, who visited the Lovells to study the town. It was when Jessica took him to the firemen's picnic that Charles met her again after a lapse of many years. In a show-off spirit for her, he had wrestled and beaten Hughie Willis, and, as a reward, Jessica had invited him for tea. Their meeting had not been in Clyde's living plan, but their growing relationship was not to escape it.

III

CHARLES knew there would be talk, because gossip always eddied through Clyde like smoke from the burning piles of autumn leaves, and it also usually assumed fantastic shapes. It was to be expected that everyone would know by Monday of his encounter with Hughie Willis, but instead of looking on it critically there seemed to be a general approval.



His father appeared to be amused and only said that he must have had quite a time at the muster. His mother, of course, was not amused. She had heard that Charles had got into a fight with a North Ender, and she could not understand why Charles had done such a thing, but it did no good to tell her and Dorothea that it was not a fight, because they could not understand the difference.

Of course, Jackie Mason knew all about it. "Charley, you ought not to do that sort of thing," he said.

"What sort of thing?"

"You know as well as I do, Charley, that someone always sees what you do around here—and isn't it true that Jessica Lovell was there?" Jack Mason looked worried and his anxiety was friendly. "A girl like Jessica Lovell won't forget a thing like that. It simply means (Continued on Page 149)

★ Copyright 1948, 1949 by John P. Marquand ★

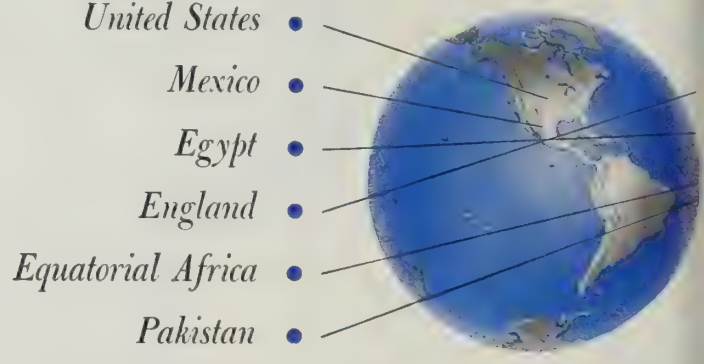
Charles kissed her and they clung together.
"Darling," she whispered, "what are we going to do?"

ILLUSTRATED BY

PEOPLE ARE PEOPLE THE WORLD OVER

GERMANY: The Stieglitzes have no car, but are sometimes able to hire a truck to haul their produce. Otherwise they walk, or take the bus for long trips. Here Frau Stieglitz shops with Richard in the town of Kastel, its streets largely destroyed by the recent war.

UNITED STATES: The Pratts live right on U.S. 30, and use their car a lot for trips to Glidden (1½ miles), Carroll (6 miles) and Des Moines (90 miles), which they visit perhaps twice a year. In all Iowa there is not a place more than 12 miles from a railroad.



ITALY: Armando always drives the Guercinis' oxcart on trips to the spring for drinking water. The road to the village of Greve, one mile away, is steep, dusty and winding. From there a macadam highway goes to Florence, and there are three busses to the city each day.

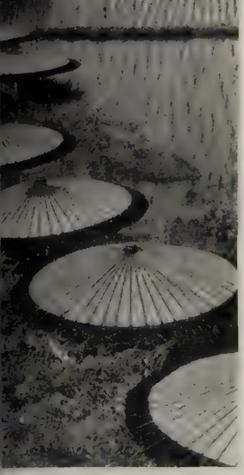
MEXICO: On Sundays the Gonzalezes saddle their little burro with ropes and gunnysacks, and go off to market at Moravatio. Baby Maria is the only member of the family who will ride. Farmers in this locality have few automobiles, but there is a new government-sponsored tractor station.

JAPAN: On their way to th tion station, Mrs. Okamot little Naoo pass the home umbrella maker, who has s

THIS IS HOW THE

WORLD travelers, from Magellan to Willkie, have attempted to shrink the skin of the world, but it still seems big to one who walks. And surprisingly enough, the auto-and-air age finds many people still on their feet.

Señora Gonzalez thinks nothing of walking all the way to the market place at Moravatio, Mexico, with a baby on her back. In Japan little Naoo Okamoto already trudges with his mother half a mile across the rice paddies. Near the equator in Africa, where "going to town" means a trek of thirty miles along a dirt track, the women of Zamba Aluma's family walk erect with bundles on heads for mile upon weary mile. On the ancient roads of Egypt, Mustafa el Gamel walks beside his father's donkey, pending the time when he will head a Moslem family of his own and earn the right to ride. In Slovakia, Joseph Balogh wades ankle-deep in mud beside the family wagon. And in America there is a special form of foot travel known as hitchhiking.



The motorized Western world is not without its problems. M. Redouin, of France, who owns a 1932 Citroen, has to crank at almost every halt. Tom Hiatt, of England, pays 38 cents for a gallon of gas (beg pardon—petrol!) and it is rigidly rationed at ENGLAND: If Tom Hiatt has to stop his Austin along the way, it isn't long until Joan and Peter are out of the car. Here they play on a crossroads sign three miles from home. These signs were taken down during the war in the belief that German parachutists would be lost without them.

CHINA: A canal flows in fr the Ho house, and alm the family's goods are by boat. The children co products in the sun to dry. Okamotos own three bicy- but possess no other ve- es. It is four miles to city.

CZECHOSLOVAKIA: The dirt roads of the Carpathian foothills turn to dust in summer and to deep mud after a hard rain. Here Joseph Balogh and daughter Maria walk with the reluctant oxen as the going gets tough. The load of wood is destined for Mrs. Balogh's old-fashioned cookstove.

PHOTOGRAPHS for the Journal by Horace Bristol (Japan and China), Larry Burrows (England), Robert Capa (United States and Czechoslovakia), Marie Hansen (Italy), George Rodger (Egypt, Pakistan and Equatorial Africa), Phil Schultz (Mexico), David Seymour (France and Germany).

EQUATORIAL AFRICA: Women do the work of transport in the Kaliko tribe, skillfully balancing their burdens on their heads. Aba, the oldest daughter of Zamba Aluma, is third from left. The family live 130 miles from a telephone, and go to town only twice a year.

- Germany
- Japan
- Czechoslovakia
- France
- China
- Italy

by JOHN GODFREY MORRIS

WORLD GETS AROUND

that. Don Pratt of Iowa is familiar with the perils of flat tires, dead batteries, crumpled fenders—and the eternal problem of a place to park.

Next to artificial horsepower comes the real thing. Herr Stieglitz in Germany owns a fine white-faced team, and is a member of the local horse-breeders' society. In Italy and in Pakistan oxen pull the load. In Japan the Okamotos pay two annual taxes on their prized Korean cow. Hag Zaki el Gamel has his donkeys, and Pablo Gonzalez has a busy—but unhappy—little burro.

Coming and going to market, to school, church and swimming hole, the distances are not great. Yet Mohamed Usman spends as much time in a trip to the nearest telephone as an airliner takes to go from New York to Cincinnati. There are few filling stations in the desert, few bus lines in the tropics, few landing strips on the steppes.

For railroads, it is still (largely) a one-track world. More important, national boundaries stand as road blocks on the highroad of good will, and international commerce in ideas is scant. Nevertheless, there is hope that under the large, loose cloak of the United Nations these, our families, may live as neighbors.

FRANCE: M. Redouin customarily cranks his car to "conserve the battery." Going to town in the 1932 Citroen is a big event for the children. France has excellent rural roads, and even the little road to the Redouins' village of Fossés is paved. Routes are numbered.

are treat to go along with father into the near-by of Kia-ting. Light burdens carried on bamboo poles.

PAKISTAN: The Usman family pile onto this primitive oxcart when going anywhere, but they seldom venture far from home. There are no real streets in their village of Patni—only narrow alleyways which lead to the compound shown below. The climate is so dry that no stables are needed.

EGYPT: With the dignity befitting the head of the family, Hag Zaki el Gamel rides while his eldest son walks. They are heading for the bazaar in the town of Khanka, which lies just off the main road to Cairo. Goods are carried in panniers on the backs of the donkeys.

The new . . . the nearly class look so cos

when you MAKE YOUR OW

The knitted vest with the tweedy look, in two tones of brown yarn, with leather buttons; for suits or separate skirts. 2548.

Make a yoke design with braid fringe, on a cardigan.

Bright color collarless cardigan, shaped at waist. 2549.

Yoke and sleeves, lacy crochet, bodice stocking knit. 2550.

igh waistline, leeveless Paris fashion y Marcel Rochas. 2551.

Afternoon knitted dress, shirred neckline, gold-thread yoke, hem. 2552.

Round-neckline evening sweater, gold sequins, by Elsie Faulconer. 2553.

Cape-collared, sleeveless even sweater; with taffeta skirt. 25

ND-KNITS

o little

LHELA CUSHMAN
n Editor of the Journal

Small cloche—hat of the year, in straw yarn, Angora inset band. 2555.

Jacket sweater, grosgrain-bound, by Christine Hunter. 2556.

Make a necklace neckline on your cashmere cardigan, of pearls, sequins, metal thread. 2562. . . . A Mme. Isabel idea.

iece dress of two-tone yarn, ull cummerbund skirt. 2557.

Slim jerkin in two colors; by Beattie. 2558.

SKETCHES BY REYNALDO LUZA

PHOTOGRAPHS BY WILHELA CUSHMA

The yoke sweater for afternoon or evening; metallic lacy crochet with plain knitting, in beige and gold. 2563.

nort cardigan, blue-violet Angora, ub collar, cable-stitch detail. 2559.

Slim rib-stitch one-piece dress. 2560; crocheted ribbon roll-brim hat. 2561.

Instructions for sweaters and hats, 15c each number; dresses, 20c. Order from Journal Reference Library, Philadelphia 5, Pennsylvania.

Tweed suit for fall, winter and spring in the country—soft blue, pink and purple plaid, worn with white or pink blouses, gray felt hat, hand-sewn doeskin gloves.

PHOTOGRAPHS BY JOHN ENGSTE

Enchanted hour, enchanting ages. Mrs. McCulloch loves the easy comfort and the prettiness of a soft blue matelassé crepe peignoir, wrapped and tied with a long silk cord.

Three generations: her daughter, Mrs. Bertr
Taylor III; the newest granddaughter, Cynthia; and Mrs.
Culloch. Mrs. Taylor in full-skirted tie silk, Mrs. McCull in a silver-threaded blue wool jersey for winter afternoo

THERE'S SOMETHING ABOUT HER

. . . life revolves around her blue-eyed, white-haired Mrs. David McCulloch, who was Helen Fair, of is a grandmother. Her young crowd ds and engrosses her.

er and summer, she lives in the hingle house in Port Washington, land, which was built in 1719. Her ghters are married, and one by one settled on the family five acres—lochville," as they call it.
ender-and-old-lace grandmother, Mrs.
ch is "mommie" to her children, ildren and all their friends. She has mor, young repartee.
eals with her clothes casually, distills
o the simple, the becoming, the useful.
s soft-colored countryish tweeds, wears sweaters with her skirts as her daugh-
She has always loved pastels, knows with white hair as well as with ash-
She has been mother of the bride the same rose-pink crepe dress,

Summer Sunday on the lawn: Mrs. McCulloch with her daughters, Mrs. Bertrand Taylor III and Mrs. James Crane, Jr.; four grandchildren.

and she gravitates to pink blouses, blue or pink negligees. She likes the ageless kind of black or navy-blue crepe dress with an open neckline that takes a silk scarf and a pretty pin, and wears it summer or winter, at home or in town.

She shops only when she needs something, never as a diversion. Year after year, her fall and winter wardrobe consists of a tweed suit, sometimes alternating with a gray flannel, a soft wool or jersey dress which she prefers to more tailored ones, her basic black or navy crepe, something long and something short for dinners and evening parties at home, for the opera and the symphony in New York. When one of these is "gone," she replaces it with another, similar fashion.

She fits perfectly into a Size 18, and like most women of her years she likes long sleeves, covered necklines, knows that simple, timeless styles are most distinguished and most becoming. ★ By WILHELA CUSHMAN
Fashion Editor of the Journal

v-blue crepe, timeless, ageless—with her favorite "touch of pink" at the Pink-topped slipper satin is an "at home" or a dining-out dress. The skirt is black with soft fullness. She wears a bracelet of pearls and pale pink quartz.

Jewel-colored vest to show off a handsome white crepe blouse. Vogue Design No. 6555, 10 to 20.

The Journal's LITTLE GEM of a wardrobe

You can start a spring wardrobe and make each addition as solid an investment as a diamond. A gray flannel suit is a priceless beginning. Your jewel-colored halters and vests that you will wear with it are inexpensive luxuries (and so easy to make). A perennial favorite and a "must" in every wardrobe is a simple black crepe basic dress. Not a necessity, but of certain pleasure, is a wool dress in a high shade. A neutral topper to go over any of these clothes completes the picture. Any one of these patterns would be an asset to your current wardrobe . . . especially the suit accessories that give ONE suit the illusion of many. ★ BY NORA O'LEARY

DRAWI
BY MARGARET

Slim gray flannel su that buttons from neckline to hem. Sma collar, patch pockets. Vogue Design No. 6676, 12 to 2

Loveliest of suit blouses: tie neck, Vogue Design No. 6687, 12 to 42. Halters, stole and dickey (not shown) in one pattern, No. 6673.

Gray tweed kimono-sleeve topper. Nicely detailed yoke, slightly flared back. Vogue Design No. 6672, 12 to 20.

PHOTOGRAPHS BY FRANCESCO SCAVULLO

Chartreuse wool jersey "sack" dress cut in only four basic pieces. Gathers adjusted under belt. "Easy-to-Make" Vogue Design No. 6657, 12 to 20.

© VOGUE

The backbone of American wardrobes . . . the basic black crepe dress. "Easy-to-Make" Vogue Design No. 6674, 12 to 20.

at the store which sells them in your city. Or order by mail, enclosing check or money order*, from Vogue Pattern Service, Greenwich, Conn.; or in Canada from 198 Spadina Avenue, Toronto, Ont. Connecticut residents please add sales tax.*

Other Views, Sizes and Prices of these patterns are on page 190

Lili was part of the long ago:
why should her image still come between him and any other woman?

KINFOLK

by Pearl S. Buck

CONCLUSION

MRS. LIANG closed her eyes and sat back in her seat. At the last minute she had decided to take the plane instead of the steamer. Liang had come back one evening quite himself and had said very kindly that she might go. She was surprised and disturbed.

"Liang, I think I better not to go," she had exclaimed.

"Why not?" he had retorted. "I have myself all prepared."

"I have been thinking—who will look after you?"

"Nellie will feed me, and I will work hard and expect your return."

She had stared at him, but he had returned her gaze unblinkingly. He looked placid and well and she was further alarmed. "Then I must fly only," she said. "I fly there and fly back. Supposing I stay one month, I am satisfied."

So it was decided, and she made all preparations. She bought gifts for Mary of American stockings and underwear and a warm sweater, and a sweater, too, for James and her new son-in-law. Had she been on a ship she would have taken boxes, and Doctor Liang was secretly thankful that on a plane she could take very little.

Yet it was not only in the matter of clothes that she made preparation. She went to see Louise and had loud, exclamatory talk with Mrs. Wetherston in which she made known her joy at having another son-in-law.

"So nice!" she had said briskly. "One American, one Chinese son-in-law! I am sure American is better, but anyway I take what my girls like. Alec is so nice. Thank you, Mrs. Wellyston, to be such a good mother with a good son. He is too good for Louise. She is such selfish girl, I know."

"Louise is a darling," Mrs. Wetherston said.

"Thank you too much, but I know," Mrs. Liang said. "She puts down clothes anywhere. 'Louise,' I say, 'now you have baby. You cannot to put down everywhere. It is too bad. Pick it up,' I say. But she is so spoiled. Please excuse me."

"I won't hear a word against our little girl," Mrs. Wetherston said warmly. She loved Mrs. Liang and spent happy hours describing to her friends how interesting it all was since Alec had married a Chinese girl. "Of course, my dears, the family is exceptional," she always told them.

"Louise," Mrs. Liang said when the door had closed behind her, "now I want your listening."

Louise, changing the diapers of her adorable baby, did not look up. "Yes, ma."

"Now I am leaving your pa for nearly two months. Anyway six weeks," Mrs. Liang went on. "You must not just stay here and not see him. Every day or two days you must go to apartment."

"All right, ma," Louise said. She had no intention of such faithfulness, but she did not want to disturb her mother by truth. She lifted her baby tenderly in her arms, unbuttoned the front of her dress and presented her full young breast to the child's obedient mouth. Sitting in a low chair thus, she made a pleasant picture which moved Mrs. Liang's heart.

"Like I was with you," she murmured, her eyes swimming.

Louise smiled, unbelieving. "Go on, ma," she said.

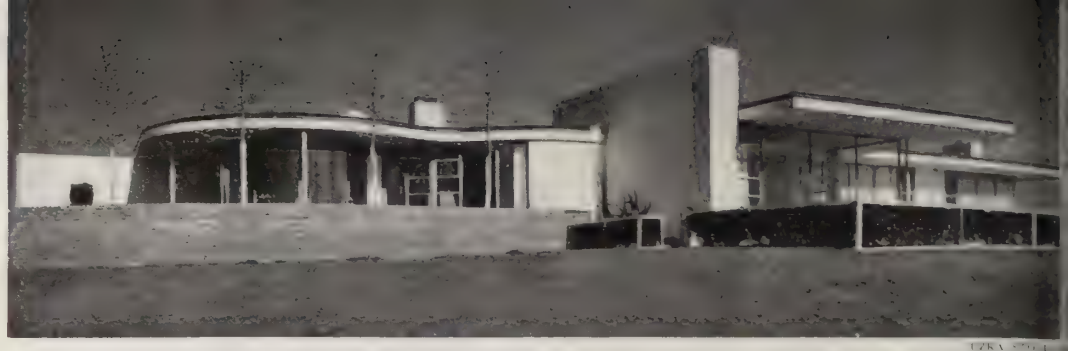
Mrs. Liang hitched her chair nearer and began to speak in a low, rapid voice in Chinese. "Eh, Louise, I tell you, your pa is a man, naturally. All men are the same. They like women too much."

Louise looked away. "Oh, ma, when pa is so old!"

Mrs. Liang looked indignant. "He is not too old. To you, yes, but to any woman over thirty, no! And I tell you ——" She broke off and considered. Should she or should she not mention the name of Violet Sung? She could not control herself and she went on. "You know Violet Sung? She is always—well, I don't say! But when I am away, your pa will be very weak."

"Oh, ma."

"You don't need to keep saying so," Mrs. Liang said with irritation. "I will tell you later when you are not so young, and you will understand better. Now all I say is, sometimes see your pa and listen to some friends, and hear if there is any talk."



Louise laughed. "All right, ma. But you're funny."

Mrs. Liang laughed too. She remembered she had brought a pair of new rubber pants for the (Continued on Page 64)

★ Copyright, 1949, by Pearl S. Buck. The complete novel is shortly to be published by the John Day Company. ★

Glass curves around most of the circular dining room and is covered after dark by rough-weave oyster-white drapes, when the big birch table and painted French chairs are lighted indirectly from above.

Low-spreading and serene, the house from its hilltop looks out over lush Long Island landscap

Connoisseur's House

By RICHARD PRATT

Architectural Editor of the Journal

THE daylight, which fills these rooms as evenly as air, illuminates one of the most distinguished contemporary homes in America. It falls on furnishings of the past as well as the present, from as far away as China, as close as the next county, now harmoniously mingled within these modern walls under one wide, flat, modern roof. For the furniture, the art, the rugs and fabrics, brought together with great gusto by the owner, find in this house, by one of our most gifted architects, a setting congenial to all concerned, providing the simplest of backgrounds to bring out their beauty to the best advantage.

The guest bedroom makes it clear once and for all how hospitable a completely contemporary room space, with window walls and no trace of traditional trimming, can be to furnishings of any fashion whatever, granting their goodness. Here Victorian and Empire make themselves right at home: the beds of black lacquer and mother-of-pearl, the Récamier sofa, the hooked rugs and the Victorian wallpaper in a room impartial to styles and periods.

A. CONGER GOODYEAR, owner;
EDWARD D. STONE, architect.

Here again, in the master bedroom, an utterly modern setting opens its arms to pieces of many periods and places. The large hooked rug is Early American, like the bed with its trundle bed beneath; the smaller rugs, American Indian. The painted chest is Pennsylvania Dutch; the camel, Chinese. The tall-back chair is a beautiful example of Shaker craftsmanship. The draperies are hand-blocked linen, the tiles Mexican Indian.

Jade plants against a plastic screen lead down into the living room where a rug with abstract design by the Frenchman Lurcat lies on the teakwood floor in front of an old Venetian cabinet on which are two still older Chinese figures flanking a stunning Van Gogh. Above the mantel is a Gauguin; beyond, another Van Gogh. The chairs are Louis XV; the table behind the modern sofa is Italian, and against the window, holding the Chinese horse, a free-form table by the Japanese-American sculptor Noguchi.

INTERIOR PHOTOGRAPHS BY WESLEY BALZ—JOHN JOYCE, INC.

Poets Kitchen

By GLADYS TABER

THIS kitchen is in an old white house at the top of a climbing green hill at the end of a steep and hazardous road. Actually it should be on Mount Parnassus, for here at this very sink, in this very kitchen, Edna St. Vincent Millay washes dishes and scours the pots and pans!

Now I expect to hear no more about housework's being "beneath" anyone, for if one of the greatest poets of our day, and any day, can find beauty in simple household tasks, this is the end of the old controversy.

When Miss Millay and her husband, Eugen Boissevain, first moved to the mountaintop in 1923, there were servants to help with the big house and the guests who came. In the old kitchen, the call bells still hung on the wall. There were the huge old range, the ancient sink; there were (Continued on Page 183)

Polished as a sonnet . . . Light as a lyric . . .
Echoing the color of sky and sea she loves . . .
Must be the kitchen for EDNA ST. VINCENT MILLAY

PHOTOS BY STUART-STEPHENSON

AFTER

BEFORE

BEFORE

AFTER

Dark and narrow, the old kitchen was hopelessly inconvenient. Working at the small single sink was time-consuming—and how hard to think of the couplet to close a sonnet when there wasn't a place to put the clean dishes! Modern equipment replaced the outmoded when electricity was installed. A wide casement window brought the world outside into the kitchen for a poet who loves the sky. Cabinets, as easy to clean as a china plate, a refrigerator in the kitchen instead of the back entry since it doesn't require icing, add up to satisfaction in the kitchen. A freezer an arm's reach away is the modern food pantry.

AFTER

BEFORE

The chef's corner in the old kitchen. There was little space for needed dishes, and the cooking utensils were not at hand. Cooking in a corner was awkward, and serving was a backhanded affair at best. The automatic performance of the new range, with its push-button controls, the toaster and coffee maker, is still like a fairy tale to those long unaccustomed to such convenience. The new cabinets have almost fifty per cent more storage space. And there is far more counter space than the old shelves and tables gave. The colorful eating corner makes breakfast a gay affair and provides a place for late supper when there is Conversation at Midnight.

WE CAN MAKE CHILDBIRTH SAFER

By

J. D. RATCLIFF

THIS year, upwards of 5000 women will die the most tragic of all deaths. They will die in the delivery room while creating a new life.

A major portion of this wastage of human life is unnecessary. Given the best medical care, a heavy majority of these women might be saved. Right now, dozens of alert medical societies are conducting valiant fights to see that they are saved. In communities where this unpublicized effort is under way, the word "death" on the bottom of the case history doesn't complete the biography of the victim. That fateful word is a summons to action.

In these communities, juries of critical physicians are examining every maternal death. They are asking pointed questions. Why didn't this woman get transfusions? Why was a fatal Caesarean operation performed when the patient might have delivered normally? And in each instance the most important of all questions is asked: Could this death have been avoided? The physician involved is invited to be present, face his critics and defend his actions.

Case histories fight future mistakes

This is the first magazine story on these meetings, which are conducted quietly and without a breath of publicity. At the outset, note one thing: these hearings aren't star-chamber inquisitions meant to shame a particular physician. They are meant to point out errors of judgment that cost a life—so that these same errors won't be made a second time.

In years of medical reporting, I have witnessed many stirring events. I have seen lives snatched back by new drugs, moments when the cold nerve of a master surgeon held a human life in the balance, the action of brilliant new vaccines as they triumphed over ancient plagues. None of these can match the drama to be found at a meeting of a maternal-mortality review board.

At these meetings, stories of individual tragedy are translated into the aloof language of science. Yet the vivid reality of death is always present—as gifted physicians search for reasons why some unknown woman forfeited her life for the privilege of having a baby. Death becomes the personal enemy of each man present; an enemy to be fought relentlessly and stamped out, if possible. If there is bungling in a case, tempers may flare. If everything has been done that could be done, there will be expressed impatience with the present state of medical knowledge.

Within ten years, America has risen from one of the worst to one of the safest places in the world to have a baby. But three fourths of all maternal deaths may still be preventable.

To be more specific, let's see one of these meetings. The session we are about to witness might have taken place in Philadelphia, Baltimore, Cleveland, Cincinnati, or any one of a dozen other cities. It happens to have taken place at the New York Academy of Medicine, where the county medical society's Committee on Maternal Welfare examines every maternal death in Manhattan.

Seventy-four physicians are present in the auditorium. No compulsion has brought them. They are there to learn, and to help improve the quality of care that women will get in the future. At this particular meeting, there are six deaths to be reviewed.

The chairman, one of the outstanding obstetricians in the country, has assigned a top-flight physician to each case—to gather all facts from hospital records, from the doctor involved, from the autopsy report. The physician assigned to the first case rises. He begins:

"This is one of the most unusual cases I have ever encountered. The patient was 29 years old. In 1946 she gave birth to a live child. In every respect the present pregnancy was normal up to the last six weeks. At that time, the patient started to gain weight rapidly, putting on 30 pounds. Her total weight at time of delivery was 221 pounds.

"She was admitted to the hospital on September fifteenth. Because of a toxemia of pregnancy, it was felt that she could not stand a long labor. Accordingly, a Caesarean section was planned for the next day, to be performed under spinal anesthesia.

"When an eight-inch longitudinal incision was made, a watery fluid oozed from the fat of the abdomen. An eight-pound live baby was delivered. When surgery was completed at 10:15 A.M., the patient appeared to be in good condition. At 12 noon, her pulse started to rise rapidly and plasma was administered. By 1:15 P.M., her pulse was at 160 and there was marked blueness of the skin. The patient was given oxygen and a transfusion of whole blood.

"At 3:30 P.M., the surgical wound started to ooze a blood-tinged fluid. It was decided that something had let go inside, and that a second operation was necessary. This was performed at 4:30 P.M. The abdomen contained 1000 cubic centimeters of blood which had hemorrhaged from the incision in the womb. The bleeding was partially controlled with sutures.

"Transfusion of whole blood was started into both arms. Despite this, pulse continued to climb, and blood pressure to fall. By 8 P.M. blood pressure was at 90 systolic, and pulse at 180. At 9 o'clock the patient died. Autopsy revealed a large quantity of blood in the abdomen, and acute kidney failure."

The physician who has given this report sits down and the chairman asks for comments.

Review boards uncover the facts

A sharp-featured young doctor rises. "It is obvious that this patient was toxic all along," he says in a clipped, clear voice. "Among other things, the enormous increase in weight indicates that. The physician should have recognized this early in the case. He should have attempted to control this toxic condition—by diet, rest, kidney stimulants. If these measures failed, he should have taken the baby."

Another doctor asks for the floor. "The blood picture here," he says, "indicates that the patient had a low platelet count. Her blood would not clot properly for this reason and hemorrhage resulted. This should have been discovered and combated before surgery began—by means of massive transfusion. She should have been given blood until the platelet count was at or near normal levels. Then the second operation which resulted in death might not have been necessary."

There are other comments on the case in similar vein. Most of them indicate that not all was done in this case that might have been done. When everyone who cares to speak has spoken, the chairman asks for the second case. The room is completely quiet. Everyone present wishes to catch every detail of this second story of death. Again, it is a case where a life might have been saved.

It involved a 27-year-old woman who came to the hospital in the eighth month of pregnancy. She was hiccuping continuously, and vomiting. In her gravely weakened condition, it (Continued on Page 117)

If you ask me

By Eleanor Roosevelt

My son enlisted in the Army because he did not care to serve for more than a year. At the time, he was told that when his year was up he had a choice of the active or inactive service. Inactive, he was told, meant he would be subject to call in case of war, that he would not have to do any training for six years; but the active meant actual training. He chose the inactive. Now, I understand, that information was incorrect, that he must train fifteen days once a year, two hours a week for six years after the completion of the first year, regardless of being active or inactive. Is this true?

As I understand it, under the present program to enlist in the Army for one year, the applicant would have to be eighteen years of age; no one else can do this. The program was inaugurated in September of this year, so I imagine your son has at least one year to serve. Automatically at the end of one year he will be on inactive service. He does not have any choice, and in that status he serves for five years. Inactive status means that you have to train one night a week for six years. Active status means that you have to train one month a year for five years. This is the best information that I can get from the Army and I hope that it covers your son's case.

As mayor of our small city, my husband has been approached by the National Committee for American Education to head an investigation into the textbooks, teaching staff, and so on, of our local school system to discover, if any, and eradicate any subversive communist and socialist propaganda. What is your opinion of the National Committee for American Education?

I am afraid I am not familiar enough with the Committee for American Education to give you a very valuable opinion. If I had been in the United States when this had to be written, I might have been able to look into it more carefully. I can only give you the results of what I have heard casually. As I understand it, this committee was set up about six months ago to screen textbooks and to look into teaching staffs to prevent the teaching of subversive doctrines. My feeling about most of the screening processes that are undertaken is that they are a type of censorship and should be undertaken only when very essential and that the people charged with such a duty should be carefully chosen. I have an instinctive feeling that censorship is bad, particularly when it comes to censoring teachers. I think it may discourage any kind of liberal thought more often than it actually uncovers any communists. The communist is well enough trained to hide his opinions usually and to do his job in very indirect ways, but the liberal is apt to be forthright and inquiring and not always wary enough in hiding his intellectual explorations from those who label all inquiry as subversive.

Why should we screen out of our schools knowledge of either socialism or communism? Socialism is increasingly accepted in a number of governments in Europe and Asia, and though we have accepted only some socialist ideas, it would be very unwise if we did not learn about them and weigh our own system and its results against these other systems. It is only by greater knowledge and conviction and enthusiasm that democracy can be made to meet the needs of the people. Our economic system has to be modified from time to time to meet new needs, and certainly our children should be trained to understand and to analyze and to compare all that we do with other systems and other results throughout the world. Academic freedom is something we cannot afford to endanger. There is a difference between studying something to know and understand and refute that which is false, and inculcating a particular line for the purpose of making a convert. That is really where the line should be drawn, and no one should be prevented from spreading knowledge among young or old on any legitimate subject. Calling anyone with a liberal or inquiring mind a communist or subversive person is a dangerous habit which has shown a tendency to increase in the United States of late.

Please tell me where all the social clubs everyone speaks of are located. I am in my late 20's, dress well and am attractive, yet so lonely I don't think I can stand it much longer. Any suggestions you can give me will be gratefully received.

I do not know that giving you the address of clubs about town would do you any good, but if I were you I would join the Y.W.C.A., where you would find yourself drawn into groups of people your own age; or you could join with some of the groups working in your church, which would also put you in touch with social groups. I should think if you are working anywhere you should make friends among the people with whom you work and create some social life for yourself in that way.

REPRINTED COURTESY OF THE SATURDAY EVENING POST

"I wonder if it's significant. Termites have got into my hope chest."

In view of how it has turned out, would it not have been much better to let Germany and Russia fight out their own battles without interference from us?

Unfortunately you seem to have forgotten that the battle in World War II was not between Germany and Russia alone. It was begun by Germany against Poland, Czechoslovakia, the Netherlands, France, Belgium and Great Britain. When Germany attacked Russia many people felt that was her greatest mistake, because in so doing she had to divide her forces and it took considerable pressure from the other Allies. Once Russia was attacked and became no longer an ally of Germany but ally of the other nations that had been attacked by Germany, it was not up to us to decide whether she would fight it out alone. She was fighting our battle; we were still fighting in many places against the German armies and we were more than grateful for the valiant fight put up by the Soviet soldiers when their country was invaded.

Aside from that, however, Germany was a totalitarian state and Nazism would have meant destruction to the soul of all the other nations. We hope that communism, which was founded to free the people from Czarism but which, because the people were not ready for self-government, has unfortunately become, to a great degree, a totalitarian government, will someday move toward greater democracy. If we have firmness and patience and can prove that democracy gives greater freedom to all people, a better standard of living and a higher level of happiness, then the Soviets may be persuaded by peaceful means to draw closer to our way of life.

Do you not think that loving and trusting President Roosevelt, we, the constituents back home, influenced Congress to grant extraordinary powers to the President under his administration, and which are beyond the intended limitations of that office wisely outlined in the Constitution of the United States?

No, I do not think it was affection for President Roosevelt which made you influence Congress to grant extraordinary powers to the President. Those were granted him because the domestic conditions when he came into office were so chaotic he had to have such powers in order to carry out programs which would change the trend which was bringing complete despair to most of the citizens of the United States. Later, when the war was upon us, conditions again were such that the President had to have extraordinary powers. You would have had to grant these powers in both cases to anyone who was forced to pull the United States out of the difficulties in which she was engulfed during the depression and to steer her through the worst war in her history. The Constitution was written so as to permit of interpretations to meet whatever might come in the future. One cannot write such a rigid Constitution that when new circumstances arise it cannot be applied. The value of our Constitution lies in its extreme flexibility, and Congress is free, when it feels certain powers are not needed, to withdraw them.

What happened to some of our boys in the Army? The other night a friend of ours was asking, "Is it right to take advantage of others to get ahead?" He feels that that is the only way. Have you found many of our boys who feel as this friend of ours?

No, I cannot say that the men I know who have come back from the war feel that they must take advantage of others in order to get ahead. Many feel that they have to work hard to achieve success, but they have learned consideration for others and the value of giving a helping hand, and of building friendships. I think your young man must be a particularly unfortunate one.

Letters should be addressed to Mrs. Roosevelt, c/o the LADIES' HOME JOURNAL. It should be understood that Mrs Roosevelt's answers reflect only her own opinions, and are not necessarily the opinions of the Editors of the JOURNAL.

MENU
(Planned for 6)
Split-Pea Soup with Croutons
Salt Pork Cream Gravy
Baked Potatoes
Scalloped Tomatoes
Corn Bread
Pepper Relish Pickled Pears
Celery
Fried Pies Cheese
Coffee

Fine Food Country Style

By ANN BATCHELDER

I feel sorry for folks who haven't some old favorite dishes to remember, retaste—even in imagination—and who are too proud to look back "o'er traveled roads" to that well-known and beloved room called kitchen. I mean an ample room with a great oak or deal table in the center, a more than adequate stove, and a marathon that nobody minded from stove to table to pantry et al. Kitchens were the best rooms anywhere. Kitchens were the tops.

The road back. Let's begin with that fine old stand-by—pea soup. Pea soup—if you are going to start from scratch and make it at home—ought to be planned so the soup-making day will fall when there's a ham bone in the house. Otherwise you might possibly borrow a ham bone. But if you are the original owner of a ham bone, you have a license (Continued on Page 84)

PHOTO BY STUART-FOWLER

LINE A DAY

By ANN BATCHELDER

1 Old books, like old friends, are of the best. I remember once someone gave me The Compleat Angler, by Izaak Walton. And Izaak and I have gone fishing year after year ever since. He gossips. I fish.

2 The French are the leaders in the art of cooking. They come up with, of all things, tender little beets cooked in cream. Can you beat it? Cook and slice the beets thin. Oh, about two dozen. Put them in a buttered casserole. Pour in a cup of cream, add salt and pepper and heat very hot. Add the juice of a lemon. And you wouldn't believe it, but this is delicious.

3 Pretty unusual, if unusual is what you want, is a sauce for baked chicken. Made with the juices in the pan, to which you add a can or two of chicken broth. Thicken this and cook with a bay leaf, then strain it. Season with salt and pepper, add half a cup of heavy cream and a cup of grated Parmesan cheese. When beaten very smooth, pour hot over chickens. Garnish with pulled sippets of bread, toasted.

4 I hold to melted butter as the perfect dressing for asparagus. Asparagus canned or frozen is as easily come by in winter as snowballs. Or more so. But butter browned in a frying pan, poured over the asparagus and finished with grated Swiss cheese, is something to keep in mind. Gives a new taste to an old stand-by.

5 This is a two-chapter receipt, and deserves it. Only a salad dressing, but something different has been added. First—cook a couple of fresh chicken livers. A piece of celery, an onion and a small bay leaf are cooked with the livers, then cast aside. Mash the livers and put them through a sieve.

6 Chapter 2: Put the yolks of two hard-boiled eggs through the sieve and mix with the livers. Put this in a bowl with a teaspoon of prepared mustard, a little salt and pepper. Now add two tablespoons of finest salad oil, stirring it in gradually and always in the same direction. Add a tablespoon of best vinegar. Mix well. This is exclusive to a green salad. And elegant.

7 Not to be lightly regarded is a center slice of finest ham fried in its own fat (watched and turned), then taken from the pan and two cups of rich milk poured in. Thicken slightly with a roux of butter and flour. Stir and stir until smooth. Season and add a touch of prepared mustard. Pour this over the ham or pass it, and serve with baked potatoes.

8 New England is solely responsible for the boiled dinner. And it's also to be credited with red-flannel hash. That comes naturally. It follows the boiled dinner as milk follows milking time. Take equal quantities of cooked beets, potatoes and cabbage. Add less cooked turnip and still less cooked parsnip and chop everything together very fine. Season and bind with some of the pot liquor. Cook in salt-pork fat. Serve with cold sliced corned beef. You just wait and see.

9 From an old cookbook: "There are nine and only nine steps to be followed in making dumplings. Even when these are faithfully followed, success is far from assured, and even when successful the result is an indigestible and undesirable mess." But the dumpling still survives.

10 You can't cart scrambled eggs all over the house and get anything resembling a scramble. Have them just set, have them hot, serve them pronto. Those are the three steps instead of the dumpling's nine.

11 Deviled ham spiced with mustard and chopped pickles is a little different filling for stuffed eggs, mashing up the hard-boiled yolks and mixing with the ham, of course.

12 If you've never heard of it—or if you make it every Sunday—apple potpie is a New England dish held in high repute by those in the know. Use firm, tart winter apples, Spies preferred, season as for apple pie, bake in a deep dish, but use baking-powder-biscuit dough for the crust.

13 No matter if one is addicted to what are known as "dainty dinners," black-bean soup is as welcome as the first February thaw, and quite a lot more satisfying. Decorate with either sliced hard-boiled egg and/or a rather thickish slice of lemon. Brown-bread sandwiches are mighty fine with this. Or toasted bread fingers—well buttered.

14 Answer to query: No, Pauline, a ginger nut is not the nut from a ginger tree. It's a cooky. Only a drop cooky that never dropped from any tree. Don't let them fool you.

15 It is possible that you haven't tried peas and mushrooms done together. Very good. Use the smallest mushrooms whole or the others sliced. Cook them in a little butter, add them to the peas, season and put in two or three tablespoons of cream. Another way, and popular.

16 Ever come across a pompano? If so, grab it. No fish out of water can beat it. One way: Split a good-sized pompano. Take out the bones. Lay it in a deep pan, well greased. Now make a stuffing—and I can see this receipt needs a second canto.

17 So here goes: Mix together two cups of finely minced shrimps, two beaten eggs, half a cup of minced mushrooms, sautéed, add a cup of heavy cream. Mix to almost a paste. Season well. Spread this on one half of the fish, settle the other half over it, pour over half a cup of cream and bake in a moderate oven, 350°F., for about forty-five minutes. Garnish with sliced, marinated cucumbers and lemon slices.

♥ ♥ ♥

WINTER BIRD

Sing to me of days of long ago,
Winter bird.
Has the drifting, drifting snow
Stilled the song I heard
At the fall of the year?
Sing it again and cheer my lonely day,
Then, weary of song, be on your way.

18 I should think—but haven't done it, yet—that the pompano stuffing would be wonderful with other whole fish to be baked. Don't you think?

19 Rice is one grain that is delicious for breakfast, delicate as a vegetable and de luxe in desserts. For the last named, serve it with fruit compote. This is a repeater, both for me and for the rice.

20 A word here and there about receipts hurts nobody. If there weren't any receipts there'd be no cookbooks. If there weren't any cookbooks, you would cook by ear, like the pounder of the ivories in an old-time crossroad picture house. Read, learn—and improve on what you learn. You're the artist.

21 Bees probably never dreamed of waffles. But for waffles, mix some strained honey with sweet butter, heat, and use it hot on hot waffles. Next to maple sirup it's tops.

22 Rival to a perfect baked potato is the mashed, for my money. Boil the pared potatoes, drain and cover the kettle with a towel, a cover and set them aside to dry out. Mash them, then put in a mixer or big bowl. Season with salt and pepper, butter and hot scalded cream or rich milk. Lacking a mixer, resort to the old elbow. Beat, but beat. That's all. Remember? A lump in mashed potatoes is as unwelcome as a vest button in the contribution plate.

23 To add to the hors d'oeuvres platter, how about little finger-size fish cakes, brown and crisp and hot, creamy inside? Grilled sardines on sardine-size toast. Chicken livers, dipped in Italian batter and fried. Cheese, bacon and peanut butter in tiny sandwiches, also fried. Any or all appeal to you?

24 Of fruit cups there is no end. One that you may not have dreamed up might come in handy. Minted cherries with orange and grapefruit, along with peeled white grapes, all in orange juice, is a honey, especially if you sweeten it a little with honey. More some other day.

25 Is this something I've said before? It bears repeating, anyway. Scalloped oysters ought to be not more than three layers deep. Use cream of mushroom soup as a moistener, sometime. Season with salt, pepper and a little nutmeg or mace. Go slow. Easy does it.

26 A tomato surprise isn't always so surprising as one fondly imagines. One you might really surprise folks with is a lovely little tomato stuffed with smoked crab meat in mayonnaise. Serve in a lettuce cup.

27 The Italian version of apple pie will concern us now. Don't fall over. Sweeten the apples with simple sirup, flavored with orange marmalade; and when you boil the sirup down, add vanilla to taste. Now this pie has a crisscross crust and it's served chilled, with cream.

28 So we part. Once more, but not for long. February is a short month, and that's a break. Along toward the end I'll look for willows by the brook and begin to talk about dogtooth violets and jack-in-the-pulpit. Pending that event, good luck.

DRAWING BY A. WILLIAMS

I'm Yankee bold, and Yankee brave,
A Yankee Doodle dandy;
Take my advice—for soup that's nice
Keep Chicken Noodle handy!

Let this soup that helped make history

...HELP YOU GET SUPPER TONIGHT!

And a mighty good supper indeed—with a bow to your budget, as well! For there's both good eating and good value in this soup. You see, Chicken Noodle Soup was a favorite of old Colonial days, and Campbell's make it today in the same honored tradition: plump chickens simmered slowly till the broth comes rich and golden . . . then good egg noodles added, and plenty of tender pieces of chicken. It's a hearty, he-man soup—the kind of main dish to please both purse and appetites. Let it serve you often!

Campbell's
CHICKEN NOODLE SOUP

LOOK FOR THE RED-AND-WHITE LABEL

Living a Good Life with a Bad Heart

1. To look at him, you would never guess that there is anything wrong with this man's heart. He is just a bit over 50 years old, active, happy, and getting a lot of enjoyment out of life—yet he has heart disease.

Like everyone else his age, his heart had beaten about one and three quarter billion times. Of course it was not as strong or as adaptable to sudden demands as it had been in youth, but he had no warning signs of heart trouble.

As a result of periodic medical examinations, his doctor was able to detect his impaired heart early, when chances for improvement are best. Today, by following his physician's advice, this man can lead a useful life of nearly normal activity.

2. He enjoys many mild forms of exercise, but carefully avoids any overexertion which might further strain his weakened heart.

3. By eating moderately, he lightens the work of his heart during digestion. This helps to avoid overweight, which is always a burden for the heart.

4. He is able to carry on his daily work, but allows plenty of time for sleep and rest. His heart then will have a chance to rest, too.

5. He maintains a calm and cheerful outlook, for his doctor explained that fear, worry, or nervousness might make his condition more serious.

MEDICAL SCIENCE has made many advances in treating heart ailments and more research than ever is being done on these diseases. The Life Insurance Medical Research Fund, supported by 148 Life insurance companies, is devoting all its resources to studies of this problem. For other helpful information about heart disease, send for Metropolitan's free booklet, 29-J, entitled, "Your Heart."

COPYRIGHT 1949—METROPOLITAN LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY

Metropolitan Life Insurance Company

(A MUTUAL COMPANY)

1 MADISON AVE., NEW YORK 10, N. Y.

Please send me a copy of your booklet, 29-J, "Your Heart."

Name_____

Street_____

City_____ State_____

TO VETERANS—IF YOU HAVE NATIONAL SERVICE LIFE INSURANCE—KEEP IT!

KINFOLK

(Continued from Page 53)

baby and fumbled for them in her bag. Now that secrets were over she returned to English.

"Of course don't tell Alec. Your pa is not his family. Maybe I am suspicious, but I know your pa too much. Now such pants like you haven't for the child. They button, you see, and then when you wash, buttons out, and so ——" Mrs. Liang demonstrated. "Good, isn't it not?" She laughed heartily. "Well, now I go back to ancestral village, and I must get used to small watercloths holding to babies' bottoms and open pants to make the water on the ground. Never mind—in China it is not bad. Here, of course, it cannot. Carpets on the floor and so on."

Louise laughed again. "Oh, ma, you're really a scream, if you only knew it."

"Screaming? I am not screaming, Louise."

"Oh, ma," Louise repeated, laughing helplessly.

Mrs. Liang looked about her anxiously. She had combed her hair, but she had not tried to change her clothes. She was glad, therefore, when she saw James and Mary and not her prospective son-in-law. They saw her at the same moment and at once they were a knot of three, their arms about one another.

"Oh, ma, thank you for coming," Mary cried.

James took her bags and bundles and led the way to the cart which he had hired in the city. He helped his mother to get in. "Ma, it has no springs," he reminded her.

"Eh, you need not tell me anything from now on." This was the air of home and she breathed it in deeply. "Such good smell!" she cried. "I am smelling hot sweet potatoes."

When a man tells you what people are saying about you, tell him what people are saying about him; that will immediately take his mind off your troubles.

—E. W. HOWE.

So it was. A vender had come near with his small stove and he was taking out roasted sweet potatoes and laying them on the tray he carried on the other end of his pole. Mrs. Liang fumbled for her purse.

"Let me, ma," James said hastily, and putting paper bills on the tray, he counted four potatoes.

Mrs. Liang shrieked. "James, you have made a mistake—so much money!"

"No, he hasn't, ma," Mary said. "Money is worth nothing now, unless it is from America."

AT this Mrs. Liang looked mysteriously cheerful. She fumbled inside her garments somewhere and brought out a small oilcloth package. Then she looked up and met the interested eyes of the mule carter and the vender and she pursed her lips.

"We better get going," she said. "I keep something to show you." She made clicking noises to the carter and James jumped in after Mary and they were off. Mrs. Liang sat between them and she put a hand on the arm of each. "What I have in this pack is something your pa also doesn't know. Your pa is good but too liking to keep his money for himself. So I take small squeeze for myself!" She laughed gaily.

"Oh, ma!" Mary said fondly. "I am so glad Chen is going to see you." She gave her mother's hand a squeeze, and then chanced to look at it. "Why, ma, how dirty you are!"

Mrs. Liang was not embarrassed. "Never mind—it is not here like America," she said comfortably. "Now tell me, Mary, how is this Chen looking and all that?"

"James, you tell," Mary said with sudden shyness.

"Well, mother," James said, "he is a little taller than I am, much bigger in the bones, a square head, a big nose ——"

"Not too big!" Mary put in.

"Always making jokes, doesn't like the city, doesn't like to dress up, doesn't like scholars ——"

"Sounds so nice," Mrs. Liang said. "Who is go-between?"

"I was, ma," James said.

"And Uncle Tao?" Mrs. Liang as shrewdly.

"Uncle Tao is willing."

"When is wedding?"

Mary looked shy again. "It depends you, ma, and when you have to go back pa."

"Six weeks only," Mrs. Liang said.

"Oh, ma!" Their voices rose in cho "We thought it would be six months least," Mary cried.

MRS. LIANG looked grave. "Your pa is valuable," she said. "I cannot just leave him loose. Violet Sung is always some hungry tiger outside door of ap ment."

"Oh, ma," Mary murmured while Ja kept silence.

"Just like Louise," Mrs. Liang retort "'Oh, ma,' she says, 'oh, ma, you are scre ing.' But I tell you I am older. Just n Mary, you are engaging and you think are too perfect."

"Only Chen," James said, smiling.

"Maybe just now Chen is too perfe Mrs. Liang conceded. "But here is C and men have no such good chance America where ladies are lying everyw with open bust and leg. You mustn't t I am blaming your pa too much. No! I bl elsewhere—Violet Sung and whole Ameri

"Tell us about Lou James said, seeing mother growing agita

To tell all about Lo occupied many miles, by the time they un stood the happy state their younger sister, it time to stop for the af noon meal. Mrs. Liang her appetite have its and she consumed sev bowls of noodles, steamed vegetable du lings, steamed meat roll, bean curd chopped raw onion, and salt fish.

"Many years my stomach is home also," she said. "Now I feel too good."

She slept for a while when they got in cart again, and it was twilight when t drew near to the inn where they were spend the night. There when they wer their rooms, ready for bed, Mrs. Liang layed James.

"I had told myself I would not ask ab your younger brother," she said, sigh "but I find him always in my thoughts. me all you know, and then I will think of in the night and be ready to put my so aside tomorrow."

"Ma, you should sleep," Mary exclai

But Mrs. Liang shook her head. "I k my old heart."

So James sat down on the edge of the board bed and he told his mother everyt he knew. It was all too little, and becau was so little she wept quietly.

"At least we know where he is buri she said at last. "When the times are g again, we will move him into the place w our ancestors are buried and where he longs, because living or dead he is st Liang." She bade James leave her then when he was gone she told Mary, "If hear me weeping in the night, let me we Uncle Tao had not gone to bed. He bade his sons help him put on his best clo and then, feeling that none of his chil could be of use to him in meeting a lady had lived years in a foreign country, he sent for Chen.

"I do not know how the honest L family got into all these foreign ways," U Tao grumbled. "Until my generation we not think of leaving our ancestral home wandering around. My brother went to city, but no farther. But this bookworm ang must run over there, taking his wife two small children, who have grown u bad as foreigners, and then his wife g

(Continued on Page 67)

Your face reveals your inner self to others

BE GENEROUS! Use lots and lots of luscious snowy Pond's Cold Cream. It gives you softer, thorough cleansing.

Keep your face lovely, glowing, alive so it sends a happy message of You to all who see you.

Your face is the only you that others actually see. It is revealing you—whether you know it or not—everywhere you go, every day of your life.

Do help it then to show you happily—and with loveliness. You can. You should.

Never be haphazard about the creamings that do so much to keep your skin softly, fastidiously clean. A rewarding "Outside-Inside" Face Treatment with Pond's Cold Cream acts on both sides of your skin. From the Outside—the Pond's Cold Cream softens and sweeps away surface dirt and make-up as you massage. From the Inside—every step of this treatment stimulates beauty-giving circulation.

NOT ONE—BUT TWO Pond's creamings. Yes—the "Cream Rinse" with Pond's really does more for your skin.

DO THIS—to wake up the Loveliness in Your face

Always at bedtime (for your day face-cleansings, too) do this rewarding "Outside-Inside" Face Treatment with your Pond's Cold Cream. This is the way:

Hot Stimulation—splash face with hot water.

Cream Cleanse—swirl Pond's Cold Cream—lots of it—all over your face. This will soften and sweep dirt and make-up from pore openings. Tissue off well.

Cream Rinse—swirl on a second Pond's creaming. This rinses off last traces of dirt, leaves skin lubricated, immaculate. Tissue off.

Cold Stimulation—a tonic cold water splash.

See your new face! It's radiant! It feels like smooth velvet! And so clean!

REMEMBER—It's not vanity to show yourself at your best to others. When you look lovely it makes a happy difference in your own confidence—the way you feel and act. And it makes other people feel the world's a nicer place when they see you.

The Lady Daphne Straight

Beauty, distinction and a charming natural grace come out to meet you in her challenging face—a face you turn to look at again and again because you can't help envying its loveliness. The Lady Daphne uses Pond's to care for her beautiful complexion. "The finest face cream I know is Pond's Cold Cream. I use it all the time," she says.

Pond's—used by more women than any other face creams. Today—get this favorite big dressing-table size of Pond's Cold Cream.

TEXTRON'S EMPIRE NIGHTGOWNS—all pink, all blue or white with blue piping. Pink or blue with la

Blue Dawn Beauty FOR YOU

Lovely as the daybreak, soft as the blue of sweet forget-me-nots—Textron's newest Empire nightgowns.
Tiny sleeves cap your pretty shoulders, a high bodice accentuates the slim waist, falls into the gentle, soft skirt. Of finest rayon crepe, meticulously worked in rich lace or detailed with delicate piping. Both in sizes 12 to 20. About $6.00 at leading stores throughout the country.
TEXTRON INC., Textron Building, 401 Fifth Avenue, New York 16, N. Y.

TEXTRON

BLOUSES • HOSTESS COATS • MENSWEAR • TRICOT LINGERIE • WOVEN LING

(Continued from Page 64)

h to two more who are foreigners. I renber her. She was a big mouth."
hen said, "I am grateful for everything, e it will give me a good wife."
Old-fashioned wives are best," Uncle grumbled. "When I frowned my wife nbled. I did not praise her more than or three times a year, for women and dren cannot be praised. It makes them udent. But this granddaughter of my her whom you want to wed! Eh, I tell begin strong. That is my advice to any
. Do not ask them anything. Neither them anything that is in your mind."
hus they were conversing of many things he universe when a hubbub at the gate them that the expected ones had arrived.
n got up quickly and left the room. He ld not be the first to greet the new-ers.
ncle Tao did not stand up when they e in. He sat like an old emperor in his carved chair by the table, his long pipe he hand.
Eh—eh," he mumbled, "so you have e back. Where is your husband?
He could not come, Uncle Tao. He hes school, you know, and they would let him come."
What do they pay
?" Uncle Tao ined.
e evaded this tion. "He sent bedience to you,
e Tao, and he me say that if e is anything you d like from the gn country he send it."
have no foreign es," Uncle Tao
ed with majesty.
ve you eaten?"
the daughters-aw clustered
t. "Come and come and eat," clamored and Liang went with ary had not followed her mother. In-she had gone to her room, pausing for ment beside Chen, who waited for her e inner gate. "You must go and see ma."

Now that she is come, I am frightened." illy," she said softly. "She likes you dy."
hen you have said too much about me."
ary gave him a little push. "Go on."
ll by myself?"
ll by yourself," she decreed.
shrugged his shoulders then and went d Mrs. Liang. She was surrounded latives, men and women, who sat down e her company while she ate. James was her and rose when he saw Chen. "Ah, he is," he called. "Ma, this is Chen."

. LIANG looked at Chen. The first look loubtful, then her eyes grew warm. "So s you," she said kindly. Then she put nds and took his hand between them the relatives stared. It was a good and clasp and Chen liked her then and . "Eh, eh," she said in Chinese. "You sit down and eat your food while it is perly and modestly he sat down at distance away and she sat down and latives began their chatter. In the midst e hubbub she stole glances at him sit-here and half the time their eyes met, increased content.

nes saw his mother take her place in Liang household as though she had been away. She was correct in all her lationships, and never once did her tongue nto the wrong title for sisters-in-law, and younger, and for their husbands heir children. What had been sharp in fe in her own home, James saw, was
She had become mellow and mild.
t Mrs. Liang did not sink back into old . She approved Mary's little school and she went about the village urging mothers to send their children to learn. In America, she told them, all people are compelled to go to school.

The villagers were aghast to hear of such tyranny. "Who, then, does the work?" they inquired. When she told them that learning to read did not spoil workingmen by turning them into scholars, they could not believe her.

BUT she herself washed her own garments and helped in the kitchens and in all ways surprised the Liang women, who expected her to act as a learned woman and think herself too good to work. The fame of this went out over the Liang lands, and women began to come to see Mrs. Liang and then to tell her of their troubles and how Uncle Tao oppressed them. But Mrs. Liang was shrewd.

"Right is not always with the poor," she answered James when he told her one day how much it troubled him that Uncle Tao had no thought for the people. "First you must ask why people are poor. Is it because they will not work or because they are thieves or because misfortune has taken them? Only then can you know how they must be helped."

"Uncle Tao is too hard," he said.

"He is hard," she agreed, "but do not you be soft."

To Mary she said, "Your brother James needs a good sound wife."

"He does," Mary agreed, "but where shall he find her? James does not look at any woman since Lili married Charlie Ting."

"He is stupid," Mrs. Liang exclaimed.

Meanwhile the wedding day drew near. For the sake of decency before the relatives, Chen and Mary kept apart, and did not meet at all until the day itself came. It was natural that Mrs. Liang should put her whole mind on this wedding, but James felt his mother's eyes upon him often.

On the night before the wedding he said to Mary, "As soon as you are married, ma will be after me for something. I can feel it."

"She wants you to marry, Jim."

He pretended to be terrified at this and begged Mary to prevent their mother. But in his heart he was both amused and curious.

The wedding was an old-fashioned one, and took place before the relatives. Chen chose as proxy for his family a distant Liang cousin, and the papers were written, the wine drunk, the millet bowls exchanged, and so all was finished. It was a bitter cold day, but the sun shone and when all were full of hot food it was good enough.

There was no such thing as a honeymoon, for that was too foreign. Mary moved her boxes into Chen's room and the next day went as usual to her school, and neither gave a sign of inner happiness. Yet James knew it was there. His very flesh was sensitive to their secret joy, it increased his own loneliness.

In the middle of one morning's work when they had drawn aside to discuss the case of a child with a huge water-filled head, suddenly in the midst of their talk Chen said in English, "Jim, you should marry."

James looked at him somewhat startled. "We were speaking of this sick child."

"I am thinking of you," Chen said. "I tell you ——"

"I have seen no woman that I want now for my wife," James said, too quietly.

They talked of the child again and decided to draw the water from its head. But while he worked, Chen's mind was busy far inside itself. James had said he had seen no woman whom now he wished to marry. Then why not one whom he had not seen? If his heart was dead, let it be waked by life itself, if not by love.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Winter Path

By Bernicce Bunn Christman

Down the whitening meadow path,
Ghostly and alone,
The evening wind goes spiraling,
Like thought forever blown
Out of autumn, down the heart,
Drifting and dividing Between the warm, remembered rose
And the naked thorn, abiding.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

THESE TINY DIAMONDS OF LUX

make nylons last twice as long

Tiny diamonds of Lux burst into suds at the first touch of water. They're faster! Give you thick, creamy suds that last and last. Compare them with any other suds. They're richer!

Don't risk strong suds or cake-soap rubbing. Use these tiny Lux diamonds to make your precious nylons last twice as long. Many, many strain tests prove that Lux care does this. That's just like getting an extra pair of stockings every time you buy a pair!

These tiny diamonds of LUX are another triumph of the world-famous Lever Labor

Tonight!..Show him how much lovelier your hair can look...after a

Lustre-Creme Shampoo

NOT A SOAP!
NOT A LIQUID!
BUT KAY DAUMIT'S
RICH LATHERING
CREAM SHAMPOO
WITH LANOLIN

for Soft, Shimmering Glamorous Hair

4-oz. jar 31¢ (smaller size and tube 10¢ and 25¢)

No other shampoo gives you the same magical secret-blend lather plus kindly LANOLIN . . . for true hair beauty.

Tonight he can SEE new sheen in your hair, FEEL its caressable softness, THRILL to its glorious natural beauty. Yes, tonight . . . if you use Lustre-Creme Shampoo today!

Only Lustre-Creme has Kay Daumit's magic blend of secret ingredients plus gentle lanolin. This glamorizing shampoo lathers in hardest water. Leaves hair fragrantly clean, shining, free of loose dandruff and so soft, so manageable!

Famous hairdressers use and recommend it for shimmering beauty in all "hair-dos" and permanents. Beauty wise women made it America's favorite cream shampoo. Try Lustre-Creme! The man in your life—and you—will love the loveliness results in your hair.

Kay Daumit, Inc. (Successor), 219 N. Michigan Ave., Chicago, Ill.

In the middle of that night, he said to Mary, "Why should we not find a wife for Jim? He will not choose for himself—then let us choose."

The thought was too bold and Mary scoffed at it.

"No, I mean it," Chen insisted. "Jim is the very one to let us do it."

"He never would," said Mary.

The next day Chen waylaid Mrs. Liang as she came from the kitchens and proposed to her that they should persuade Jim to return to ancestral ways and allow them to choose a wife for him.

Mrs. Liang was pleased indeed. "How is it I have not thought of this myself?"

"Mary says he will not do it," Chen suggested.

Mrs. Liang considered this. "Had he not fallen once in love with that Lili Li, I know he would not. But he is a very single heart. When he was small he once had a dog and when it died he never took another. This is his temper. We will plot together."

That evening Mrs. Liang went to Mary and Chen and together they planned what James should have for a wife. She must of course be schooled and she must not be too old-fashioned nor perhaps too modern. They let days pass, inquiring of themselves where such a girl could be found. Chen offered to go to the city and Mrs. Liang even tried to bring to memory the young Chinese women she had seen in New York. At last Chen said sensibly that they had better lay the whole plan before James, and with much arranging of who should speak first and how it should all be broached, they invited him to take a meal with them at the inn.

Mrs. Liang had been chosen to begin and she said to James, "My son, as your mother, I beg you to let me see you married to a good wife before I leave you again. Then I will not worry."

Mary spoke next and she said, "We have been thinking of all our friends to find one whom you might like. Don't try to fall in love again, Jim. Just choose a nice girl and see what happens of its own accord."

To their surprise James answered at once with a sensible gravity. "I have been thinking of these things myself."

"Then who ——" Mrs. Liang began joyfully.

James cut her off. "I will not choose for myself, mother. You must choose for me. You gave me birth and you know me. Mary and Chen can give their advice."

All three were set back by their easy victory. "But have you no thought about the kind of girl you—you ——" Chen ventured.

"Yes, I have thought," James said calmly. "I should like to have a good-tempered woman, one strong and healthy, the daughter of one of our own peasants."

The three listening were struck speechless. "But an ignorant woman, Jim?" Mary asked.

"You shall teach her," James replied, smiling. He put down his chopsticks. "Come, why are you all staring? I have only agreed to do what you have proposed. Find my bride. When you have found her, I will marry her. Now let us enjoy our feast."

Alone in his big apartment, except for Nellie rattling faintly in the distant kitchen, Doctor Liang was still confused, still sore at heart, but he was able to be grateful that Violet Sung had made the decision. It was the wise decision for them both, although he had rebelled against it with his whole being. Indeed, after these weeks of utter solitude and quiet, he was somewhat astonished that he could have gone to London after her. He leaned back in his deep red-leather chair. Well, he had his memories.

After Mrs. Liang had gone, he had really lost his head. It was the only way he could describe it now. He had felt so free, so gay. The New York season had come on, and since he had no one to think of except himself, he went everywhere. The most extraordinary thing was that he learned to dance. Had his wife been at home, her astounded eyes would have accused him of unseemly soft and gentle ... strong and absorbent say "SIT-TRUE"

So soft!

Buy 1 Hair Ne and get 1 Free!

hand ma of human ha

VENIDA
The Guaranteed HAIR NETS

We make this special offer a a token of appreciation to o friends and to introduce Venid Hair Nets to new users.

CUT OUT THIS AD!
Any department or drug store will redeem it for 1 Venida Hair Net FREE when you purchase 1 at regular price and present coupon.

CHOICE OF ANY COLOR 20
WHITE, GREY or PURPLE 2

CAP, BOB OR ADJUSTYLE FRING SINGLE OR DOUBLE MES WITH OR WITHOUT ELAST

Purchaser _____
Address _____
City _____ State _____

RIESER CO., INC., 119 W. 40th St., N. Y.

vior in his old age. But Violet had t him and had praised him for his light-supposed that they were together what too much, and therefore the Eng-an was not to be blamed. Yet he had o evil. On the contrary, never had he exalted, so noble, so good, as he had he and Violet saw each other every He did not try to write anything, al-h he had begun a new book, an anthol-f Chinese love poetry. He taught his s, of course, and he felt his teaching ispired. Marriage, he then realized, had inspired him.

er nearly three weeks of this well-nigh t happiness Violet told him one day the telephone that she could not see
She said something about headache, and ext day she called him again, and said as flying to London.
ut why?" he had kept insisting.
had answered vaguely that she would and that it would be better for them meet.
had destroyed the letter. He had car-with him to London, and when he had er for the last time, he had torn it in d dropped it from Westminster Bridge they had met—wishing, but only al-that he could throw himself after it.
tter had been unsatisfactory to him.
ad simply said that Ranald Grahame ld her that unless she stopped seeing r Liang, he would cut her off. She had ht about this carefully, she wrote him, view of all the lives involved, it seemed to stay with Ranald. But she was his, s faithfully, Violet Sung.
enty-four hours of solitude made the to see Violet, to talk with her and to d her return to him, nto a ravening wolf bosom. He did not hat anyone thought e would divorce his r at least command stay on forever in ncestral village. He ed his affairs and ellie that he had had a summons from
n. This summons he provided for by g to old Mr. Li to ask if he might stay nem. The invitation came back at once y and he left the cablegram on the -room table where Nellie would read used the power of his famous name Chinese embassy and got a priority nd flew to London within the week.
had been far too prudent to try to see , for he had no intention of meeting the hman, whose very name he did not to remember. He wrote her a letter nt it by messenger. Not trusting boys, l found an extraordinary old woman nly one arm whose lean, rigid face reliable.
not come back without an answer," commanded.

s later she had come back. "It took a 'angin' round," she told him. "The lydy kep' tryin' to put me off like.
ome back tomorrow and all that. I ne orders is, bring back the arnser.
t is, sir."
as brief enough to break his heart.
that we have parted," Violet said, should we meet again?" That was all made him very angry. He sent a bold m, not caring this time whether the hman did see it.
u owe me an explanation," he said. "I eet you on the near end of Westminridge tomorrow at six P.M." y people came and went on the bridge six it was winter's dusk. He saw her she saw him. She wore a fur coat and a ur hat trimmed with violets and fitting to her face.
en Hua, you shouldn't have made me
" she said. "It is really dangerous for promised Ranald that I would never u again alone."
t you have come, and that means you d to."
u are wrong," she told him.
evening was strangely mild and still,
and her cheeks under the lamplight were rose pink, like an English girl's.

"I did not want to come," she went on. "I have made my decision, Wen Hua, and I shan't change."

"How can you decide against me?"

They were leaning against the rail, their backs to the passing people; and looking down into the river, she had mused for a moment.

"It isn't as if you and I could really love enough to give up everything," she said at last. "You only want to have me too."

"That is not true."

"Yes, Wen Hua, it is," she had replied. "People like you and me—we are not real."

"We exist, don't we?" he asked with some indignation.

"Oh, yes. We have these bodies ——"

He waited again and this time he did not press her. He was afraid of what she was going to say—whatever it was.

She said, "We live on other people's roots. Wen Hua, what makes you real is your wife. She is so real that were you and I to —— Of course she would not tolerate me. Even in China, where we think we settled all human relationships centuries ago, the real women do not tolerate the concubine."

"I was not thinking of putting away my wife," he said stiffly.

"No, but you see," she said, "Ranald is like your wife. I mean, he's real too."

"He doesn't marry you."

"No," she agreed. "But I think I don't want him to."

"You don't love him?" He had grasped at this.

She shook her head. "No, but I trust him. Someday we will part. Perhaps it will be I who make the parting. But when that day comes he will not leave me destitute."

"Money, I suppose you mean," he had said bitterly.

"I need money," she had said reasonably.

"Suppose he marries?" He wanted to hurt her.

"Even if he marries he will be grateful to me. He has a sense of obligation, you know."

She had used him to make the Englishman feel an obligation!

When he accused her she denied it. "It is not quite like that. If you had been quite real, Wen Hua, I might have dared to do anything. But for two people, both unreal, to leave the people they can trust ——"

"Why do you not trust me?"

She had lifted her dark eyes to him then. "You know yourself."

So he had come home again. Mingled in his hurt love for a beautiful woman were her words, "You know yourself." He did not want to know himself. She had shaken him very badly indeed. The affair might have ended sublimely. It might have been a splendid rejection of a selfish love; it might have been a noble acceptance of the obligations life had already put upon them. But she had taken away both splendor and nobility. She had said merely the few words, "You know yourself." They included these few words more which she had not quite spoken, "And I know you."

Mrs. Liang saw her husband waiting for her at the airport and she thought he looked tired. She blamed herself for having been away so long, and although she felt very tired herself after this dreadful journey, she braced herself to seem better than she was.

He took her hand openly. "Louise couldn't come," he told her, not knowing what to say first. "She has the children and so on. But they are all coming to a welcome dinner."

"How nice!" she exclaimed. "You look a little bit of tired, Liang. Are you feeling quite well? Now I shall feed you something good."

"I am well enough," he replied with a touch of pathos. "Nellie has done her best. I gave her a little vacation, by the way, because I had an invitation to visit the Li family in London and I thought it would be a good way to pass the time until you came

To avoid mistakes and regrets, always consult your wife before engaging in a flirtation. —ANON.

First luxurious complexion treatment for hands and body!

New Aquamarine Lotion by

Revlon

a miraculous blend of balms scented with costly imported perfumes

You've dreamed of it! A rich creamy lotion that smooths you silken-soft from head to toe. And now you have it . . . Revlon's delicate blue Aquamarine, soft as the touch of a cloud, scented with imported costly perfume! Never before a lotion with such a magic touch . . . such a genius for fondling every blessed inch of you! 1.00 plus tax Right as Revlon!

DRESS: BEN GAM PHOTO: RAWLINGS MAKE-UP BY DEL RUSSO OF REVLON ©1949 REVLON PRODUCTS CORP

home." He wanted to tell her about London at once.

In the cab, he was surprised at his sense of comfort as he held her plump hand. He had not done such a thing in years.

"Eh, Liang," she said, smiling at him, "I think you do want me to come home again!"

He gave her his slight smile. "I was only afraid you would not want to leave the ancestral village and all its delights to come back to New York and your poor old scholar."

She began then to chatter in Chinese. "Liang, nothing is changed! Can you believe that after all these years Uncle Tao is just the same, but more fat, except, poor old man, for the knot in his belly which must come out, James said, as soon as he is willing. And the street, Liang, even more dirty! It is winter and so I did not see flies. But Mary teaches a school now and maybe things will be better in a few years. All the relatives are the same except some are dead." She counted off on her fingers the dead Liangs and what they had died of and when.

When they reached the apartment, she was surprised to find as she went from one room to another that there was a faint feeling of home here. She could not have believed it possible, but so it was. The Wetherstons had sent flowers of welcome, and Louise called on the telephone almost immediately and Mrs. Liang listened avidly to details of babies' teeth. Then she looked at the clock and screamed:

"Louise, please! Only one hour or so and there is the dinner coming. Tell me something more, darling, when you are here."

It was a very successful evening. Doctor Liang was at his best, dignified and quiet. He was courteous to Mr. and Mrs. Wetherston, and condescending and pleasant to his daughter. The many dishes which the Chinese restaurant chef served with a flourish provided conversation for two hours and more, and the last hour of the evening Mrs. Liang used in describing the fabulous ancestral village, the home of the Liangs with its courts and many rooms, the hospital which James was building, the school which Mary had already established, the relatives in all their beauty and cleverness and finally Uncle Tao, who presided over them all like a god.

"You make it sound wonderful, ma," Louise said with some astonishment.

"In its way, it is also wonderful," Mrs. Liang declared.

She had not mentioned cold or filth or scald-headed children or beggars or rebellious tenants or quarreling relatives or Uncle Tao's tantrums or any of those things which Doctor Liang feared. When he perceived she was creating a beautiful China before these foreigners, he felt for her a new and profound tenderness. This woman of his was doing it for him!

That night when she had made honest love to him in her downright wifely fashion, and after he had yielded pleasantly to her inclinations, they lay talking for a long time and now she told him about her visit. Most of all she talked about James and the girl she had found for his wife. The betrothal had been very quick—too quick, maybe, she admitted. Of course James had said she was not to worry.

"Liang," she said earnestly, "I tell you, James is spoiled for common marriage. If he did not marry the girl in an old-fashioned way, he would not marry at all. I went w carefully through our whole region and fou a girl who is not blood kin to the Liangs. H father came from Shantung when she w small and their lands are beyond the Lia lands."

"What sort of a girl is she?" Doctor Li inquired.

"A big girl, maybe you would say," M Liang replied. "She is not fat, but w strong and she has a round face and big bl eyes. She is old-fashioned, you know, Lia She combs her hair as I did when I was a g She wears country clothes—no skirt. I she is quiet and she is very honest and will think only of James and the children w be very healthy."

He was so silent that she began to be fe ful lest he did not approve.

She spoke in the darkness somew shyly. "Liang, I do not know how you thi but for my part I have been very satisfie our old-fashioned marriage. I know that r our young people like to love by themsel but judging by everything that I have s Liang, I don't think so much of love."

"Nor do I," said, and then added firmly, "v little indeed!"

The ancestral lage seemed to s back into the e after Mrs. Liang it. None had q realized how her l presence had dr them into a new ergy. Within her n ral self she had m of communicat with everyone. E Uncle Tao missed when she was g for though she not talked much w him she had dev small comforts him. She had was and turned his wi padded robes and had made him a bedquilt, light warm.

But upon Ja she had left her gr est influence. He what he had n known before, t his mother was at all a stupid wo

It was true that hers was a brain w could neither receive nor retain an stract idea; that is, an idea which nothing to do with the simple welfa those she loved. Heaven, God, Governm Communism, War, Human Rights, Reli all the large words which provided mo argument, she tolerated as amusement for men.

While they argued and talked she busy, hand and mind. She did not con that people whom she did not know a whom she was not related were her con Yet if any were brought within the ort her knowledge she busied herself at with their needs too.

James had set the wedding day for the week of the lunar year. During the holi he knew he would have no new pati He did not intend to take a honeymoon he knew that nothing would terrify hi known wife more than that. Nevertheles did not wish to have all the hours of th and many hours of the night busy as now were with the sick.

He and Chen had already begun wo the first three rooms of what was to be hospital. The courtyard swarmed wit families of the sick who came to stay an with their own eyes that no damage done to their helpless relatives. He ha gun with three rooms, easily within the of the money his mother had given hi

(Continued on Page 74)

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Nostalgia

By Eleanor Alletta Chaffee

I remember my English grandmother,
Her kitchen garden and what it bore:
Easter Bell, and Head-in-a-Bush
Looking up at the painted door.

That was a long, long time ago,
But some of those names come back to me:
Bishop's Weed, and Darning Needle,
And Pitchfork pointing a spear at me.

My herbs flourish, but not like hers
Hiding away among the leaves.
Thinking of them, like her frail
Job's Tears,
My heart lies over the sea, and grieves.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

HE DOROTHY GRAY GALLERY OF FASCINATING WOMEN—ONE OF A SERIES

Beauty Basics . . . for skin with kiss-appeal iss-inviting skin isn't a matter of ars alone. You may lose it 20 . . . you may have it at 40. But u can have it . . . you can keep it!

llow the famous Dorothy Gray
ne . . . Two . . . Three" Beauty sics Skin Care: (1) Cleanse, ) Stimulate, (3) Lubricate your ecious skin with the Dorothy Gray oducts created especially r your skin type.

1. Cleanse

Dry Skin Cleanser . . . $1 to $4. Salon Cold Cream for normal skin, $1 to $4. Liquefying Cleansing Cream for oily skin, $1 to $3.50.

2. Stimulate

Orange Flower Skin Lotion for dry or normal skins, $1 to $3.75. Texture Lotion for oily skin, $1 to $3.75.

Gladys Swarthout—Mrs. Frank M. Chapman, Jr.—vivid mezzo-soprano of the Metropolitan, and concert star; acclaimed by critics as first feminine classical singer in radio for five successive years. By the distinguished painter Walter Klett.

3. Lubricate

Special Dry-Skin Mixture for dry or normal skins, $2.25 to $8. Suppling Cream for oily skin, $1 to $2.75. (All prices plus tax)

Dorothy Gray

THE DOROTHY GRAY SALON • 445 PARK AVENUE, NEW YORK

General Electric proudly announces...

More than

In the famous old "Monitor Top" model (at right) General Electric developed the sealed-in refrigerating system that has set an unsurpassed record for dependable performance. Shown above is the very latest General Electric model—the new 1949 Refrigerator-Home Freezer Combination.

Your friendly General Electric retailer will be glad to show you the different models and sizes in General Electric's complete new 1949 line.

2 million in use 10 years or longer!

• If you are thinking of buying a refrigerator, the statement above has a significance for you far beyond the manufacturer's justifiable pride in a well-made product.

Your investment in any refrigerator is a major one . . . and here is assurance that you invest wisely when you choose a General Electric. For a refrigerator's most important advantage—one that cannot be demonstrated on the showroom floor—is trustworthy service . . . every minute of every day, for years and years to come.

No other refrigerator can excel General Electric's record for dependable, economical performance!

Read what users say:

"The reason for my writing this letter is to tell you about our electric refrigerator which we bought in 1931. We have never had anything repaired on it in the 17 years that we have had it. The General Electric Company really must take great care and use good materials in their products."

MRS. WILLIAM D. ZINK
141 West Oley St., Reading, Pa.

"A G-E Refrigerator has given 20 years of continuous and efficient service in three households—in the kitchens of a mother and two of her daughters as they became married—now back in mother's kitchen after an absence of fifteen years, where it is serving as well as it did when new in 1928.

"During all these years it has not cost any of the three families a single cent for service or repairs, except 95 cents for a new rubber door-sealing gasket."

HENRY B. GOODMAN
New London, Conn.

"I feel that the General Electric Company would like to know that I have had a General Electric Refrigerator for 20 years. It is in good condition and still running night and day. Maybe you would also like to know that it has never had a service call."

MRS. A. J. HETTRICK
Oswego, Ill.

"On June 10th, 1930 I purchased a General Electric Refrigerator. It has run continuously since then and is still going strong. It has never caused me one bit of trouble and the motor is as quiet as the day I bought it. I think this is a wonderful record and I wanted you to know about it. You may be sure I shall always buy General Electric products."

MRS. AGNES D. EY
West Warren, Mass.

"In April 1929, we bought one of the coil-type (Monitor Top) models and it has been running continuously for 19 years and so far we have not spent one cent on it."

MRS. HARRY W. WOMACK
Havana, Fla.

"We have a General Electric Refrigerator bought in 1926 . . . in constant use all these years. It has never been serviced. This is a record I think even General Electric can be proud of."

MRS. H. H. BADER
3047th Ave., N.W., Puyallup, Wash.

"Seventeen years ago this month my husband presented me with a G-E refrigerator as a birthday gift. Since then, summer and winter, it has served us continuously and during all that time our only expense on it was a new gasket for the door."

MRS. W. H. (ROSA B.) FOSTER
Eureka, Ill.

The Basic Reason:

The basic reason for the long and faithful service record of General Electric Refrigerators lies in the famous G-E "sealed-in" refrigerating system. This type of oiltight, airtight system, developed by General Electric, is recognized as the greatest of all contributions to dependable, efficient, economical performance in household refrigerators. General Electric Company, Bridgeport 2, Connecticut.

SPACE MAKER Refrigerators

GENERAL ELECTRIC

How You Wash Dishes Can Cut Colds and Flu!

Health Authorities say—how you wash dishes, the kind of suds you use, can make the difference between sickness and health

Perhaps you didn't know that danger lurks in your dishpan. But it's there! Even glasses and dishes that look clean may actually carry sickness to the very ones you wish to protect.

This is a fact that has been proved beyond question. For doctors have found that germs breed in dishwater film. Even dishes that you've scrubbed hard and polished carefully often carry this germ-breeding film.

Dreft Ends Germ-Breeding Film. With this amazing dishwashing discovery—DREFT—the menace of dishwater film is gone—DREFT leaves no film—it actually helps protect your family's health.

And this new way of dishwashing, made practical by DREFT, not only helps you safeguard those you care for—it is actually an easier, quicker, happier way of doing dishes!

New, Quick, Dreft Way. Wash your dishes in Dreft's abundant lasting suds. Give them a hot rinse (the hotter the better). Then let them drain dry. It's just as easy as that!

Dreft suds leave your dishes and glasses shining bright . . . even without wiping. Healthfully clean . . . film free—as no suds before Dreft ever got them!

Heed the warning of Public Health authorities . . . help protect your family's health.

DREFT washes dishes so clean it helps protect your family's health
as no suds ever could before!

(Continued from Page 70)

her savings. The people would have to pay for each new room as it was needed. He explained this and everyone paid a little. When he cured a local warlord or petty officials, they gave more for the sake of pride. Su and Kang and Peng would have laughed, James knew, but this was his hospital and it was the only way he could build it.

Meanwhile his nights, when he was not called anywhere, were busy with teaching. He and Chen between them were training fifteen young men from neighboring villages as well as the ancestral one. These men when they had enough knowledge would travel through the countryside to wash and disinfect sores and ulcers and bad eyes, to treat malaria and smallpox and to bring to the hospital such as they could not heal.

The wedding day was cloudless and cold. The house was still and the Liangs slept late. Slowly they bestirred themselves and made ready for the noon when the bride would come in her red sedan chair. Uncle Tao was got up and fed and dressed in his best garments and every child was washed and given some new thing to wear.

James took his breakfast with Chen and Mary as usual. He had wondered how he would feel on his wedding day and was surprised that he felt nothing, neither fear nor joy. This, he told himself, was because he had not seen the face of his bride. He would ask nothing of her tonight. He had already planned what he would say to her.

"You and I have chosen each other in the old way of our ancestors," he would tell her. "Yet we are not as our ancestors were. We live in two worlds, the old and the new. Therefore let us be friends for a while, until we know what we are. Then, after we are friends ——"

But in spite of all his determined calm, his heart hurried its beat when noon came. Then he remembered how often in the centuries past men, his ancestors, had stood as ignorant as he of their fate. For them as for him marriage was not for individual pleasure. It was the unfolding of life itself.

He waited while she came down out of the red sedan chair and was led slowly into the house by two of the women. He saw a slender strong figure dressed in scarlet from head to foot. Her head was bent under its beaded veil, but through the strands he saw a grave, good face, the eyelids dropped, mouth firm and red. He did not look at her again all day.

When he entered his room that night and heard the door close behind him, he knew that now the goodness of his life depended upon him and upon this unknown woman. She sat beside the table and her hands lay one upon the other on her lap. They were brown and not too small, and the nails were not painted. She sat motionless, waiting, he knew, for him to lift the veil from her head. He went forward at once and, putting his hands to the headdress, he lifted it off and set it on the table.

"How heavy it is," he said in his pleasant voice. "I hope you have not a headache from wearing it all day."

At this she looked up quickly and then away again. "I have a little headache," she said, "but it will pass soon. I am very healthy."

He liked her honest voice, the accent rustic yet clear. She was not pretty, but her face was good, the features straight and the skin smooth and brown, as is common with countrywomen. The mouth was generous and it looked sweet-tempered.

He sat down opposite her. "Tell me about your life," he said. "Then I will tell you about mine."

A mild look of surprise came on her face, but after a few seconds she began without shyness. "What have I to tell? I have no learning—and of this I am ashamed. But in a busy household on the land there is no time for a girl to go to school."

"It is easy to read," James said. "My sister will teach you if you wish."

"I do wish," she said quickly. "That you can spare the time for me."

"There will be time," James said.

Then simply, so that it would not awe her, he told her of his own life and how it had been spent abroad and why he had wanted to come back to his own people. She listened, sitting motionless, her head inclined, and he found himself telling her more than he had planned.

When he had finished she said in a grave, quiet way, "Our country is now in bad times. There are those who go away in such times and those who come back. The good ones come back."

He was delighted with this. In so few words she had put what he had tried to tell him often in many ways, but never so simply and clearly. Now he could make the proposal of friendship. "You are tired. Let me say what I have to say. You and I have chosen each other in the old way of our ancestors —" He went on and she listened.

When he had finished, for the first time she looked into his eyes. "Your mother told me you were a good man. Now I know you are."

After his wedding his life flowed on scarcely changed from what it had been. Within a few days Yumei began to make small, comfortable changes in their rooms and he found his food served hot and on time, at hours when he could most easily eat. When he came in at night there was always something warm and hot to eat and he found he slept better for it.

It was she who first told him that Uncle Tao was frightened and in pain. "Please look at Uncle's old head," she said to him. "Yesterday he was walking behind his hand and he thought no one could see him. I asked him to tell me what was wrong, for I know that the knot on him weighs on his reins and he cannot sit or sleep."

> Beautiful young people are accidents of nature. But beautiful old people are works of art.
>
> —MARJORIE BARSTOW GREENBIE: Be Your Age (Stackpole & Sons).

"I have long told him that he should have me cut it out," James said to defend himself.

She sat down at a little distance from him and folded her hands as she always did when she was about to talk with him. "Please do not give me," she said. "You know everything better than I do, I think, but this one thing perhaps I know better—it is how people feel. Now Uncle Tao wants to have his knot cut out but he is afraid he will die."

James was a little impatient with her. "I have told him he will die if he does not have it out."

"He told me you said so," she replied in the same quiet voice. "That is what makes him so afraid. He has no way to turn. Therefore let us tell him this way. Promise him that he will live if he has it cut out. If he dies he will not know it. And if he believes he will live it will give him strength not to die."

It was hard to refuse this shrewd persuasion. He sat silent for a while, thinking it over.

"Surely life is the most precious thing," Yumei said, when he did not speak.

"I will do it, if Uncle Tao can be persuaded," he said at last.

"I will persuade him."

What this persuasion was, none knew. But all knew that some sort of slow, powerful, gentle argument was going on between the old man and the young woman. She served him every day with a favorite food and sat with him while he ate, and when he had eaten she began his persuasion, urging him to life. She pointed out that in such times as these the old and the wise were the candle lamps to guide the feet of the people. She had persuaded Uncle Tao that he ceased to think of himself as an aging, useless old man and became his duty to live, and then she made him believe that he could live. When he had reached this place she went and told James.

All were astonished. But James gave none of them time to think, either for or against. He knew that he must take this moment when Uncle Tao's courage was high. Di

Just Whistle...

by Bissell

When your young buckaroo upsets the ash stand on the freshly cleaned rug . . . don't scream. Run for your new Bissell Sweeper . . .

And whistle! Bissell Carpet Sweepers now have "Bisco-matic"* Brush Action for the easiest clean-ups ever!

You don't have to press down at all. This miracle brush adjusts itself automatically to every rug nap, thick or thin . . .

Even cleans under low furniture, with the handle held flat! Save your vacuum for periodic cleaning . . . use a new "Bisco-matic" Bissell® for quick everyday clean-ups. It pays!

Illustrated: The "Vanity" at $8.45. Other models from $6.45. All with "Bisco-matic" Brush Action, easy "Flip-O" Empty, and "Sta-up" Handle.

Bissell Sweepers

The Bissell Carpet Sweeper Co.
Grand Rapids 2, Michigan

*Reg. U. S. Pat. Off. Bissell's patented full spring controlled brush fail with his own flesh and blood, did Uncle Tao die, no one in the ancestral village would believe in him again and he would have to move his hospital elsewhere.

There was no wind or sand the next day and the small operating room was clean. Early in the morning Uncle Tao was moved there upon a litter carried by his sons, and only once did he speak after this. When he felt himself on the table he opened one eye. "Where is that young woman?"

"I am here," Yumei replied, coming in at that moment. She looked at James with apology. "I told him I would stay with him."

"Very well," James said.

Never had he undertaken so heavy a task and never had he been so afraid. He had gone into that battlefield where alone he must fight the enemy who was Death. Chen had bared the great belly and it was shaven and clean. Now with his knife James drew a straight, clean cut down. Yumei did not look, but she stood by Uncle Tao's head, hearing his breathing. Once it faltered and she touched Chen, who pressed a needle into Uncle Tao's arm.

In the silence James worked swiftly. Chen was a matchless partner, standing on the side. Veins were clipped and held, and working against time and the slowing breath, James lifted out at last the tumorous weight and threw it into the waste bucket. His courage soared. He had met his enemy face to face and the victory was his. Uncle Tao would live.

YET life after battle is a wary thing, poised always like a bird for flight. Uncle Tao had to be watched day and night, and Yumei never left him. She had a sort of life in herself which caught and held the life in Uncle Tao when it was about to escape.

It was Yumei who did a thing at once absurd and yet of great comfort to Uncle Tao. She picked up the tumor from the waste and put it in a big glass bottle which had once held medicines. This bottle she filled with strong kaoliang wine, and she sealed it and put it in Uncle Tao's room. To see it imprisoned and helpless made him feel strong.

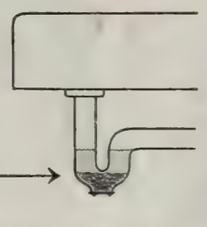
When Uncle Tao was well enough to sit up he invited all his friends to come and see what had been taken out of him and he boasted of its size and color.

"I grew it for many years," he said, looking around on them all solemnly. "At first I was the stronger, but it grew stronger than I. Then I said to my nephew, the doctor, 'Take it out of me.' He was afraid—eh, he was truly afraid! But I was not afraid. I lay down on the table and smelled his sleeping smell, and he cut me open. Now I am as good as new."

He was never weary of telling his story, and it must be said that no one was weary of hearing it. Even the kinfolk who heard the story every day or two were proud of Uncle Tao. Thereafter whenever someone complained of a pain in him anywhere Uncle Tao ordered him to come to the hospital where his nephew would cut it out and his nephew's wife would put it in a bottle. Thus it became a matter of some fashion to have tumors in bottles standing on the table in main rooms of houses, but Uncle Tao's was always the biggest and best of them all.

No sudden love sprang up between James and his wife. But he understood more clearly with every day that Yumei was the bridge he had needed to his own people. When they feared him and his foreign ways, they went to Yumei and she came to him. Through her he saw them and comprehended what he had not been able to know before.

He was glad that he had not waited upon any dream of love. For she took confidence as his wife, and became a true part of all he did. It was she who stood beside a weeping woman in hard childbirth and she who was not afraid to stay with one who had to die. She was no saint. Sometimes she grew weary and wanted to be alone and then he let her be. But she coul' always be called back when life was threatened. She had the gift of life.



And life, James knew, was what he wanted.

THE END

Through? Hold on!

what about that nasty filth
in your sink drain?→

You've washed, swept, dusted... But did you forget the filthy sewer grease in your drain? The muck where ugly sewer germs thrive?

You don't want this germ-laden filth so close to your family's food and dishes! Get rid of it—quick!

Liquid disinfectants can't clean out this "dirtiest corner!" It takes Drāno to remove the nasty refuse, as well as the germs that breed in it! So be wise . . .

Use Drāno every week!

Drāno boils out the dirty muck that gathers in your drainpipes!

Its special churning action loosens grease, flushes it away completely—leaves your drain clear and clean.

Put a tablespoon of Drāno in your drain once a week—every week! Keep your drains fast-running—keep your drainpipe as clean, fresh, and sanitary as every other corner in your house!

P.S. Remember—Drāno also opens clogged drains in a flash!

Drāno®

removes the muck that slows drains and breeds sewer germs

Harmless to septic tanks: Makes them work better—cuts down odors.
TUNE IN: DOROTHY KILGALLEN, Thursdays. See local paper for time and station.

Copr. 1949, by The Drackett Co.

Outshines them all!

Sold by grocery, hardware, variety, drug, paint, 5 cents to $1, auto accessory and department stores—and by linoleum dealers everywhere.

PINT .59¢

Costs less to use because it lasts longer!

Self-Polishing Simoniz gives floors an amazing sparkle that lasts and lasts. So easy to apply, too—just spread on with an applicator. It shines as it dries without rubbing or buffing!

THE SIMONIZ COMPANY, CHICAGO 16, ILLINOIS

SELF-POLISHING SIMONIZ FOR FLOORS

FOR LINOLEUM, FINISHED WOOD, ASPHALT OR RUBBER TILE AND TERRAZZO FLOORS

Esmé thinks nothing at all of winter; her sapphire eyes are filled with tropical dreams as the snow comes down.

Diary of Domesticity

By GLADYS TABER

DAY after day the snow piles up, and the dogs bring considerable amount into the house. It keeps Honey busy washing her paws. The black cat comes in sparkling with white star shapes. The Siamese has no trouble; she stays on the warm stones of the hearth. Esmé thinks nothing at all of winter; her sapphire eyes are filled with tropical dreams as the snow comes down.

The hens have stopped laying and George brings in just one warm brown egg a day. They go on eating their heads off and chattering and throwing their oystershell around. With chicken feed the price it is, those hens are in the class of women with diamond bracelets.

A fox got in George's henhouse and disposed of three hens the other night. And then Shep, the sagacious farm shepherd, got that fox and treed him and when George came out to shoot him, the shot missed and the fox came down and Shep killed him.

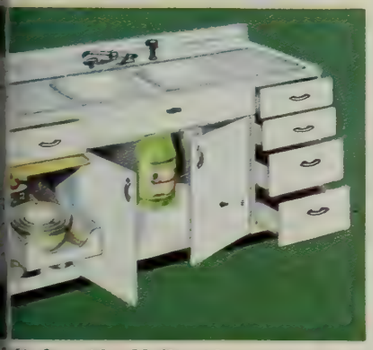
I wish I were more reasonable about such things. I simply cannot help being the fox, although of course I can be the hen too. Also, with no trouble at all, I can be in Shep's paws and know the lovely feeling of saving my master's flock. We have had so many foxes this year that there is a bounty on them, and Shep has earned his keep, which is a fine thing.

But I saw a gray fox leaping over the meadow and jumping the stone wall a few days previous and his movement was poetry. His brush was like a banner against the snow and his pointed face was wild and beautiful. I came home quietly and said never a word; I was not going to betray his free heart, although I felt guilty when I closed the henhouse door extra tight and admonished the cheerful silly hens to stay where they belonged.

There is a nice overstuffed rabbit who lives under the girls' summerhouse, and he comes out to inspect the bird food under the tall maple. A hen pheasant comes there too. Linda and Little Sister come out after their own breakfast and go whooping after the rabbit. He takes a last bite of whatever he has enjoyed and lopes back under the house without much ado. They circle a rush about and feel very pleased w themselves. When they forget him, hops back out. He looks like a Dü rabbit—that lovely fawn color and s long ears.

The hen pheasant is interesting t Maeve goes wild when she sees that plur form in with the lesser birds. She poin holding her red plume stiff behind her, a she points for quite a while. If she forg herself and rushes, the pheasant sails and over the fence into the Quiet Gard and settles down on the snow the Maeve is not allowed in there, and never jumps in, but how does the pheas know that?

WINTER is never dull in the country, t is so much to see and so much to learn is true that the more sensible birds h gone to soak up the tropic sunshine, the ones that remain we really get quainted with. They gather early in morning, and late in the afternoon. can watch them while we have break and again when we have our tea and cin mon toast. I think I like the chickad best, they are so brisk and gay.



When it is really too cold to go out cept to fill the heaters in the kennel, w a lot of extra household tasks. It is a g time to clean desk drawers, dust the bo wash the milk glass, polish the silver. T are some magical new cleaners and pol ers on the market that make housew exciting. There is a furniture polish t leaves a faint minty odor which I l And a liquid cleaner that will do anyt except brush your teeth—and might that, too, if anyone tried it. Windo silver, brass, the stove, the refrigerat it makes them shine. Used on ant plates, it leaves them smooth as silk

Jill went up in the attic and routed some old gilt Victorian picture frames gave them three coats of flat white framed some of our favorite picture them. They look lovely. Now I have come so addicted to white paint that I at everything from old iron candlestic

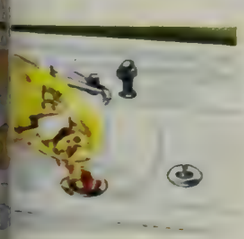
(Continued on Page 78)

New low-cost magic for your dream kitchen

Kitchenaider-Mullinaider combination is lue. Note twin-bowls and drainboards. Top acid-resisting, porcelain enamel. Generous ce and storage; sound-deadened doors; tlery drawer. Mullinaider electric garbage akes it easy to fix meals and clean up after s all Kitchenaiders and many other sinks.

LET'S imagine this lovely Youngstown Kitchen is yours. (You know, it can be!)

And when it is, revel in this thought: You'll be free forever of the garbage pail and all its messiness.



The kitchen shown has a 48" Kitchenaider cabinet sink with a Mullinaider electric garbage disposer —Youngstown's newest kitchen magic. It grinds away your food scraps before they can accumulate, and whisks them safely down the drain.

And that's only one endearing quality of these lovely, white-enameled steel beauties. You've storage space galore, with everything right where you need it for fixing meals, washing dishes and clearing up.

The price? Remember this—every Youngstown Kitchen is an arrangement of standard units, produced by the world's largest makers of steel kitchens. That's why they cost so little!

Ask your Youngstown dealer to help you plan a kitchen suited to your needs—or to install a Mullinaider in the Youngstown Kitchen you may already own. If you're building, specify Youngstown.

MULLINS MANUFACTURING CORPORATION
WARREN, OHIO
World's Largest Makers of Steel Kitchens

ny kitchen waste with the tary Mullinaider! Garbage the drain. Operation that's A-B-C. No mess, no fuss. Ask free home demonstration.

Dishwashing's easy with swinging faucet and speedy rinse spray that reaches all parts of acid-resisting, porcelain enamel sink-top. Fine for cleaning vegetables, too. See your dealer.

Youngstown Kitchens
BY MULLINS

SEND COUPON TODAY!

GET THIS EXCITING BOOKLET!
20 pages featuring beautiful Youngstown Kitchens in color. Full details on Youngstown units and tips on arranging a new kitchen. Enclose 10c to cover mailing cost. No stamps, please.

Please send me your Youngstown Kitchen booklet. I enclose 10c in cash.

I plan to remodel ☐
I plan to build ☐
I want Free Home Demonstration of Mullinaider ☐

Youngstown Kitchens
Mullins Manufacturing Corporation
Dept. L-249, Warren, Ohio

NAME _____ (PLEASE PRINT)
ADDRESS _____
CITY _____ ZONE _____
COUNTY _____ STATE _____ ★

To learn the name of a nearby dealer, call Western Union by number and ask for Operator 25.

New EASY Spindrier

loves your pocketbook– protects it 3 ways!

1. MORE FOR YOUR MONEY! Two tubs working at once do an average week's wash in less than an hour! One tub washes while the other super-rinses, then spins clothes up to 25% drier! Clothes dry faster, are light to hang up.

2. EASY ON CLOTHES...saves on "extras"! Gentle roll-over Spiralator action washes all clothes in all parts of tub. Cleans grimiest overalls. Yet safe for sheerest undies! No wringer wrinkles to iron out. No broken buttons. Saves cleaning bills by doing "washable" drapes, slipcovers, at home!

3. SAVES SOAP AND HOT WATER! Uses hot suds over and over. And Easy is portable! Just wheel to any sink. No set tubs needed! Dollar for dollar, it's America's greatest washer value!

ONLY EASY HAS THE NEW AUTOMATIC SPIN-RINSE! Just turn a tap, and fresh water surges up through cone in spinning basket, double-rinsing a full load whiter, brighter in 3 minutes . . . with only 3 gallons of warm water! See it at your friendly Easy dealer! Easy Washing Machine Corp., Syracuse 1, N. Y.

Every day more women say "it's EASY for me!"

(Continued from Page 76)

Victorian commodes and wonder whether a coat of nice white paint wouldn't ——

The use of white is always a help. It brings out the color of a room, adds charm. Nearly any room, I think, is improved with a little use of frost-white.

There is nothing like a little change in a house in the dead of winter to make the family cheerful. New draperies give a lift to the shabby living room. Or a fresh slip cover with flowers blooming on it. Or a piece of furniture you have wanted for a long time.

One of my recent ideas wasn't so much of a success. I decided there should be a new fixture in the small dressing room upstairs. There was a ceiling light with one large bulb. So we bought a very pretty little ceiling fixture. Jill said she would put it up in just a few minutes. She went down cellar and cut off the house current, also cutting off my oven with the meat roasting in it. Then she went up and took down the old fixture. The new one had no screws. So she came down and descended to the cellar and put on the current so my roast started again. She drove to the village and got more screws and came back, cut off the current, went up and found the new screws were too long.

"I'll have to go back," she said grimly.

"Well, put the electricity on again," I said.

She came back with more screws half an hour later. She had to go to the next village for the right size. By now our neighbor Eddie appeared and went up with her, after the current was cut off, and hammered for an hour.

Later, when the fixture was established on the ceiling, Eddie said, "I can't see where this turns on!"

Jill looked. It was a pretty fixture all right, but it had to be turned on from a wall switch and we had no wall switch. So either we had to leave the light on all the time, or not have it on at all.

So Jill went down cellar and cut off the current again and they took off the new fixture. To date, we have no light at all now in that dressing room, and I am regretting my nice idea. At least the bulb did go on when you pulled a string!

THERE is one benefit from the high prices we have endured for such a time. Most of us have learned to create new menus which are interesting and varied. The new interest in herbs, in spices, in casseroles and stews began when steak and chops and rib roasts became so expensive.

In many ways, I think, our meals are better. For instance, on a cold winter day, we like Mexican Pork Hominy, which is a recipe a friend sent me. You lightly brown cubed shoulder pork, add water to cover and simmer until tender. Then add a can of hominy, salt, butter, pepper to taste and a tablespoon of chili powder dissolved in hot water. Simmer an hour and serve hot.

Or take the humble cod. Soak ½ pound salt cod overnight in cold water, then drain and cover with cold water again and bring to a boil. Simmer gently 10 or 15 minutes. When the fish is tender, drain, remove bones and skin and flake the meat. Blend 2 cups mashed potatoes, 2 beaten eggs, 1 tablespoon butter and the cod. Add plenty of pepper. Beat the mixture until it is fluffy, then form into small balls with a spoon and drop in hot deep fat—a few at a time. When the balls are golden brown, drain them on paper.

This is a belle for Sunday breakfast. We serve the balls with tomato sauce. Or we may bring catchup to the boiling point and serve with chopped parsley.

Valentine's Day is upon us, almost my favorite of the holidays, for it is romantic and gay—and sentimental. It is a holiday for the young, but it may be the heart is young no matter what the birthday book says. I love valentines, but not funny ones. I do not think jokes belong to the day at all. It is a time for hearts and roses and little birds with sweet messages in their bills. Laces and ribbons belong to it, and the scent of old-fashioned lavender or white lilac.

It is a time to remember the people we love and a time to eat happily of bonbons

END PAIN INSTANTLY!

Do as millions now do and you will never have corns. At the first sign of sore toes from tight shoes, apply Dr. Scholl's Zino-pads. Pain ends instantly and corns are stopped before they can develop!

But—if you have corns, callouses or bunions—these thin, soft, soothing, cushioning pads will instantly stop painful shoe friction and lift pressure on the sensitive spot.

Remove Corns, Callouses

You'll marvel, too, how the separate Medications included speedily remove corns, callouses. No other method does all these things for you.

CORNS—SORE

CALLOUSE

BUNION

SOFT CORN BETWEEN TO

Dr Scholl's Zino-pads

Amazing Beauty Pac Cleans Pore Opening

Works Wonders W Tired Lines in Fac

Ladies, give your fa new amazing beauty t ment with Hopper C Pack. Actually see the ference, feel the differ after the very first app tion. Hopper Clay P helps loosen blackh which can then be easil moved...cleans pore openings in your skin a seems to give you a new, bright, zestful look Hopper Clay Pack. See and feel the differen a lovelier, softer skin that can be yours afte very first treatment. At all cosmetic counters.

New! Antiphlogistine RUB A-535 FOR FAST-ACTION RELIEF from Aches and Pains of RHEUMATISM • NEURALGIA NEURITIS • CHEST COLDS

New fast-action Antiphlogistine Rub A-535 starts relieving these muscular aches and pains, and the discomforts of chest colds, the moment it is rubbed in . . . and it rubs in fast. Almost at once you feel warm, comforting relief as the pain-relieving medications take hold.

In a national survey, 8 out of 10 families wrote that Rub A-535 was better than any rubs, liniments or balms formerly used. Greaseless, won't stain clothes.

AT ALL DRUGSTORES • GET IT TODAY.

SHAMPOO without water

EW DRY WAY TAKES ONLY 10 minutes

E STAYS IN! You'll thrill to the glorious Minipoo restores beautiful sheen—without disturbing your wave.

K AND EASY! No water, no soap, no dry-With its simple mitt applicator, fragrant oo removes excess oil, dirt and hair in just 10 minutes. Leaves your hair g clean and fresh!

EAL DURING COLDS!

When Ann catches cold, safe, dry, Minipoo keeps her hair clean.

sudden date ds her ready lh shining hair, anks to handy nipoo!

Minipoo
THE QUICK DRY SHAMPOO
0 Shampoos and handy Mitt in each package

t Thin to Music

With WALLACE REDUCING RECORDS

Prove to yourself, in 7 days, at home, that WALLACE can help YOU take off excessive weight. Reduce spare-tire waistline and bulging hips. Regain a slender figure. Feel better the first day, weigh less in a week.

No Starvation Diets or Drugs

ALLACE Method works with Nature. It safely brings gratifying results. Reducing the WALLACE Way —it's fun to "GET THIN TO MUSIC."

Loses 40 Lbs. in 3 Months

Betty Blazek of Chicago has written: "I lost 40 lbs. onths. I now weigh 125 lbs. I never felt better in life." Read this amazing offer.

SEND NO MONEY

n 7 days' FREE Trial. Simply send below. By return mail, postage pre-you'll receive a WALLACE Reducing graph Record and Lesson on 7 days' Trial. Sent in plain er. No obligation. Offer nly to women over 18.

WALLACE Creator of "Get thin to Music" Radio Program

WALLACE, Suite 1309
154 E. Erie St., Chicago 11, Ill.

LACE, Suite 1309
E. Erie St., Chicago 11, Ill.
ease send me FREE and postpaid your Reducing nograph Record and Lesson on 7 days' FREE AL. I am over 18.
e.....
ress.....
..... Zone State .....

and coconut creams and never mind the calories. Not that candy is the food of love the rest of the year at all! But it reminds me of the colored boxes tied with improbably purple ribbons that the first beau carries so proudly to his girl.

When I was growing up, a copy of the Rubáiyát bound in leather was a favorite gift. I had quite a lot of copies. It is surprising that the Rubáiyát was so correct, for if I reread it now, I can see the message is not just what most parents would have approved of. Certainly turning down an empty glass was not my father's idea under any circumstances. Boiled down, that poem simply says have all the pleasure you can for there will be no tomorrow. Possibly, if the atom-bomb specialists have their way, we had better begin to follow the Rubáiyát right now!

It is particularly nice to have Valentine's Day fall in the depths of winter, for it suggests that spring is really just around the corner.

The seed catalogues are a further promise of warm days to come. I class them as fiction, and love to read them. Oh, the beautiful roses and tall spikes of delphinium and the flowering bushes—not to mention the carrots as big as telephone poles and the peas that practically shell themselves and hop with a mint leaf into boiling water. We get some pretty fine vegetables and some nice flowers, but they definitely do not resemble the champion parade in the catalogues.

One lovely thing about the February landscape is that I can look out and not see one solitary Japanese beetle anywhere on all our acres. And last summer the air was black with them. We did all the usual things to control them, and if we ever sat down to relax, a million more would begin champing their jaws on whatever they missed before.

We felt very bitter, for the Jap beetle is a newcomer in our valley. I for one feel the Government should make a war on this burden of mankind, allocating taxes and using the Army. One less bomb might be dropped in the ocean.

The most beautiful snowstorm is the one that comes when the air is relatively mild and the big wet flakes cling to every twig and branch. The trees change to silver and the fields are a soft white sea.

And the gift of quietness is given, for there is no stillness so pure and deep as the stillness of snow. Sounds sink without a ripple in that silence. When Honey and I walk up for the mail, our footfalls are soundless, for only hard snow squeaks.

Honey is a pale gold blur when she runs ahead, and the mailbox is invisible. On my boots the snow falls in a million intricate crystal shapes. It is always a wonder to look at them, and mark the infinite splendor of a world where even a snowflake is fashioned with such perfection.

Honey flounders in a drift, and shakes her ears free from snow. Her tail whisks back and forth. It's a fine world, she says.

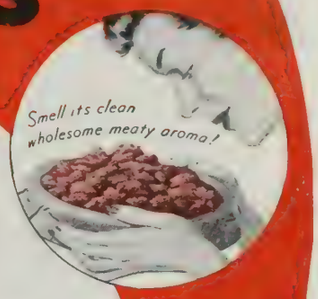
And February is a good month, I answer, as I reach in for the mail. THE END

WITH THE CHILDREN

"When I was in kindergarten I didn't mind playing with girls; when I was in first grade I had three girls for friends, but now in the second grade I only like girls to tease."

"When I am a man I am going to do the work father does so that when I come home at suppertime everyone will run to the door and be so glad to see me—that must be an awfully good feeling to be loved and wanted home like that."

After our small son had asked me a question pertaining to sex and I had satisfactorily answered it for him he looked up at me and said, "Now I can tell you something; dogs have babies the same way."



"My eyes feel long; I guess I'd better go to bed."

—KATHRYN COFFEY GLENNON.

THIS BETTER QUALITY DOG FOOD

Feeds Your Dog in 7 Ways

You make a wise choice when you choose Ideal—the "7-Course Meal." It is finest quality food. Your dog or cat will eat it every day with gusto! No extra meat is ever needed. Ideal gives him everything he needs including plenty of minerals and vitamins for clear eyes and glossy coat. Feed Ideal regularly.

Ideal

Ideal is so wholesome and clean you can keep it in your refrigerator.

WITH DEHYDRATED EXTRACTED LIVER

No one ingredient can fully feed your dog. Ideal feeds him in all seven ways. Processed by the exclusive BALAMAC principle of *BAL*anced *AM*ino *AC*ids, Ideal gives your dog full value in proteins. Ideal is the "7-Course Meal."

1. MEAT BY-PRODUCTS (including dehydrated extracted LIVER)—for strong muscles and growth.
2. COD LIVER OIL, fortified—source of vitamins A & D.
3. CARROTS—for clear eyes and glossy coat.
4. BONE—calcium and phosphorus for bones and teeth.
5. WHEAT GERM—for vitality and nerves.
6. SOY GRITS—for strong sinews and tendons.
7. WHEAT and BARLEY—carbohydrates for energy.

SPECIAL IDEAL OFFER!

A VALUE UP TO $2 for only 50c and 2 IDEAL LABELS

6-in-1 UTILITY SET Has 1001 Household Uses

A fine all-metal Hammer and Screw Driver Utility Set. Hammer is 8 inches long with four screw drivers of graded sizes nested in the handle. These screw drivers fit any job from eyeglasses to hinges. Hammer head of nickel plated cast steel. Handle is rust-proofed.

A handy tool for 1001 household uses. Mom finds this Utility Set easy to handle. Dad uses it to fix things around the house and car. And Junior is learning the value of tools with his 6-in-1 Utility Set. Use coupon below, or mail 50c and 2 Ideal Dog Food labels to Ideal Hammer Dept. J, 549 W. Washington, Chicago 6, Illinois.

AN IDEAL GIFT FOR EVERYONE

MAIL THIS COUPON NOW!

Ideal Hammer Dept. J.
549 W. Washington, Chicago 6, Illinois

Here are.....Ideal labels and.....c. Please send me.....Utility Sets as advertised. (Send 50c and 2 Ideal labels for each set.)

Name.....

Address.....

City.....Zone.....State.....

This offer will expire June 30, 1949 or when supply is exhausted. Good only in U. S. A. Void in states, localities or municipalities in which such transactions are taxed, licensed or prohibited.

Another WILSON Quality Product

WILSON & CO. INC.

Something for the girls: luncheon before bridge, instead of refreshments after, is easy on both the working hostess and calorie-counting guest.

CONVERSATION PIECE

By Ruth Hills Teague

I'M sure I don't have to climb on a soapbox to debate the virtues of lunch before a bridge game versus "refreshments" afterward. Five to five-thirty in the afternoon is no time to be taking aboard a load of calories—perhaps a rich dessert, no matter how delectable it may be. There's dinner coming up, and how about the little women getting home to prepare same, if there's no one to do the job for them? Besides, it's fun to lunch together and enjoy a lot of talk that has nothing to do with bridge. Once the game starts, chitchat is out. So a bridge luncheon it is, and here's our menu.

There will be two hot dishes: deliciously crisp croustades filled with curried sea food, and baked tomatoes stuffed with okra. Both of these are high favorites at our house, and they are ideal for this sort of meal because they can occupy the same plate without mingling unattractively.

Curry means chutney; but since this will be a mild curry we'll have some homemade chutney, more delicately seasoned than Indian chutney, and far prettier to look at. For a touch of salad that can grace the same plate with comfort there will be generous slices of green pepper with centers of gelatin vegetable salad. It's pretty safe to count on the girls' being on time for lunch, so we might as well go all out and have popovers, the most dramatic breadstuff I know of. And popovers have the added virtue of being comparatively nonfattening—unless you literally slather them with butter, and (Continued on Page 82)

On a cold winter day, your menu should include something substantial and something hot. For a main course: sea-food curry served in crisp croustades, tomatoes stuffed with okra, and a gelatin vegetable salad.

Bridge Luncheon

Sea-Food Curry

Chutney

Baked Tomatoes with Okra

Gelatin Vegetable Salad

Popovers

Apricot Bavaroise

For dessert: Apricot Bavaroise. A delectable blend of fruit and whipped cream and strips of cake.

ASK YOUR FRIENDS how much coffee they drink, and 9 times out of 10 they can tell you their daily nount to the cupful.

For consciously or unconsciously, most folks do ep track of how much coffee they drink.

Why do they? Why do you?

Isn't it because you have an uneasy feeling that you ight drink too much of this delicious beverage?

For you realize that coffee contains caffein—and at caffein can make some people nervous and irri- ble, keep them awake at night.

Whenever you are tense, jittery, sleepless—you turally wonder if coffee is the cause. Should you t down on the number of cups you have each day? ould you cut it out altogether? What to do?

DRINK SANKA COFFEE

ie answer is simple—and you'll find it's ever so pleasant, too! You can go right on drinking the coffee you love so much—just make sure you drink Sanka Coffee!

For when you change to Sanka Coffee, you can enjoy all the coffee you want, any time of day or night, without the slightest worry about caffein-effect.

Because, you see, Sanka Coffee is caffein-free! So all your worry about losing sleep—all your fear of getting nervous and irritable from drinking too much coffee—is gone! You don't need to count your daily cups of coffee any more! Sanka Coffee won't make you jittery—or keep you awake. It just can't—because 97% of the caffein has been taken out!

ALL COFFEE - REAL COFFEE - 97% CAFFEIN-FREE

But removing the caffein doesn't detract a bit from Sanka's rich, full-bodied flavor, its tempting aroma. When you drink Sanka, you still get the wonderful taste-goodness—the wonderful sense of satisfaction and bracing cheer that only coffee can give you!

Start drinking Sanka tomorrow. It's real coffee, all coffee, grand coffee—so you have nothing to lose, and possibly a great deal to gain.

Sanka Coffee

Real coffee with the worry taken out. Drink it and sleep!

Products of General Foods

dependable quality has made it a favorite with Mrs America

This fine butter makes fine baking doubly delicious!

They belong together . . . your whole assortment of fragrant, fresh-baked rolls . . . whether hot from the oven or fresh from your dealer . . . with plenty of Swift's Brookfield Butter . . . butter selected by Swift from America's finest dairylands, delicate in flavor, rich in nourishment, protected by Swift all the way to your dealer's store. You can always count on the delicious quality that has made it a favorite with Mrs. America. Ask for Swift's Brookfield Butter!

Put your trust in Swift's Brookfield Eggs—perfected by nature; always the same; guarded by Swift all the way to your dealer's store.

Whenever your recipe calls for cheese, be sure to use Swift's Brookfield American Cheese Food—Swift's delicious blend of mild cheese and peak-ripened cheddar.

Swift's Brookfield Dairy Foods

(Continued from Page 80)

that's up to you. For dessert we'll have Apricot Bavaroise. This is a delectable ice-box pudding, made with strips of angel food which form a checkerboard pattern when it is cut. We'll surround the pudding with apricots filled with whipped cream and nuts, which provide a pleasant contrast of texture and taste to the smooth pudding.

Now to the recipes. They will serve eight.

SEA-FOOD CURRY

To fill 8 fairly large croustades, 3 cups sea food, measured after it is cooked, and 4 cups sauce will provide a generous amount. The variety of sea food you use is a matter of choice and availability, but get fresh or frozen fish if possible. Shrimp, lobster, and frozen fillets of flounder or haddock are all good, and they can be used in any combination and proportions you like. Because they are both delicious and inexpensive, I suggest using one package of the frozen fillets of fish with the more expensive sea foods. I prefer frozen lobster tails to whole live lobsters. If only canned fish is available, a combination of tuna, shrimp and crab would be good.

Wash frozen or fresh shrimp and lobster thoroughly, drop them into rapidly boiling water to which some vinegar has been added, and boil shrimp 8 minutes and lobster 20 minutes. Drain, take off shells and remove black veins from shrimp. Cut lobster into bite-size chunks, good big ones, and leave shrimp whole. Thaw fillets of fish, put them in top of double boiler, cover and cook until white and firm—about 30 minutes. Allow to cool and break into bite-size chunks, discarding any skin, bones or fatty tissue they may have. This preparation of the fish—whichever kinds you choose—can be done a day in advance, and the sauce can be prepared then, too, and reheated before it is combined with the fish.

To make the sauce, melt 6 tablespoons butter or margarine, add 1 clove garlic, minced, and blend in 8 tablespoons flour. Heat 2 cups milk, 1 cup cream and 1 cup canned or homemade chicken broth, and stir liquids gradually into flour and fat. I've had good luck substituting 1 cup undiluted evaporated milk for the cream and, if you like, ¾ cup sherry may be substituted for ¾ cup of the milk. Cook mixture until smooth and thick, stirring constantly. Season with 1 teaspoon paprika, 1 tablespoon Worcestershire sauce, 1 teaspoon sugar, 1½ tablespoons curry powder blended to a paste with a little water, 2 or 3 dashes Tabasco, and salt and cayenne pepper to taste. The seasoning should be fairly high, because the sea food is bland.

About an hour before lunchtime melt 3 tablespoons butter or margarine in a skillet, add sea food, cover and sauté gently 5 minutes. Have sauce hot in top of large double boiler or in a pan that can be stood in another pan of boiling water. Add sea food and 2 tablespoons chopped parsley, mix thoroughly but with a gentle touch so that the pieces of fish will not break, and keep piping hot until ready to use.

CROUSTADES

In making croustades, the first and practically the only problem is to get a heavy, even-textured unsliced bread. Large holes are a terrific nuisance when you're trying to cut perfectly shaped croustades—bread baskets. Get the bread a day or two in advance so that it won't be too fresh. Remove end crusts from loaves and cut bread into 3-inch slabs, then cut each slab into a square or circle, with the sides slantwise so that the bottoms of the croustades will be smaller than the tops. Remove centers, leaving a quarter-inch shell, sides and bottoms. This is easy to do with a sharp, pointed knife and some gouging and pinching with your fingers. Now you have a neat little cup that, when fried crisp, will hold a generous serving of sea food. Cut croustades the day before and wrap in wax paper and towels to keep them from drying out.

At as nearly the last minute as you can manage conveniently, fry croustades in deep fat. During the frying turn them upside down and push them under with a fork so that inside as well as outside will be brown and crisp. Drain on paper towels.

To serve, fill croustades high with curried sea food and sprinkle tops with chopped parsley.

CHUTNEY

Into a stewing pan put ½ cup juice drained from a jar of watermelon pickles, ½ cup cider vinegar, ¾ cup sugar, 1½ teaspo salt, 1 tablespoon curry powder, ½ spoon cinnamon, ½ teaspoon ground cl and ½ teaspoon white pepper. Boil, covered, 10 minutes and add 1 cup wa melon pickles, 1 cup canned pinea chunks, ¼ cup candied ginger, cut slivers, 1 cup seedless white raisins an cup pickled sweet red peppers cut chunks. (Pickled red peppers are usu available in delicatessen stores.) Have pieces of watermelon pickle, pineapple red pepper fairly large. Boil, uncove until mixture is thick; add more sal needed and seal in small jars. This re will make enough for several curry m

Have a dish of chutney on each tabl put a small serving in a lettuce cup on plate.

BAKED TOMATOES WITH OK

These can be prepared for baking the before if that suits your schedule. Se medium-sized firm tomatoes and cu thin slice from the stem end of each. move pulp and seeds carefully so that skin won't be punctured. Sprinkle ins of tomato shells with salt and inver drain.

Cut ¼ pound bacon into cubes and them in a skillet over low heat. W bacon cubes are slightly browned ad cup chopped onion and 1 clove ga minced. (The garlic can be omitted if like.) Cook, stirring often, until onion golden brown. Scrape seeds from pulp took out of tomatoes, cut pulp into f small chunks, put in skillet and cook u tomato is mushy.

Fresh or canned okra can be use making this dish. If fresh is available, 1 pound, wash well, remove stems and into pieces about ½ inch long. Barely c with boiling water, boil 10 minutes drain. If it's to be canned okra, up No. 2 cans cut okra, and pour into a ander to drain. Now sprinkle 2 tablesp bread crumbs over contents of skillet put in the okra. Add 1 teaspoon dried s basil, 1 tablespoon light brown suga teaspoon salt and ½ teaspoon fre ground black pepper. Toss gently with spoons until well mixed. The gentle to is especially important if you are u canned okra because it will go mushy the slightest encouragement. Taste seasoning, add more if needed, and aside until lukewarm.

Fill tomato shells with this mixtu heaping it high, and try to have a pieces of unbruised okra on top bec they look pretty. Put stuffed toma in baking pan or muffin tins and s in refrigerator. Let them stand at r temperature half an hour before bak time. Before they are served they sh be baked for 15 minutes in a moder 350° F., oven.

We have two things to bake this time, tomatoes and the popovers. If your r has two ovens this is no problem, and has only one I'll tell you how to manage deal when I get around to popovers.

GELATIN VEGETABLE SAL

Select long, slender green peppers. number needed will depend on their but there should be enough to mak least 3 generous slices for each ser Cut slice from stem end, remove seeds white membrane, wash, and dry ins with a soft cloth.

Finely chop white cabbage, onion, g pepper, sweet red pepper or pimiento celery to make 3 cups in all. Soak 2 e lopes unflavored gelatin in ½ cup cold w and dissolve in 1 cup boiling water. ¾ cup vinegar, ½ cup sugar, 3 teaspo salt and the juice of 1 lemon. Cool, when gelatin begins to thicken put vegetables and stir well. Fill peppers this mixture, packing it down firmly, st peppers in custard cups so they w topple over, and store in refrigerator. is definitely a day-before job, because gelatin needs time to set.

An hour or so before serving, cut pep crosswise in neat rounds about ⅓ i thick. The proportion of gelatin to li is quite high in this recipe, so you nee worry about the slices' holding togethe

POPOVERS

Put 1 cup flour, 1 cup whole milk and ½ spoon salt in a bowl and beat with ro beater until smooth. In a separate b beat 3 medium-sized eggs 2 minutes rotary beater. Mix eggs with flour and beat 2 more minutes with rotary

r. That's all there is to the batter.
t stand ½ hour before baking.
n popover pans are perfect for baking vers, but if you don't have them use custard cups or your deepest muffin Preheat oven to 450° F., put iron in oven and let them stay there 10 tes to become piping hot. If you're tin pans let them heat 1 minute in ven. Remove pans, brush with salad d return them to oven for a minute.
k, intense heat is what makes pop-pop, and you can't be too careful is score. Take pans out of oven, close door, and fill pans ⅔ full of batter ickly as you can. I use a pitcher his purpose—it's neat and quick.
rn pans to oven, shut the door, and out some other business for 25 min-Don't open the oven door so much crack until the 25 minutes are up. lower heat to a moderate 350° and a look at your iful popovers.
hem continue k for about fifminutes, which ake them crisp lry and practi-
all shell.
reawfully good y are cooked 25
tes at 450° and re minutes at but then they to be eaten aste, and that n't suit our e-party plans.
v back to the d tomatoes. If range has only ven, slip the toes onto a rack the popovers you lower the o 350° and open ven for a look.

APRICOT BAVAROISE

anicebox pudand should be a day in ad-of the party.
ill need 4 one-square slabs of 1-food cake
t an inch er in length
the dish or pan ich you are go-mold the pud-Make the cake
elf or buy it at akery; and, if ike, substitute other kind of cake. I decided gel food be-of its delicacy
ck of richness.
ake into slabs
t proportions.
er 1 pound dried apricots with 3 cups and soak several hours, or overnight like. Cover and cook gently until and very tender—about ½ hour.
through a sieve and add 1¼ cups
2 cups water and 2 teaspoons grated rind. Bring to a boil and add 2 ens unflavored gelatin that has been l in ¼ cup water and stir until gela-lissolved. Bring to rapid boil, quickly 4 egg yolks which have been beaten light with rotary beater and remove heat. Cool to lukewarm, fold in 3 beaten egg whites, mix thoroughly et bowl in cold water.
oblong glass dish about the size and of a large bread pan makes a nice for this dessert, and if you want to be y nonchalant when unmolding time
, line the dish—or pan—with cello-
.
been using molds, for both hot and oods, for—well, we'll skip just how and never in my life did I think of the hane trick until quite recently. But e bliss! It's so easy. None of this dip-n hot water, or massaging with a hot or running a spatula around the edge.
o worry about will it or won't it be
t. You simply invert the mold and off, and you can do this ahead of time the last minute, it's so quick. The hane comes out with the food and off like a dream. Here is what you do:
e the mold lightly with salad oil.
This is merely to make the cellophane stick in place. Cut two long strips of cellophane, one as wide as the mold is long, the other as wide as the mold is wide. Press the narrower strip neatly inside, along the length of the mold, letting the ends of the paper extend above the rim. Then do the same with the wider strip, pressing it against the bottom along the width of the mold. Thus, the two strips will crisscross; the sides will be lined with one thickness of paper, the bottom with two. Put two strips of cake on the bottom, leaving space between them, and between the strips and sides and ends of mold. Carefully spoon in the apricot Bavaroise, which should be cold and just starting to set. Fill empty spaces between and around cake strips first and then fill the mold about half full. Put in the two other strips of cake, above the position of the first two, and fill the mold to the brim. The strips of cellophane should all extend above the rim of the mold and one of them can be folded over top as a seal. Put pudding in refrigerator.

To serve, turn out apricot Bavaroise in center of platter, peel off paper and surround with whole peeled canned apricots filled with whipped cream and nuts. Put a little sugar and vanilla in the whipped cream, and add 1 tablespoon brandy if you like. This dessert is so delicate in texture that you'd think it wouldn't hold together—but it does. If you have any of the apricot goop left, put it in custard cups and have it for dessert another day. Cut the mold crosswise, so that each slice shows four squares of white cake.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Nancy Mary at Mount Vernon

By John Ackerson

He's there with every breath we take, great George,
Fox hunter, general of the armies, man
On whom the heroes leaned through Valley Forge
To Monmouth, where a king's pride broke and ran,
Then Yorktown, through the anxious, doubtful years,
Our young republic struggling to her feet—
I kiss your wide blue eyes, and hail their tears,
Rejoicing in your generous heart, my sweet;
For yours, dear daughter, is the future, all
He dreamed and built, and more; shape as you will,
Remembering a pock-marked face, a tall
And awkward shape that haunts his well-loved hill.
Drink deeply of rich air, drink in a faith,
His Union bursts a usufruct of Death.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Service. Swiftness of service is of prime importance when it's a bridge-party meal. You want to enjoy lunch in a leisurely fashion, but certainly you don't want half the afternoon to slip away before you get to the game. However, with tables set and kitchen work behind you, you can greet your guests confidently and know that when the moment arrives you can serve this lunch in record time. The food will look beautiful set out buffet style for self-service, and that's a very expeditious plan. Equally expeditious, and perhaps less trouble, is to fill the plates in the kitchen and bring them to the tables, and this menu lends itself beautifully to that form of service. With a golden-brown croustade filled with the pink-and-yellow sea-food curry, some slices of green-pepper salad resting on a lettuce leaf to protect them from the hot plate, a stuffed tomato and a lettuce cup of chutney, each plate is sure to be a picture, and a very pretty one.

I wouldn't, however, serve the dessert in the kitchen. Everyone should have a chance to see this achievement before as well as after it is cut. It's easy enough to set up a small table in the living room and serve the dessert there, or if you have a tea cart the problem is even more simple. In fact, I wish you all did have tea carts, they make service so easy and smooth, especially if you're swinging the deal alone.

My whole song and dance is that the food should arrive as rapidly as possible, piping hot or cold, as the case may be, and afterward the plates should be removed with the same dispatch. Serve with speed and eat at leisure—that's a rule to make both guests and hostess happy. THE END

IT'S WONDERFUL AS A COOKING SAUCE

Good cooks know that a dash of tomato adds that Certain Something to many a dish. . . . Whenever the recipe calls for tomato sauce, the best and quickest way is Campbell's Tomato Soup, just as it comes from the can. For example:

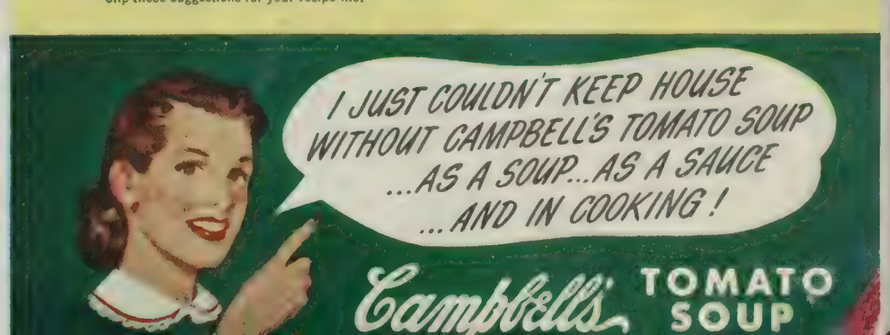
Savory Beef and Macaroni

2 tbsp. shortening
6 tbsp. chopped onions
1 pound ground beef
½ tsp. salt
pepper to taste
1 can Campbell's Tomato Soup
½ cup water
3 cups cooked elbow macaroni

Cook onions in shortening until soft, but not brown. Add ground beef and brown. Combine with seasonings, tomato soup, cooked macaroni and water. Place in greased 2 qt. casserole. Bake at 350° (moderate oven) for 30 minutes. Makes 6 servings.

LOOK FOR THE RED-AND-WHITE LABEL

IT'S WONDERFUL AS A POUR-ON SAUCE...



You have no idea how many exciting things you can do with this zestful, ready-to-use tomato sauce! It adds color and flavor to economy foods . . . left-overs . . . puts New Meaning into meatless menus . . . dresses up Old Dependables. For instance:

Fishcakes with Tomato Sauce

Heat the tomato soup just as it comes from the can; then pour over fishcakes. Serve with peas. Garnish with pimiento & parsley. Delicious also with meat loaf, hamburgers, poached or shirred eggs, omelets, etc.

Clip these suggestions for your recipe file.

FINE FOOD COUNTRY STYLE

(Continued from Page 61)

to make split-pea soup. And right now I'll tell you one of the ten or twenty receipts for it, most of them good, not one worth the salt you put in it—without said bone.

SPLIT-PEA SOUP

Add 3 quarts water to 2 cups split peas. Add a ham bone (that is, if such is around and waiting). If you haven't a bone of the ham, put in a shank end of a ham—about 1 pound. And less if you don't wish too hammy a flavor. Add 1 large onion, a handful of celery leaves, 1 carrot split in half, 1 teaspoon salt and a good sprinkling of pepper.

Simmer 3 hours. Stir occasionally. Put through a sieve (not the bone—that will have done all it can by this time). Cut any bits of ham into small pieces and put back in the soup. Taste your soup and add more seasoning if it's needed. This makes about 2½ quarts of soup. There's never too much, for it's good reheated the next day. If you like a thin soup, add milk to make it the way you fancy.

Serve with toasted croutons or buttered and browned oyster crackers.

Specialty of the house. To go fishing is good. Wait till spring unless there's a hardy through-the-ice fisher in the family. Ever eat any Lake Champlain smelts fished that way? You haven't? Well, you have missed—but why go into that? But with trout or smelts come spring—or just by itself right now—you'll want the dish I'll tell you about now. With baked potatoes and corn bread. I guess you'll be glad you went for

SALT PORK AND CREAM GRAVY

Allow ¼ pound salt pork for each serving. Buy it in the piece. Cut off the rind and slice it fairly thin. Freshen it by pouring boiling water over the slices and allowing them to stand about 10 minutes. This is the way to get rid of the brine and the salt that clings to pork like a clinging vine to a reluctant bridegroom. Drain on towels and pat the slices dry. Sauté in a hot frying pan.

When pieces are about half crisp, take them out and dip each slice, while hot, in finely rolled cracker crumbs and then in beaten egg. Fry quickly in the hot pork fat left in the pan until both sides of the salt pork are brown and crisp. Drain them and keep hot on a platter. Drain off the fat, leaving about 6 tablespoons. Add 4 tablespoons flour to fat in pan. Mix this thickening smooth and brown just to a light brown. Add 1 pint milk and 1 pint cream to make the gravy. Cook it until thickened and smooth. Stir it every minute. Season with salt and pepper to taste. Serve with the fried pork and baked potatoes. And if the gravy is thicker than good heavy cream, thin it with milk or cream. Real cream gravy needs cream. Made with all milk, it's another kettle of fish.

Oh, by the way, instead of crumbs, try a batter dipping sometime. Fried the same way. Definitely delicious.

Let's skip to corn bread. I know I ought to do something else first, but I won't. I love to do things hind-end-to, as they say where I hailed from. It's an old family custom. But we got there just the same. Only took us longer—maybe.

Well, because I have corn bread on my mind, here's where corn bread is going. In the place where something else ought to come. The receipt is a good one. Maybe you have a favorite. That's your choice. But corn bread sort of fitting into the picture with salt pork and cream gravy and baked potatoes—

The expression for success in any venture, to bring home the bacon, originated from a prize given for happy marriages!

At the church in Dunmow, in Essex County, England, a flitch of bacon used to be given to any man and woman who, after one year of matrimony, would take a vow that they had lived in perfect harmony and fidelity. The earliest recorded case of the awarding of the bacon took place in 1445.

By the end of the sixteenth century, couples who came forward to claim the prize were questioned before a jury of six bachelors and six maidens. Only those who gave satisfactory proof of domestic felicity gained the coveted pork. It was awarded at irregular intervals until late in the nineteenth century.

Widely publicized in literature, the fact that successful claimants actually did bring home the bacon from Dunmow led to the application of the phrase to victory in any undertaking!

—WEBB B. GARRISON.

you're as welcome as a squirrel bringing h nuts to mom and the babies, to this rec right out of the corn-bread belt.

NEW ENGLAND CORN BREA

Sift together 1⅓ cups flour and ⅔ cup corn meal, 4 teaspoons baking powder ½ teaspoon salt. Add ⅔ cup milk, ⅓ maple sirup, ¼ cup melted butter or m garine, and 2 beaten eggs. Mix just until gredients are smooth and nice. Pour int greased shallow square pan, and bake 30 minutes in a moderately hot oven, 375 Cut into squares. Serve hot with plenty butter or margarine.

Back where we belong. Skipping ab is fine, but skipping back is all right t Where I ought to have been was out in t kitchen fixing up a casserole (French for d dish) of scalloped tomatoes. The gimmick this receipt is . . . that these aren't scallop tomatoes at all. They're really baked matoes, and between a scallop and a ba (although both are baked) is "a great g fixed." And I will explain this sometime.

SCALLOPED TOMATOES

Arrange 6 large pee ripe tomatoes in baking dish. Cut the centers to m hollows the size o half dollar. Sprin with pepper and and ¾ cup sugar a fill in around tom toes with 1 cup br crumbled quite fi with no lumps, fro the center of a loaf unsliced bread a d old. Don't use a crusts. Mix 1 cup mo bread crumbs with cup melted butter margarine to cover t top. Be sure the bre crumbs are press down around and b tween the tomatoes. fill the hollowed-o centers with sug and a little lump butter or margarin This is enough sug if you don't like th dish very sweet. Bak about 1 hour in moderately hot ove 375° F., along with th potatoes and corn bread. The tomato should be tender, not overdone. Two No. cans of tomatoes may be used instead fresh—using the more solid pieces of t mato. But the fresh ones are the be This is the best tomato dish known, my opinion.

To pickle or not to pickle. It your choice and yours alone. Pickling tim was over ages ago. Why, right this minu there isn't enough stick cinnamon around the cat to play with. It's in the pickles. Dow cellar in crocks and bottles and all sorts fancy containers, salvaged from forsaken a tics and forlorn cupboards, where the scent the clove lingers potently still. You ma break one of these old crocks, but the spi clings like the scent of a five-cent cigar to Nottingham-lace curtain. The damned spo (Shakespeare) will not out!

In case you didn't fall heir to your grand mother's cookbook, I shall tell you how t make pickled pears. And a tasty receip you'll find it. Mother made them, com pickling time, also peaches and other fru that took the fancy of vinegar and spices an sugar and sirup. A good way, an old-tim way. Country style—none better. They liv high and well. They lived "the more abun dant life" with less squawking than at an time in our history. And pickles helped. Or they claim.

PICKLED PEARS

Make a sirup of 2 cups cider vinegar, 2 cup water and 4 cups sugar. Add 2 sticks cinna mon, 1 tablespoon whole cloves and 2 smal

Best new food idea in years!

Delicious beef gravy in cans . . . ready-to-serve!

Delicious brown beef gravy, all ready to serve, in cans! As good as any you ever made in your own roasting pan.

Meat, bread, potatoes, left-overs, economy foods . . . all taste better and look better with plenty of good, rich gravy!

No mixing, no stirring! Just open, heat and pour. Keep a few cans always handy. Costs pennies . . . helps save dollars on your monthly food bill.

A LIFE-SAVER FOR MEAL PLANNERS!

- Adds taste and glamor to economy foods
- Livens up left-overs
- Enriches slim meals
- Wonderful on bread for children's snacks

Franco-American BEEF GRAVY

One of the famous Franco-American "Meal Makers"
Spaghetti • Macaroni • Beef Gravy

Earn a SINGING TEA KETTLE!

THIS KETTLE is made of solid copper with sparkling chromium finish. The natural finish copper bottom heats quickly and efficiently—2½ quarts capacity—and you won't burn your fingers on the cool bakelite handle. It's yours, if you send us two 2-year Ladies' Home Journal subscriptions, sold at the full U.S. price, $5.00 each, to persons living outside your own home. Your own or your personal gift subscriptions will not count.

We cannot accept cash orders for kettle. This offer good in U.S. only, until April 30, 1949.

Send names and addresses of subscribers, together with your name and address and remittance to pieces ginger root. Bring to a boil, and boil 5 minutes. Reduce the heat to low before adding the pears. Peel 3 pounds Seckel pears carefully, removing blossom ends but leaving the stems on. Stick 2 or 3 cloves in each pear and add to the hot sirup. Cook the pears until they are tender and transparent. A few drops of red vegetable coloring added to the sirup give the pears a nice color. Pack the fruit into hot, sterilized jars. Strain the sirup and pour over the pears. Seal. This makes 2 quarts.

CURTIS CIRCULATION COMPANY
434 Independence Square, Philadelphia 5, Pa.

Don't scoff, don't laugh. Memory comes to my rescue here and surely I am back in the great old kitchen of my unsophisticated youth. Bursting into that orderly—more or less—region devoted to the preparation of such food as one finds but rarely nowadays. The kettle would be on. The great range pretty hot and the cook some degrees hotter. And heaped on the biggest platter, next to the turkey platter, were—give you three guesses. No, not doughnuts; no again, not fritters; give up? Fried pies!

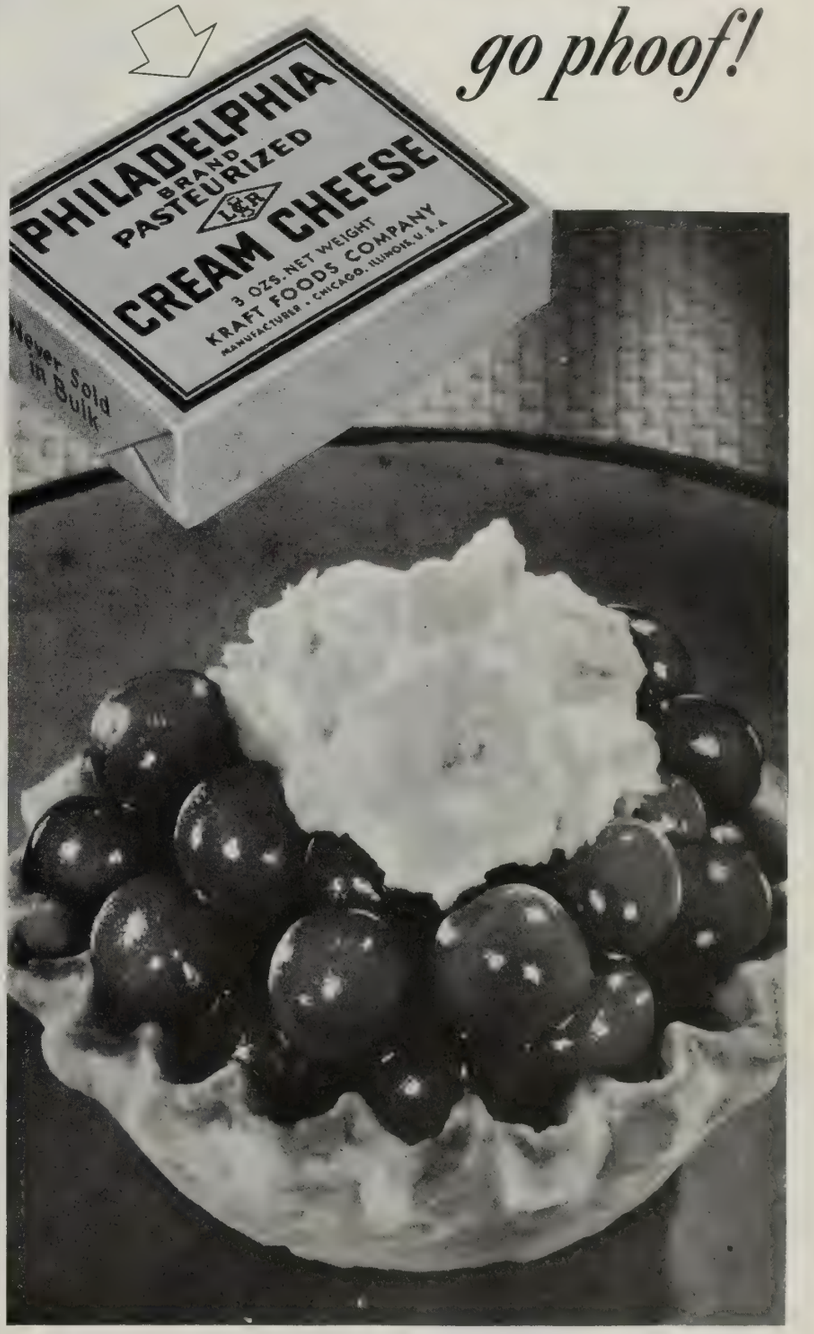
You who don't know the "short and simple annals" of the New England cook have missed out, but missed perhaps more on fried pies than on anything I can name. Except maybe hot bread, waffles, griddlecakes, chocolate cake, cinnamon buns, apple tapioca, Indian pudding, sausages, lemon tarts and a few other items that come to mind.

Omissions and commissions. In order to get you on the right road, take these simple directions. Start in low and you'll wind up in high. What you have missed so far, I shall help you make up. Make up for lost time too. And, should you have a few pies left over, you might send them on. They travel well—but should be kept at home. And eaten hot. Eaten anyway, hot or cold. With cheese or with rich, heavy plain cream. Or put in the pocket, taken out on the back steps and eaten as are. Or is. So go to it. It's country fare, right out of the heart of that superb, superior New England. (Other regions please copy.)

FRIED PIES

Make up 1 receipt of pastry, using 2 cups flour. Roll out thin on a lightly floured board or pastry cloth. Cut out in large rounds. If you haven't a cutter about 4 inches in diameter, use a saucer or the edge of a bowl instead, cutting through with a sharp little knife. Put 2 heaping tablespoons strawberry jam or other jam in the center. Raspberry is wonderful, also apricot. And applesauce is tops. Brush edges with cold water. Now fold over to make a turnover, such as you see in the picture. Be sure to press the edges very firmly together, for if they spread you're sunk, also the jam or whatever. You know what I mean? Sure you do. Press the edges together—sealing the edges with the tines of a fork. Fry a few at a time, in deep hot fat, about 400° F., until golden brown. Drain on paper towels. Sprinkle with powdered sugar. Serve hot with cheese or with heavy cream.

And they're the McCoy eaten right out of the kettle, lolling against the kitchen range—or the cook. You do the lolling and the eating, unless you're invited to retire. You will get about a dozen pies out of this receipt. So you might count on everyone eating two. Everyone will.



Don't forget the flag. You know that George Washington had or has a birthday this month. Personally, I like George. He had something dynamic about him, and I was always one for dynamite. Calm attracts me now. It takes energy to be dynamic. It requires a lot of agility to deal with dynamite. But whatever it is, my peaceful nature prevails. That is very good.

But, when the twenty-second of February rolls around, up goes the flag. On my flagpole, not fifty cubits but fifty feet into the air, and so I recognize a kindred spirit. On a white horse, riding Virginia's fabled paths. Nice thought, isn't it? So here's to Valley Forge and greatness that is forever. Don't forget the flag. George had to have one for his Revolution. He got it. And, glory be, it's still floating—"o'er the land of the free and the home of the brave!"

THE END

Look for this brand name when you buy cream cheese

For a topping that doesn't go phoof!

With a spoon, whip a little milk into this soft snowy-white cream cheese. Just that easily you have a topping to turn an ordinary dessert into "something special." A topping that's rich and delicately fresh in flavor—and one that stands up. Be sure you get genuine Philadelphia Brand; it's always fresh.

FAR MORE FOOD SHOPPERS BUY PHILADELPHIA BRAND THAN ALL OTHER BRANDS OF CONSUMER PACKAGED CREAM CHEESE COMBINED.

THERE IS ONLY ONE "PHILADELPHIA" CREAM CHEESE . . . THE BRAND THAT'S MADE BY KRAFT AND GUARANTEED FRESH.

The finest ever made!

CREAM-FILLED CHOCOLATE COOKIES

Sunshine
HYDROX
THE ORIGINAL
CREAM-FILLED CHOCOLATE COOKIE

Sunshine
Hydrox
20 ENGLISH STYLE COOKIES
Hydrox

Sunshine Biscuits

Sunshine
TRADE MARK REGISTERED
HYDROX
Contents 20 Cookies
Net Weight 7½ Ozs.
Sunshine
HYDROX
COOKIES
Sunshine Biscuits INC.

ONLY Sunshine Bakers know the deep, deep secret of making Hydrox cookies so deliciously different. The secret is in knowing just how to make two chocolate cookies stay CRISP with cream filling in between. No wonder they're the finest ever made . . . beloved by young and old with desserts and between meals. For a delightful family treat, order HYDROX from your grocer today . . . in the pantry package or the handy cellophane bag.

Sunshine Biscuits INC.

From the Thousand Window Bakeries of

DEATH BE NOT PROUD

(Continued from Page 39)

chemicals and read the manuscript of the ly chapters of Inside U.S.A., which was just n getting under way. I thought he seemed ed, but I did not take this seriously.

He had his usual check with Traeger, our nily physician, who pronounced him per- tly all right. Also he had a check with an e doctor. This was important. Johnny had fered some eyestrain the summer before d was taking exercises to improve his vis- acuity. The eye doctor found nothing ong; in fact, the eyes had improved to a siderable degree. The day after the exam- tion by Traeger, Johnny complained sud- lly of a slightly stiff neck. If this had hap- ed before Traeger saw him, I would have n more concerned, but since he had just n given a clean bill of health, we did not e anything so minor as a stiff neck seri- ly. Indeed, it disappeared after a day, and nny went back to school.

Deerfield had an infantile-paralysis case t spring, and all parents were notified. In third week of April I had a wire from the ool doctor, Johnson, saying that Johnny s in the infirmary but, though he had a f neck, there was no indication of polio. ctor Johnson said he was informing us only ause, knowing of the polio scare and hear- that he was in the infirmary, we might nk that he did have polio, which he didn't.

lled Johnny up, d we talked efly. He was ly, and fretful nissing a week of swork, but oth- vise nothing ned to be amiss. was going into near-by town next day to have asal-metabolism . and Doctor nson asked me find out when had last had a al, and what it I reported all to Frances, and ught little more t about three in afternoon on rsday, April twenty-fifth, the telephone in our New York apartment. Just at moment I had finished the California pter of my book, and I had intended call- Johnny that night to tell him.

Without hesitation or warning Doctor nson said, "We've had a doctor in from ngfield to see your son—Doctor Hahn, a rologist. Here he is."

octor Hahn said, "I think your child has ain tumor."

was too stunned to make sense. "But 's very serious, isn't it?" I exclaimed.

octor Hahn said, "I should say it is seri- His disks are completely choked."

"His what?"

"Ask any doctor what that means—choked s!"

proceeded to describe other symptoms, implored me with the utmost urgency to n touch with Dr. Tracy Putnam, the best for this kind of thing anywhere within e; in fact, even before talking to me, he Johnson had put in a call for Putnam. next half hour passed in a grinding criss- s of calls. I talked to Traeger, I called Deerfield back, I got in touch with Frances, was out in Madison, I reached Putnam, sulted Traeger once more, and by half four I was at 168th Street, waiting in nam's office. We picked Frances up in Haven and, driving hard through greasy on an ugly, gritty night, reached Deer- at about ten. Putnam said little as we e, with our hearts dropping out of us. minutes after I got there I knew Johnny going to die.

cannot explain this except by saying that it on the faces of the three doctors, par- ticularly Hahn's: I never met this doctor again, but I will never forget the way he kept his face averted while he talked, then an- other glimpse of his blank averted face as he said good-by, dark with all that he was spar- ing us, all that he knew would happen to Johnny, and that I didn't know and Frances didn't know and that neither of us should know for as long as possible.

Johnny himself was cheerful. They hadn't told him that we were en route; he jumped up in bed as we came in and murmured, "Well, for goodness' sake!" I saw that his right eye hung down slightly on his cheek.

Johnny thought that he had polio. He tried to grin.

FRANCES stayed with him; I talked to the doctors, and later we told her that Johnny had some sort of "pressure" (that was the euphemism the doctors chose to employ at this time) within his skull, and must be oper- ated upon as soon as possible. She took this without flinching, and returned to Johnny to make him comfortable. I could not bear to look at his eye, limp on the cheek that way. Then I got a more or less consecutive account of what had happened.

Doctor Johnson, suspecting nothing so grave as this, had sent Johnny into Green- field that morning—luckily with a nurse—for a metabolism test. Johnny talked of playing hooky and going to the mov- ies. The nurse no- ticed that he seemed to be stumbling ever so slightly and that when he walked down a corridor or through a door, he brushed the wall on the left side. On closer examination she saw that his eyes were not co-ordi- nating; he had a squint. This scared her, she reported the matter to John- son, Johnson made an optical check and at once called Hahn in, and Hahn took a spinal tap which showed an almost unbelievably heavy pressure in the fluid encasing the brain; also, choked op- tic disks indicated fierce pressure behind the optic nerve.

That first spinal tap!—the first of many, and spinal taps can be frightening as well as painful. For fourteen months hardly a week passed that Johnny did not have some kind of examination; for month after agonizing month there were the bandages and dressings to be changed every day. Yet I give my word on it, no whimper ever came out of Johnny after the first operation. He got angry some- times, but he never blubbered.

And the doctors! So many doctors! We had thirty-two, thirty-three—maybe more, including some of the most famous special- ists in the world. But soon we discovered several things about doctors. One is that they seldom, if ever, tell you everything. An- other is that there is much, even within the confines of a splinter-thin specialty, that they themselves do not know. Let me salute all those doctors. They had the best will in the world, and nothing in the entire province of modern knowledge which applied to this particular ailment was left unsearched; indeed, we tried some things that had never been tried before, but the frontiers of medicine are in some fields astonishingly limited—not to say unknown—and there are still mysteries in Johnny's case that no medical man can al- together account for.

Of all the doctors, the chief was this gentle and sensitive man whom we drove to Deer- field that first evening, Tracy Putnam. I had no idea then of his eminence. As of that time—he has since moved to California—he was Professor of Neurology and Neurosurgery

NEXT MONTH

ALLIE sat in her father's chair, at the desk of his small-town paper, and watched a series of strange happenings cloud the quiet waters of life in Tressady—until a man appeared who led her slowly, surely back into the swift current of life she had avoided for so many years. Read

UNDER THE QUIET WATER

BY FRANCES SHELLEY WEES

Complete in the March JOURNAL

Florida's Fruit of Youth

BRINGS OUT THE "KID" IN EVERY ONE!

SUCH FUN TO PEEL!
They have "zipper skins" that peel off a mile a minute. Anyone with an ounce of fun in him gets a kick out of tangerines!

HEALTHFUL BETWEEN-MEAL SNACKS!
Leave a bowl of them on the table—for after-school and before-bed snacks. So much better than rich sweets. And packed with Florida health!

JUST GRAND FOR LUNCHBOXES!
Mother Nature must have had lunchboxes in mind, when she made juicy tangerines. So easy to pack—easy to eat—so full of refreshment for noon!

BRIGHTEN UP DOZENS OF DISHES!
Such colorful, appetizing things you can do with fruit cocktails, salads, and desserts. But remember the season is not very long. Buy tangerines now while you can!

FLORIDA CITRUS COMMISSION
LAKELAND, FLORIDA

FLORIDA TANGERINES

"THE FRUIT WITH THE ZIPPER SKIN"

Pot of Gold with the rainbow left in

It's corn fresh off the cob — with sweet red and green peppers

Down with drabness! Up with color and flavor! Viva Niblets Brand Mexicorn! The famous golden corn (and the peppers too) are grown from our own special seeds by a scientific system of Flavor Farming. Packed for you in a beautifully blended flavor combination that folks cheer for. Try it and see why.

"Green Giant," "Niblets" and "Mexicorn" are trade marks Reg. U. S. Pat. Off. MVCCo. © MVCC

Niblets Mexicorn
BRAND

Minnesota Valley Canning Co. headquarters, Le Sueur, Minnesota. Fine Foods of Canada, Ltd., Tecumseh, Ont.
ALSO PACKERS OF GREEN GIANT BRAND PEAS

at Columbia University and Director of Neurology and Neurosurgery at the Neurological Institute of Columbia-Presbyterian Hospital, commonly known in New York as the Medical Center.

Putnam ordered Johnny to be brought into New York by ambulance; we made the arrangements, and set out early the next morning. To keep Johnny warm as we lifted him into the ambulance, the nurse pulled a gray blanket over his face. Frances helped her. I did not want to watch. It was a long ride in the cold, sullen, slippery rain. Frances held Johnny's hand while he dozed.

The Neurological Institute rises stiff and tawny near the Hudson just below the silvery spindles of the George Washington Bridge. That building became the citadel of all our hopes and fears for more than a year, the prison of all our dreams. A comfortable room with a view of the river was ready, Johnny was transferred gently to a bed, and we found ourselves sucked at once into the vast mechanism of a modern hospital.

The next morning Johnny was well enough to ask me how much the ambulance had cost.

I told him, and he replied, "A gyp."

His eye looked better. It did not have that dreadful droop. But later that day he developed an excruciating headache, the only intense pain he suffered during the whole course of his illness—a small mercy, perhaps, but one to be grateful for. The brain controls pain in other parts of the body, but there are no sensory nerves in brain tissue itself; you could cut a person's brain apart bit by bit, and there would be no pain. What causes headache is swelling or inflammation of the membranes surrounding the brain, or pressure on the tissue from a foreign mass; this is what happened that day. The usual painkillers were forbidden, because they might interfere with the tests going on. Finally, an injection of caffeine relieved him somewhat, and he had some medicaments by mouth.

A great number of intricate tests were necessary, including X rays, an electroencephalogram and visual-field tests, all exhausting in the extreme, but necessary so that the tumor might be located as accurately as possible. The surgeon, when he went through the bowl of the skull, wanted to hit the exact right spot. One of these tests actually entails drilling holes through the skull—of course it can take place only on the operating table before the actual operation.

MEANTIME at least five doctors, all neurosurgeons, asked us questions. Any record of a blow? Any projectile vomiting? Any chills or tremors? Any double vision, headaches, abnormal involuntary movements, dizziness, or disturbances in gait, taste, smell or hearing? We answered, horrified, "No . . . no."

Johnny's operation—this first operation—took place on Monday, April 29, 1946. He went upstairs at 11:10 A.M. and came down at 5:20 P.M. Brain operations take an eternity because of the laborious procedure necessary. One of the doctors told me that its effect on Johnny would be approximately that of the explosion of a .45-caliber bullet against the head. Those six hours were the longest Frances and I ever spent.

Between the Friday and the Monday I tried to find out something about brain tumors. A tumor is a growth. What I asked about first was whether or not Johnny had cancer. All cancers are tumors, but not all tumors are cancers. By one definition, Johnny did have cancer; by another, he did not. That is, a brain tumor (though it may strike the spinal cord in some rare cases) never metastasizes; that is, spreads through the body to attack liver or bones or what not. It is not like a tumor of the breast that may beco a tumor of the lung. But if malignant, it spread within the cranium itself like a spo an apple until the brain is destroyed. The fore, it must be removed at once. Also, asmuch as the brain rests within the h shell of skull, there is no room for expans if a foreign growth is present, the skull i must be opened or death will be caused pressure. The only other accepted mean therapy for brain tumors are X ray a rarely, radium. To open the skull and extr all or part of a brain tumor is a refinem of surgery of the most elaborate kind.

THE technique (of course I am oversim fying vastly) is to locate the tumor with actness, open the skull and remove as mu of the tumor as possible by suction and ot devices, meantime preventing hemorrha by various means and so keeping the patie alive. In blunt fact the operation, thou prolonged, may not be violently dangero Everything depends on the type of tumor t surgeon may discover, and there are hal hundred different kinds. The location of t tumor is also of prime importance. Obviou a tumor close to the surface, in a so-called lent area of the brain, will be easier to extra than one deep down.

Johnny's tumor turned out to be near surface and in the right occipital parie lobe, which made the procedure somew less formidable, though, God knows, midable enough. other differen among tumors is t some have a gre velocity of gro than others and tendency to recur. was a bad sign t Johnny's had app ently developed wi such speed. Anoth difference is th some are encaps lated, and so can lifted out in a pie like a marble stu in jelly. These a comparatively ea to remove. But othe are of an infiltratin spidery type th creep and burro along the minu crevasses of the brai slowly but inevitably destroying functio and almost impossible to remove. If the su geon goes too deep, the patient dies of loss blood; or, worse, so much healthy brain tiss has to be destroyed that he will be bet dead.

At about 4:30 that afternoon, while Pu nam was still washing, Traeger came do and found us in the solarium near Johnn room. I took him aside and asked just o question: "Was it encapsulated?" He a swered, "No."

Putnam came down a few minutes lat He walked me down the hall after a word encouragement to Frances. "It was abo the size of an orange. I got half of it."

What, in all sanity and conscience, is brain? How could an evil thing the size of a orange have existed in Johnny's head wit out making him sicker? The answer is, dare say, suggested by the fact that immed ately after the operation, he became tolerabl well, even though half the tumor was st there. Part of the brain is nonsensitive tissu and Johnny's tumor lay in a comparativel inactive region.

There was a bustle at the elevator an Johnny's bed was wheeled in. Frances, wh was magnificently composed, took a bri walk. I was sick with fright when I saw t oxygen and all the paraphernalia for tran fusion. Already Johnny had had a couple pints of blood. But this was routine, more less. The doctors said that he would be u conscious at least till the next morning, an that we might as well go home. I elected stay. Soon I got my first look at Johnny face, sideways on the pillow with a hug turban of bandage marked THIS SIDE UP.

(Continued on Page 90)

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Meeting

By Julia Collins Ardayne

Will you meet me at the time
When song sinks into silence, and the rain,
Soft and gray as wings of moths,
Throbs upon the pane?
Though your step fall oh, so softly,
I shall feel you near.
Though your voice be but a memory,
I shall hear.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ☆

NGEL FOOD LIGHT...BUTTER CAKE RICH...EASY TO MAKE

Betty Crocker FRESH ORANGE Chiffon

THE BIGGEST CAKE NEWS IN 100 YEARS!

tty Crocker Chiffon is unequaled by any other cake . . . for flavor, height d delicacy of texture! Yet this perfect cake is easier, quicker to make an ordinary cakes . . . and stays fresh longer.

Even a beginner can create this alluring Fresh Orange Chiffon . . . developed the Betty Crocker Staff especially for use with Softasilk Cake Flour. ftasilk—milled for cakes and cakes alone—permits eggs and king powder to exert full rising action, giving Chiffon the rious, airy texture that makes it the biggest cake news in 100 years.

General Mills

mous Betty Crocker "Double-Quick" Recipes in Package

ith every package of Softasilk, you only get Betty Crocker recipes for iffon Cakes . . . but for the amaz- ly easy "Double-Quick" Cakes as L. Now anyone can mix up a superb cake in a matter of minutes. Because with Softasilk and the "Double-Quick" Method, you don't cream shortening, you don't beat eggs, you use just one bowl . . . and mix in just four minutes!

"Betty Crocker" and Softasilk are reg. trade-marks of General Mills. Copr. 1949

Betty Crocker Fresh Orange Chiffon

Preheat oven (see pan sizes and temperatures below). SIFT an ample amount of SOFTASILK Cake Flour onto a square of paper. Don't risk disappointment by using any other flour with this recipe!

LARGE CAKE Makes 16 to 20 Servings	SMALL CAKE Makes 8 to 10 Servings
STEP 1 ... MEASURE (level measurements throughout) and SIFT together into mixing bowl:
2¼ cups sifted Softasilk Cake Flour (spoon lightly into cup, don't pack)	1⅛ cups (1 cup plus 2 tbsp.) sifted Softasilk Cake Flour (spoon lightly into cup, don't pack)
1½ cups sugar	¾ cup sugar
3 tsp. baking powder	1½ tsp. baking powder
1 tsp. salt	½ tsp. salt
MAKE a well and add in order:
½ cup cooking (salad) oil such as Wesson or Mazola	¼ cup cooking (salad) oil such as Wesson or Mazola
5 unbeaten egg yolks (medium-sized)	2 unbeaten egg yolks (medium-sized) juice of 2 medium-sized Sunkist oranges plus water to make ¾ cup	juice of 1 medium-sized Sunkist orange plus water to make ⅜ cup (¼ cup plus 2 tbsp.)
grated rind of 2 oranges (about 2 tbsp.)	grated rind of 1 orange (about 1 tbsp.)
BEAT with spoon until smooth.
STEP 2 ..... MEASURE into large mixing bowl:
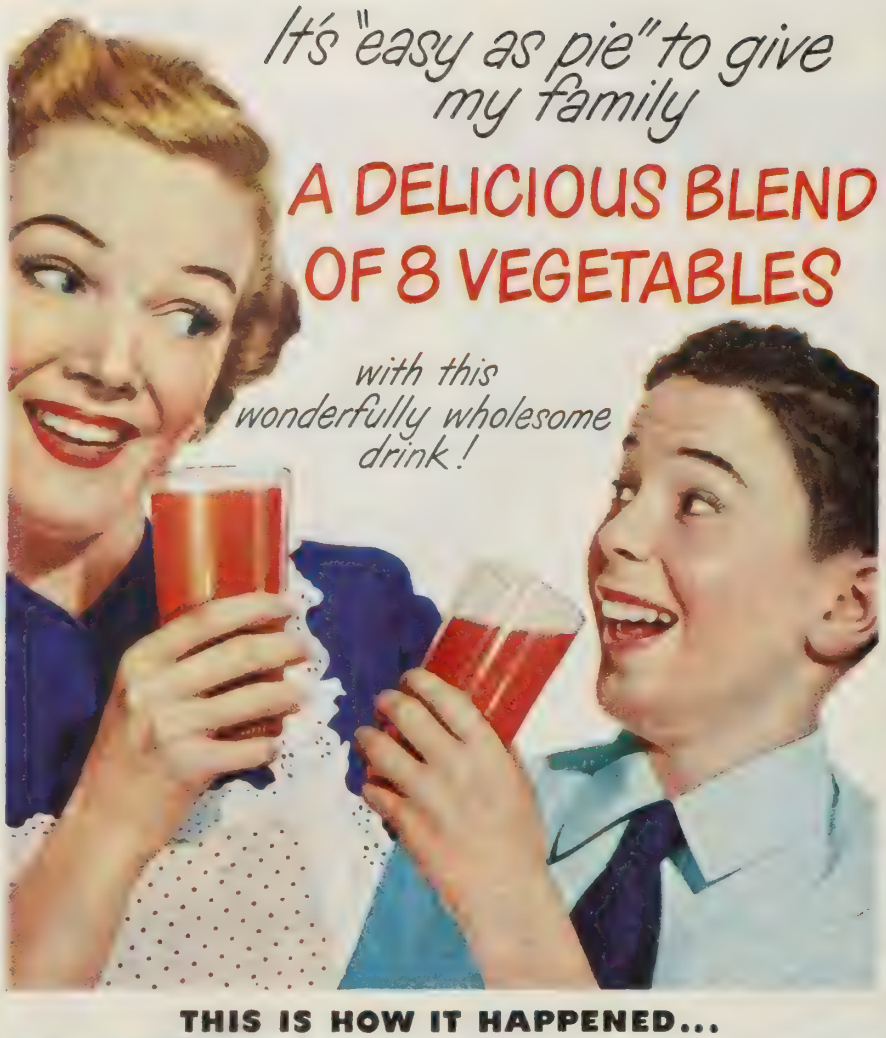
1 cup egg whites (7 or 8)	½ cup egg whites (4 whites)
½ tsp. cream of tartar	¼ tsp. cream of tartar

WHIP until whites form very stiff peaks. They should be much stiffer than for angel food or meringue. Do NOT UNDERBEAT.



STEP 3 ... POUR egg yolk mixture gradually over whipped egg whites—gently folding with rubber scraper just until blended. Do NOT STIR. Pour into ungreased pan immediately. Bake in:

10-in. tube, 4-in. deep— 325°—65 to 70 min.	8x8x2-in. or 9x9x2-in. square— 350°—30 to 35 min.
9x13x2-in. oblong— 350°—45 to 50 min.	5x10x3-in. loaf— 325°—50 to 55 min.
	9-in. tube, 3½-in. deep— 325°—50 to 55 min.

... or until top springs back when lightly touched.

Immediately turn pan upside down, placing tube part over neck of funnel or bottle, or resting edges of square, oblong, or loaf pans on 2 other pans. Let hang, free of table, until cold. Loosen from sides and tube with spatula. Turn pan over and hit edge sharply on table to loosen.

ORANGE CREAM ICING. Melt in saucepan ½ cup shortening (part butter adds flavor). Remove from heat. Blend in 4 tbsp. SOFTASILK Cake Flour, ¼ tsp. salt. Stir in slowly ½ cup orange juice. Bring to a boil, stirring constantly. Boil 1 minute. (If mixture curdles, do not be alarmed.) Remove from heat. Stir in 3 cups sifted confectioners' sugar. Set saucepan in bowl of cold water. Beat until consistency to spread. Stir in 1 tbsp. grated orange rind. Makes icing for Large Chiffon Cake; for Small Chiffon Cake, use half the amounts of ingredients.

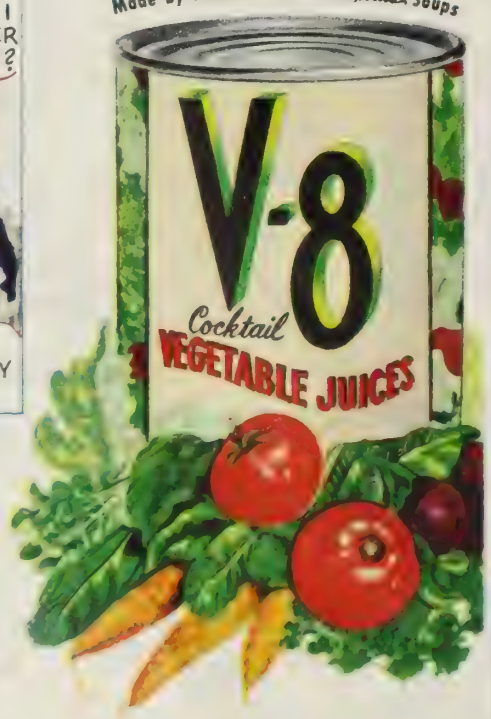
THIS IS HOW IT HAPPENED...



Later...

Made by the makers of Campbell's Soups

IMPORTANT!

Put a pitcher of V-8 on the table at every meal. Serve it between meals, too. Every delicious glass contains nutrients of 8 different vegetables:—

CELERY LETTUCE
PARSLEY CARROTS
SPINACH TOMATOES
BEETS WATERCRESS

*V-8 is a trademark owned in the United States by Campbell Soup Company. In Canada by Campbell Soup Company Ltd.

(Continued from Page 88)

retreated in dumb shock. Both his eyes were stuck closed and he looked as if he had two enormous shiners; his whole face was the size and almost the color of a football. But this was nothing to worry about, since it was the result of edema, swelling, following the shock of operation—so I was told. Then I noticed the emergency instruments on the bed table and learned that a needle (it stayed there for some days) was actually taped into the vein in his arm, in case an emergency transfusion should be necessary. This, too, was routine—or so I heard.

At about nine that evening, only a few hours after the operation, Johnny gasped and stirred, making a weak groping gesture with his enormously swollen mouth.

"Spit it out," the nurse said.

He replied in perfectly understandable words, "You know I can't spit. I'm completely dehydrated."

The nurse stared at him dumfounded.

Johnny recognized me after a while and whispered, "Hello, pop." Pause. "Are there going to be any more tests?"

"Good Lord, no! You're all through with tests. Don't you realize you've had quite a serious operation?"

"Of course," Johnny answered.

I slept sitting up in the visitors' room. I kept remembering the way he had looked when we hoisted him into the ambulance at Deerfield, with the gray blanket across his face.

Johnny made a very good recovery. Six days after the operation he ate a beefsteak, sitting up; on the eighth day he was busy drawing a series of parabolas and on the eleventh day he walked the length of the corridor alone. But do not think he didn't suffer.

His eyes were stuck absolutely shut the first day or two; and he spent forty-eight hours fearing that he was blind. The very day after the operation he asked me to bring his physics text to the hospital, and then demanded that we read him the questions at the chapter ends. Thank goodness, he knew the answers!

Of course Johnny did not know the full seriousness of his illness. Above all we had to shield him from definite knowledge, since his greatest asset—his only asset aside from his youth—was his will to live.

Immediately Putnam had broken to him what he had, Johnny did two things. First he called an adult friend, Lewis Gannett, and told him almost proudly, "They drilled three holes right through my head." Second, he telephoned a schoolmate, Edgar Brenner, "Guess what! That pressure I had was a brain tumor!"

HE announced one afternoon when I came in, croaking, "Wonderful news—I've had another spinal tap!" Almost always when I called him early in the morning to ask how he was feeling, he would answer, no matter how feeble his voice was, "Simply marvelous!" When he learned that what he had was more serious even than polio, he was impressed and pleased. He would laugh and say, "Nothing can hurt my old brains!"

We were crazily optimistic for a week or two; we even made plans for Johnny to recuperate down at Virginia Hot Springs. The preliminary diagnosis was of astrocytoma. This is a type of tumor comparatively benign, and even if Putnam didn't get it all, there was a fair chance that X-ray therapy might knock out the rest. It takes some weeks to prepare the slides of tissue that confirm the type of tumor; the procedure is extraordinarily involved. Not only do tumors grow; they may change from one type to another. A doctor told me in the corridor one day that the slides were ready; I saw something in his eyes and could not bear to ask what they indicated. I walked right by him,

Years ago the householder covered his floor with straws, or rushes, and though these were renewed when they became dirty, the prevailing standard of cleanliness was not a very high one. Accordingly, when visitors were expected, the etiquette of the time required that the old rushes be swept out and clean ones spread over the floor. The medieval host who refused to observe this amenity had a very small opinion of his guest, for he didn't bother to clean even the floor for him, or, in other words, didn't care a straw.

refusing to talk, and he must have thou was crazy.

The next day Putnam called me int office, with Lester Mount, his associate, st ing by. What Johnny had was somet much worse than they had feared; it wa an astrocytoma but an astroblastoma un going transformation. Putnam expla why he had not closed the skull but had open, covered only by a flap of scalp, an in the head about as big as my hand. was to provide "decompression"; that i allow the tumor, if it continued, to gro bulge outward, instead of inward, which w destroy the brain. If Putnam had seale the skull with bone or a plate, Johnny w have been dead in a month. Also to the skull open (except for this flap of s allowed easier access to X ray. But the skull produced disadvantages, too, in Johnny had to be very careful not to f otherwise injure the soft spot.

I WENT to the library to do some more r ing. There I discovered that any type o mor bearing the prefix "glio" (glue) i most invariably fatal. I rushed to several tors, appealing to them to say that su surely, Johnny's tumor could not be of deadly type. "Of course it isn't," they rep

Johnny continued to recover nicely. eye didn't droop any more and, except slight weakness i left leg, he seeme be quite well. and over we Johnny, lying, tha tumor was dead, Putnam had got i What was affec him, we said, was ply the aftereffect terrific operation.

What really i ested him was get back to school. He terrified to think what classwork he missed, and how he going to manage catch up. School! did not dare tell that it would be a miracle if he could go to school again.

He began to show great curiosity a what caused the tumor. Patiently Do Mount and the others traced back thr Johnny's history for any evidence of a s or blow, or for any other clue. Once Joh said triumphantly, "I know what caused "If you do, you'll have revolutionized m cine," Mount replied. Johnny's theory that he had been sitting far back in a c playing chess and then slipped and bange head on the iron radiator. But this blow not even left a bump or bruise, and not so slight could possibly have put into m any growth so deadly. The plain fact is nobody knows what causes a malignan mor. The causation of cancer is the gre and most formidable of all the unknow modern science.

One grayish afternoon Johnny showed prayer to Frances:

> Almighty God,
> forgive me for my agnosticism;
> For I shall try to keep it gentle, not cyn > nor a bad influence.
> And O! If thou art truly in the heave > accept my gratitude > for all Thy gifts, > and I shall try > to fight the good fight. Amen.

The story behind the prayer is this called it an "Unbeliever's Prayer." Joh had never prayed; perhaps this was a r tion from his dislike of chapel and his res ment at having been obliged to spend a g deal of time listening to organized relig exhortation. To counteract this tende Frances began to read him prayers of var kinds—Hindu, Chinese, and so on, as we Jewish and Christian. He was intereste all this. Then she started him on Aldous H ley's anthology of prayer, The Perenn Philosophy, and told him how intimate very personal prayer could be.

arties
eanuts
LANTERS

MR. PEANUT
Reg. U.S. Pat. Off.

VACUUM PACKED
LANTERS
ocktail
SALTED
EANUTS

alf-Pound Cans

First aid to popular hostesses—
PLANTERS Cocktail Salted Peanuts!

Guests love 'em!

These PLANTERS products are also made in Toronto, and sold everywhere in Canada.

LANTERS
is the word for
PEANUTS

At about this time he became fascinated by the Book of Job. He asked Frances to read it to him several times. "It will teach me patience," Johnny said.

On May twenty-eighth we had more bad news: Johnny fainted going to the bathroom, and the pathologist's report was worse. Putnam said little, telling us to put our trust in the X-ray therapy now beginning. One afternoon we walked in the garden, and a hundred yards away in a doorway I saw a young man, apparently a spastic case, writhing, twisting, being held tight by a male nurse. I turned Johnny around sharply. I do not know whether he saw or not.

Later I peeped at the sheet on the technician's desk in the X-ray room. There it was as clear as daylight—Johnny's tumor was "undergoing glioblastomatous transformation." That prefix "glio"! No doctor had quite dared to tell us.

Johnny was discharged from Neurological on June first, and moved to our apartment. But he had to return to the hospital every morning for X rays until June twentieth, when he was cleared to go to Frances' house in Connecticut, for what we hoped would be an uninterrupted quiet summer. The radiologist would not allow more X rays after June twentieth, though it was too early to tell whether the tumor was diminishing or not. Too much X ray will kill any tissue, as surely as will a tumor. Also it can have a vicious deteriorative effect on the white blood cells, the bone marrow and, as everybody knows, the skin. The radiologists had to estimate exactly how far they could go before the beneficial effects of X ray might be outmatched by its destructive force.

THE first minute Johnny was home he did what we had anticipated—dived for the Britannica to look up brain tumors. We had taken the precaution to hide this particular volume because, among much else, the article said that almost all brain tumors end with blindness. I cannot recall now how we explained its absence. Johnny fumed for a while and then resigned himself to the mysterious ways of parents. That evening we discussed plans for the country. Indeed, he had talked them out with Putnam. Swimming, diving, boating were forbidden—this last a cruel blow—because of the flap, the soft spot, in the skull. Johnny could still have had no real perception of the seriousness of his illness, because he had asked Putnam, "But can I go rock climbing?"

We were told that he must rest above all, take short walks, read in moderation, and exercise the left fingers and left toes. The weakness here was gradually becoming more pronounced, but we did not know, nor did the doctors, whether the tumor was responsible, or, as may have been the case, whether it was a temporary setback caused by the shock of the X rays. Probably it was at this juncture that we first became seriously impressed with what little doctors do know. To question after question the answers, despite the utmost good will, were confused and contradictory, simply because the course of any brain tumor in a child is unpredictable. Of course we expected too much. But it was our worst burden that we were never sure about anything, not merely from one day to another, but from one moment to the next.

That whole summer of 1946 is a spotty haze in my memory. Mostly we were moving Johnny in and out, because he had to return to New York every ten days or so for check-ups.

The house at Madison was, from almost every point of view, perfect for a convalescence. It faces the Sound, with a broad scallop of private beach. Johnny's room was upstairs and, until the end of the summer, he did not have too much difficulty getting up and down. Here were his most precious books, his specimens, his phonograph records, all the paraphernalia for his studies. Downstairs he could loaf on the long balcony, potter about in the sand, lie in the sun, wade, and even play a little with his boat. His workshop and laboratory were in the garage a hundred yards away. He loved every minute of that summer. Frances was with him all the time and I came EVER-BRIGHT . . .

CORROSION-RESISTANT . . .

SANITARY . . .

ECONOMICAL

Stainless Steel has come into its own! For scores of household uses such as those above, it's the miracle metal of unequalled beauty and utility. Today, you insist on stainless steel for lots of items, of course. But remember this when you buy: you can be sure that any article of stainless steel is made of good stainless steel if it carries the U·S·S trade-mark!

This label is your guide to quality Stainless Steel!

The U·S·S label at the left is one of a family of U·S·S labels. Some say "Premier Spring Wire", or "Vitrenamel" or just "Steel" . . . but all have the big letters U·S·S prominently displayed. Whenever you see these letters U·S·S—the trade-mark of United States Steel—you know the steel is good.

. . .

LISTEN TO...The Theatre Guild on the Air, presented every Sunday evening by United States Steel, American Broadcasting Company, coast-to-coast network. Consult your newspaper for time and station.

Subsidiaries: AMERICAN BRIDGE COMPANY · AMERICAN STEEL & WIRE COMPANY · CARNEGIE-ILLINOIS STEEL CORPORATION
COLUMBIA STEEL COMPANY · CONSOLIDATED WESTERN STEEL CORPORATION · CYCLONE FENCE DIVISION
GERRARD STEEL STRAPPING COMPANY · NATIONAL TUBE COMPANY · OIL WELL SUPPLY COMPANY TENNESSEE COAL, IRON & RAILROAD COMPANY · UNION SUPPLY COMPANY · VIRGINIA BRIDGE COMPANY
UNITED STATES STEEL EXPORT COMPANY · UNITED STATES STEEL PRODUCTS COMPANY
UNITED STATES STEEL SUPPLY COMPANY · UNIVERSAL ATLAS CEMENT COMPANY

USS UNITED STATES STEEL

SWAN...A NEWER, BETTER FLOATING SOAP!

Made by a modern, patented process no other soap can use!

BETTER for hands, dishes!

Swan's rich, gentle suds PROTECT YOUR HANDS — help keep them soft and smooth. And Swan's mild suds are faster, harder-working — dishes dry sparkling bright without wiping!

BETTER for baby!

Swan is mild as finest castiles . . . lathers luxuriously. Swan's creamier, more abundant lather is so gentle, it agrees with the most delicate baby skin . . . and Swan babies your skin, too!

BETTER for bath!

For loads of the softest, creamiest lather that ever filled a tub, try Swan! It leaves your skin smooth, soft, YOUNGER LOOKING. Swan never crumbles—you can use it down to the last sliver. It's longer lasting, thriftier.

BETTER for you!

Try Swan yourself. Prove to your own satisfaction that Swan's a BETTER floating soap! And be sure to note how much better Swan is for your complexion . . . leaves it soft, smooth, YOUNGER LOOKING!

PURE MILD SWAN The best soap afloat

No other soap can use the SWAN process

ANOTHER FINE PRODUCT OF LEVER BROTHERS COMPANY, MAKERS OF LUX AND RINSO

out week ends if I could. Our friends dropped in and Frances' brother and my sister were steady visitors.

Particularly I remember Johnny's considerateness, even when he got sicker. He was worried that his illness might upset our plans and about how much it was costing and about Frances' work and my book. I was less than halfway through Inside U. S. A. and hopelessly behind. Johnny knew that the dead line for delivering the ms. was October first, and he knew perfectly well that I could never make it. His first question when I came out was usually, "Well, how many chapters did you write yesterday?" Then: "You'd better hurry!"

A major problem continued to be what to tell him. If the tumor was indeed mostly gone, how explain the continued bulging?

The flap, which we called the Bulge or the Bump, got slowly, mercilessly bigger, until it was almost the size of a tennis ball sticking out of his head. "Oh—it's the way those things go after X ray," we tried to explain. He accepted this—perhaps—and was cheerful and determined.

Meantime we came to learn a new medical word that pursued and haunted us for almost a year—papilledema. This means, to put it roughly, a swelling of the head of the optic nerve where it enters the eye. When pressure exists inside the skull, causing papilledema, or "choked optic disk," the optic nerve may be injured. When the eyes are normal, the papilledema is zero. Then the amount of papilledema is measured in an ascending scale to 10 diopters. The higher the papilledema, the worse the situation.

Before the operation Johnny's papilledema was a full 10; when he left the hospital, it had dropped to 2. Now it hovered between 4, 3½, and 4 again. Always the first thing a doctor did was to measure this wretched papilledema. Another frightening factor was that though most of the cranial nerves were still normal, there had come a slight lag on the left side of the mouth. Also Johnny had lost a shocking amount of vision. His eyes were more or less all right when he looked straight ahead, but he could not see well to the side. It was as if he had an invisible blinker on the side of each eye.

Nobody should get sick in or near New York in July or August. Putnam and Mount were both on holiday. On July twelfth I brought Johnny in to Traeger for a check. Traeger did not like the look of the bump and sent us to Masson, who had taken Putnam's place at Neurological. Masson would not see Johnny that day, which meant that he had to undergo the exhausting business of a hundred-mile drive back to the country, then into town again, and then back once more. Then Masson took one look and said flatly that Johnny could not live more than a couple of months. That ugly analogy came up again—his brain was like an apple with a spot in it.

On Wednesday, July seventeenth, back in town. At about midnight F called. The bump had opened and was ing pus.

From that day until a month bef died, there was never a single day in Johnny did not have to go through the rious nuisance and ordeal of having his dressed and bandaged.

This leak in the bump was not in serious; it was a "stitch abscess" caus a couple of tiny stitches left in the or incision. But it worried our local doc Madison, and Johnny began to take p lin to avert infection in case the should widen where the bulging scal stretched thin and taut, or in case should be another ulceration. We p that this would not happen. It happ though. The bump burst open in an place. I got another hurry call at no the twenty-fourth, drove out at once Johnny was back in Neurological tha ning.

We had heard, meantime, about a cian named Wilder Penfield in Mon Traeger tracked him down, and he agr come to New York. Putnam interrupt holiday, and he, Traeger and another spent the morning in consultation.

Penfield spent an hour on the slid ways, in a thing of this kind, the poss exists of mistaken diagnosis, and the might have changed for the better or We waited, and then with everybody ing Penfield cut through all the euphe and said directly, "Your child has a nant glioma, and it will kill him."

He wrote in longhand on Johnny's

The neoplasm is obviously a maligna oma. The removal and decompression ha him some longer lease of life, and it has happy interval. . . .

I would recommend healing the area sible in a few weeks. Further X-ray trea only when radiotherapist decides the sk brain will not suffer from it.

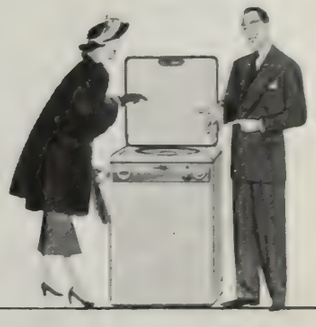
If operation is decided upon, occipita amputation might be carried out with so of skull closure. This would not prolo much if at all. It might make him able t and active over a greater portion of the l

I can see nothing that could have bee up to date that has not been done. This tragedy of such cases.

Of course no one told us that comple cipital-lobe amputation would mean ness.

Now we struck out hard on new paths rest of the summer is the story of pill a search. There might be some ray of somewhere despite Penfield's death tence. But we must act quickly. Fr thought that physicists or atomic scie who worked in the medical field durin war might have discovered somethin about brain tumors unknown to the

(Continued on Page 94)



"Your gown is perfectly lovely, dear! It always has been, hasn't it?"

Want to know how to get clothes really clean automatically?

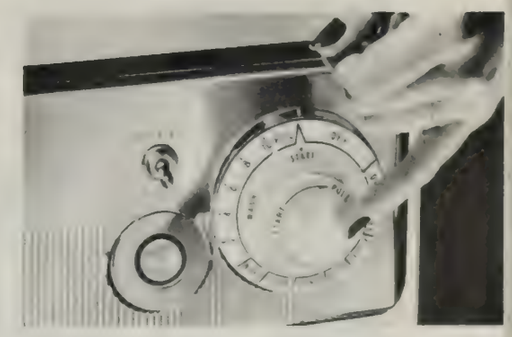
Ask your Frigidaire Dealer to show you how the only Automatic Washer with Live-Water action gets clothes far cleaner—spins them drier, too!

See how much drier, lighter, it spins your clothes!

Your Frigidaire Dealer has something to show you that's really different—Live-Water washing! It isn't just a different name—it's an entirely different principle of washing clothes bright-clean automatically. And you can't find Live-Water action like this except in the Frigidaire Automatic Washer!

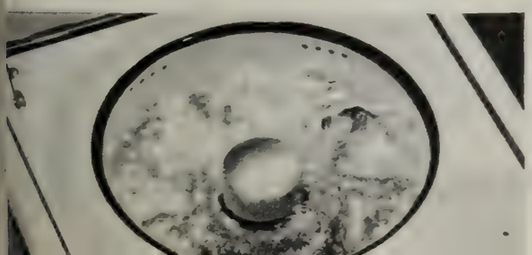
Rhythmic as the tide, sudsy water surges through and through every inch of your clothes. Rolling currents of water carry the clothes from top to bottom of the tub—without any pulling or rubbing against metal to cause undue wear.

That's how Live-Water washing gets clothes cleaner, cleaner, clean! It's thorough action—yet soap-bubble gentle with fragile fabrics. And that's true, too, of Live-Water rinsing, Live-Water re-rinsing! All of this happens—automatically—at the touch of a dial. Your hands need never touch water—not even when you lift out the clean, bright clothes. The Rapidry-Spin gets them really damp-dry, lighter to lift—it spins more water out of clothes than most other washers, far more! When the laundry's done the washer cleans itself and turns itself off—automatically.



Visit your Frigidaire Dealer today to learn about the only really different Automatic Washer. And ask to see all the new models of the Frigidaire Refrigerator, the different Frigidaire Electric Ranges and all the other Frigidaire appliances for pleasanter living.

Look up name of your Frigidaire Dealer—in Classified Phone Directory; or write Frigidaire Division of General Motors, Dayton 1, Ohio. In Canada, Leaside 12, Ontario.



Listen to Frigidaire's New Lum and Abner Show, Sunday nights, CBS.

FRIGIDAIRE
Automatic Washer

Wash with your little finger—just touch this dial and your Frigidaire Automatic Washer does the rest! Or, for special jobs, you can hand-control the laundering cycle — lengthen, shorten, repeat, skip any operation as you wish.

Live-Water Washing is safest—keeps clothes rising and falling freely through sudsy water, allowing minimum contact with even the tub itself. That's why you'll find it so easy on clothes—no pulling or yanking by metal parts to cause undue wear.

Some clothes are dry enough to iron — the minute you lift them out of the Frigidaire Automatic Washer. That's because of Rapidry-Spinning! And by the time you've ironed those pieces, chances are that the rest of the laundry's plenty dry enough for ironing, too!

Porcelain finish wipes clean — just a damp rag cleans the exterior easily. The beautiful rustproof finish resists scratching, grease and dirt. And, of course, the interior is porcelain, too—self-cleaning, needs no attention at all!

"Our latch-string's out for Sunday Supper!"

Tomato bouillon — Stuffed olives in bacon — RITZ CRACKERS
Mushroom caps with shrimps — Frankfurters with cheddar cheese

Gather your friends around the fireside for "something new" in supper! Serve soup in mugs and let them help themselves to hearty hot hors d'oeuvres and RITZ CRACKERS. Here's a sophisticated idea for a meal—and crisp, tangy RITZ CRACKERS make it click! Because no other crackers make soup or shrimp taste so zesty—are so delicious that folks eat 'em by handfuls! For hospitality with cordiality, serve RITZ CRACKERS whenever "your latchstring's out"!

NOTHING TASTES AS GOOD AS RITZ—BUT RITZ!

(Continued from Page 92)

at large, and I wrote or telephoned to doctors all over the country to investigate this possibility.

I wrote to Hutchins at the University of Chicago, to both Lawrences at the University of California, to the head of the tumor clinic at Michael Reese in Chicago, to a splendid physician in Boston who had just come back from Russia, to one specialist who was experimenting with radioactive phosphorus, to the head of Massachusetts General, and to our friend Prof. Francis Bitter. We asked one and all the same question—did they know anything new? Was there any hope?—particularly in developments in medical physics. One and all made the same reply, in painstaking and courteous terms, that nothing at all was new, that Johnny was having the best and most expert medical care the world of science could provide.

One morning Frances found an item in the Sunday Times, describing some remarkable ameliorations of tumors—not brain tumors, but just tumors—caused by intravenous dosages of mustard gas.

This is, of course, a deadly poison. Scientists had come across it as a possible treatment of cancer directly out of military experiments. Mustard gas kills by attacking certain cells with abnormally fast growth. What is a tumor if not something in the body growing fast? Hence the transposition was easy to the hypothesis that nitrogen mustard, or HN_2 as the doctors called it, might conceivably pick out and attack tumor cells, while not harming appreciably other cells, if administered in tiny doses with great care.

Frances, through friends in New Haven, set out on the trail of this mustard. We chased it to the University of Utah, to an experimental station in Maine, and to the offices of the American Cancer Society. After a week we tracked it down finally at Memorial Hospital, New York City—ten minutes' walk from our apartment. What decided us to use it was the word over the telephone of one of the most celebrated physicians in the United States: "If it were my son, I'd try it."

Traeger got in touch with Rhoads, the head of Memorial, and I went to see Craver, the medical director there, who put at our disposal Dr. Joseph Burchenal, a young scientist with a fine war record who was in charge of the HN_2 experiments. He drove out to Neurological with me, and we put it up to Mount. Now it is a ticklish business to mix up hospitals. It is a very rare thing for a doctor affixed to one hospital, like Burchenal at Memorial, to do work at another like Medical Center. Let me thank everybody who generously helped waive the rules. Within twenty-four hours of first talking to Craver at Memorial, I saw the first injection of nitrogen mustard ever given at Medical Center administered to Johnny. It was all so impromptu and urgent that I myself carried the precious, frightfully poisonous stuff from one hospital to the other.

DURING all of this Johnny was reasonably confident. At I do not know what cost to his inner resources, he maintained the boldest kind of front. Once Bill Shirer and the late John T. Whitaker dropped in; each had just had a serious hospital experience. "What did you talk about?" I asked Johnny. Reply: "We discussed our operations."

He could not have survived this summer had it not been for his mother's brave and understanding spirit. So that he would not be frightened she talked to him as if casually about the narrow escapes she and other people had had from Death, and it relieved him greatly to learn that several of those whom he loved had almost died. She read him poetry on meditative and religious themes, and he made his own anthology of poems he liked by reciting them into a transcribing apparatus, and then playing them back when the mood was on him.

Johnny got his first doses of mustard between August first and fifth. It had never been tried on a brain case before. mustard makes a patient very sick Also there was considerable local pain the veins in his arms were difficult and the injections produced painful b There had to be a close watch on afte since one of the results of mustard is the white blood count down. The blood corpuscles serve an importan tion in combating infection, so it wa sary to keep dosing Johnny wit amounts of penicillin, as compensa the temporarily lost white cells. W drove up to the country we filled a bag with dry ice and chucked the p in it, and for over a month Johnny have a blood count every day.

THE first series of mustard shots did great benefit. Of this there is no rea doubt, I believe. They stepped up his and made him fresher, stronger. As to ond series I am not so sure. For we dec an additional course of mustard, and had these further shots late in Augu

Johnny checked out of this visit to logical and he was well enough, tha afternoon, to see the movie Henry Frances and my sister Jean and to few blocks. But there was somethi donic in his last word to his favorit when she said good-by. "Oh," he w her, "I'll be back."

Out in the country he picked up He did schoolwork and for relaxation out mathematically all the odds po poker, among many other things. O cinated like most by the mysteriou of the family, he his family tree wit elaborateness. On ing in New York I letter:

Sat

Dear Pap, Here is the list of chemic
1 lb. acetone
4 oz. ammonium chloride
1 oz. sodium hydride
U-tube (with arms)
2 ft. thick-walled rubber tubing to U-tube
2 rubber stoppers to fit U-tube
2 ft. glass tubing to fit inside rubbe
1-hole rubber stopper into which glas will fit.
Any test tube into which stopper wil love, Jo

I scurried around to pick up all this addition to find a cargo of dry ice he With it he was going to perform an ment he had been working on, in the summer—the liquefaction of ammon quite new process.

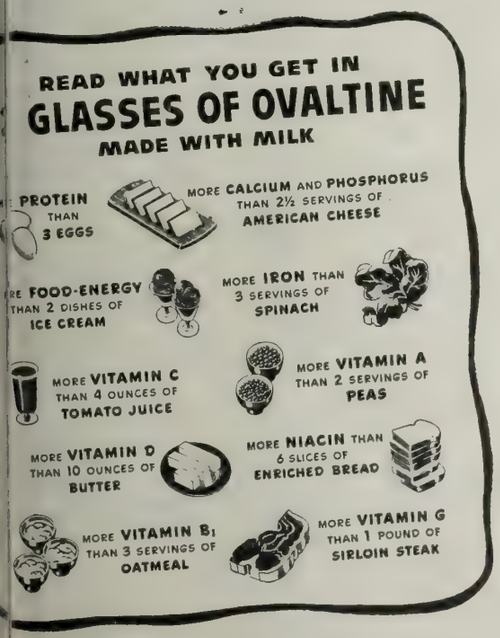
One of Johnny's great friends neighbor Mr. Weaver, who taught ch at Andover. For summer after summ good and generous man had been J best adult friend. Mr. Weaver came o helped him when his own weakenec and failing co-ordination were not q to the mechanical tasks involved. insulated a big can with rock wo pumped the gas as he made it throu other receptacle filled with the dry ic experiment worked, praise be.

Once Mr. Boyden, principal of De and Mr. Hayden, one of his favorite te drove down from Deerfield to have a d him. This was a red-letter occasion and Johnny talked soberly about sch next term. Of course it had occurred that he might be unable to get back to but the idea was so unthinkable that most part he suppressed it.

He was busy, impatient and irritat not discouraged at not being fully w often joked about his illness. "I bet mustard has knocked the tumor out!

But on August thirty-first there wa a new leak in the bump, and the whit count was below 1000. The papilleden high again.

Meantime we were working on a tack. Early in the summer Raymond told me astonishing stories about a



(Continued on Page 96)

Wise men, though all laws were abolished, would lead the same life. —ARISTOPHANES.

His little life is in your hands

If he's thin and nervous there's one important thing you can do about it right now!

When we say, "His little life is in your hands", we mean all those things that the heart and mind of a mother can put into the bringing up of a child. But here, in particular, we emphasize the part played by proper nutrition.

If a child is thin and frail or nervous, it may be due to a number of things. But the most common correctable cause is faulty nutrition. And this cause is one which you, the mother, can do something about.

In situations like this, many mothers are now turning to Ovaltine. Because Ovaltine contains a very wide variety and scope of food elements, both common and rare. Particularly those elements that are most apt to be lacking in the daily diet.

For Ovaltine, mixed with milk, is a rich supplementary food that fills in the gaps, the chinks, and the loopholes of an otherwise "good" diet. It contains, in addition to essential high-quality proteins and quick-energy foods, the important vitamins A, B_1, C, D, G, Niacin, and the valuable minerals Iron, Calcium and Phosphorus.

It is also important to know that Ovaltine is specially processed to make it very easy to digest. A child with a "delicate" stomach will usually digest and absorb Ovaltine very readily. Ovaltine even makes milk more easy to digest.

So when you give two to three glasses of Ovaltine a day, plus normal meals, you can be certain that you have done just about everything you can do to improve your child's nutrition.

A New Flavor

Ovaltine is available in plain and in an improved, sweet chocolate flavor which children really like—an important consideration in getting children to take the nourishment they need.

So, why not give your child Ovaltine every day for 30 or 60 days and carefully note the results. When you consider all the food values which Ovaltine supplies, you will find it economical.

OVALTINE

SWEET CHOCOLATE FLAVORED AND PLAIN

Sunny Peach Pie

Ann Pillsbury's Pastry

1 cup sifted Pillsbury's Best Flour
½ teaspoon salt
⅓ cup shortening
2 to 3 tablespoons cold water

Sift together flour and salt. Cut in shortening with pastry blender or 2 knives until particles are size of small peas. Add water until dough is moist enough to hold together. Roll on floured board or pastry cloth to about ⅛-inch thickness. Fit loosely in 9-inch pan; gently pat out air pockets. Trim pastry 1 inch beyond rim of pan. Fold to form standing rim; flute edge. Prick pastry with fork. Bake in very hot oven (450 degrees F.) 12 to 15 minutes. Makes one 9-inch pie shell.

Sunny Peach Filling

1 #2½ can sliced cling peaches, drained
1 baked 9-inch pastry shell
¼ cup granulated sugar
3 tablespoons cornstarch
1 cup syrup from peaches
¼ cup orange juice
1 teaspoon grated orange rind
1 tablespoon butter or margarine
⅛ teaspoon salt

Arrange drained peaches in baked pastry shell. Combine sugar and cornstarch. Add to peach syrup and cook until thick, stirring constantly. Remove from heat and stir in orange juice, rind, butter and salt. Pour over peaches in shell. Chill. Serves 6.

California Canned Cling Peaches have a true peach flavor. They're yellow as the sun that ripens them! Packed orchard fresh! Instantly ready to use! Best peaches for pies, cakes, salads, desserts! Priced right!

Check the label—Choose your favorite brand of Canned Cling Peaches from California

Canned Halves · Canned Slices · Canned Fruit Cocktail · in tin or glass

(Continued from Page 94)

named Max Gerson who had achieved remarkable arrestations of cancer and other illnesses by a therapy based on diet. Gerson was, and is, a perfectly authentic M.D., but unorthodox. He had been attacked by the Journal of the American Medical Association; Swing himself had been under bitter criticism for a broadcast describing and praising Gerson's philosophy and methods of dietary cure. My own first reaction was skeptical, and Frances was dubious too. Then I learned that Gerson had long experience actually in brain-tumor cases, having been associated for years with a famous German neurosurgeon, Foerster, in a tumor clinic at Breslau before the war. I went to see Gerson. He showed me his records of tumors—even gliomas—apparently cured. But I was still doubtful because it seemed to me inconceivable that anything so serious as a glioma could be cleared up by anything so simple as a diet. He impressed me greatly as a human being, however. Frances and I had a long talk with Traeger. At first he violently opposed the Gerson claims, but then he swung over on the ground that, after all, Johnny was deteriorating very fast and in any case the diet could do no harm. I stayed at Madison one week end and Frances went into New York, visited Gerson and looked over his nursing home. She was impressed too. We made a sudden decision over the telephone. We had tried orthodoxy, both static and advanced, and now we would give heterodoxy a chance. If only we could stave off Death a little longer! And—once more—there was absolutely nothing to lose.

I took Johnny out to dinner in Madison and broke it to him that we would be going into town the next day for new and further treatment. This was a grievous shock. It was the first time that I saw him seriously upset. He struggled to keep from tears. But by the next morning he was buoyant again—so much so that I dreaded more than I could tell what would have to be the next bad news broken to him, that he could not go back to school. "I'm sorry I bawled last night, father," he said. Then, limping slightly, he pushed off to his laboratory for a morning's work. School—and the science work he was doing—was practically all he talked about.

Frances came out, and on September seventh we drove to Doctor Gerson's nursing home.

THOSE September days were grim at first. Johnny lay there pale and panting with misery. His blood count slipped lower and lower and great bruises appeared on his arms and chest, caused by breakdown of the capillaries. We had been warned that the blood would go very low, and perhaps we were needlessly alarmed—it might well have come back of itself. But anyway we were worried. One doctor told us that the reason he had seemed so casual when Johnny entered the Gerson nursing home was his conviction that he couldn't possibly outlast the week anyway.

Within a week Johnny was feeling, not worse, but much better! The blood count rose steadily, the bruises were absorbed, the wound in the bulge healed, and the bump on the skull was going down!

Traeger had walked down the street with me to meet Gerson. He was deeply pessimistic. He said, "We'll move Johnny to a hospital and try massive transfusions—nothing else can save him." The two doctors retired into the kitchen, and came out after half an hour. Then Traeger looked Johnn slowly and said, "Never mind ab transfusions. Let's do it Gerson's another twenty-four hours."

First, Gerson took Johnny off pe This we thought to be a very grave ri he insisted, penicillin could irritate a Second, he refused to permit any trans or other emergency measures. What rible chance we thought he was Third, he demanded that for some least Johnny should have rest, absolu nothing but rest, rest, rest.

THE Gerson diet is saltless and fatle for a long time proteins are excluded to an extreme minimum. The theory this is simple enough. Give Nature tunity, and Nature herself will heal. silliest thing in the world to attempt rest cancer of the tongue, say, by cut the tongue. What the physician shoul for, if he gets a case in time, is to cha metabolism of the body so that the (or other affliction) dies of itself. Th theory is erected on the basis that th istry of the body can be so altere eliminate disease. Perhaps this may far-fetched. B diet, any spec can markedl ence bodily b is, of cours known.

Gerson to line that th spends an a disproport share of its getting rid o and that t when the bo it will be mu to combat illn build healthy the amount o is drastical down. Hence, tient enters u Gerson diet. does he subsist on specially p fruit juices an vegetables th down to the mi of ash, but he ema after ene the beginn many as four or five a day, till the is totally washed out and cleansed.

Gerson's sanitarium, operated daughter and Mr. and Mrs. Seeley, with the utmost loving care; I cann sibly pay tribute enough to Mrs. S to Miss Gerson for what they did fo

The regime was certainly onerous. said wearily after the first week, "I time by enemas."

This is what Johnny had to eat du next months. For breakfast, a pint juice, oatmeal, an apple-carrot mas special soup made of fresh vegetable ley root, celery knob, leek, tomato soup he continued to take at interva the day, until he had a quart or a qu a half. For lunch, heaping portions of vegetables, a salad, fresh fruit, the s mash, and a baked potato. For din same. Later he was permitted pot skim milk, and dry pumpernickel. N canned. Nothing seasoned, smoked or Above all nothing salted. No meat, fish. No cream, butter or other fats, N except honey and maple sugar. No sausages, ice cream, pickles, spices, p foods, white flour, condiments, cakes of the multitude of small things a ch Very little water. All the vegetables be cooked with no added water or stu being washed, not scraped.

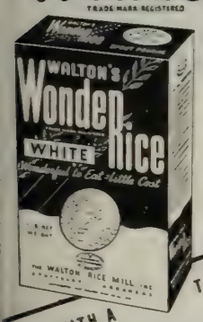
Do not think this was starvation patients gain rather than lose on the diet. The meals are enormous in siz Mrs. Seeley prepared them, exquisit posed. Then to compensate for the minerals there are injections of cru extract every day, and multitudino These were assembled in a glass di

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Old Woman

By Edwin Martenet

There was an old woman who lived in an attic
All by herself, which was very erratic.
She never went out and she never came in
And declared she disliked everywhere she had been.
She talked to herself but said with a leer,
"I never believe a word that I hear."
She wrote her own books and cooked her own food
And claimed she was very much misunderstood.



★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

erica's Most Distinguished Packaged Rice

riety for Variety . . . Price for Price here is no better rice than WALTON'S WondeRice

TRADE MARK REGISTERED

REGULAR GRAIN in the blue and yellow package

LONG GRAIN in the green and yellow package

THRIFTY ANGLE

ECIPE WITH A

Tested by FLORA ADAMS
Home Economics Director

WondeRice with Chicken cups diced left- er chicken chicken broth ion, chopped

1½ tablespoons chicken fat
½ cup raw WondeRice
½ cup grated cheese

k onion in fat for 5 minutes and add the rt of liquid. When liquid boils, sprinkle ndeRice in slowly. Cover pan and let ndeRice simmer slowly for 25 minutes, ring with fork from time to time to pre- sticking. Add chopped chicken and more if needed. Turn on hot platter and nkle grated cheese over all. Serves 4.

FREE TESTED RECIPES—
D POSTCARD

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

TON RICE MILL, INC., STUTTGART, ARK.

JOLLY TIME POP CORN
SURE-TO-POP
CRISP AND TENDER

XTRA for You Every Week
illars
SHOW EVERYDAY CARDS
Earn extra money easily taking orders for new Everyday Assortment of 15 cards for Birthdays, all occasions. Friends buy gladly; you make up to 50c on big $1 value. Also PERSONALIZED Stationery, Name-Imprinted "Charmette" Notes, Napkins, Gift Wraps; other popular sellers at 60c up. Send today for Everyday Box on approval and Free Imprint Samples.
FRIENDSHIP STUDIOS, INC.
927 ADAMS STREET - ELMIRA, N. Y.

He Prefers It
On Steak Goodness Sake

A-1

uce—the dash
at makes the dish

EE—"Cooking for a Man"
e G. F. Heublein & Bro., Inc.,
Dept. LHJ, Hartford, Conn.

morning, in various colors to denote what minerals and vitamins they contained—thirty or more in all. Johnny took niacin, liver powder, lubile (dried powdered bile), vitamins A and D, iron, dicalcium phosphate with viosterol, and Lugol's solution. Iodine—in a precisely calculated amount—is essential to the cure.

Johnny's attitude to all this—he was a youngster with a vigorous, healthy appetite—can readily be imagined. He loathed the diet, but he held on to it with scrupulous fidelity. Carefully he checked off in his notebook the pills he took each day.

But he was getting better. This, overwhelmingly, was all that counted. The papilledema dropped sharply, and by the end of September the pupils were almost normal—this was an almost unbelievable demonstration of recovery. Moreover, the blood count was up to normal, and, incontestably, the bump was smaller. I left one evening and walked to the corner and had a cup of coffee, almost insane with sudden hope. I was beside myself with a violent and incredulous joy. Johnny was going to recover after all! He'd show the surgeons how a boy with a real will to live could live!

For these extravagant hopes I had, I must say, a certain medical backing for a time. One of our doctors was very optimistic and all were co-operating well. We had feared that, once we delivered Johnny over to Gerson, the more strait-laced physicians might refuse to see him in this so-called black sheep's den. One doctor, out of the whole lot, was in fact angry and did wash his hands of us—temporarily; he said we had spoiled the "controls," as if Johnny were a rabbit. But Traeger came over to have a consultation with Gerson every Saturday for months; Putnam had no hesitation in visiting him and later Gerson several times visited Neurological (which we had been told would be utterly impossible), and Lester Mount, who as time wore on became the closest of all the doctors to Johnny except Traeger, and who loved Johnny as Johnny loved him, came to see him regularly.

Our routine was now established. Mrs. Seeley's nursing home was only a few minutes' walk from my flat. Johnny telephoned us the first thing in the morning, and again just before lights-out at night. He was frightfully depressed sometimes, and he hungered for contact with us the first and last minutes of the day. But he would always say, even if his voice was quavering, "I feel wonderful!" As a rule I dropped in to see him at noon, and again briefly in the late afternoon or evening; Frances came at lunch and stayed with him until he went to sleep. Soon, we thought, we would move him home—though this would entail a difficult lot of routine because all his food would have to be cooked specially with special paraphernalia. Frances worked on this and got the apartment ready. But as it worked out it was several months before Johnny was able to come home.

I read him the typescript of the Montana chapter of Inside U.S.A. "Father," he grinned, "it'll sell a million copies." That week, too, I took him for a brief ride. He said, "Ah! I feel alive again!"

I asked him what he wanted most to eat when the diet should be over.

"A glass of full milk, an artichoke with hollandaise sauce, spaghetti and meat balls, and a chocolate ice-cream soda."

Frances was lifting his morale all the time. She bought bright-colored scarfs which he wound around his bandage, and this amused

(Continued on Page 99)

21 PLUS AND MINUS

Answers to questions on Page 31

1—b	6—b	11—b	16—b
2—b	7—a	12—b	17—b
3—a	8—a	13—a	18—c
4—a	9—b	14—b	19—a
5—a	10—a	15—c	20—b

Delicious Hot Rolls the very

First Time

No Experience Needed with the New

Pillsbury HOT ROLL MIX (with Yeast)

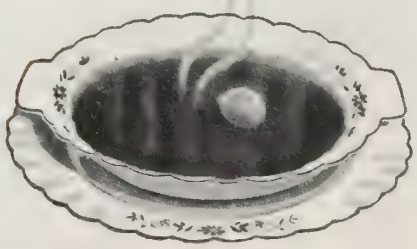
YEAST INCLUDED

Now—with the greatest of confidence—you turn out beautiful plump raised rolls, sweet rolls—and coffee cakes, too! Tender, light as a breeze, with the new Pillsbury Hot Roll Mix. Yeast included. You just add water to the yeast, then add mix. Ann Pillsbury's directions on the package.

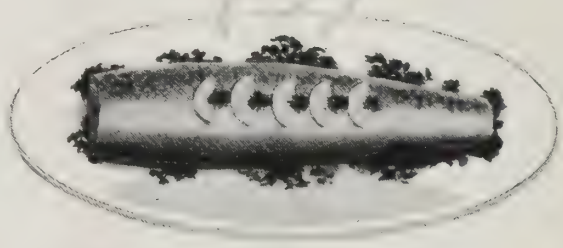
You and Ann Pillsbury can make a great team

Ann Pillsbury has developed a new hot roll mix in her kitchen to save you time in your kitchen, and give you perfect results every time.

Pillsbury BEST Mixes

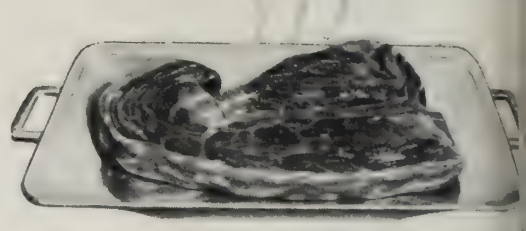


© P. M. I.



Save Pillsbury Extra Value Coupons

Get valuable articles at real savings on Pillsbury coupon plan. Write for free booklet to PILLSBURY, Box 150, Minneapolis, Minn.



Everything from soup to nuts

EVERYTHING IS FASTER... in the wonderful new automatic Gas ranges built to "CP" standards! You get high-heat, low-heat – any exact heat – instantly!

EVERYTHING COOKS AUTOMATICALLY... in the clock controlled Gas oven. Gas turns on and off–cooks a complete oven meal–and turns itself off–while you're busy elsewhere!

EVERYTHING YOU WANT IN BROILING... from rare-and-juicy to "done through." And these new flame-flavorful Gas broilers need NO pre-heating . . . are really smokeless!

EVERYTHING BAKES BEAUTIFULLY...
Only a new Gas oven has automatic heat control plus constant even heat circulation. Gives you the same perfect texture all over!

EVERYTHING FOR EXTRA COOLNESS...
Gas burners are out the second you turn them off – leave no waste heat to warm up kitchen! New heavy insulation means cooler cooking!

EVERYTHING IS ECONOMICAL...
No other automatic ranges cost so little to buy – so little to maintain. As for the cost of running a new Gas range–it's just peanuts!

Only Gas gives you everything you want in one magnificent range! That's why 95 out of 100 homes, in city after city, cook with it. That's why you'll want to see this MAGIC CHEF "CP" Gas range and all the other "makes" built to "CP" standards. Choose one that's best for your family. Then for the best in food preservation – get a new Servel Gas refrigerator! They're both "musts" for your "New Freedom Gas Kitchen!"*

AMERICAN GAS ASSOCIATION

(Continued from Page 97)

She read him biographies of great scien-ınd all manner of news items and stories . science. Another thing that helped his le was, if I may say so, my book. He assionately interested in it—almost as sted as I. He knew what a race I was ng, against time and circumstance. He very chapter in manuscript.
m Frances' diary:

lay Johnny said, "Oh, mother—I've been g for you—I have a confession to make.
ere right—as usual—about the dancing.
end of this term, you know, they have nior prom. When I get back to school,
I I do? . . . I'll have to dance! Oh, mother, een so depressed." He was cheerful, con-
. . . : Now he said would I practice with ıd I said I'd love to. I was surprised. But njections interrupted and dinner. After he asked again, and I pushed back the and rug. And we danced!

x Kopf came in one day with his cheer-Hello, Chonnie" and played him a game ss. He played well for an hour, and got tired; Max eased off, to try to let vin. Then I discovered that Johnny's of vision was so limited by this time ıe could no longer see the entire board glance, and hence had to memorize the whole game the position in the iles. Other friends dropped in during ıfternoons. Clare Luce organized rs for Johnny—if that is the proper o express it—and she offered us her ecticut house for his convalescence.
ovember fourth, his seventeenth birth-ve had a party, and Seeley made a kind
ıitation ice cream.
y adored parties,
hat he should have vell enough to receive s on this his own
l day was a happy

course he was fret-metimes. Once he nodest amount of complaining and then ed mood and exclaimed, "Father, you to slap me down when I talk like that!" he was getting more easily tired and f-dozed a good deal. Once after he tried some card tricks and couldn't hold the —they cascaded to the floor as he stood okedly—he said in a measured, quiet
"I dare say my left hand will always ttle clumsy." It was very rare for him ake such an admission. He fiercely up the exercise balls which were sup-to strengthen the left fingers, and never did.

his time a perplexing concrete situa-as building up. On one level, the genvel, he continued to improve. He was er and got dressed in the morning and out for occasional brief walks. On a c level, that of the status of the bump, s not improving. The bump looked now, and had become two bumps.
er and Mount came to see him to-. Traeger thought that he might get elief if the protuberance were drained; was fearful of doing this because,
no matter what scrupulous conditions, always exists of carrying an infection
l. But he agreed to try. Gerson op-the idea, and we had a long and pain-gument. Gerson felt that any anesno matter how mild, was likely to kill a t on his diet, since the bodily system ecome so purified that narcotics acted t poisons. But he agreed finally to per-modicum of Novocain and Mount the puncture. The bump had been ant, which was a good sign, but today harder than a rock, and he was able act only a few drops of fluid. Glumly, d to conceal from Johnny the way our ooked.
next time Mount came he made an stive test, and I watched it from begin-o end. What the neurologist seeks to f possible, is where the damage to the is leading. One test always fascinated
y. Mount would ask him to close his then he would put a coin or a safety pin or a button or something similar in his left palm and ask him to identify it. By working the law of averages, Johnny tried to guess what the object would be, when he could not tell by feeling it, and thus outsmart the doctor. Always, too, the doctor tested his grip, examined all his reflexes, made him try to touch his nose with his fingers with his eyes closed, and asked him a series of standard questions—any tremors, any nausea, any chills? So far, thank goodness, the replies were always negative.

It may seem an odd thing to write, but by this time we knew something of how lucky Johnny was, granted that he had to have a brain tumor at all. The tumor was, God knows, murderous enough; but if it had been in another place in the brain it could have produced even more terrible disasters. Some people with brain injuries twitch incessantly; some cannot walk or talk; some can pronounce only parts of each successive word; many lose their memory. Above all, Johnny was lucky in that he had no serious pain and was right-handed. Little by little, his left hand was giving way; if it had been the right, his tortures would have been increased manifold. Johnny's injury was on the right side of the brain, and therefore it was only the left side of the body that felt sympoms.

MOUNT came again, during a period when everything was very good except the bump. Gerson said, "Your son is saved!" Mount said the exact opposite.

Now occurred the most remarkable of all remarkable things in the story of this struggle. Johnny accepted with disappointment but good spirit that he could not return to Deerfield—I broke the news to him—and he set out diligently to make up his lost school hours by tutoring. He could hardly walk without swaying; he could scarcely move his left fingers; he had lost half the sight of each eye; he was dazed with the poison from the bump; and yet he worked.

We should have much peace if we would not busy ourselves with the sayings and doings of others.

—THOMAS À. KEMPIS: De Imitatione Christi.

Frances found him two tutors and set them into their routine smoothly, while Johnny himself planned his daily endeavor like a general directing a battle. He helped map out the lessons and knew just what he wanted each tutor to cover in every session.

Here is a letter he wrote to the headmaster of Deerfield, as dictated to his mother:

November 4, 1946

Dear Mr. Boyden: I am desperately worried about my work. Of last year's physics experiments I did exactly five out of thirty experiments due. Already I am far behind in chem lab. I've forgotten every bit of French I ever knew, and there is this year's work too.

I don't see how I can ever catch up. My English marks were so terrible last year too. It seems I'm going to stay in this hellish place forever. It's my birthday today (I'm seventeen). I'm going to Harvard next year (I hope) and there will be college boards—and final exams, this year's and last. It's absolutely a hopeless situation. I must implore you to persuade Mr. Haynes to forget about my physics lab, and Mrs. Boyden to excuse me of the chem lab that the other boys will have completed.

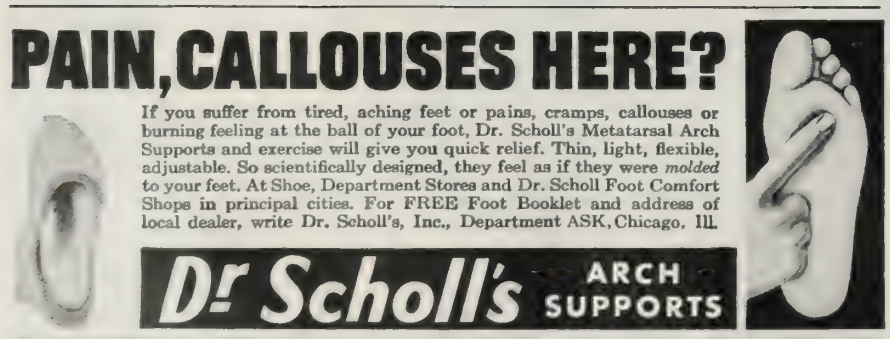
My English and French notes are lost, and I am desperate.

Please forgive me for unburdening myself in this way, and give my best to all the boys.

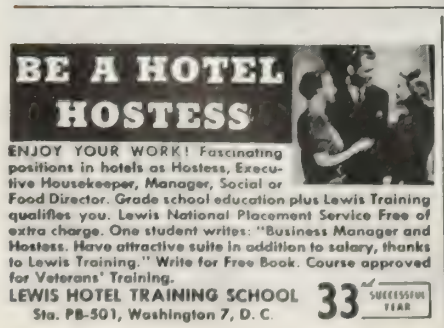
Yours very sincerely,
JOHN GUNTHER, JR.

P.S. You may tell Mr. Haynes that I did finally write up two experiments.

Mr. Boyden not only replied cordially, but sent Mr. Haynes all the way into New York to give Johnny direct encouragement. The visit helped his morale immensely.



Then Johnny wrote:



Dear Mr. Bill: I would like very much to make an initial attempt at passing last year's final algebra exam. During the last month or two of vacation I was tutored in intermediate algebra by Mr. Elbert Weaver of Andover. We covered the whole year's work, especially what I was weak in—logarithms and trig. I am afraid that unless I take the exam very soon I will, for the second time, forget all the algebra I ever knew.

Therefore, I wish you would send an adequate examination to my father, so he may give it to me, under regular exam conditions, in the time limits you may set.

I understand there will be no analytical geometry on the exam, but there will be the binomial theorem and factoring of cubes, all of which I have covered. We will send it back to you for correction, and I hope, if I don't do well on it, I may have another chance when I get back to school.

Please give my best to Mr. Boyden.

Came the great day when, under honor conditions, Johnny took a preliminary exam to see how well he would do. One of his tutors thought he ought to wait, but there was no holding him. Johnny exclaimed, "Oh, mother, tell him I want to get that test off my mind—and do the other things—my chemistry and physics—please tell him!" Finally the test was set for the next day, and he passed it satisfactorily. He commented then to Frances, "Sometimes in life you have to take a chance."

So he wrote:

Dec. 3, 1946

Dear Mr. Haynes: All my thanks for the things you sent. Against my tutor's advice, I took a three-hour trial exam (a N. Y. Regents examination) in two hours, getting 77%. Consequently I don't think I will have any trouble with the one you sent.

The other day I listed forty-six chemical experiments that I have done in the last five or six years. I will write them up briefly in the hope that they will take care of my chemistry lab for some time to come.

Best wishes to all.

Then he worsened sharply. The bump looked like two tomatoes and he became very tired and feverish, with the fever climbing uncomfortably high. Of course he had had some fever right along. Smears showed that staphylococci were present now, and this seemed to confirm Mount's worst fear, that infection of the meninges might result. Putnam came back from California and paid a call. He was amazed that Johnny was still alive—let alone that he was well enough to take and pass examinations on schoolwork. Putnam, Traeger and Gerson talked most of an evening, behind closed doors, while Frances and I waited nervously upstairs, and Johnny dozed.

Everybody—except Gerson—thought that we must have a prompt minor operation to avert a wide infection. That bump had become very dangerous, exuding large amounts of pus every day. Also the adjacent skin was beginning to break down, which would in time mean more ulceration. Again, though the bump was bigger, it was very soft now, and drainage might be possible. But Gerson fought like a tiger against this view. His theory was that the tumor was now dead, killed by the diet, and that the suppuration consisted of nothing but dead matter; the tumor was, as it were, sloughing itself sl out of Johnny's head. Also he resolutely posed an operation on the ground that esthesia would be fatal.

So began a battle of the doctors tha but destroyed us. I have never known strain as during that December week. ultimate decision and responsibility re of course, on Frances and me. The do could only explain and suggest; what did was, in the final analysis, up to us nally we compromised. Traeger suggest freezing agent instead of an injectable esthetic; Gerson agreed to this finally, M agreed to operate, and everybody else ag that even while Johnny was in Neurolo he would remain on the Gerson diet.

Johnny's own comment after Putn visit was revealing. "Of course operate. bump is poisoning my nerves." He went "The bump will open twice more." And turned out he was dead right.

So I drove him to Neurological again what we thought would be a stay of a da two. He stayed five weeks.

The operation was scheduled for the a noon. Early that morning the bump s taneously opened of itself, as Gerson stubbornly predicted it would. Mount c me at about eleven in the morning, his fairly choked with joy, saying that he successfully drained an abscess that went centimeters into the brain beyond the of the skull, and had got out a full cup c and fluid.

Now Johnny recovered with great l He regained his confidence about chess, ied hard, greeted friends, loafed, tease nurses and laughed. He passed an exam, which was a real one and which to be done in a stipulated time.

He was massively bandaged and e few hours, under the most elaborate p dure, he had to have a penicillin drip a pear-shaped sac in the brain slowly c with healthy granulation tissue, but o wise he was more comfortable than at other period during his illness. That horr ferocious bump was altogether gone. John skull would be as smooth and norma mine, except for the scars of the ori incision which the hair would cover. next year—so we thought—when any ther last remnants of the dead tumor gone, we would put in a plate and all w be well forevermore.

Doctor after doctor came in to see Joh and expressed his free amazement. M one of our old friends, told us that whe heard that Johnny was in hospital again first thought was of complete surprise he was still living, second that he must coma and had been brought in for final liative measures. And there Johnny wa

(Continued on Page 102)

"This is the best moment of all—just before I open them and find I don't like them as much as I did in the store."

DuBarry Success Course News

PUBLISHED BY THE RICHARD HUDNUT SALON, HEADQUARTERS OF THE FIT AND FAIR, DEPT. S, 693 FIFTH AVENUE, NEW YORK

s Course Has Brought Supreme Happiness

it a confes- if you will, have had a amazing ex- ıce," writes Phyllis Bou- f Denver, ado. "All ife, I had ed from a of inferi- —because I was overweight. At 16, old me I was just a big girl and al- would be. But at 24, eternally tired itable, I could stand it no longer. I d for the DuBarry Success Course. six weeks, I learned how to live— be the attractive person that nature ed me to be. It was not long before I own from 171 to 121. I now wear a instead of an 18 or 20. The fatigue ne like magic—and with it that feel- inferiority. My skin glows with For the first time, I know the secret ful make-up.

deepest sincerity, I can say thanks to Barry Success Course for all it has to me—a new outward poise and alm—a supreme happiness."

s "Middle-aged" Look omes a Slim Beauty!

ore

After

ell you look! How young you look! ave you been doing to yourself?" wonder compliments like these l sweet to Mrs. Helen Schmidt of , Missouri. Only a few months be- e had been a tired, overweight wife ther, settling into middle age. Then ng happened in Helen Schmidt's was the exciting adventure of taking Barry Success Course right in her me. And the result?

ok off 46 pounds," she says, "went ze 40 to 16, reduced my waist, ab- and hips 7 inches. I learned so had never known about care of my l hair. I cannot tell you how grate- for the Success Course."

Thousands Find DuBarry Success Course Easy Way to Slender Loveliness at Home

"Don't wait till you're a heavyweight!"

"Let the DuBarry Success Course show you, as it did me, how to get slim and stay slim."

—says Inga Merriman, of Portland, Maine

"I had always been slim until my baby was born," says Mrs. Inga Merriman. "Then I began to put on weight, and friends began to remark about it. I had a closet full of clothes I couldn't wear and had to start buying larger sizes. That was a real warning to me and I decided not to delay until I got to be a real heavyweight. I started the DuBarry Success Course. In just six weeks I was down from 120 to 105, had reduced my waist 5 inches, my abdomen 7½, and was back to an almost perfect size 10.

"I never saw anything work so like magic. I had plenty to eat and the exercises were easy because so many of them could be done as I did my housework—sweeping, making beds, picking up the baby's things. My skin glows like satin, my hair is soft and lustrous. I feel like a new person inside and out, and I'm especially happy because my husband is so proud of me. My advice to every woman who has put on even a few extra pounds is—don't wait until you're a heavyweight. Let the Success Course show you how to get slim and stay slim."

Before

After

Mrs. Merriman's Measurements

	Before	After	Change
Height	5'1"	5'1½"	+½"
Weight	120	105	−15
Bust	34	33	− 1
Waist	29	24	− 5
Abdomen	34½	27	− 7½
Hips	36	33¼	− 2¾

Yours with the New DuBarry Success Course

All these luxurious DuBarry Beauty and Make-up Preparations and Richard Hudnut Hair Preparations are included with your Course. They come to you with an entirely new Portable Beauty Tray, an appropriate setting for the many cosmetics that are to play an important part in your exciting beauty adventure.

New short-cuts—new methods bring quick results—prove safe way to make yourself over.

All over America women and girls are making a thrilling discovery. The NEW DuBarry Success Course is the quick, safe, easy way to achieve a more slender, well-proportioned figure, to look better, live a happier life. And the Course soon saves its small cost.

There's a reason why the DuBarry Success Course is such a sensational success—why more than a third of a million women and girls have found it the way to loveliness at home. It's because this Course brings you an individual beauty plan for you. You get an analysis of your needs—skin, hair, figure, posture, weight. You get an individual goal to work for and a plan for attaining it. In a few exciting weeks you learn not only how to make yourself over in face, figure and fascination, but how to be your own beauty expert the rest of your life.

Yes, when you enroll for the DuBarry Success Course, the very methods taught by beauty-maker Ann Delafield at the Richard Hudnut Salon come to you in your home. You are shown the new short-cuts, the faster ways to figure improvement. You eat tempting, delicious foods while pounds fade away. You use professional secrets to make your skin softer and lovelier, your eyes more sparkling, your hair more beautiful.

And the Course saves you money. Saves on beauty shop bills. Saves on clothes alterations. Saves because you can wear those smarter, less expensive junior-miss styles.

Make this your resolution for 1949—"I'm going to be the more attractive woman I want to be. I'm going to start the Success Course right now!"

The New DuBarry Success Course

ANN DELAFIELD, Directing

RICHARD HUDNUT SALON, New York, N. Y.

w You Can Start Success Course AT ONCE!

w plan you can enroll for the Suc- Curse in ten minutes, right now, to- nply fill out and mail the special on at right. You'll be thrilled with omes hurrying back to you, all g prepaid—your first lessons, your l Success-O-Scope, making possi- analysis of your individual needs, ortable DuBarry Beauty Tray, a generous supply of DuBarry Beauty and Make-up Preparations and, in addition, four Richard Hudnut Hair Preparations. Don't miss this chance to get started on your beauty program without delay.

If you want more information before enrolling, check only the bottom line in coupon, or send post card or letter for booklet telling all about the New DuBarry Success Course.

RICHARD HUDNUT SALON
Dept. SP-2, 693 Fifth Ave., New York 22, N. Y.

Please enroll me in the New DuBarry Success Course on the plan which I have marked X.

☐ I enclose $28.50 as payment in full.

☐ I enclose $7.50 and will send $7.50 each month for three additional months.

(Send all payments by check or money order payable to Richard Hudnut Salon. Do not send currency.)

Miss
Mrs. _____

Street _____

City _____ Zone _____ State _____

(If under 21, consult parent or guardian and have their consent before taking this Course.)

Accepted for advertising in publications of the American Medical Association

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

Please let us have the following important information so that we may send you DuBarry Beauty and Make-up Preparations for your type.

Color of Hair _____ Eyes _____ Lashes _____
Skin: Dry ☐ Oily ☐
Height _____ Weight _____
Skin Color: Cream ☐ Fair ☐ Med. ☐ Dark ☐

If you want more information before enrolling, fill in only name and address and mark an x here ☐

(Continued from Page 100)

ting up in bed and arguing about the possibility of ionizing lithium hydride!

Then, after some days, the pathologist's report came in and we learned that the discharged matter showed no infection—the pus was sterile. The cultures showed no growth at all. Of course sterile abscesses are not unknown by any means; the tumor might have been cut off from its blood supply and the resulting necrotic tissue would be sterile. Even so, the sterility of the abscess seemed to be a tremendous confirmation of the Gerson theory that the tumor was, at least in part, indeed dead, and was emptying itself out as liquid. Finally came the day when Mount announced that Johnny's eyes were normal—with no papilledema at all—and that he considered the tumor to have been "arrested."

My sister was with Johnny and me when he got this news. I never knew till this moment just how anguishing was the strain that he strove so hard to conceal. He jumped bolt upright; then slowly, very slowly and proudly, he relaxed downward to the pillow, while across his face spread the most beatifically happy expression, and his eyes—normal eyes now—filled just to the brim with tears, but did not spill over, as he smiled with relief, pride, and the exhaustion that comes with release from intolerable strain.

In a second he had recovered, and was telephoning his mother.

But there were still plenty of confusions and disappointments too. One doctor would contradict another and then himself—because, in truth, the circumstances were so unprecedented. They were terrifically impressed at what had happened, but they could not explain it or vouch for the future. They soberly could not believe that the Gerson regime alone had produced this effect. But when we asked, "Would you yourself take the responsibility for taking Johnny off that diet, now?" they all said "No."

If there were but one royal road to success it would have been under government control long ago.

—MAURICE SWITZER: Meditations of Marcus O'Ralius (Kelly-Springfield).

We found out more and more how sickness makes a world of its own. Johnny came to feel that people not in hospital were representatives practically of a different race, from another planet. But how he envied the healthy outlanders! What Frances did was to give him an efficient balance between the one world and the other. She taught him to adjust himself to the life of the hospital while still maintaining active touch with what went on outside. It was I who was the epitome of the external world breaking in. Sometimes I was too exuberant; the contrast was too acute, and though Johnny loved my visit every evening and looked forward to it, the letdown after I left was sometimes sharp.

He still felt very strongly that he was actively participating in Inside U.S.A. Late in December the Book-of-the-Month Club accepted it, though I still had a good deal of writing to do. Johnny sighed. "Well, that solves the financial problem."

A little later something gave him great happiness. He had sent a question in to "Information Please," and it was used on the program one night when I was a guest. I had asked him to listen in, but he had no idea that his question was going to be used, and he went wild with excitement when he heard his name on the air. The question asked us to tell what the symbols K 2, K_2, and K.2 signified. Johnny stumped us handsomely, and immediately made plans for use of the Encyclopaedia Britannica he had won.

He was gay and confident. He murmured to a visitor, "The doctors are fighting among themselves now as to who cured me."

Mount let him come home for thirty-six hours over Christmas, penicillin drip and all, and we had a small party and a happy time. But then he had to return to the hospital because it took time for the abscess cavity to fill. This was Christmas night.

He was not discharged till January twelfth. He wanted urgently to go home, but we decided to fill a small additional inter Mrs. Seeley's; of course we were still ing the diet adhesively. Frances drov up to the hospital for a series of last ings, and finally he was in his own fortable small room at home again. H been away since August, and this was ary sixth. Mount came up a few day and, venturing beyond anything he ha said before, expressed the opinion th tumor was "quiescent." The miracl happened. We were wild with hope.

To this day, what caused Johnny's tacular improvement during the win unknown. Anybody may have his gues plain fact is that we simply do not The recovery may have been due t X rays, the effect of which is often de and cumulative; to the mustard, whic do unpredictable things to a body; t fact of his youth and the growth of he cells despite the tumor; to mysteries human spirit; to the Gerson diet; or to binations and permutations among all Similarly, we do not know—nobody kn what caused the severe deterioration came next. All we know is that for months Johnny was miraculously bette then very suddenly and sorely worse

February, 1947, started well. Three n before, Johnny had scarcely been a walk. Now, though it would be an exa tion to say that he romped all over the he was capable of walking half a mile He veered a little right, his left foo wobbly, and he nee modicum of guidance the improvement w contestable. Even h hand could not have very bad at this tim cause one evening, insistence, I watche give himself a hypod injection of liver on the side above the hip, an awkward to reach. I could not possibly have on anybody, let alone myself, what Jo did so skillfully.

Frances had rehearsed this with him eral times, though she had a horror of the actual injection herself. In fact, one reasons he did it alone was to spare her. called it "bayonet practice."

Steadily, too, she helped him in ph activity. She taught him to be delib about almost every physical movemer that he picked his stance carefully and exactly what he was going to do next b doing it. She showed him how his right could unobtrusively assist the left. In a two mentors were of assistance—Bu with his lesson Be Aware, and, of a similar personalities, Mr. LaGuardia a slogan Patience and Fortitude.

Years before, at Lincoln, Johnny ha and liked a girl named Mary. Often Fr talked to him about falling in love and m ing someday; once he smiled in reply, well, just throw a chemist across my p Mary came back to his mind. Johnny very casual about it. "Oh, by the way he began with Frances, and then re Mary to her attention. Frances calle mother, and then Johnny talked to herself on the telephone, and they arra to meet. Johnny felt very proud and g up.

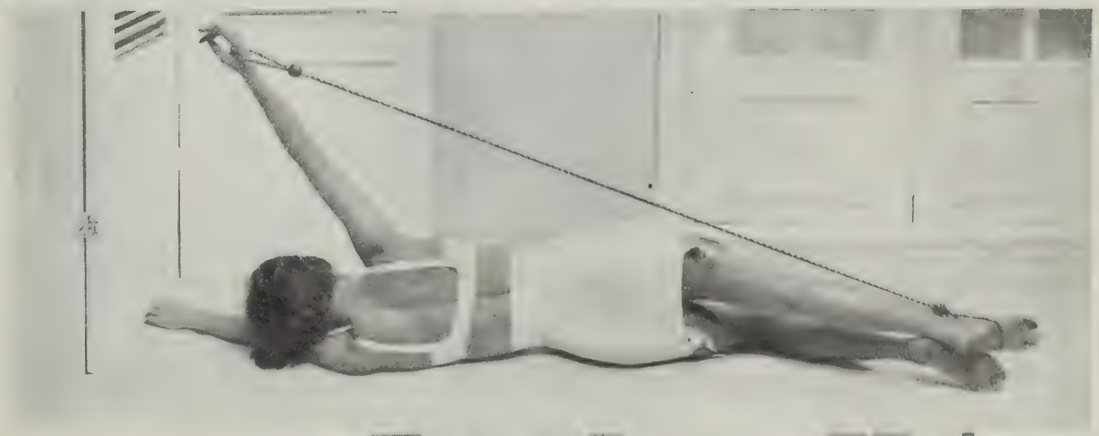
Everything seemed better day by But by the end of February it seemed after six weeks of being contained, the b was ever so slightly beginning to bulge again.

On February eighteenth, Gerson he demonstration. This was against our wi But inasmuch as we thought he had largely instrumental in saving Johnny's we could not refuse permission. Gerson solutely sure that Johnny was saved very proud, invited some prominent York officials and physicians to see him six or seven other patients. He had t color photographs of Johnny's head du the preceding autumn; we saw to it

(Continued on Page 104)

Darling, you don't need pull to be an important figure

You'll feel as lovely as you look in Warner's 3-Way-Sizes . . .



Mind your P's and "cues" when you buy a girdle.

- Avoid those P's of old-fashioned, standard sizes . . . pulling, pinching and poking. Your cue to comfort is a Warner's 3-Way-Sized girdle that is yours alone.
- From your exact size, you can pick your own length, hip size, and just the control you want. You can pick the price to please your purse, too. Warner's girdles begin at $3.50.
- You'll find a lavish array of over 300 styles and sizes to select from.
- Give your new Spring wardrobe a lovelier outlook on you by beginning with a Warner's.

In your size..... your correct length

You can't be bewitching if you're always hitching at a too long girdle that keeps riding up. Or fussing at a too short girdle that pulls runs in your stockings. Warner's come in four lengths; short, medium, long and extra long. The Sta-Up-Top Le Gant shown here features Warner's patented waist minimizer that won't roll over.

Among Warner's 300 styles is the Sta-Up-Top Le Gant #640, pink, white, $16.50. ABC Bra #20-44, pink, white, $3.50.

"Lithe Line" exerciser by Helena Rubinstein

.... your correct hip size

You'll never feel lovely in a girdle that's too wide at the hips and gives you permanent waves. Or one that's too small and binds uncomfortably at your thighs. You'll find a Warner's that's yours alone. They're hip-sized for straight, average and full hips.

your choice of control

You'll have perfect sylph control in a Warner's whether you choose the gentle hug of light, mesh elastics or the stronger control of tightly woven elastics. Warner's girdles love to be matched up with beautiful Warner's bras, too. They're 3-Way-Sized in cup, band and uplift. At finer stores.

Girdles · Corselettes
Pantie Girdles · Bras

WARNER'S*

WORLD FAMOUS FOR LE GANT* • WARNERETTE* • STA-UP-TOP* • ABC* ALPHABET* • A'LURE* "FREE-LIFT"* • REDFERN* *Reg. U.S. Pat.Off., The Warner Brothers Co., New York 16, Chicago 6, San Francisco 8

Count your COMFORTS

These Greyhound features add up to the smoothest and most relaxed ride on American highways

One of the prime reasons why Greyhound offers the most restful ride on the world's highways is the skillfully designed, body-contoured easy chair, now standard equipment on thousands of SuperCoaches. This, plus a hundred other features of skilled engineering, make an hour's trip or a cross-continental tour an adventure in relaxation. ● But SuperCoach comfort doesn't mean super prices! Greyhound travel to all 48 states, Canada, Mexico, costs far less per mile than any other type of transportation—a fraction as much as driving your own car.

1 Roomy inside rack for packages, wraps, light luggage needed on trip.

2 Through thousands of tiny perforations flows draftless ventilation—pleasantly warm on cold days. Hundreds of coaches fully air conditioned.

3 Solex safety-glass windows, on all the newer buses, allow perfect observation, while filtering out harsh sun rays.

4 Clean white covers, changed frequently, are placed over the cushioned headrests.

5 Comfortable arm rests are provided—on the aisle, and next the windows.

6 Press this little lever and the seat back reclines to any desired position.

7 Deep cushions of foam rubber, covered with soft fabric, are contoured to your body for easy riding.

8 The convenient foot rest is quickly adjustable for big folks, little folks.

9 Weather-tight locked compartments, reached from outside, are provided for all your heavier luggage.

10 In the SuperCoach aluminum alloys are used for strength and lightness—long wheel base and perfected springing, for a smooth, restful ride.

GREYHOUND

(Continued from Page 102)

Johnny would not have opportunity to see these, which might well have frightened him. The assembled doctors looked over his chart and all his records back to the original operation, and then examined his skull which was beautifully healed, watched him walk, tested his grip, and asked a few questions. All went smoothly and swiftly. Yet I am convinced that this event—perhaps the half-hour wait with the other Gerson patients—upset Johnny gravely. He seemed indifferent, however. Frances and I walked him home, and he stopped at my hotel for tea.

The next day, February nineteenth, at breakfast, he had a sharp attack of trembling, together with amnesia. He talked to Frances more or less like this:

"Is it eight o'clock in the morning or the evening? . . . Where am I? . . . What happened yesterday? . . . I can't remember. . . . Oh, yes, of course . . . . It's the queerest thing—I can't remember!"

The most remarkable thing about this was that Johnny had completely forgotten the exhibition with Gerson the day before. Of course he was subconsciously blotting out from himself and obliterating what must have been a frightening experience. Absolutely all memory of the preceding day had vanished. But none of our doctors seemed much troubled by this amnesia, terrifying as it was to us. I talked to Putnam on the telephone and he said that it might well occur, as the result of temporary blood displacement, even if the tumor were actually dead. Mount came and made a thorough examination on February twenty-second. The head still looked wonderfully better, though a small odd blister had developed, and, despite the amnesia, Mount was as optimistic as I ever saw him.

But the next day, though he loved Mount and had been with him for a full hour, Johnny could not remember his visit until we jogged his memory. A day or two later, feeling his head (he never looked at it), he himself could see that the bulge, though closed—we never had any leakage trouble again—was ever so slightly bigger. He turned to me with a grim voice. "Father, if it comes out again, will it be for the last time?"

Several times subsequently Johnny had these amnesia attacks. Usually the attacks came if Johnny thought that a doctor was worried about him. He sought to believe in each of his doctors implicitly—more than we did, perhaps. He had to, to survive.

During the next days he talked incessantly of schoolwork and the Harvard entrance examinations. He wanted to know why, if he had to stay on the diet, he could not go back to Deerfield, live on the diet in the infirmary there, and resume his classes. The diet was certainly a major worry and preoccupation. Yet we could not dare to stop it. No doctor, even the most orthodox, would let us even consider taking him off the diet now. We had comforted Johnny by saying that he could quit the diet in June, and day after day he would count the remaining weeks. Gerson, of course, thought he might have to remain on the diet at least for a year and maybe for several years.

Medically, the situation became more puzzling all the time. During March, Johnny was in good shape, though the bulge continued to grow very slowly and he had interm periods of seeming dazed and dopey ar hand and foot became somewhat wors the lag in the mouth deepened. Also h apt to drop things if he didn't watch h hand. But the eyes were better. Ther no recurrence of papilledema. How, we dered, could he get better in one directio worse in another, at one and the same Straight through March and April, d everything, Johnny worked on. He w terly obsessed about getting into Harv the fall. But to achieve this he had to plete making up his work at Deerfiel graduate as well as pass the college-ent exams, a double task that seemed impo Then on March eighteenth we learne he had caught up with his history cou Deerfield—though he hadn't been the eleven months—and on April seventh h a letter from Mr. Boyden that gave hi ant happiness: He had passed his Engli amination satisfactorily. I took him science room in the Public Library, wh did some adv work, and he ceeded to wri no fewer than four chemistr periments. Fr found out abo New York Tu School, and w rolled him Johnny's mark six weeks were English, 95 i tory, 95 in trig in a boy with brain!

We made application for enter Harvard in his own han ing, now wretc uneven, he wro following para to answer the tion, "What ar reasons for goi college and wh you wish partic to come to Harv

I wish to go lege primarily t plete a sound g education and t pare myself f years to come. wish to prepar self for research in physical che I have chosen Harvard to atain [sic] the because I have been advised that it is th tution where I may most fruitfully attai aims.

On April twelfth he took the college exams. It had been arranged, throu courtesy of Dean Gummere of Harvar he split these into two sessions, taki Aptitude tests at this time and the A ment tests later. Johnny said he pr to do both together, and who were we no to him? He announced, "I never fe ter in my life." But it was a grueling d drove him down to a school near Gr Park early in the morning, and he wait almost an hour, standing mostl huge milling crowd of husky young many of them G. I.'s who had seen c abroad—and then squeeze his wa elevators packed and jammed, and ru confusing corridors. Johnny looked p frail. His gait was lopsided, and his b made his pallor even more striking t would have been otherwise. France close by. The exams lasted six and hours. We didn't get home till dinn and Johnny flung himself on the cou claiming, "Boy, am I tired!" Then he snapped to the phone to compare not other boys who had taken the same

There were other activities too. T he enrolled at the Tutoring School him to The Best Years of Our Lives as of celebration. My sister took him t

(Continued on Page 106)

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Chez Alison

By Marjorie Lederer Lee

The walls are pink with roses—
A special kind of bloom
That holds the breath of summer-time
In Alison's room;

And the windows looking outward
Where the chips and squirrels run
Are framed in clouds of organdy
Chez Alison.

There's an armchair striped like candy,
And a tiny white bed
With a rabbit-bordered pillow
For a small, small head. . . .

Oh, it's absolutely certain,
And it's positively clear—
Why, you'd know it quick as anything:
A little girl lives here.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

PROVE CAMEL MILDNESS IN YOUR "T-ZONE"!

MAKE THE CAMEL 30-DAY MILDNESS TEST in your "T-Zone." Smoke Camels, and only Camels, for 30 days. Let YOUR OWN TASTE be the judge of the rich, full-bodied flavor you get from Camels. Let YOUR OWN THROAT report to you on just how mild Camels are!

IN A RECENT TEST, hundreds of men and women, from coast to coast, smoked Camels, and only Camels, for 30 days—an average of 1 to 2 packs a day. Each week, their throats were examined by noted throat specialists. After a total of 2470 thorough examinations, these doctors reported

NO THROAT IRRITATION due to smoking CAMELS!

Money-Back Guarantee!

Try Camels and test them as you smoke them. If, at any time, you are not convinced that Camels are the mildest cigarette you ever smoked, return the package with the unused Camels and we will refund its full purchase price, plus postage.

(Signed) R. J. REYNOLDS TOBACCO COMPANY
WINSTON-SALEM, NORTH CAROLINA

According to a Nationwide survey:

MORE DOCTORS SMOKE CAMELS THAN ANY OTHER CIGARETTE

Doctors smoke for pleasure, too! And when three leading independent research organizations asked 113,597 doctors what cigarette they smoked, the brand named most was Camel!

"Soaping" dulls hair— Halo glorifies it!

Yes, "soaping" your hair with even finest liquid or cream shampoos hides its natural lustre with dulling soap film

✓ Halo—not a soap, not a cream—contains no sticky oils, nothing to hide your hair's natural lustre with dulling film. Made with a new patented ingredient, Halo brings out glossy, shimmering highlights the very first time you use it! Its delightfully fragrant lather rinses away quickly, completely in any kind of water—needs no lemon or vinegar rinse. For hair that's naturally colorful, lustrously soft, easy to manage—use Halo Shampoo! At any drug or cosmetic counter.

✓ Not a soap, not a cream—cannot leave dulling film!

✓ Quickly, effectively removes dandruff from both hair and scalp!

✓ Gives fragrant, soft-water lather even in hardest water!

✓ Leaves hair lustrously soft, easy to manage—with colorful natural highlights!

Halo reveals the hidden beauty of your hair!

(Continued from Page 104)

adoon, and with Frances and me he saw matinees of Joan of Lorraine and Finian's Rainbow. He kept up his acute interest in politics and he still read the news of the day with great care. We shopped for a lot of clothes—he had grown at least three inches during all this time—and our friends dropped in and once or twice we played chess and of course he beat me.

He was very pleased and proud when, in the middle of March, I finally finished Inside U.S.A. Later I read him a fine puff that Bill Shirer wrote. Johnny winked at me cynically. "It's swell—sure you didn't write that yourself?" He was delighted, but skeptical, about my plans for Inside Washington, the sequel I was outlining. I had insisted that I was never again going to produce such a monster as Inside U.S.A., and that this successor would be much shorter. "Each chapter will end up two," he smiled. "I know you."

The continuing diet gave him moments of real desperation. Once he pleaded with us to invent or concoct somehow some sort of soft drink. We appealed to Mrs. Seeley, and she sent over a kind of sugarless raspberry juice out of which Frances made a kind of lemonade. He sipped it greedily.

Meantime our assault on what seemed to be the entire medical profession of New York City was continuing. There was no doubt—brutally, inexorably, that murderous bump was getting bigger, which meant that the tumor had started to grow again.

It seemed that another operation would be necessary very soon, or the skin around the bump would break down again, this time beyond repair.

Finally Mount decided to make an exploration, and I took Johnny up to Neurological for a two-day visit. He was annoyed as usual at this interruption to his studies. Mount and Miller slipped into Johnny's room and remained there two and a quarter hours, while other doctors and nurses constantly went in and out. I knew it could not be dangerous because I had not been asked to sign the usual waiver of responsibility, yet I paced the corridor for those two and a quarter hours with extreme uneasiness. Mount hoped that, as in December, he could go in and release a lot of fluid. Anyway, he was going to take a sample of what he found and the pathologist was waiting. The job was finished finally and then I knew it was very bad, because both Mount and Miller backed away from me in the corridor and would not talk. I went inside.

With an infinitely slow, hopeful, almost caressing gesture Johnny put his hand up to his head. "I wonder how the bump is," he murmured. A desperate charging hope shone in his eyes. Very slowly the hand went up. He felt his head tentatively, felt it again with full palm, and then, limply, helplessly, the hand fell down. This was the only time I ever saw his eyes actually spill over with tears. He lay there silent for a long moment. Then he sighed, with his eyes closed. "I dare say it will take a little time to deflate."

The bump was like a stone again, and Mount had scarcely been able to evacuate a drop.

THE next day Johnny telephoned us early.

I left the hospital at 4:35 that afternoon and went to work; I had been asked to review Ernie Pyle's last book for the Herald Tribune and was very late with it. I called Johnny at 7:30 to tell him, rather boastfully, I fear, that I had read the book and done a short review. Johnny: "Oh, father, how could you possibly read a book in that time? What if someone reviews Inside U.S.A. after reading it that way?"

He asked Mount the next morning, "Did you go deep enough so that you could make me twitch?" He tried to sound cheerful, but his voice was weak and quavering. Then asked why he had to continue on the die it were not doing what it was supposed to He added quickly, "But don't let anyb know that I'm impatient."

I TOOK him home after a brief talk w Mount. It was all hopeless now. W Johnny had now, the pathologist said, one of the worst of all forms of tumor, oblastoma multiforme; moreover, the sp men Mount got showed many mitotic figu that is, the production of malignant cells rapidly increasing. All neurologists are pe mists. I tried to argue with the diagnosis pointing out how generally well Johnny was. And indeed the doctors were astonis to the point of stupefaction that he had b able to take those college-entrance exa But Mount, so kind and decent, could o no hope at all when we asked him what t next. He said, "Let Johnny do exactly w he wants to do. Let him die happy."

April twenty-fifth was a tremendous d Penfield telephoned from Montreal to that he would be in New York and would l to see Johnny. The appointment was set midmorning.

Then—some modicum of hope again! P field, with his immense authority, was gre impressed at how comparatively well Joh still was, and seemed to think that all not yet lost. I showed him what he had w ten on the chart the year before; he repl "Well, the best of us be mistaken." He the impression that Jo ny might still be sa he urged giving up diet, trying the mus again, and above all, i ing a second operati He thought that the mor might conceiva have a frontier and m be removable at this sta Tumors in children a he said, unpredictable, a this one seemed to "weeping itself out" fluid and it might not "so frightfully big." T was the best moment for an operation, t since the ulcer had healed and the risk of fection was at a minimum. He urged Mount do a "whopping big job" and to risk eve thing by the most drastic possible operat procedure.

A young woman working for a degree of Doctor of Philosophy at Columbia married a professor in the middle of her second year.

"But, Edith," protested one of her friends, when she announced her engagement, "I thought you came here to get your Ph.D.?"

"So I did," replied Edith, "but I had no idea I would get him so soon."

—DAVID T. ARMSTRONG.

Steadfastly, all these months, we had h to the diet, but now there seemed no po in going on. Not only, despite the diet, w the tumor growing again; it was grow faster.

It would have been heartless to have c tinued to impose on Johnny, for no g end, a regime of such severity. He had b on the diet seven and a half months—yet tumor was bigger now than ever bef Nevertheless, we were grateful to this spl did human being, Max Gerson, for all he for Johnny—and what he did was a lot—a we always will be. There were long consu tions with Traeger and Gerson and finally told Johnny the great news one morning a he asked suspiciously, "What strings are tached?" Only, we replied, that there ou to be a few intervening days, for weaning, to speak, when he would still avoid salt a fat.

Frances and I had lunch out that day, a then we rushed to a butcher shop and bou a steak. We got home—and Johnny was there! He had slipped out of the apartme unnoticed by anyone and had walked himself to a near-by Translux to take in newsreel. This was the first time he ever this. Of course it was a symbol of relea That evening he ate the steak and more less anything he liked. He kept grippin huge piece of hard cheese in his good ha and nibbling at it hungrily.

We had a stiff fight about his going alone. Frances usually took him to the T toring School, luckily not far away, a sometimes I called for him. He resented l terly being accompanied, but we did began to inquire with great earnesthy a plate had not been inserted, must have meant that, finally, he had up hope that the bone would grow f itself. He said indignantly to one

(Continued on Page 108)

"If only they'd put in a plate, one of v types of plate made of tantalum, at d be able to swim and sail."

was cleared to go home on May fif-only two weeks after the operation.
the last time Johnny checked out of ogical. He ended the experience with risecrack. We marched out and I said spital knew us so well by this time ey sent the bill by mail. Johnny gibed:
nean by parcel post."

emained pretty well, but now it bencreasingly difficult for him to fix his shoelaces. He was too proud to admit d Marie, our housekeeper, helped him on his shoes one morning. Johnny I'm only giving way to your maternal
." Carl, our old elevator man, wept hen he saw how warped his face was w difficult it was for him to walk.
said to him, "I haven't had any to exercise, and so my foot is tired." effort to pretend that the tumor was cost him dearly; the price of his in-fight was great fatigue. The faraway s in his eyes more often now. But it possible for us not to support his opbecause any discouragement would en a crushing blow.

phone rang on May twenty-fifth and yden's cheerful, assured voice came
. "I've gone through Johnny's pad examina-
" he said.
know he did work in his m year and me surplus
. He has up to his everything one exami-
and we are going to give him a di-
This isn't a favor. It is Johnny's ome up next week, and he will gradun his class."

NATIONAL HEART WEEK FEBRUARY 14-21, 1949
OPEN YOUR HEART GIVE FIGHT HEART DISEASE
American Heart Association 1775 BROADWAY, NEW YORK 19

rove to Deerfield on May twenty-
, and Johnny graduated on June though he had not been to school for n months. The days passed in a procession, and I think probably it happiest week of his life.

out the slightest self-consciousness his place in his class. He sat between nds in the dining hall (the instrucd warned them) and Frances whishat they should inconspicuously cut t if necessary. The boys stared at a second as if he were a ghost—of is hair had not grown back fully af-last operation and he wore a white —and then accepted his appearance question.

evening after dinner an informal y takes place at Deerfield which is he distinguishing marks of this school:
y from freshman to senior meets with yden, and the roll of the entire school
.. The boys are heaped together on the sually there is a casualty or two—ungster hurt in a football game—for here are big leather chairs. Johnny imself into one of these and his name ed in the roll exactly as if he had never sent. Then he limped slowly and to the Senior Dorm, where he would en living this past year, and looked at hould have been his room yearningly.
ere moving back and forth in the or-ustle that precedes commencement.
had the attitude of one who is both cipant in and a spectator of a great t.

us decided that he should sleep in the ry—a building he knew only too well.
xt morning we came to pick him up t we thought was a reasonable hour.
had left the building before eight, nd was at that moment taking the kam in chemistry! He passed it B
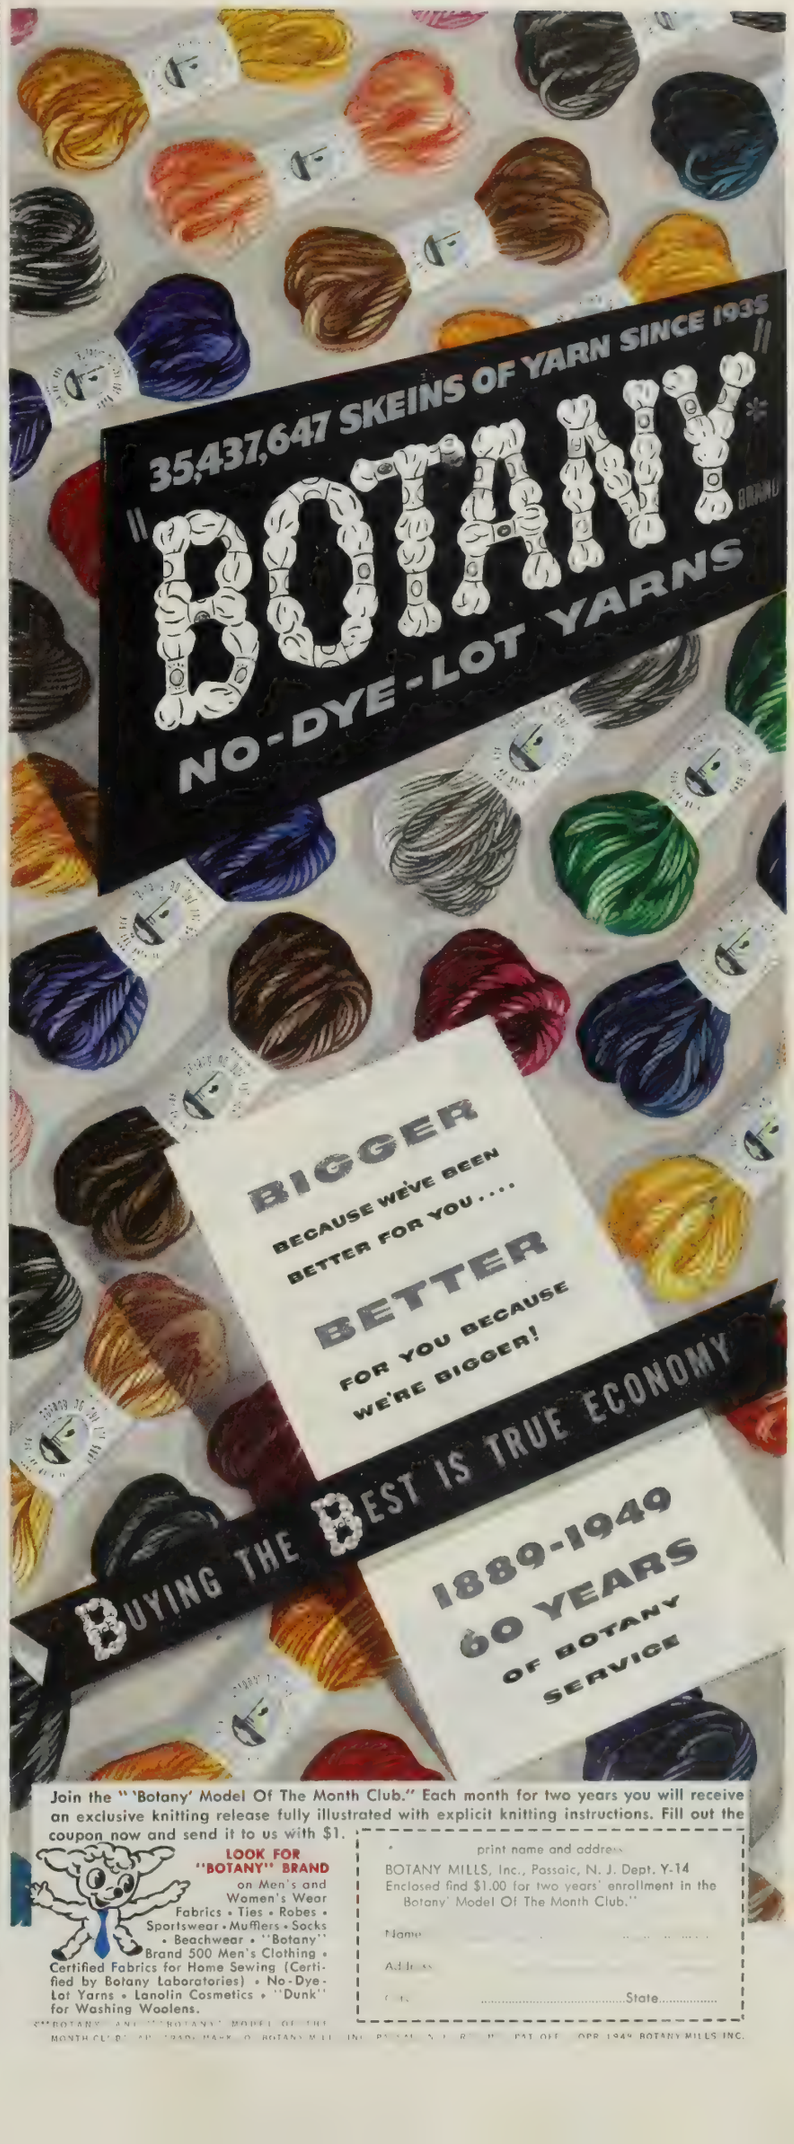
Minus—though he had never taken a regular chemistry course in his life.

Later that day I bumped into him accidentally on the bright sunlit grass as he dragged himself from behind a hedge in shadow. His left shoulder sagged; his arm hung almost useless; his mouth was twisted with effort; the left side of his lip sank down; his eyes were filmy; he was happy. "Oh, pardon me, sir," Johnny said. He had not recognized me, and thought that I was some master he did not know.



Everybody tried hard to keep him from being too active. But he said, "Walking around this way helps the wound heal." Frances told him to sit around in the sun—how they both loved the sun!—and get brown and he answered, "All you are interested in, mother, is my color!"

THE day before graduation was strenuous, with a lunch for the parents at noon and then a baseball game, which Johnny watched for about four innings. The dress-up banquet that night, to celebrate among other things Mr. Boyden's forty-fifth year as headmaster, lasted three hours; Johnny did not miss a minute of it. He tramped across the lawn afterward, with his classmate Henry Eisner holding his hand, for the off-the-record talk Mr. Boyden gives each graduating class. Then the class, standing under the trees in a night grown chilly, serenaded the Boydens on the front porch. Johnny, on the outskirts of the massed pack of boys, looked suddenly exhausted, and I slipped away from the adults to join him inconspicuously, standing just behind him. I was afraid he might fall. Then I heard his light, silvery tenor chime in with the other voices. The song floated across the lawn and echoed back. We hiked to the infirmary and Johnny ran into a classmate who had won an award. "Congratulations!" Johnny snapped briskly.

The next morning the boys assembled early for the quarter-mile walk to the white-frame Deerfield church, arranging themselves four abreast in order of their height. I did not think Johnny could manage such a march. He shook us off and disappeared. The procedure is that the boys, reaching the church, line up behind the pews, and then walk one by one down the center aisle, as each name is called. Mr. Flynt, the president of the board of trustees, then shakes hands with each boy, giving him his diploma in the left hand. We explained that Johnny might not be able to grasp the smooth roll of diploma with his left fingers, and asked Mr. Flynt to try to slip it into the right hand instead. One by one the names were called out, and each boy marched forward alone. The call was alphabetical, and by the time the G's were reached we were limp with suspense, since we did not know for sure that Johnny had even got into the church. As each boy passed down the aisle, there was applause, perfunctory for some, pronounced for others. Gaines, Gillespie, Goodwin, Griffin, Gunther. Slowly, Johnny stepped out of the mass of his fellows and trod by us, carefully keeping in the exact center of the long aisle, looking neither to the left nor the right, but straight ahead, fixedly, with the white bandage flashing in the light through the high windows, his chin up, carefully, not faltering, steady, but slowly, so very slowly. The applause began and then rose as every person in that old church became whipped up, tight and tense, to see if he would make it. The applause became a thunder when Johnny finally reached the pulpit. Mr. Flynt tried to put the diploma in his right hand, as planned. Firmly Johnny took it from right hand to left, as was proper, and while the whole audience rocked now with release from tension, and was still applauding, he passed around to the side and, not seeing us, reached his place among his friends.

That evening we talked of Harvard. Some of the boys were getting their admission no-

(Continued on Page 111)

Mrs. Eugenia Roberts of Atlanta had a dry skin problem. "Now," says this lovely young mother, "I use Noxzema as my all-purpose cream, my night cream and powder base. It certainly helps keep my complexion looking soft and smooth."

"I apply Noxzema before putting on make-up and use it before retiring after a day outdoors," states this charming Baltimore sports enthusiast, Jean Patchett of Preston. "I also use Noxzema to help protect my hands against chapping."

Which of these 6 American Women is the MOST LIKE YOU?

If you have some little thing wrong with your skin—and who doesn't—be sure to read these exclusive interviews.

"About ten years ago I had an annoying case of externally-caused blemishes," says Mrs. Eileen M. Meyer, Detroit housewife and vocalist. "Noxzema helped heal them so quickly I've used it ever since. It's a real all-purpose skin cream!"

See how their Beauty Problems compare to your own!

• For the past few months interviewers have been calling on women throughout the country, asking about their beauty problems. They called on hundreds. Here are the views of six typical women. These six, like thousands of others, are using a new idea in beauty—Medicated Skin Care.

New Beauty Routine

It's a simple home treatment developed by a doctor. It has been clinically tested. In fact, 181 women—of all ages—picked at random from all walks of life—took part in this skin improvement test under the supervision of 3 noted doctors—skin specialists. On examination each woman showed some little thing wrong with her skin.

Based on Scientific Tests

Each woman followed faithfully Noxzema's new 4-Step Medicated Beauty Routine developed by a skin specialist. At 7-day intervals, their skin was examined through a magnifying lens by these doctors. Here are the astonishing and gratifying results:

Of all these women, 4 out of 5 showed softer, smoother, lovelier-looking skin in two weeks! Yes, 4 out of 5 were thrilled to see the marked improvement that Noxzema helped bring to their skin!

For Externally-Caused Skin Troubles

So if you want an aid to a softer, smoother-looking skin, if you suffer the embarrassment of externally-caused blemishes, rough, dry skin or other similar skin troubles—try medicated Noxzema.

4-Step Beauty Routine!

1. Morning—bathe face with warm water, apply Noxzema with a wet cloth and "cream-wash" your face.
2. Apply Noxzema as a powder base.
3. Before retiring, repeat morning cleansing.
4. Massage Noxzema lightly into your face. Pat on extra Noxzema over blemishes, if you have any.

Try it yourself. Follow Noxzema's NEW 4-Step Beauty Routine faithfully morning and night. See if you aren't amazed at the astonishing way it can help your skin. Available at all drug and cosmetic counters. 40¢, 60¢ and $1.00 plus tax —Trial Size, also now on sale.

"My hands were dreadfully chapped. A friend recommended Noxzema and to-day I use it for everything"—says Shirley O'Hara of Los Angeles. "It's my complexion and hand cream—all in one."

Cute blonde Mrs. Sonia Dorsey of Cambridge, Mass., uses Noxzema as her all purpose cream. She says, "I have unusually dry skin. I've found Noxzema helps keep my skin soft and lovely."

"I put a wonderful-feeling 'mask' of Noxzema on my face before retiring. It's done so much for my skin, I've been recommending it to my friends," says glamorous Ian Barker of Cleveland.

(Continued from Page 109)

ces, and Johnny, now that he had actually en graduated, wondered when his would me. He was impatient.

Everything that Johnny suffered was in a nse repaid by the few heroic moments of at walk down the center aisle of that urch. This was his triumph and indomi- ble summation. Nobody who saw it will er forget it.

Back in New York we pressed on cease- sly with medical affairs. The bump, that iminal marauder, was growing again, not th so much pace as before, but it was rder and more tense. We had long ago ased to think of expense; I was very heav- in debt, but my book would make it up, I ped. We gathered ourselves for a final as- ult. Mrs. Albert D. Lasker gave me some ecial leads, particularly in regard to the e of hormones. Traeger went to a conven- n at Atlantic City, and there talked with ery brain man he could find. A chase be- n like that of the year before, with calls to ecialists in semi-known procedures in Los ngeles, Chicago, San Francisco and the iversity of Michigan. Then I went out to ontefiore for a long conversation with vidoff, a celebrated neurosurgeon to whom ried to outline the entire case. I asked him he had ever known a glioblastoma multi- me to be cured. He hesitantly adduced re- sions, but not cures. How long, I wanted know, had the longest case in his experience ted. Four years, he replied. Then he talked sely about the mysteries of the body, "mir- es" such as those at Lourdes, and the in- utable quality of some diseases, and sug- ted that, since diagnosis was so important, should send Johnny's les to two supreme hologists, one in Illi- s, one in Connecticut, a final verdict. I asked to what he attributed improvement Johnny indubitably shown ing the spring. He was convinced that the t could have had nothing whatever to do h it, and that almost certainly—this was surprise—the amelioration had been the sequence of last year's X rays. Yet I conferred with the radiologist at Neu- gical when Johnny was better and the iologist had disclaimed any credit for improvement. Now, Davidoff said, there e million-volt machines that, so to ak, skipped the scalp. He didn't give us hope, but he suggested that we have y.

I make mistakes, of course, but I do not respond to encores. —ELBERT HUBBARD.

People may ask if it would not have been ter if we had had fewer doctors and less tment. Perhaps we tried to do too much. Johnny loved life desperately and we ed him desperately and it was our duty to absolutely everything and keep him alive ng as possible. Might he have had a bet- chance to live with less attention? No. t tumor, untended and unchecked, would ply have eaten away all his brain.

JOHNNY was steadily becoming more aware ow sick he was. Did he know he was go- to die? I leave it to the evidence of his conversation. He was lethargic and etimes testy during these last declining ks. He demanded several times to know result of Mount's last laboratory report; had to equivocate, of course.

e decided finally to repeat each factor might have led to the improvement er in the year—X ray, mustard, diet, conceivably, another operation if he d stand it. We chose to begin with the tard, largely on Penfield's urging.

urchenal wanted to hospitalize Johnny time, and so on June twelfth he went to morial. He swam through this experience, h was short, quite easily. There were no ll fects. But so far as we know, no good ef- either.

e came home, and again Johnny was nctly better; he had two or three splen- hearty days. The doctors thought it d be safe for him to go to the country, Frances went up to Madison to get the e ready; I spent most of the last ten days with him alone. We knew he would not be able to manage any stairs, and so Frances converted a downstairs room to his use, painting it a bright robin's-egg blue, hanging cheery curtains and putting in order his books and chemicals. I tried, at her suggestion, to work out some plausible arrangement with Dean Gummere whereby we could tell Johnny he had been admitted to Harvard even if he could not go. This good and decent man co-operated beautifully but, as it worked out, too late.

Johnny was busy meantime in several fields. Mrs. Luce sent him du Noüy's book, Human Destiny, and he read it with close interest. Then she gave him another book, the name of which I have forgotten, an outright tract. Johnny said:

"It says just what du Noüy says, but not so well. You distrust it because it's propagandistic."

PUTNAM returned to town, and he came to see Johnny, with Traeger in consultation, on Monday, June twenty-third. Finally, like Davidoff, Putnam strongly urged more X-ray treatments as soon as Johnny was strong enough to take them. "But why," I protested, "didn't you insist on X rays before?" Because, he explained, the broken-down skin of the scalp, which could never have withstood X rays, had been removed by Mount's operation; now, because Mount had pulled the flap together, there was tougher, healthy skin to deal with. Traeger listened closely and said little. A fleeting idea crossed my mind: that the sturdiness of this new scalp might be forcing the tumor inward, which would account for the recent accentuation of the paralysis. Still, despite everything, Johnny's condition was pretty good. Putnam's last word was "Let's keep on struggling."

Came an awful morning, on June twenty-seventh, when Johnny turned to me across the breakfast table and spoke as if very casually:

"Where's mother keeping herself these days?"

Then he felt the bump. He wasn't bandaged now. His hand played on it, shocked. "What on earth is that?" I stared at him. Then:

"How long has this been going on? . . . What year was I at Deerfield? . . . What day is this? . . . What are these pills for? . . . Where was I last week?"

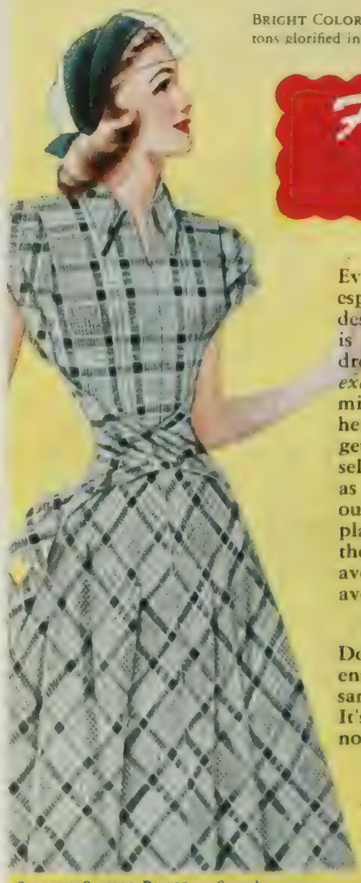
Then he had a short, sharp attack of shivers.

He hated to be helped. That evening at dinner, when his memory was quite right again, he tried out a system whereby he would stick his fork up the sleeve of his jacket, pinning it that way with the elbow bent, so that with his whole arm he could hold the tines straight. "I will learn to manage this!" he ground out between his teeth.

We were very relaxed later. But he was chilly. For some time now it had been obvious that the temperature-regulating mechanism in his brain was deranged slightly. He talked vividly about Harvard, and then about getting a plate for his skull. "By that time my hair will have grown back too."

He was very drowsy the next day. His grip on life was lessening, though I did not yet think in terms of emergency. On the twenty-eighth he slept most of the afternoon, but he had been taking naps during most of the course of his illness, and I was not alarmed.

I called Frances in Madison and told her I thought she ought to come in, though there seemed no real reason for her to make a troublesome trip inasmuch as I would be driving him out in a day or two. This was a Saturday night and we planned to go to Madison on Tuesday. Frances said she would wait to hear from me Sunday at noon. I felt a persistent apprehension now, very deep and pervasive, though there seemed to be no valid reason for it. Johnny was much better on Sunday, but even so I called Frances again and insisted that she return, and she arrived that evening.



Make Spare-time Money Quick! THIS EASY WAY

—AND GET YOUR OWN DRESSES WITHOUT COST as an extra bonus

Just think what you could do with an extra $18, $20, or $25 a week! And think of getting your own lovely Spring dresses without a penny of cost! That's the wonderful chance we offer you, just for taking orders for Fashion Frocks in your spare hours. When friends see these flattering styles of finest fabrics and workmanship, they'll rub their eyes at the astonishing low prices. Imagine — some are as low as $3.98! And, they can't be bought in stores anywhere! Women must come to you for these gorgeous dresses at bargain prices. Each dress carries the famous Good Housekeeping Seal and is sold on a Money Back Guarantee. Your friends will flock to order these Fashion Frocks from you. You're paid in cash, right then and there, for every order! Besides that, you're given an additional bonus of smart Spring dresses for your own personal wardrobe!

BRIGHT COLOR PANELS—Sunshine cot tons glorified in charming princess-style.

Free PORTFOLIO OF LATEST SPRING DRESSES as low as $3.98

NO PREVIOUS EXPERIENCE REQUIRED

Every woman knows about Fashion Frocks, and especially the sensational new styles personally designed by Constance Bennett. Miss Bennett is famous as "one of the world's ten best-dressed women." She lends her smart style sense exclusively to designing Fashion Frocks. The minute women hear that Constance Bennett herself designed these charming originals you get orders right and left. You surely don't need selling experience when you make sales as easy as that! We show you how to make sales without canvassing, too! Our special cooperation plan helps you to exceptional earnings like these: Marie Patton, Ill., took in $28.84 an average week; Mrs. Claude Burnett, Ala., averaged $27.10 weekly.

EVERY DAY'S DELAY COSTS YOU MONEY

Don't put it off — don't wait. Your Style Presentation Portfolio contains handsome rich samples of America's most beautiful fabrics. It's free — costs you nothing. Mail the coupon now to reserve this Free Portfolio.

Fashion Frocks INC.

Desk B2056, Cincinnati 25, Ohio

SPRING SWING PLAID — Superb rayon sharkskin swathed with sashes

Constance Bennett

. . . fascinating star of stage, screen, and radio. Her glamour and good taste rate her "one of the world's ten best-dressed women." She designs only for us — and only Fashion Frock representatives can make money by distributing them!

PASTE THIS COUPON ON POSTCARD—mail now!

FASHION FROCKS, INC.
Desk B2056, Cincinnati 25, Ohio

YES — I am interested in your opportunity to make money in spare time and get my own dresses without a penny of cost. Send me everything I need to start right away, without obligation.

Name _____

Address _____

City _____ Zone _____ State _____

Age _____ Dress Size _____

WHEN A SLIP RECORDS A SOCIAL ERROR . . . SWITCH TO MARY BARRON

This advertisement is based on the actual embarrassing episode of Miss Paula Reinle of West New Brighton, New York, to whom we have sent a check for $50.

What a show! Broken straps and a fallen slip! Comedy for onlookers! Embarrassing near-tragedy for her! Foolish for her to risk a slip with a speculator's ticket for a label. A Mary Barron slip never tugs and snaps straps —never rides up—nor twists maddeningly around the hips. Dressmaker created, "biastrait" design assures perfect behavior and full freedom in action or repose.

*Clairanese

CLAIRANESE* RAYON TAFFETA SLIP. Launders like a handkerchief and will not split or crack. Ruffle designed for easy shortening by snipping at either tuck. Colors: black, navy, brown, verity blue, kelly green, frost pink, white, red. Sizes 32 to 44. Buy your Mary Barron in the same size as your brassiere. $3.50

*Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

Mary Barron Slips are sold at leading stores in U. S. A. and Canada.

If not available at [illegible] write to Mary Barron

WIN $50.00 for your most embarrassing slip moment. If we use it in our advertising. Send to Mary Barron, c/o The Davidson Bros. Corp., 180 Madison Avenue, New York 16, N. Y. (Expires June 30, 1949)

In actual fact this Sunday was one of the best days he had had since he first became ill. He was exhilarated and very close to me. Johnny talked about many things. We discussed Sinclair Lewis and I told him about the ups and downs in the life of an artist, of the deep, perplexing downdrafts a writer may have. He read in A Subtreasury of American Humor, chuckling. Then he said, "Inasmuch as we'll go to the country Tuesday, I think I'll pack."

But steadily he kept returning to me, as if he wanted to be particularly intimate and affectionate. All his sweetness, his remarkable goodness seemed to be bursting out of him all this day. By midevening, not at all tired, he had finished a neat job of packing his books and things for the summer. Here is what he chose:

Atomic Physics, by the physics staff of the University of Pittsburgh
Einstein's Theory of Relativity, by the Liebers, and their book on the theory of groups
A Poet in the Making, by Laurence Housman, clipped by Frances out of the Atlantic Monthly
Some lab manuals, folders, a dictionary, the Deerfield Roster Outline of First Year College Chemistry and another chemistry text
Beginning German
Sprague's Plane Trigonometry
What is Life? by Schroedinger

Frances arrived; they had not seen each other for ten days. I had already put him to bed, but he was not asleep. "Hello, mother, I'm so glad you've come back!" he all but shouted. They talked and laughed about everything. He woke once during the night and again they talked and he whistled one lullaby.

The next morning, Monday, June thirtieth, she gave him a bath and washed his hair. He seemed too tired to get out of the tub. I called for him early and took him to Memorial for a blood test and a last clearance before his trip to the country. Nobody there saw anything amiss, though over the phone during the week end I had talked to Burchenal, and he was worried that Johnny's fatigue might be caused by mounting intercranial pressure. Most of the Memorial doctors are scientists rather than physicians as such. Nobody saw any marked change or reason for alarm; there was certainly no intimation of impending disaster. But Johnny could hardly drag his left foot out of the car. Normally he would have scorned a wheel chair, but today he welcomed it when I had the sudden idea to get one for the long trip down the corridor. In the car, returning home, Johnny seemed hazy, and asked whether or not Mary had come to lunch, and how his pet turtles were, one of which had died recently. But back home he was all right again, though tired.

Some things I do not understand. Traeger, it happened, was spending a brief holiday with Sinclair Lewis at Williamstown. He got on a plane suddenly and returned to New York, explaining to Lewis, as I heard it from Lewis himself later, "I have a feeling that Johnny Gunther will die this week end."

I had a luncheon engagement at the Alrae with Walter Duranty and I walked over there. We were ordering coffee when I was called to the phone.

Frances said, "Johnny has a headache. Here, talk to him. He wants to talk to you."

I asked, "Have you much of a headache, Johnny?"

"And how! I've just called Connie to send over some morphine."

Frances was very much alarmed, but she did not want to alarm me; she said there was no need to hurry over, but that I might call Traeger to see if the morphine was on the way. I told Walter that if he would excuse me I would run along without coffee, since Johnny wasn't so well. This was the first time since the period before the first operation, fourteen months before, that he had had severe pain. I called Traeger, and a drug for arresting pain, not morphine but a caffeine

Your loveliness is Doubly Safe

because

Veto gives you Double Protection!

So effective . . . Veto guards your loveliness night and day—safely protects your clothes and you. For Veto not only neutralizes perspiration odor, it checks perspiration, too! Yes, Veto gives you Double Protection! And Veto disappears instantly to protect you from the moment you apply it!

So gentle . . . Always creamy and smooth, Veto is lovely to use and keeps you lovely. And Veto is gentle, safe for normal skin, safe for clothes. Doubly Safe! Veto alone contains Duratex, Colgate's exclusive ingredient to make Veto safer. Let Veto give your loveliness double protection from bath to bath!

Veto lasts and lasts

derivative, was indeed en route. Then I hiked back to our apartment. Johnny had taken a caffeine pill and then vomited propulsively, something we had always been told to watch for and which had never occurred before. I gave him another pill and this one stayed down.

Still I was not really worried. We had gone through so many crises seemingly much worse. I had an appointment with my dentist at four, and had no thought of calling it off; I told Frances that I'd be back at five or so. Then I went in to say "So long" to Johnny and I did not like the way he looked. He was very pale and the skin was cold and moist. I called Traeger at once, but even then it did not occur to me that the end had come. In fact, Traeger had stepped out and when his nurse asked me if he should be located and should come over right away, I said that I didn't think this was necessary but that I hoped he would drop in late in the afternoon, perhaps at six when he finished work. Then I went back and looked at Johnny again. He said to Frances something she could not quite make out and then something about Mr. Haynes at Deerfield. I walked to the phone and called off my appointment with my dentist and the next second Traeger called back and I said, "Come right over—hurry!"

He stayed with Johnny a brief moment and took me aside, pale and with a stern expression. "He's dying. Shall we do anything or not?"

Apparently Johnny had had a cerebral hemorrhage. That tumor had eroded a blood vessel. Of all the doctors who sketched to us so many times how the end might come, none had ever suggested that it might be this.

The rest of the afternoon is full of harsh, conflicting lines and shadows. Traeger called Mount and another doctor and Mount arrived. Johnny recognized him, which was remarkable. But once more, and for the last time, I knew everything from a doctor's face. Mount went absolutely black and white, in blotches like a woodcut on soft paper.

He took Frances across the room and whispered, "I'm afraid Johnny's condition has become very much worse since Doctor Traeger telephoned."

The ambulance men came and we moved Johnny to a near-by hospital, since Mount did not think that he could survive more than a very brief trip.

Johnny went under oxygen, he was given every known medicament that could possibly help, and a youthful doctor explored, as always with difficulty, the veins in his leg for the glucose infusion and transfusion. We got to the hospital at a little after six. It was a very hot, clear, dark night. Johnny slept on his side, restfully. He never regained consciousness. He died absolutely without fear, and without pain, and without knowing that he was going to die.

At a few minutes to eleven we thought we ought to go into his room; we had stepped out on the balcony for a brief second, and presently, with infinite depth, very slowly and at spaced intervals, three great quivering gasps came out of him. He had regained color just before; he had some final essential spark of animation; he was still fighting. But now these shatteringly deep breaths, arising from something so deep down that his whole body shook and trembled, told us their irrevocable message.

Johnny died at 11:02 P.M.

AFTERMATH

All that is left of a life! There Johnny was, so pale, so slim and handsome, in the tweed suit with a spot on the lapel—he always had a spot on his lapel—and a bright striped necktie—with what valor he struggled to tie that necktie in the last hopeless weeks—here he lay placidly in the small chapel full of flowers, with his face sweet and composed and without a trace of struggle or pain, and we said good-by to him, Frances and I and a clustering group of friends.

People tell us that that brief noontime service was something they will never forget. Frances is Jewish, and at her suggestion we had a double ceremony; her friend Rabbi Newman and Mr. Neale of the Unitarian church joined to conduct the service, and in his magnificent voice Rabbi Newman read Johnny's own short "Unbeliever's Prayer." Most of our close friends had scattered for the summer; their telegrams and letters poured in, but they could not get back in time.

Of these hundreds of communications I will give only three, all from doctors.

Dear John: Word has just reached me of poor Johnny's death—"He hath outsoared the shadow of our night"—what a gallant soul, and what an unfulfilled promise! The fact that this was to be expected makes it no easier to bear, and I hope that you and Mrs. Gunther know that you have all my deepest sympathy. Now I suppose we shall never know whether lithium anhydride will ionize in liquid ammonia—nor what ecstasies and sorrows might have befallen Johnny had he lived.

I wish I might have been of more help.

Sincerely and cordially,
TRACY PUTNAM

Dear Mr. and Mrs. Gunther: What a heroic battle Johnny fought! A gallant spirit like his cannot be destroyed by a mechanical defect in the body which was given him.

Knowing him and thinking of his stubborn refusal to accept defeat makes me believe that that spirit will live on. For such there must be an immortality which we who tinker at the body may guess at but not understand.

You two, by your restless effort, kept him alive a year longer than should be expected. You could have done no more. It was worth while. Sincerely,
WILDER PENFIELD

Give me the benefit of your convictions, if you have any, but keep your doubts to yourself, for I have enough of my own.
—GOETHE.

LIKE EVERYONE WHO KNEW JOHNNY I HAD A SPECIAL PLACE IN MY HEART FOR HIM. HE WAS THE MOST GALLANT AND SOULFUL CHILD I EVER MET
DAVID M. LEVY, M.D.

Traeger came over a few evenings after the funeral. He had the preliminary autopsy report and he told us that slides from Johnny's brain would in time be in every important neurological institute in the world, because it was unique that a child with such an affliction should have remained so comparatively well right to the end. So perhaps Johnny will have aided science after all. Small comfort! It was his courage—the indomitable quality of his simple and forthright courage—that I hope people will remember him for—that and perhaps for his sweetness too. But what Traeger told us made us glad that he died when he did, so resolutely and peacefully, if he had to die at all, because he would probably have become blind in a short time, and perhaps he would have lost his ability to associate. Even Johnny's gallantry could not have stood up under that.

A WORD FROM FRANCES

Death always brings one suddenly face to face with life. Nothing, not even the birth of one's child, brings one so close to life as his death.

Johnny lay dying of a brain tumor for fifteen months. He was in his seventeenth year. I never kissed him good night without wondering whether I should see him alive in the morning. I greeted him each morning as though he were newly born to me, a re-gift of God. Each day he lived was a blessed day of grace.

The impending death of one's child raises many questions in one's mind and heart and soul. It raises all the infinite questions, each answer ending in another question. What is the meaning of life? What are the relations between things: life and death? the individual and the family? the family and society? marriage and divorce? the individual and the state? medicine and research? science and politics and religion? man, men and God?

All these questions came up in one way or another, and Johnny and I talked about them, in one way or another, as he was dying for fifteen months. He wasn't just dying, of

(Continued on Page 115)

Beauty is my business—

SAYS GEORGIA HAMILTON, STUNNING COVER GIRL

And SWEETHEART Beauty Care Makes My Skin Sparkle with a Fresh, Soft, Young Look— HELPS PREVENT CHAPPING, TOO!

• "A model with rough, chapped skin would sit home, waiting for the phone to ring! That's why I was so thrilled to discover gentle SweetHeart Soap that helps prevent chapping. No more hit-or-miss skin care for me! I started to use only SweetHeart for daily baths and complexion care. In seven short days my skin felt velvety soft—and looked far smoother and younger."

You can expect the same glorious results! Yes, this time next week you can have a lovelier complexion. Simply start SweetHeart Beauty Care today.

Each night . . . each morning, massage your face with SweetHeart's rich, creamy lather. Rinse with warm . . . then cold water. One week from today you'll see an amazing difference! Your skin looks softer . . . smoother . . . younger.

Beauty is my business, too!

• At 10 months, Nadine Koehne is already a model! And she has always been bathed with pure, mild, fragrant SweetHeart Soap.

For baby's bath—for your family's tubs and showers—you can now also get SweetHeart Soap in the new, large bath size.

THE REMARKABLE ACTION OF SWEETHEART'S EXTRA LATHER

• That soft, billowing SweetHeart lather has a Floating Lift. Countless bubbles bathe the outer pore openings . . . lift off, float away dirt and rough skin flakes. This heavenly gentle action is wonderfully kind to delicate skin.

SWEETHEART
The Soap that AGREES with Your Skin

THIS MONTH

CONTAGIOUS SICKNESS* will strike many thousands of U.S. homes

MOTHER, guard your home now against infection! NOW especially—when contagious diseases are going the rounds—diseases whose germs can live in house dust and be stirred up by sweeping.

Disinfect daily with potent, economical "Lysol" brand disinfectant as you clean. You need only 2½ tablespoons of "Lysol" to each gallon of cleaning water to disinfect walls, floors, kitchen, bathroom . . . your whole house. If someone is already sick at your house, don't let germs spread! Keep the sickroom "hospital clean"... with "Lysol." Have all basic sickroom needs on hand. Check these with your druggist today!

*Statistics show widespread increase in contagious diseases at this season . . . diseases whose germs are dust-borne . . . with tests showing dust a great reservoir of infection.

America's Largest Selling Disinfectant

A concentrated germ-killer, used by leading hospitals, recommended by many doctors.

Every Day...Keep your Home Hospital Clean with Germ-Killing . . . "Lysol" Brand Disinfectant

Reg. U.S. Pat. Off. • Product of Lehn & Fink

YOUR DOCTOR AND DRUGGIST WORK TIRELESSLY TO PROTECT YOU

Your health and happiness . . . and that of your family . . . may so often owe so much to the knowledge, skill and unfailing dependability of your doctor and your druggist.

Right now your druggist is featuring Sickroom Needs—the items your doctor is most likely to call for, in the event of sickness in your home. Check your needs today! Be prepared!

(Continued from Page 113)

course. He was living and dying and being reborn all at the same time each day. How we loved each day. "It's been another wonderful day, mother!" he'd say, as I knelt to kiss him good night.

There are many complex and erudite answers to all these questions, which men have thought about for many thousands of years, and about which they have written many thousands of books.

Yet at the end of them all, when one has put away all the books, and all the words, when one is alone with oneself, when one is alone with God, what is left in one's heart? Just this:

I wish we had loved Johnny more.

Since Johnny's death, we have received many letters from many kind friends from all parts of the world, each expressing his condolence in his own way. But through most of them has run a single theme: sympathy with us in facing a mysterious stroke of God's will that seemed inexplicable, unjustifiable and yet, being God's will, must also be part of some great plan beyond our mortal ken, perhaps sparing him or us greater pain or loss.

Actually, in the experience of losing one's child in death, I have found that other factors were involved.

I did not, for one thing, feel that God had personally singled out either him or us for any special act, either of animosity or generosity. In a way I did not feel that God was personally involved at all. I have all my life had a spontaneous, instinctive sense of the reality of God, in faith, beyond ordinary belief. I have always prayed to God and talked things over with Him, in church and out of church, when perplexed, or very sad, or also very happy. During Johnny's long illness, I prayed continually to God, naturally. God was always there. He sat beside us during the doctors' consultations, as we waited the long vigils outside the operating room, as we rejoiced in the miracle of a brief recovery, as we agonized when hope ebbed away, and the doctors confessed there was no longer anything they could do. They were helpless, and we were helpless, and in His way, God, standing by us in our hour of need, God in His infinite wisdom and mercy and loving-kindness, God in all His omnipotence, was helpless too.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Waking

By Patrick MacDonogh

Peace, there is peace in this awakening.
Slowly, silently the warm sun
Enters my being, waves are breaking
Unseen as time, one after one Endlessly breaking. A sea gull crying
Voices eternity. There stirs
A wind among the grass and, sighing,
Carries my spirit to hers.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Life is a myriad series of mutations, chemical, physical, spiritual. The same infinitely intricate, yet profoundly simple, law of life that produced Johnny—his rare and precious soul, his sweetness, his gaiety, his gallantry, his courage: For it was only after his death, from his brief simple diaries, written as directly as he wrote out his beloved chemical experiments, that we learned he had known all along how grave was his illness, and that even as we had gaily pretended with him that all was well and he was completely recovering, he was pretending with us, and bearing our burden with the spirit, the élan, of a singing soldier or a laughing saint—that law of life which out of infinite mutation had produced Johnny, that law, still mutating, destroyed him. God Himself, no less than we, is part of that law. Johnny was an extraordinary lovable and alive human being. There seemed to be no evil, only an illuminating good, in him. Everybody who knew him—his friends and teachers at Lincoln, Riverdale and Deerfield, our neighbors in the country at Madison—felt the warmth of his goodness and its great vitality in him. Yet a single cell, mutating experimentally, killed him. But the law of mutation, in its various forms, is the law of the universe. God Himself, no less than we, is part of that law. It is impersonal, inevitable. Grief cannot be concerned with it. At least, mine could not.

My grief, I find, is not desolation or rebellion at universal law or deity. I find grief to be much simpler and sadder. Contemplating the Eternal Deity and His Universal Laws leaves me grave but dry-eyed. But a sunny fast wind along the Sound, good sailing weather, a new light boat, will shake me to tears: How Johnny would have loved this boat, this wind, this sunny day!

All the things he loved tear at my heart because he is no longer here on earth to enjoy them. An open fire with a broiling steak, a pancake tossed in the air, fresh nectarines, black-red cherries—the science columns in the papers and magazines, the fascinating new technical developments, so complex to me, so simple to him. The Berkshire music festival coming in over the air, as we lay in the moonlight on our wide open beach, listening—how he loved all this! For like many children of our contemporary renaissance, he was many-sided too, with many loves. Chemistry and math were his particular passion, but as a younger child at school he had painted gay spirited pictures of sailing boats and circuses, had sculpted some lovable figures—two bears dancing, a cellist playing—and had played some musical instruments himself—piano, violin and his beloved recorder. He collected stamps, of course, and also rocks; he really loved and knew his rocks, classified them, also cut and polished them in his workshop, and dug lovely bits of garnet from the Connecticut hillsides.

But the thing closest to his heart was his chem lab, which he cherished passionately. It grew and expanded in town and country. He wanted to try experiments that had not been done before. He liked to consider abstract principles of the sciences, searched intuitively for unifying theories.

He had many worthy ambitions which he did not live long enough to achieve. But one he did achieve: to graduate with his class at Deerfield. Despite the long illness that kept him out of school a year and a half, he insisted on being tutored in the hospital and at home, taking his class exams, and the college-board exams for Harvard, and then returning to Deerfield for commencement week.

The boys cheered him as he walked down the aisle to receive his diploma, his head bandaged but unbowed, held high, his young face pale, his dark blue eyes shining with the joy of achievement. A fortnight later, he died.

What is the grief that tears me now?

No fear of death or any hereafter. During our last summer at Madison, I wrote about death in my diary when I couldn't sleep: "Look Death in the face. To look Death in the face, and not be afraid. To be friendly to Death as to Life. Death is part of Life, like Birth. Not the final part. I have no sense of finality about Death. Only the final scene in a single act of a play that goes on forever. Look Death in the face: It's a friendly face, a kindly face, sad, reluctant, knowing it is not welcome but having to play its part when its cue is called, perhaps trying to say, 'Come, it won't be too bad, don't be afraid, I understand how you feel, but come—there may be other miracles!' No fear of Death, no fight against Death, no enmity toward Death, friendship with Death as with Life—that is Death for myself, but not for Johnny, God, not yet. He's too young to miss all the other parts of Life, all the other lovely living parts of Life. All the wonderful, miraculous things to do, to feel, to see, to hear, to touch, to "Mm-Mm-Mm... My strawberry kitchen looks good enough to eat!"

designed in

Firestone Velon*

FILM PRODUCTS, COURTESY SANIMODE CORP.

...and good enough to eat in! See how I framed that awkward bay window with two cottage sets of luscious, strawberry-print Velon film curtains. For a dinette area, I resurrected an old "parlor" table and chairs from the attic, slip-covered them and draped a strawberry-print Velon cloth over the table for protection. My fresh-fruit motif is repeated again and again...in the Velon film shelf edging that frames my "picture" plates...in Velon film food bags, bowl, electric mixer and toaster covers. I topped it all off with leaf-green walls and whipped-cream woodwork. Now who could resist picking my "strawberry" kitchen!

Delectable looking, tough-wearing Velon film retains its soft, supple drape and lustre. Spills won't stain it; Velon wipes clean with a damp cloth. Look for products made of Velon film, a first quality material, at all department and variety stores.

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

Listen to the Voice of Firestone Monday Evenings over NBC smell, to taste, to experience, to enjoy. What a joy Life is. Why does no one talk of the joy of Life? shout, sing, write of the joy of Life? Looking for books to read with Johnny, and all of them sad, bitter, full of fear, hate, death, destruction, damnation, or at best resignation! No great books of enjoyment, no sense of great utter simple delight, pleasure, fun, sport, joy of Life."

All the things Johnny enjoyed in Life. All the things he did and enjoyed at home and at school, with his friends, with me. All the simple things, the eating, drinking, sleeping, waking up.

We cooked, we experimented with variations on pancakes, stews, steaks. We gardened, we fished, we sailed. We danced, sang, played. We repaired things: electric wires, garden tools; chopped wood, made fires. We equipped the chem lab workshop, in the made-over old boathouse, with wonderful gadgets, and tried out experiments, both simple and fantastic.

All the books we read. All the lovely old children's books, and boys' books, and then the older ones. We read Shaw aloud—how G.B.S. would have enjoyed hearing the delighted laughter of the boys reading parts in Man and Superman in the kitchen while I washed up the supper dishes—and Plato's Republic in Richards' Basic English, and Russell, and St. Exupéry. On Sundays, we would have church at home: We'd sit outdoors on the beach and read from The Bible of the World, the Old Testament and the New, the Prophets and Jesus, also Buddha, Confucius and Mahomet. Also Spinoza, Einstein, Whitehead, Jeans, Schroedinger and Maugham.

We sailed, and got becalmed, and got tossed out to sea, and had to be rescued. And we planned sailing trips.

All the things we planned! College, and work, and love and marriage, and a good life in a good society.

We always discussed things a little ahead. In a way I was experimenting with Johnny as he dreamed of doing with his elements, as artists do with their natural materials. I was trying to create of him a newer kind of human being: an aware person, without fear, and with love; a sound individual, adequate to life anywhere on earth, and loving life everywhere and always.

We would talk about all this as our experiment together.

He did his part in making our experiment a success. Missing him now, I am haunted by my own shortcomings, how often I failed him. I think every parent must have a sense of failure, even of sin merely in remaining alive after the death of a child. One feels that it is not right to live when one's child has died, that one should somehow have found the way to give one's life to save his life. Failing there, one's failures during his too brief life seem all the harder to bear and forgive. How often I wish I had not sent him away to school when he was still so young that he wanted to remain at home in his own room, with his own things and his own parents. How I wish we had maintained the marriage that created the home he loved so much. How I wish we had been able before he died to fulfill his last heart's desires: the talk with Professor Einstein, the visit to Harvard Yard, the dance with his friend Mary.

These desires seem so simple. How wonderful they would have been to him. All the wonderful things in life are so simple that one is not aware of their wonder until they are beyond touch. Never have I felt the wonder and beauty and joy of life so keenly as now in my grief that Johnny is not here to enjoy them.

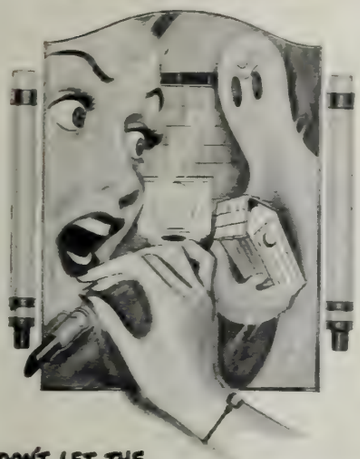
Today, when I see parents impatient or tired or bored with their children, I wish I could say to them, "But they are alive, think of the wonder of that! They may be a care and a burden, but think, they are alive! You can touch them—what a miracle! You don't have to hold back sudden tears when you see just a headline about the Yale-Harvard game because you know your boy will never see the Yale-Harvard game, never see the house in Paris he was born in, never bring home his girl, and you will not hand down your jewels to his bride and will have no grandchildren to play with and spoil. Your sons and daughters are alive. Think of that—not dead but alive! Exult and sing."

All parents who have lost a child will feel what I mean. Others, luckily, cannot. But I hope they will embrace them with a little added rapture and a keener awareness of joy.

I wish we had loved Johnny more when he was alive. Of course we loved Johnny very much. Johnny knew that. Everybody knew it. Loving Johnny more. What does it mean? What can it mean, now?

It means loving life more, being more aware, of life, of one's fellow human beings, of the earth.

It means obliterating, in a curious but real way, the ideas of evil and hate and the enemy, and transmuting them, with the alchemy of suffering, into ideas of clarity and charity.



It means caring more and more about other people, at home and abroad, all over the earth. It means caring more about God.

I hope we can love Johnny more and more till we too die, and leave behind us, as he did, the love of love, the love of life. THE END

"Today he learned how to open the garbage can."

Social Security Hint

DON'T LET THE "Ghost of the Past" CAST REFLECTIONS ON YOU

A "ghost" in your bathroom is socially distressing. For sure protection against him use VANiSH, the double-action toilet bowl cleaner that (1) deodorizes (2) as it cleans. Its bubbling action spreads a pleasant fragrance.

New VANISH KILLS TOILET ODORS AS IT CLEANS

Double Your Money Back Guarantee
If double-action VANiSH doesn't do all we say it will, return partially used can to us. We will refund double the money you paid.

JUDSON DUNAWAY CORPORATION, Dover, New Hampshire

HOW MUCH Is Your SPARE TIME Worth?
You can earn up to $15 an hour representing Curtis publications and other popular magazines. For details write CURTIS CIRCULATION COMPANY, 830 Independence Square, Phila. 5, Pa.

Cover up Unsightly Cracks—LOOSE PLASTER
have lovely crackproof ceilings

Only a matter of hours and you have a beautiful, patterned ceiling that is forever crackproof. Carpenters apply sturdy Upson Kuver-Krak Panels — right over old plaster. No visible nail heads. No fuss or muss. No delays. Pebbled surface matches walls. Paint or paper as you wish.

SEND FOR BOOKLET!
Thirty-two pages in full color. Shows beauty of Upson Ceilings. Arrangements by America's leading decorators. Scores of ideas for remodeling, re-doing interiors. Sent postpaid—25c.

USE COUPON BELOW

UPSON PANELS

THE UPSON COMPANY
326 Upson Point, Lockport, N. Y.

I enclose 25c (stamps or coin). Send me your booklet, "New Interiors For Old."

Name_____
Street_____
City State

WE CAN MAKE CHILDBIRTH SAFER

Continued from Page 34

was necessary to feed her by vein. The physician, an elderly man with a fine shock of white hair, continues:

"Labor was induced by puncturing the membrane. An uneventful delivery followed, a five pound live baby resulting. Five days after delivery, vomiting started again. The woman's abdomen was distended. Bowel activity ceased and her temperature rose to 102° F. X-ray examination disclosed an intestinal obstruction. This was corrected in the course of a one-hour operation. The patient died the following day."

No one asks for the floor to comment. The chairman speaks: "Although this is classed as a maternal death, the fatal condition is in no way associated with pregnancy. This was a surgical, rather than an obstetrical problem. If we can criticize here, it is only on the ground that surgical consultation was asked for too late."

The next case presented a sharp contrast to this one. It was a case where the obstetrician was clearly at fault. The physician assigned to it reports. As he speaks, there is a marked trace of anger in his voice:

"The patient, 24 years old, had a normal baby in 1944. In 1945, she had a breech delivery and stillbirth. With the present pregnancy, she went to her physician in the sixth week. At that time her blood pressure was normal; she was in excellent health.

"At term, mild pains began at midnight. By 3:30 A.M., the pains were severe enough for the patient to go to the hospital. Her husband drove her into New York from the suburb where they lived.

"By 8 A.M., contractions were strong. At this time, the patient was given 4½ grains of seconal, 1/100th grain of scopolamine and 100 milligrams of demerol. This medication gave little relief and at 11 A.M. the patient got an additional 100 milligrams of demerol and 1/150th grain of scopolamine.

"She was then given gas-oxygen-ether anesthesia. The obstetrician did a manual rotation and a low forceps delivery of a seven pound three ounce living child. While under anesthesia, the woman vomited, a certain amount of the material entering her lungs. As everyone here is well aware, hydrochloric acid from digestive juices has exactly the same destructive effect on lung tissue as the chlorine gas used in the First World War. It later developed that the patient had consumed a Martini cocktail while waiting to go to the delivery room. This certainly contributed to her nausea under ether.

"While the obstetrician was completing his work, the patient became cyanotic. The marked blueness of her skin certainly traced, at least in part, to the fact that her damaged lungs could not properly absorb oxygen. It was apparent that the patient was going into shock, so the anesthetist started giving her straight oxygen. She was also given neosynephrin to elevate her falling blood pressure. Plasma was administered by vein, since whole blood was not available.

"By 5 P.M., the uterus, which had been well contracted, began to soften. Hemorrhage followed. By this time, blood had been procured from another hospital and transfusion got under way. The patient also got ergot to contract her uterus.

"Severe bleeding continued, and at 8 P.M., the physician decided to remove the uterus in order to control this bleeding. This surgery was completed at 8:50 with the patient in severe shock. She had lost an estimated 3000 c.c.'s of blood. At 9:17 she died."

The man who read this report sits down and the chairman of the meeting asks: "Are there any criticisms of the manner in which this case was handled?" Half a dozen physicians start to rise at once. The chairman recognizes one of them.

"I find it abolutely inexcusable," he says, with anger in his voice, "that the patient was left in a labor room without a nurse in

OLSON RUG "Magic" and Your Old Rugs, Clothing Save You up to ½

Celebrating Our 75th Anniversary

FREE Catalog in Colors

OLSON RUG CO., Dept. N-10, Chicago 41, Ill.

Englander
AMERICA'S MOST LUXURIOUS mattress

No matter how you sleep or what you weigh, you sleep better on an Englander

Englander Red Line brings you the first really new mattress idea in 50 years

FOR YEARS THIS... FOR YEARS THIS... NOW! INDIVIDUAL SPRING ACTION

Coils tied together at top and bottom by cotton sacks. This method prevents individual spring action.

Coils tied together at top and bottom by wire. This method prevents individual spring action.

Completely individual spring action exclusive with Englander because coils are locked only at the center by flexible ribbons of steel.

Upper half gives you cushioning comfort. Every movement and contour of your body is gently cradled. "Roll-to-the-middle," when sleeping double, eliminated. Lower half supports your weight in the firm, healthful manner doctors recommend.

© 1949, The Englander Company, Inc. Chicago, Illinois

The new Super Bodyguard—$49.75. Other Englander Red Line mattresses (twin or full size) or matching box springs to $79.75.

attendance, and that she was able to procure and drink a cocktail at such a critical moment. If I am not mistaken, a case exactly like this, which also ended fatally, occurred in this same hospital within the last twelve months. If this woman's physician had so much as suspected anything of the sort, he should have taken the precautionary measure of washing out her stomach."

Another physician asks for the floor. "May I add something to this?" he asks. "Once the patient had been ill on the delivery table, why wasn't anesthesia stopped immediately? To give her more ether only served to make her position more perilous."

A third critic rises: "The physician found he was getting good results with ergot—it apparently contracted the uterus and stopped bleeding—why didn't he resort to this drug a second time? Had he done this, there is a good chance that surgical intervention would not have been necessary. There is also a good chance that a second dose of this drug might have saved this woman's life."

Another doctor wishes to speak. "The protocols of this case," he says, "indicate that there was a two-hour delay in giving this patient blood. We all know that this is the only really effective agent in treating hemorrhage and combating shock. In this case, the two-hour delay was fatal. The fact that blood wasn't available is an indictment of the hospital—which has no blood bank. For this condition to exist in a large hospital today is unpardonable."

There are other comments, all highly critical. The chairman speaks. "I am afraid that this is a clear case of bungling all along the line; on the part of the physician, on the part of the anesthetist, on the part of the patient, on the part of the hospital."

It has taken over an hour to present the three cases which we have summarized here. The dinner hour is approaching, but no one makes a move to leave the auditorium. The fourth case is particularly interesting, because of its rarity

A boy becomes a man when he walks around a puddle of water instead of through it.

THE victim this time is a 24-year-old woman who had borne two previous children. In the confinement under scrutiny, her labor was hard, fast, marked by the strongest contractions. In every respect, the delivery appeared to be completely normal. The patient was about to be moved to her room when she suddenly became breathless. Within a few minutes she was dead, before any restorative steps could be taken.

This case was completely baffling. The woman was young, healthy. She had an excellent heart and all other organs were sound. Why had she died? The autopsy told a grim story. Her contractions had been strong enough to force amniotic fluid from the uterus into veins which are exposed with the birth of a baby. This fluid causes blood to clot, and thousands of these tiny clots were found in the lungs—choking off the blood vessels which supply oxygen to the body. Even hair from the baby was found in the victim's lungs! Any doctor is powerless to combat this fatal sequence of events. There is no means for him to guess that such a thing will happen—no way for him to combat it afterward. In this instance, the physician could not have done anything to prevent death.

Case No. 5 was similar in many respects—in that death was traceable to an abnormality within the patient. In nearly all cases, the placenta—the structure which supplies nourishment to the baby—is attached to the upper portion of the uterus. When the placenta separates from the uterus after birth, a network of blood vessels is exposed. A small hemorrhage results, which is controlled quickly and naturally. The upper portion of the uterus contracts to shut off the blood flow.

But when the placenta is attached to the lower portion of the uterus, the organ can't contract sufficiently to stop the blood. Hemorrhage results. This is what happened in Case No. 5—a 28-year-old woman.

An episode of bleeding just before the patient entered the delivery room warned the physician that he might be dealing with a case of placenta previa—the condition in which the placenta is attached to the lower uterus. The reporting physician continues:

"Under the circumstances, the physician decided that the safest means of controlling the hemorrhage was to perform a low flap Caesarean with longitudinal incision. The placenta was found to be strongly adherent to the uterus. To have forced a separation would have opened the way for severe hemorrhage.

"Under the circumstances, the physician decided to remove the uterus. While this was under way, the patient was transfused with whole blood to a total of 4000 c.c.'s. After the wound was closed, she came out of shock. Blood pressure rose and she appeared to be making good headway.

"WITHIN a few minutes, severe hemorrhage started again, blood pressure falling rapidly. It was apparent that the rise in blood pressure following the transfusions had caused this hemorrhage—either because of failure to tie off a blood vessel, or because of slippage of a ligature. The patient was dead before any steps could be taken."

There are several comments on this case. The chairman notes:

"I had exactly this same thing happen to me once. Working in an extremely bloody field, it is often difficult to find and tie off all blood vessels. In my own case, I guessed what had happened and opened the patient a second time. Fortunately, I was able to find the untied blood vessel in time.

"I know the doctor involved in this case and have a great deal of respect for him. I am not going to be too critical. I believe that this is the type of thing that is apt to happen to any of us."

In the final case discussed at the meeting, the physician put up a valiant—and losing—battle for a woman's life. The 27-year-old victim made her first visit to the doctor in the sixteenth week of pregnancy. She was admitted to the hospital immediately after spontaneous rupture of the membranes. She was suffering from secondary anemia, her blood pressure was high—170 systolic. She was bleeding profusely when taken to the delivery room. Well in advance the physician in this case knew that he would have to perform a Caesarean operation. The patient's condition would not permit a normal labor and delivery. The patient died less than an hour after this surgery. There is no comment on this case. Everything that could have been done was done.

This completes the discussion of one month's toll of maternal deaths on Manhattan Island—other deaths in the city being discussed at meetings in other boroughs. If you live in a progressive community, it is likely that exactly the same type meetings are held in your own town or city.

Such meetings have exerted a tremendous influence in making America one of the safest places in the world to have a baby—rather than one of the most dangerous. In the early '30's, the U. S. was the shame of the civilized world. A woman here was twice as apt to die in childbirth as a woman in Italy, France, Austria, Sweden, Denmark. The delivery room was claiming a grisly toll: 14,000 lives a year.

A number of surveys pointed up our sad record. One of the most notable was conducted by the New York Academy of Medicine. This three-year survey, completed in 1933, covered 2041 maternal deaths. Each case was studied meticulously. Why had the woman died and was her death preventable? If it was preventable, who was at fault?

Credit to them, the investigators made no effort to hide findings. In a major portion of cases they blamed doctors for "lack of judgment, lack of skill, or careless inattention to the demands of the case." The survey's conclusions shocked a city. At least two thirds

(Continued on Page 121)

Can wives work money-miracles today?

"Miracles can happen!" says your CANNON GIRL. Yes, now you get an even better sheet for not a penny price rise!

Your favorite Cannon Percale Sheets are now COMBSPUN... combed till only the long, smooth fibers remain!

So dream-soft! You'll sleep like a FAIRY TALE QUEEN. So fine-woven... with over 25% more threads than best-grade muslins!

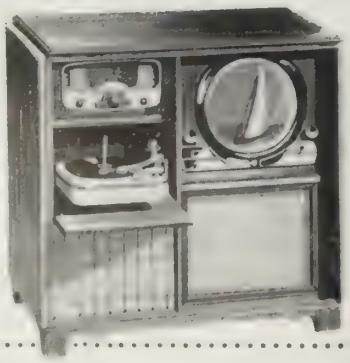
So STRONG, too (for longer wear). Wonderfully LIGHT WEIGHT (for easier bedmaking and laundering).

Yet Cannon Percale Sheets... with new Combspun luxury... still cost just SMALL-CHANGE more than heavy-duty muslins.

Here are the magic words to say at your sheet counter: "New COMBSPUN CANNON PERCALES, please!"

Cannon Percale Sheets—Now They're Combspun

TRADE MARK CANNON



CANNON TOWELS . . . STOCKINGS . . . BLANKETS ★ CANNON MILLS, INC., NEW YORK 13, N. Y.

COPR. 1949 CANNON MILLS, INC.

*ZENITH TELEVISION

SO SENSATIONALLY DIFFERENT IT DEFIES DESCRIPTION. Only Zenith† Television has the GIANT CIRCLE SCREEN . . . the largest, brightest, clearest direct-view picture area in any set of similar size . . . and BULLS EYE AUTOMATIC TUNING—one knob, one twist, there's your station, your giant picture, your sound. These Zenith developments are found in no other television set. You must see it—operate it—yourself—to appreciate the startling difference!

*Zenith "Twin Cobra" Tone Arms. Now two famous Cobra† Tone Arms—the sensational new way to play records! One Cobra Tone Arm for the new 45-minute Long-Playing Records. Another Cobra with famous Silent-Speed Changer, for regular records.

*Zenith FM-AM Radio. A superb full-powered radio—combining Genuine Zenith-Armstrong FM for static-free, "living broadcast" tone, and famous Zenith AM, for powerful, long-distance reception.

The Zenith GOTHAM Zenith Television, Twin Cobra Record Changer and FM-AM Radio are combined in this console of breath-taking beauty to impart a magnificent scene.
Available with Zenith "Big B" television screen. See it at your Zenith dealer's.

†Reg.

ZENITH TELEVISION and long distance RADIO
© 1949

ZENITH RADIO CORPORATION, CHICAGO 39, ILLINOIS

(Continued from Page 118)

of all deaths might have been prevented. In a relatively short period of time, 1360 women had died needlessly.

Other cities—notably San Francisco and Philadelphia—conducted similar surveys. So did the Children's Bureau. All of them turned up much the same set of facts as the New York study—indicating that the sorry situation wasn't confined to a single city.

Magazines played a prominent part in passing these grim facts along to the public. In a noteworthy series of articles by Paul de Kruif, the LADIES' HOME JOURNAL in 1936 told the whole story of what had to be done to make childbearing safer.

Instead of being filed away and forgotten, the facts dredged up by the surveys acted as goads to the medical conscience. Something had to be done, and was done—largely by the medical profession itself. Medical schools overhauled the teaching of obstetrics. What had been a minor branch of medicine—often referred to as "male midwifery"—became a major specialty. Hospitals adopted more rigid standards. The whole question of obstetrical anesthesia was brought up to date. Highly trained anesthetists took the place of nurses who could do little more than drip ether on a gauze cone. (One survey discovered that a telephone girl served as anesthetist in one hospital!)

Maternal-mortality review boards—perhaps the greatest force of all in improving the situation—sprang into existence in a dozen localities. Because such boards were set up quietly, no one—not even the American Medical Association—knows which one was founded first. But Chicago was certainly among the pioneers. Dr. Herman N. Bundesen, the able and aggressive head of Chicago's Board of Health, required that every maternal death be investigated.

In other cities—Cleveland and Cincinnati are notable examples—the physicians themselves undertook the job done by the public-health agency in Chicago. In other communities, county medical societies assumed responsibility. Superimposed on all this activity, nearly all good hospitals hold regular staff meetings to study every maternal death that takes place in their jurisdiction.

The result of this concentrated effort on half a dozen fronts? America, instead of being the shame of the civilized world, became the best and safest place on earth in which to have a baby.

One fact will point this up. In the year the New York Academy report was published, 61 out of every 10,000 women in the city who bore babies died in the process. The report suggested—hopefully—that this might be cut two thirds. Actually, it has been cut far more! Last year, only 10 out of every 10,000 died in the delivery room. Nationally, the picture is similarly heartening. Deaths dropped from 61 to 16 per 10,000 births in the same period.

Although advances made so far are admittedly great, the fact remains that 5000 women still die each year in childbirth. Is there more to be done? A recent one-year study of every maternal death in Minnesota answers with an emphatic "Yes." The report concluded with the statement that three fourths of deaths happening today are still preventable. On a national basis, this means that 3750 women still die unnecessarily each year.

Alert review boards, such as the one we have seen, can be an enormously potent force in eliminating this unnecessary death. They represent one of the finest examples of a profession policing itself—and thereby protecting the public.

The ultimate goal of this unpublicized effort is clear: to make childbearing as safe as science can make it—and as safe as Nature intended it should be all along.

FUN FOR DEFENSE FORCES

(Continued from Page 23)

The G. I.'s through the years have invariably made the same comment about the Community Center. Settling down in one of the comfortable chairs drawn before the big fireplace in the lounge, you would hear one say, "Gee, this place sure feels like home." Or: "I've been in Bragg, and Blanding (or Scott or Devens or Indiantown) and I never saw a place like this." They went for the steaming-hot cups of coffee and platters full of home-baked cookies, always available at the snack bar.

The Center functioned so well during World War I that it was one of the first to be reactivated when America's vast program of preparedness got under way in 1940. Mrs. Grobler was called back to serve again too.

A grandmother by this time, she was as keenly interested in making the Center work as she had been twenty-three years before. She felt she was really a part of Dix—from the early days when the fort was plain Camp Dix, training ground for thousands of Eastern Seaboard soldiers who later made up the vanguard of our first A.E.F., to the time when Camp Dix became Fort Dix, and New Jersey's national guard was activated as the 44th Division, U. S. Army.

Then, as now, Dix stood on the edge of the Jersey pine barrens in Burlington County, approximately halfway between New York and Philadelphia. Trenton is about 20 miles away, too far for off-hour relaxation. Near-by Wrightstown was limited, to say the least, in recreational facilities. Mrs. Grobler was not the only one who felt that the old adage, "Satan finds some mischief still for idle hands to do," might be applicable here.

Mrs. Grobler's recipe for the Center in 1917 consisted of gathering her friends and their friends about her in a nucleus of workers. She followed the same pattern in 1940. There were among others Alice Richie of Moorestown and Gertrude Brick of Crosswicks, Kay Roberts of Jenkintown, Julia Eisley of Germantown, Betty Werner of Riverton and Elizabeth Black of Palmyra. These women all lived within a 30-mile radius of Dix, in Burlington County or across the Delaware in the Philadelphia suburbs. Each belonged to some group—the Woman's Club, the Garden Club, the P.T.A., the Women's Republican Club, the Philadelphia Club of Advertising Women, the Methodist Ladies' Aid, to mention a few. Several were Red Cross Grey Ladies. Each formed, from among members of her own organization, a nucleus of workers who assumed responsibilities for the activities of the Center, a whole or half day each week. When the closing day came in April, 1946, one thousand and five volunteers had earned the Fort Dix Community Citation for meritorious service, some from as far away as Newark and Atlantic City.

> If you lose your temper it is a sign that you have wrong on your side.
> —CHINESE PROVERB.

At first their activities centered around the recreation hall of the Pointville Methodist Church, where the Community Service came into being, back in '17. Later, as the USO program got under way, a handsome building, identical to the USO building in Wrightstown, and built by the Federal Security Agency, was erected and turned over to Community Service. Just in time, too, for with the expansion of Fort Dix, the entire hamlet of Pointville, with the exception of the church and burying ground, disappeared.

Mrs. Grobler and her co-workers wanted the G. I.'s to keep on thinking that the Community Center "feels like home." That was the basis of every activity, the responsibility of every volunteer worker. Tennis tables were there, and quoit courts; space for a game of softball was available; inside was a well-stocked library with comfortable chairs for reading; card tables and just about every

"The BUY-WORD for Better Plastics" in HOUSEWARES

MADE OF STYRON

REFRIGERATOR SET—By Chicago Molded Products Corporation and distributed by Hutzler Manufacturing Company. Crisp-Master with 4 x 4 in. and 4 x 8 in. storage dishes. Crystal clear or opaque white with clear cover.

a word to the wives is sufficient!

WATER PITCHER—By Amos Molded Plastics—Beautifully designed, easy to handle. Holds 2½ quarts. Complementing colors of red, yellow or ivory.

← BOWL—By Alladin Plastics, Inc. Indispensable to the smart homemaker. Bright in color and excellent in design. Red, blue, green or yellow.

CREAM AND SUGAR SET—By Plas-Tex Corporation. Adds a festive note to any table for all meals. Smooth design, gay colors of blue, red or green.

SERVING TRAY—By Columbus Plastics Products, Inc. In transparent crystal, rose, blue or green. Heavy wall sections assure rigidity. Serves many needs.

The wise homemaker looks for the Styron label on all plastic items because she knows it stands for dependability and that every product bearing the STYRON label has met the standards of Dow's Consumer Product Evaluation Committee. ◇ You, too, will prefer STYRON (Dow Polystyrene) housewares because they're smooth, pleasant to handle, lightweight and amazingly durable, and so low in cost. When you shop for housewares, specify STYRON, and be sure! At leading department stores, chain stores and variety stores everywhere.

DOW plastics

PLASTICS DIVISION HP-2 • THE DOW CHEMICAL COMPANY • MIDLAND, MICHIGAN

I Knit With Yarns That Are Wonderized ANTI-SHRINK ANTI-MATTING

No more shrink worries for me!
I knit with yarns that are Wonderized. That means they're permanently anti-shrink, anti-matting. Yes, the socks, sweaters and baby things I knit stay true to size and color bright, no matter how often they're washed. To insure the lifetime beauty of your handknits, ask for yarns that are Wonderized, found only in Fleisher's and Bear Brand yarns.

FREE! Instruction leaflets for knitting men's, women's and children's sweaters, also men's socks. Send 3¢ stamp to cover postage to Wonderized; 30-20 Thomson Ave., Long Island City 1, N. Y. Dept. J-29.

Wonderized is available only in

BEAR BRAND YARNS
Fleisher's Yarn

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping
REPLACEMENT OR RETURN OF MONEY IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN

REG. U.S. PAT. NO. 2,479,082

type of parlor game you could think of; phonograph and records ranging from boogie-woogie to Bach; a writing room with plenty of paper, and pens that really worked. Later, in the new building, there were an auditorium for dancing and stage and movie shows; a handicraft shop, art studio and instructors. Volunteers who had specialized skills and time to teach young men who needed something to do were rallied. Members of the staff of the Tyler School of Fine Arts of Temple University lent their talents every Wednesday.

Most important of all were the good hot coffee, the cakes baked in neighborhood kitchens, the thick, nourishing sandwiches and the crisp cookies—always prepared by the women themselves. Not once did the volunteers at Community Center let down the tradition of home-prepared food. They knew that eating is mighty important to young men and that a steaming cup of coffee does a lot to make a trainee lose his feeling of homesickness.

The average G.I. coming in for his first visit to the Center took a little time to become oriented. The doors opened into a vast living room, simply but tastefully furnished, with comfortable chairs facing a gigantic fireplace. Doors at either side of the fireplace led to the auditorium. The new trainee would finger the change in his pocket, sidle over to the counter and ask, "How much is coffee?" When assured it was free, he would add, "How much for a piece of cake?" "Everything is free here," he was told. Some soldiers retorted, "I've been in eight camps before coming to Dix, and this is the first time I've seen anything free yet."

There was the boy who sat off to himself, impervious to friendly overtures made by other servicemen or hostesses. Finally he walked over to gray-haired Myrtle Henderson, who was setting out plates of cake and cookies and pie, ready for the evening rush. "Lady," he pleaded shyly, "will you talk to me a minute? You look just like my mother." And the women who ran Community Center always had time to talk to homesick boys.

Husbands were welcome as volunteers too. They usually provided transportation for the women and helped carry the trays of food. They took charge of the soldiers' coats and caps, and were ready to provide a fourth hand at bridge. One of the husbands, Jack Werner, was drawn into a group of Iowa farm boys, members o the 1st Armored Division. They were outward bound and knew it. They were scared too. Not of the Luftwaffe, or the U-boats, but of the sea.

"What's it like?" one towheaded youngster asked Werner. "Did you ever get seasick?"

A Navy veteran of World War I, Jack Werner was able to reassure them. He told them exactly what they had to face, what his own reactions had been twenty-odd years before. They went back to barracks comforted.

Volunteers loved their work at Community Center, but it was no "snap." Betty Werner, for instance, had charge of the 5 to 11 P.M. shift, Saturdays. Actually, her job began on Tuesday or Wednesday, when she spent a good part of the day on the telephone, reminding friends in Riverton and Palmyra of their duties. "Don't forget that Saturday's our day at Dix," she'd tell them. "Can you make another of those burnt-sugar cakes you do so well?" (Or a Dutch apple pie, or lemon tarts, or a batch of fudge—whatever was the specialty of the phonee.) She listed all the promised contributions carefully and made another list of the workers.

At 2 P.M. Saturday afternoon, her husband, Jack, took over. First he collected the food, not forgetting to stop at a near-by farm on the pike for a basket of fresh-picked peaches or apples, depending on the season. With his car trunk filled, he started picking up the workers, for Dix was a good hour's drive away. (Remember the 35 mph wartime driving speed?)

The 9 to 5 P.M. group would be just going off duty when Jack's carload, and another from the Jenkintown Women's Republican Club, arrived. Quickly the new workers would take over—Frank Jacobson and Jack in the checkroom, where as many as 2400 coats and caps were counted in one evening; the ladies in hour-on, hour-off shifts, in the kitchen and at the coffee bar. The hour off would be spent just wandering around, talking to any boy who looked as if he needed a friendly chat, or sewing on buttons and insignia. Sometime during the evening the loud-speaker would issue a summons for a "fourth at bridge," or "a couple of guys for pinochle." Then the men in the checkroom would yell for relief and take a hand.

And what does it all add up to? Nothing more—and surely nothing less—than a place that truly "feels like home." A place that was needed in 1917, in 1940, and is needed again today. And it can be provided at any Army post in the country, by following this simple pattern. THE END

You'll find new corset comfort with Spirella

BUT comfort isn't all my new Spirella gives. Now my figure gets proper support. The perpetual tiredness that spoiled my fun is gone. I look and feel younger with more pep than I've had in years. All because I tried the "press and lift" test (shown below) and learned the secret of healthful Spirella support.

Press down on stomach. That's the cramped feeling of ordinary garments.

Now lower your hands and lift up! That's like Spirella's all day comfort.

How do you get this new comfort? Only from the Spirella Corsetiere who calls at your home. In quiet and privacy, while you're comfortably supported in a special modeling garment, she measures you for your Spirella.

Get a natural lift with Spirella

For name of your local Spirella Corsetiere, write In Canada
THE SPIRELLA CO. LTD
NIAGARA FALLS, ONT.

"But don't you want me to draw you out and put you at your ease?"

New! Introducing the Beauty Discovery of the Century... PENATEN in Woodbury De Luxe Face Creams

— a revelation in skin care!
— cleanses, brightens, softens as never before!

Straight from Woodbury scientists to you — comes PENATEN — new penetrating ingredient that revolutionizes face creams. Here, in these Woodbury De Luxe Face Creams are just-discovered formulas — for deeper, cleaner cleansing! — for superb richer softening!—for sheerest make-up flattery! Luxurious creams, each utterly new, excitingly different . . . your happy promise of flawless new skin beauty!

PENATEN
penetrates deeper into pore openings

Woodbury De Luxe Cold Cream . . . incomparable cleaner cleansing!
PENATEN makes this De Luxe Cold Cream deeper-cleansing. Helps cleansing oils actually penetrate deeper into pore openings. Seeks out clogging soil and make-up more effectively. With your first jar of Woodbury De Luxe Cold Cream, your skin will be fresh and beauty-clean . . . as never before!

Woodbury De Luxe Dry Skin Cream . . . superb richer softening!
Magically, PENATEN aids the skin absorb rich emollients in this De Luxe Dry Skin Cream. Lanolin's softening benefits . . . four more skin softeners . . . penetrate deeper into pore openings. Tiny lines soften. Flaky roughness smooths. Your skin looks gloriously younger!

Jars dressed in pink-and-gold elegance. Trial sizes, 20¢ to largest luxury sizes, $1.39. Plus tax.

Woodbury De Luxe Liquefying Cleansing Cream—with Penaten! Very effective for cleansing oily or normal skin. Melts instantly. Loosens clinging grime, make-up, surface oil. Night and morning use helps keep skin clearer, fresher, younger-looking.

Woodbury De Luxe Vanishing Facial Cream — For Glamorous Make-Up: Greaseless, disappearing. A thin veil flatters . . . even oily skin looks dewy fresh. For a Beauty Pick-up: Apply lavishly to soften skin particles. Tissue off. Skin looks fresher, softer, younger.

Woodbury De Luxe Powder Base Foundation Cream — Petal Tinted: Adds glow to any powder shade. Veils dry or normal skin in satin-textured base that clings, holds make-up. Helps conceal tiny blemishes. Apply sparingly in dots—smooth over face, throat.

Woodbury De Luxe Complete Beauty All-Purpose Cream — Pink-Tinted: Penaten makes this All-Purpose Cream more effective—for complete skin care, day and night. Cleanses deeper. Softens superbly. Provides a clinging make-up base.

The Chinese bride in a palanquin rides secretly,
Her trousseau carried through the streets for all to see.

O lares and penates—'twas first in ancient Rome
The bride was borne in arms across the door of home.

The Pilgrim prized his pretty bride—and dowry too—
Her weight in silver shillings from dear papa was due.

PHOTOS BY HAROLD POWELL

The famous Seventh Regiment formed the sworded aisle
For brides in fairest white—an eighteen-hundred style.

Bridal Quilt

This is a wedding quilt to make for the bride who still loves fairy tales, treasures heirlooms and appreciates hand needlework.

Marriage customs are rich in tradition and flavored with age-old romance. This immemorial treasury takes visible form in the decorative heritage quilt designed by Marion Cheever Whiteside for the bride of today. Each block shows a gay picture of the happy ending to the oldest story in the world as it was celebrated in other times and far-off places. For all the quilt's professional appearance, a bride's best friends on a get-together afternoon could make the blocks in a few hours of simple stitchery, with each friend making one block. Or the bride herself could create this lovely addition to her trousseau in very little time. So get out your scrap bag and send for the pattern. It adapts itself to both twin and full-size beds and allows an adequate drop all around. Ask for Pattern No. 2503, enclosing 25c. Order from the Reference Library, LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, Philadelphia 5, Pa. ★ By HENRIETTA MURDOCK

Interior Decoration Editor of the Journal

To decorate a room around the bridal quilt, match its blues and use country-style furniture or your treasured antiques. Sheer curtains are nylon; the braided rug is machine-sewed.

Why not get that new carpet now?

BIGELOW WEAVERS

GOT A BEAUTIFUL NEW CARPET on your mind? Why not get it on your floor? Certainly nothing you can buy will make a greater, quicker, lovelier change in a room.

So, make the change now! Make magic with new color, new design, new beauty . . . in the biggest single item in your room.

Make tomorrow that long-put-off day when you go see the man who'll help you get the most for your carpet dollars—your local Bigelow dealer.

You pay just the price you'd planned. As much as $18.50 a sq. yd., if you're in a shoot-the-works mood. Or as considerate a little price as $5.95. And no matter what amount you invest, you get Bigelow's famous "quality you can trust."

You have a wide-and-wonderful choice. In every price range, there's a thrilling array of colors, patterns, and surfaces. Traditional designs . . . or fresh modern motifs. Smart sculptured effects . . . "ankle-deep" textures. You'll find them all at your Bigelow dealer's.

You get a carpet you'll stay proud of. Each Bigelow Carpet is a master-blend of strong, springy imported wools. And how they hold their glowing good looks . . . their luxurious "lively" texture! One look . . . one touch . . . and you'll be glad you visited your Bigelow dealer, first.

For name of your local Bigelow dealer, call Western Union by number. Ask for operator 25.

Above: Traditional charm, fit for the finest setting. Ask for Bigelow's Fervak 9420. The price is a pleasure—only about $7.25 a sq. yd.*

Right: Fresh-as-air design, and as lovely as a walk through a forest. It's Bigelow's Beauvais 1807, in a graceful leaf pattern. Around $9.50 a sq. yd.*

Below: Deep-textured beauty, at home with your proudest heirlooms or your newest treasures. It's Bigelow's rich and handsome Sonata 2103-3541, one of the most luxurious carpets ever woven. About $18.50 a sq. yd.*

*Slightly higher in the West.

LIVELY WOOL SPRINGS BACK UNDERFOOT

Bigelow

Rugs and Carpets

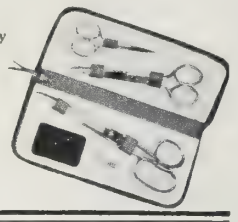
Beauty you can see . . . quality you can trust . . . since 1825

HINTS ON HOW TO CUT OUT A DRESS

From SEWING FOR EVERYONE
BY MARY BROOKS PICKEN

"Do learn to cut long, even lines with your shears and to use the points of your scissors for snipping and for corners."

Clauss



DRESSMAKING SHEARS

Keen • Quick Cutting • Easy Handling

With the first "snip" of Clauss Shears, you discover keener sewing pleasure. Their easy action makes pattern and fabric cutting accurate and speedy. The bent handle means less lifting of fabrics from the cutting surface, makes it easy to follow lines. Choose Clauss and follow the success line preferred by skilled dressmakers and designers.

Clauss Pinking Shears are now on the counters of your favorite stores..."worth waiting for."

Nice gift idea for any woman. Clauss sewing and embroidery scissors in handsome lambskin case, zipper closing. Red or green.
No. 1007 $10.50

THE HENKEL-CLAUSS CO.
FREMONT, OHIO
Shear Quality Since '77

To the Person who is

DEAF

and is Tired of Straining to HEAR

● Do you miss the precious things you should hear—music, the voices of loved ones, all the sounds that make up life?

Sounds which have been long lost—even low-voiced conversation, church sermons and business conferences, with many voices taking part, are all brought back with Beltone, the new type One-Unit Hearing Aid.

This tiny, one-unit device, which weighs only a few ounces, is all you wear. Gone, forever, are the inconveniences of old-fashioned hearing aids. No more heavy, clumsy separate battery packs. No dangling, unsightly battery wires. The Beltone reproduces faithfully the sounds you want to hear—the music and laughter in the voices of those you love, without discomfort or inconvenience.

FREE! Learn how much better and more clearly Beltone restores precious sounds you, perhaps, thought lost forever. Just mail coupon for valuable free booklet. No obligation.

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

MAIL COUPON FOR FREE BOOKLET

BELTONE HEARING AID CO., Dept. LHJ-2
1450 West 19th Street, Chicago 8, Illinois

Please send me without cost or obligation, the new FREE booklet telling about DEAFNESS and HOW to OVERCOME IT.

Name .....
Address .....
Town ..... State .....

If She Sews She Knows

TRIMTEX®

dependable quality

For the perfect "finishing" touch

RICK RACK • BIAS TAPE • SEAM TAPE
SKIRT FACING • BLANKET BINDING
DRESS BELTING

At sewing notion counters everywhere

NYLON PARACHUTES

65 Sq. Yds.

With 600 Ft. Cord. Make dresses—underwear slips—bras—panties—lampshades—bed spreads—slip covers, etc. FREE instruction patterns. Check or Money Order.

$15.95, or ½ Chute $8.95
If C.O.D. $1.00 Deposit with order
SEND POSTAL FOR SAMPLE
HOWLEY - GRAHAM, 1228 Land Title Bldg.
Broad & Chestnut Sts., Dept. 25 Philadelphia 10, Pa.

EASY MONEY

IN YOUR POCKET

Sell All-Occasion Greeting Card Ass't. Huge value. Magnificent selection. Box of 14 wonderful designs. Sells for $1. Up to 100% profit. Also, Birthdays, Gift Wraps, Easters, Stationery, Lillian Grow Floral Notes. Money back guarantee. Sample All-Occasion Box on approval.

FREE SAMPLE Imprinted Personal Notes

CHILTON GREETINGS, Dept. B-1, 147 Essex Street, Boston, Mass.

TALL GALS

SEND FOR FREE BOOKLET!

BUY SHOECRAFT SALON SHOES DIRECT VIA MAIL!

TALL GALS FAMOUS FIFTH AVENUE SHOES IN SIZES 7½ to 13, WIDTHS AAAAA TO E. MONEY BACK GUARANTEE IF RETURNED 1 WORN WITHIN 10 DAYS

SEND PENNY POSTAL TODAY FOR FREE 24 PAGE BOOKLET 14. EXTRA EXTRA LONG NYLON HOSE (SWEET CLOCK SIZE 11 TO 12) ONLY $1.95 PR

SHOECRAFT Tall Gal's Fifth Avenue Shoes
605 Fifth Avenue, New York 17

FIRST DANCE

(Continued from Page 35)

Eileen," she heard him cry, "I never dreamed you could look like that! You're terrific!"

A stub of wicker cutting into her flesh was a sharp reminder of reality that made her shift uncomfortably. "I wish," she said, "that he really wanted to take me. He only asked me because his mother and father made him."

"Now I don't believe that for a minute," said Mrs. Mathews. "He seemed to like you a lot that night he came over for dinner."

Eileen wanted to believe her grandmother's words, but her honesty pushed the facts in front of her, blunt and uncompromising. Under the glaring light of truth, they were not to be ignored.

"No, he didn't," she said. "He was just being polite."

But hope flickered in her mind, took fire and burst into flame. This time—yes, this time it was going to be different; there would be the stimulus of soft music, dancing close together. . . . She closed her eyes and leaned back with a sigh of utter felicity. It was wonderful enough that Bill had asked her, that she was actually going to the dance.

Bill's parents and Eileen's mother and father had been close friends before Eileen lost her parents in an automobile accident five years ago. Since then, Mr. and Mrs. Severn had never forgotten her at birthdays or at Christmastime, and they had promised that when Bill came north to State College he would take her to her first dance. And this was it.

It might be Bill's first college dance, but it was the first dance of any kind for Eileen—the first date, really, in her sixteen years, because you couldn't count that one awful evening at the movies with the pimply-faced Jergens boy. But Bill . . . Bill Severn was tall and big-shouldered and attractive. He had a deep voice and a rather faint, cool smile and there was about him an air of disenchantment that awed Eileen and thrilled her.

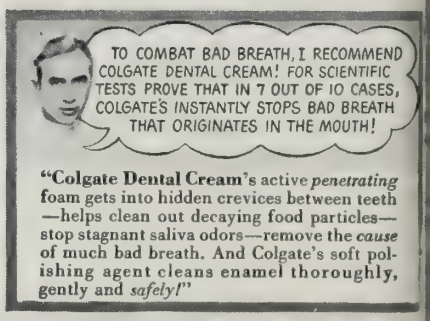
Wait until I tell the girls at school tomorrow, she thought. They will simply die.

During the next three weeks, Eileen went on a beauty regimen, fiercely resolved to improve her appearance. She stuffed herself with such nauseating amounts of food that her every movement was accompanied by a slight feeling of queasiness. Each night in her room she stood in profile before the mirror, frowning anxiously as her appraising eyes traveled over the flat young breasts. Was there—perhaps—just the hint of a richer curve there . . . a swelling? She could not be sure, but as she bounded into bed, her face liberally smeared with her grandmother's nourishing cream, she knew a gathering hope.

She brushed her hair grimly night and morning and her face was a matter for grave concern. But the rich sprinkling of freckles across her nose remained undimmed by any cream, and her hair continued to straggle dispiritedly over her shoulders.

Her flashes of gloom, however, were always dispelled by anticipation. There was a misty idea in the back of her mind that somehow, on the night of the dance, the bloom of glamour would be hers, sheathing her in sudden loveliness.

The dress was bought a week before the dance and it was an exhausting business. The stores seemed to feature off-the-shoulder models and these, Eileen realized glumly, were not for her, but for those girls more richly endowed by Nature. There was an invariable pang of disappointment when she tried on each dress.



Her lower lip trembled when she and her grandmother entered the third store. "Maybe they have a department for undeveloped girls," she said with bitterness.

But in this store, to her deep relief, they found two dresses which seemed to be, in comparison with the others she had tried on, almost entirely right. One was white net with a little collar, a tight basque and a billowing skirt; the other was pale pink taffeta with a sweetheart neckline.

She suffered agonies of indecision in choosing between them. Which one . . . which

"Colgate Dental Cream's active penetrating foam gets into hidden crevices between teeth—helps clean out decaying food particles—stop stagnant saliva odors—remove the cause of much bad breath. And Colgate's soft polishing agent cleans enamel thoroughly, gently and safely!"

LATER–Thanks to Colgate Dental Cream

Always use
COLGATE DENTAL CREAM
after you eat and before every date

ne did more for her, which one would Bill ke the best? At last, wearing the pink, she ecided.

This one, she thought; it's more sophisti-ated.

Every day she practiced dancing at the d of gym class, and as she swayed dreamily her grubby navy shorts and lisle shirt she eard the swell of a sixteen-piece orchestra, lt the swish of pink silk around her legs d Bill's firm arm about her waist. She was good dancer.

Thank heaven, she reflected, at least I don't ave to worry about that.

Appearance, dancing—she checked them f on her fingers. There remained only con-ersation, and this, too, offered no terrors. he listened to the radio programs and jotted own those jokes and smart sayings that ight add flavor to her conversational offer-gs on the night of the twenty-seventh.

On one humorous program she heard an terchange between a boy and girl during hich he asked caressingly, "Do your eyes ther you?" "No," the girl said in surprise. he punch line was the boy's: "They bother e!" Eileen rushed to put this down on her t, although she was dubious as to whether e girl could, with propriety, say this to the y. Still, if the occasion arose, it would und funny and so-isticated. There was nother line, too, hich she read in a ok; the girl saying, I may not have a ace that has unched a thousand ips, but I've sent f a canoe or two in y time." She was termined to use this e if she got the ance.

Two days before e dance, a para-aph in a newspaper ught her eyes:

The freshman class State College has ted Lynne Tremaine, n star, as their "Girl Would Most Like to Shanghaied With." Miss Tremaine, who is aking a personal-appearance tour, appearing the stage show at the Bijou Theater, will tend the Freshman Prom on the twenty-venth.

To Eileen, this item gave the final and per-ct fillip to an evening already abounding in amour and excitement.

"Good publicity," said her grandfather in matter-of-fact voice. But the light in leen's eyes remained undimmed.

The twenty-fourth, the twenty-fifth be-me memories and suddenly it was the enty-sixth and the night before the dance. leen ate very little dinner and went to her om, planning to get to sleep early in order be rested and fresh the next day. But she as too keyed up to get into bed. Instead, e prowled about the room for a while and en went into the bathroom, where she ured moodily at her face in the mirror. Her es assessed her complexion, wandered over r features. At her chin they stopped in dden horror. That pink spot—that almost perceptible swelling —— She bent closer d a cold terror squeezed at her heart. She was getting a pimple on her chin.

Her eyes were stricken as she hunted on e medicine shelf for the jar of ointment. it when she dabbed a blob of white over e offending spot, she took heart. Maybe by norrow ——

She covered her face thickly with nourish-g cream, turned out the light and hopped o bed. For a long time she lay motionless. en her lips began to move.

Let it be wonderful, she prayed. Dear God, the pimple go away, let me look beautiful, Bill like me a lot. Please let ——

WHEN she awoke the next morning, it was th the nebulous feeling of something won-rful forming, gathering, swelling like an descent bubble about to burst. And then r eyes cleared with realization.

This was the day.

To Eileen, the very air around her had a shimmering, golden quality, and as she got out of bed and walked toward the mirror she could almost feel it with her fingers, gossamer-light and magical.

But as she faced her reflection she knew a sickening dip of despair, for the bright pink spot of inflammation on her chin seemed to leap at her eyes.

It was a wonderful, terrible day. She went to the beauty parlor for the first time and gave the young operator a picture she had cut out of a glamour magazine. "I want my hair like this," she said. But when the girl had finished, she was filled with panic as she gazed at the stiff, set fabrication on her head. It's horrible, she thought. I hate it. She slunk furtively through the streets until she reached home, where she immediately plunged her head into a basin of hot water.

THE little box of flowers arrived at three and she was conscious of an inward swelling of pure bliss as she lifted out two gardenias. "Bill," the card read simply.

She had eaten very little lunch and discovered that dinner was a physical impossibility. Her stomach seemed to jump uncontrollably every few minutes and her eyes became feverishly bright. She had vowed that she would not start to get dressed until half past seven, but at twenty-five minutes past the hour she could not stand it any longer and started up the stairs.

It's beginning, she thought, her eyes radiant, it's beginning now.

She took a hot, scented bubble bath, manicured her nails. Carefully she went through the long ritual she had mentally rehearsed for weeks—the slow application of cosmetics, the putting on of her best underthings, the removal of the metal curlers from her hair and the painstaking combing. One curl persisted in going exactly the wrong way, exasperating her to such a point that she began to perspire in her nervousness.

At last she took the dress from the closet, removed the enveloping sheet and gazed at it with quiet passion. The folds of the wide skirt were gathered reverently and dropped over her head. She moved toward the mirror with a heavily pounding heart, and her sudden reflection made her stand motionless.

Oh, my, she thought incoherently, oh, my. Her eyes glowed and she began to whirl in a little circle, hearing the luxuriant swish of the dress, feeling its softness surrounding her like a pink cloud.

Holding her skirts carefully in the air, she went down the steps. When she appeared at the doorway of the living room, her cheeks were flushed. She was suddenly shy.

"Well," she said, "here I am."

"Dear me," said Mrs. Mathews tremulously. "Dear me, you look beautiful, simply beautiful. Come over here and let me see. Doesn't she look beautiful, Henry?"

Mr. Mathews' eyes were soft as he gazed at her. "She'll be the prettiest girl there."

"Oh, not really pretty, grandpa!" said Eileen. But she was thrilled. Yes, perhaps she was actually pretty tonight. The dress, the excitement had done something for her.

The corsage was pinned to her shoulder after much deliberation as to the right spot, and then she went upstairs to her room again, where she sat stiffly on the edge of her chair for a long time, rigid with expectation. At last she heard the sound of a car drawing up at the curb outside, followed by Bill's deep voice in the hall downstairs a moment later. She gathered up her belongings with feverish haste and, at the last moment, tried to coax the recalcitrant curl in the right direction. She made it worse and spent an agonizing

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Coasting Hills

By Helen Howland Prommel

Hills in every country town
All were meant for coasting down
When the snow is packed and tight,
Bright and sparkling in the light.

Soon each hill is sprouting sleds,
Waving legs and bobbing heads,
Whizzing swift as steel can fly
Over snow, hard-packed and dry.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Have you seen what your neighbor's knitting with MINERVA NYLON yarn?

Everybody, but everybody's got Minerva Nylon on their needles! And small wonder. It's made of 100% staple nylon—and it's a marvel in the washtub! It never shrinks, sags or stretches—and dries like a breeze without any fuss or blocking. It's light, fluffy and heavenly soft—yet it's a miracle for wear. Minerva Nylon comes in colors sweet enough to eat—and glory be—it's moth-proof!

CABLE-STITCH SLIPOVERS for father, mother, and son with matching socks, and anklets. You can make all three for very little money from Minerva Nylon Sweater and Sock Yarn.

Write for the Minerva Nylon Instruction Book

Please send 35¢ (no stamps, please) to James Lees and Sons Company, Dept. MN-3, Bridgeport, Pa. with your name and address for Minerva Nylon Instruction Book No. 77 and a list of Minerva dealers in your community.

ANOTHER FAMOUS PRODUCT . . . LEES CARPETS minute trying to fix it while her grandmother called from downstairs.

"I'm coming," she cried.

At last she composed her face and went downstairs. They were all in the living room, Bill tall and handsome in his dinner jacket. She was suddenly overcome with nervousness, although she smiled brightly as she greeted him and thanked him for the flowers. After that, things were a vague blur and she was conscious of a confusion of impressions as she went out into the night, got into the car and was introduced to the two other couples. Vi and Roy, Norma and Red—they were all meaningless names and she could see them only dimly. But their voices and the things they said impressed her deeply.

They're all so smooth, she thought in wonder.

The two girls talked in cool, bored tones and even their laughter had a languid quality. As for the boys, they were like no other boys she had ever known. Their phrasing, their handling of a cigarette, their every movement stamped them as men of the world.

By the time they arrived at the hotel, Eileen had been reduced to a state of awed speechlessness. When she followed the two girls into the ladies' room she saw that Vi and Norma, although not actually pretty, looked very different from the way she did.

Vi was a tall brunette with gaminlike features and her dress—a concoction of brilliantly striped silk skirt and tight off-the-shoulder blouse—was both daring and arresting.

Norma was tiny, blond and fragile. She was something to quicken the pulse in flame-colored satin that revealed every curve of her figure.

EILEEN became uneasy as she gazed at herself in the mirror. Somehow, the glory of the pink taffeta had faded.

"Have you ever dated Bill before?" Vi asked her.

"No, this is the first time," she said.

After that the girls seemed to lose interest in her. Eileen followed them into the softly lit foyer. Her heart swelled when she heard the music which flowed from the other room, soft and rich as cream. A moment later she was with Bill at the threshold of the huge ballroom.

"Dance?" he asked.

She nodded and stumbled a little as she slipped into his arms. Bill was a beautiful, tricky dancer, she discovered, but her tenseness made her unconsciously push and strain against his steps.

Oh, what's wrong? she thought in a panic. What's the matter with me?

After a few moments he slowed his steps and began to lead her patiently into a simple routine, steering her across the floor as if she were a dowager.

But I can dance, she wanted to protest. I'm good, really I am!

When the music paused between sessions, she surreptitiously took out her handkerchief and mopped at her hands, but her heart dipped when she saw Bill do the same thing. With an effort, she cleared her throat and arranged her face in an animated smile.

"Isn't the music terrific?" she asked gaily.

"I would say just fair," he said. "The brass isn't bad, though."

"No, it's quite good."

Her mind strained feverishly for something clever to say and she tried to recall some of the humorous lines she had written down on her list. She could think of nothing.

The music began again. Still stiff and awkward from nervousness, she followed his lead, hating his careful pace, knowing that he was gauging his steps to the pitiful measure of her dancing.

It had never occurred to her, during these past few weeks, that she would not have a good time tonight. But now uncertainty had pierced through her assurance.

She gazed around her at the other girls and was filled with a passionate envy. They were brilliant butterflies that flitted gaily about the room, striking and individual in their colorful [illegible]. The dress that had looked so beautiful at home now seemed without style or flavor.

Pieces from the open-stock Olde-Salem Collection

Accent ON A CANOPY

Build your bedroom around the enchanted-princess canopy bed from Drexel's Olde-Salem Collection. You're glad to give the place of honor to this romantic masterpiece in solid mahogany, with its rich hand-carving and its graceful urn finials. A bonnet-top highboy and other pieces from the Olde-Salem Collection echo its beauty in carefully-matched mahogany. The traditionally fine Drexel craftsmanship is a part of this grouping—feather-touch dust-proofed drawers, easy-to-dust surfaces, and a satiny, hand-rubbed finish are only some of the extras you get. See the Olde-Salem Collection at fine department and furniture stores. Look for the "by Drexel" brandmark—your proof of superior craftsmanship.

Write today for bookdent"—27 pages in ture. 25c in coin only. Address: 272
Huffman Road,
Drexel, N. C.

by Drexel

Drexel FURNITURE COMPANY

DREXEL, NORTH CAROLINA

MAKERS OF QUALITY BEDROOM AND DINING ROOM FURNITURE

Glimmer glamour

Every home-proud lady of the house loves the gleam of toilet bowl cleanliness. And the ones who know—they get it with Sani-Flush. It cleans away ugly stains and invisible, germy film in a jiffy. Makes toilet bowls sparkle without scrubbing. Disinfects, too.

Safe in all toilet systems—works in hard or soft water. Two sizes. All grocers have it. The Hygienic Products Co., Canton 2, Ohio.

Sani-Flush

SAVES MESSY WORK

REPAIR TOILET SEATS WITH PLASTIC WOOD

EASY! No skill required. Handles like putty . . . and hardens into wood.

CASH OFFER!

WOMEN wanted to forward new and renewal subscriptions for Ladies' Home Journal, The Saturday Evening Post, Country Gentleman, Jack and Jill, Holiday and other popular publications. You can earn big commissions—devote spare or full time. For details write to

CURTIS CIRCULATION COMPANY
829 Independence Square, Philadelphia 5, Penna.

EARN MONEY
With Everyday Cards

Women, Turn Spare Time Into Cash!
Make welcome extra money with glorious Wallace Brown Everyday Greeting Cards. Up to 8c profit for you on each 50c $1 All-Occasion Assortment – 16 exquisite cards for Birthday, Get-Well, Baby's Birth, Friendship, Sympathy, Anniversary, Friends, other boy-and-girl Everyday occasions with 14 other fast-selling assortments. Thank and Jill, Gift Wrappings, Easter Folder, Notes, Personal Notes, Birthday Note, Imported Linen Notes. Mail coupon for samples on approval. No experience or ORGANIZATION! A BIG FUN-TO-DO FUND-RAISING PLAN!

RUSH Coupon FOR Samples

WALLACE BROWN, INC. 225 Fifth Ave., Dept. P NEW YORK 10, NEW YOR

P-9

NAME

ADDRESS

CITY STATE

She danced with Roy, with Red and then with Bill again, and although she saw Norma and Vi drifting by in the arms of other boys, there were no other dances arranged for her. All three boys were the same in her presence, treating her kindly and with a terrible politeness that filled her with a sick despair. It was all wrong. She knew it was all wrong.

While dancing with Bill, she stumbled and he stopped suddenly. "Perhaps you're tired. Shall we take time out for some punch?"

She nodded and they weaved their way through the dancers to the table against the wall. Bill found two chairs in a corner and brought over two brimming glasses.

For the first time since the evening had begun, reality and Eileen's former dreams seemed to fuse for a fleeting moment, and when Bill looked at her in the half-darkness with what appeared to be expectancy, she strained desperately for something to say, anything that would stamp her as an entity, a personality to be recognized and respected.

A line from her list flashed into her mind and before she thought, she blurted out, "Do your eyes bother you?"

"Eyes?" He frowned. "Why, do they look bad? I've been meaning to go to an eye doctor, but ——"

"Oh, no, no," she said faintly. "You don't understand, I ——" But to her vast relief, a gathering buzz of excitement announced the Grand March and the arrival of Miss Lynne Tremaine. "Oh, isn't she gorgeous!"

She was a truly beautiful woman, her features finished and perfect, her hair a striking shade of copper that was dramatic with the stark white of her clinging chiffon dress. Applause rippled through the room and Eileen found that she and Bill had become part of the throng that marched in lines of four.

If it's very painful for you to criticize your friends—you're safe in doing it. But if you take the slightest pleasure in it—that's the time to hold your tongue.

—ALICE DUER MILLER.

A speech from the class president followed, and then Bill mumbled something in her ear and disappeared. The music began again, and as couples drifted to the floor Eileen stood still in a kind of panic.

"Excuse me," they said as they brushed past her to the dance floor. "Pardon me, may we get through?"

She kept moving back and forth to give them room, a terrible little smile pasted across her face. Finally she turned and walked toward the foyer and it was then that she saw Bill in the far corner, dancing with a willowy blond girl in pale green.

Her steps became heavy and she was suddenly very tired. I'm having a rotten time, she thought bitterly, rotten, rotten, rotten. She felt betrayed by everything that had happened, as if the golden quality of her dreams had given her the right to expect something better than the dross she had received.

For a long time she sat in the almost empty ladies' room, opening and closing her compact, running a comb through her hair when someone looked her way. With all her heart, she longed to be home again.

The room filled suddenly with girls and smoke, indicating that a dance group had ended, and she shrank back in her corner, catching a glimpse of flame-colored satin three dressing tables away. She knew that Norma and Vi were there, but she could not face talking to them and was grateful that she was shielded from their view.

In the corner of her mirror, she suddenly sighted Norma's face as she gazed critically at herself. And in a sudden lull of sound, she saw and heard the few disjointed words forming on her lips: "Eileen" and "Corn-fed? Oh, brother!" and then one whole sentence: "She looks as if she's waiting to catch the bride's bouquet."

EILEEN'S body stiffened. Why, they're talking about me, she thought. Humiliation, as hot and thick as lava, poured through her until she felt choked and suffocated.

She turned her head blindly and willed with all her being that she would not be seen. Not until the room had emptied at the sound of drifting music did she move again. Then she rose and walked over to the long mirror.

For a long moment she stared at herself, and her mouth took on a pinched look. They were right, she thought, I look just like a bridesmaid. This was a bridesmaid's dress that she had chosen, and neither she nor her grandmother had known it. She looked all wrong in it, it was a fitting complement for her bony, flat-chested figure and her undistinguished features. No wonder Bill hadn't attempted to arrange other dances for her—she was considered corn-fed, impossible, a dud.

Her mind darted back to the days before the dance, and the dreams she had had were now soft and painful spots that the probing finger of her memory touched again and again. She saw herself in gym class, confidently leading her classmates to the drone of the scratchy dance record; she felt again the wild enthusiasm she had known for the dress; watched herself go through the long ritual of getting ready for the dance, so certain in the end that she was lovely, that she was going to have a wonderful time.

SHE turned from the mirror, her mouth curved in a bitter little smile of disillusionment, her throat tight. She wondered how she could go outside again, how she could face the music and the laughter. Then she swallowed painfully. I've got to go through with it, she thought, I've just got to.

There was a little click in the far corner of the room and a door she had not noticed before opened, revealing the uniformed attendant. For a moment she peered inside, then turned to someone in back of her.

"It's all right now, Miss Tremaine," she said. "The place is almost empty—I knew it would be during the Lucky Number Dance. No one will bother you here."

There was the swish of silk and the murmur of a voice saying "Thank you" and then Lynne Tremaine was in the room, her lovely face a smooth porcelain oval against the coppery tones of her hair. For a moment they stared at each other, the beautiful actress and the thin, trembling girl.

The woman smiled. "Hello," she said. "It's a lovely dance, isn't it? Having a good time?"

"I—I——" Eileen swallowed. "All right, I guess," she said thickly. How beautiful she is, she thought humbly. I wonder what it must feel like to be as beautiful as that. Sudden tears stung at her eyes.

The actress gave her a darting look that seemed to encompass everything—the undeveloped figure in the ill-fitting dress, the freckles that stood out against the white skin, the curve of suffering about the childish mouth. Then she bent quickly toward the mirror and smoothed an eyebrow with apparent absorption.

"How a dance like this brings back things to me," she said. "I can remember the first dance I ever went to and what an awful time I had—the worst in my whole life."

Eileen's mouth dropped a little. "Y-you did?" she said.

"My brother had to take me," the actress said, taking out her compact, "and what a mess I was, fat and with braces on my teeth—brother! He could hardly get anyone to dance with me, and I had made my own dress and it came apart at the waistline." She shuddered a little and then laughed. "I suffered terribly," she said, smiling at Eileen in the mirror, "but of course it all seems funny now—just one of those evenings in your youth that you always remember. It seemed so important to me then, every awful minute of it. But now"—she snapped her compact shut—"now it's just something that I laugh about with my husband sometimes."

Eileen found her voice at last. "I—I can't believe it," she said. "I just can't picture you not being beautiful."

Lynne Tremaine laughed. "Well, thank you!" she said. "But believe me, I didn't

Two smart ways to Telechron your days

An alarm for everyone in the family . . . wakes up each one on time. Little Tel is so low priced, it's easy to have several. Silent . . . it lets you sleep. Accurate . . . it's always on the dot. Convenient . . . it never needs winding or regulating. Its self-starting Telechron motor makes it the most dependable electric clock in the world. Ivory colored or brown plastic case.....$4.95 plus tax.

A Telechron clock for your kitchen . . . helps you time your chores and your cooking. Decorator is gay and new and sparkling. With white cut-out numeral band and hands, it has a cheery dial to add to your color scheme . . . in red, blue, gray or tan. And you can hang in the conventional manner or recess so that numeral band is flush with the wall. Electric, it will give you years of on-the-dot service without winding or regulating.....$5.95 plus tax. Telechron Inc., Ashland, Massachusetts. A General Electric Affiliate.

Telechron
REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.
ELECTRIC CLOCKS

Prices and specifications subject to change without notice.

The handiest thing in cotton...

RED CROSS* COTTON BALLS!

On sale at drug counters everywhere!

•In the Nursery!

•For First Aid!

•For Cosmetics!

Important: For the softest, whitest, most absorbent surgical cotton obtainable...insist on Red Cross* Cotton Balls! Made from Johnson & Johnson Red Cross* Cotton, the sterile, long-fibered cotton preferred by 7 out of 10 users of absorbent cotton!

*This product has no connection whatever with the American National Red Cross.

Johnson & Johnson

...the most trusted name in surgical dressings.

30 GREETING CARDS ALL DIFFERENT for ALL occasions
30 different folders with colorful designs and beautiful sentiments. Matching envelopes. Anniversary, birthday, illness, sympathy, etc.
reg. $2 value only $1.00 postage prepaid
HOUSE of CARDS
434 N. Gay St., Dept. 5, Baltimore 2, Md.

KNITTING YARNS SEND TODAY FOR NEW FREE SAMPLE BOOKLET
POSTAGE FREE! MONEY BACK GUARANTEE! Direct from our own great factories.
YARN HEADQUARTERS, Dept. 'L'
716 CHESTNUT ST., PHILA. 6, PA.

Have FUN—and MAKE MONEY, Too!
Sell Everyday Cards
Show these adorable Greeting Cards. Enjoy extra cash. Friends will be delighted with smart Birthday, Get-Well, Secret Pal, Kiddy, Easter and Relative Assortments. They'll buy $1 box of 14 Folders in a jiffy. You keep up to 50c PROFIT! Also Gift Wraps, Notes, Printed Stationery. Write for Samples on Approval.
MIDWEST CARD COMPANY, 415 N. 8th St., Dept. 5-K ST. LOUIS 1, MO.

CIGARETTES
ALL POPULAR BRANDS
$1.50 Per Carton POSTPAID
5 Carton Minimum Order
Send Check or Money Order
Add 10c Per Carton West of the Mississippi
DANDY SALES Box 325 Wilmington, Delaware

Fibs* is the Tampon with Rounded Ends... the only Tampon
"Quilted" for Comfort...
"Quilted" for Safety...
Next time try Fibs
(internal sanitary protection)
*T. M. REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

Promptly relieves COUGHS of
CHEST COLDS
Breaks Up Surface Congestion, Too!
At the first sign of a chest cold — rub Musterole on chest, throat and back. It instantly starts to relieve coughs and tight soreness in chest muscles. Then good old reliable Musterole helps break up painful surface congestion and checks irritation. In 3 strengths. At all drugstores.
MUSTEROLE ®

begin to get pretty until I was about seventeen or eighteen. Before that, like every other girl, I went through the awkward age when you're just beginning to develop."

Eileen gazed at herself in the mirror and there was something in her eyes that made the other woman say suddenly:

"Now take a girl like yourself. You're going to be very pretty, I can see that. And when your figure matures a little, you'll wear clothes like a dream."

"I will?" Eileen's mouth dropped again.

Lynne Tremaine gazed at her critically, and when she spoke her voice was strong with decision. "Yes, you will. I can always tell." She picked up her little purse and turned toward the other door. "Well, good-by," she said, and then she paused, her eyes soft. "What's your name?"

"Eileen—Eileen Mathews."

"Well, so long, Eileen. And have a good time."

"I—I will." She watched the door close and then turned toward the mirror again, her eyes filled with wonder.

I'm going to be pretty, she thought; I'm going to wear clothes like a dream. It was already an accepted fact because Lynne Tremaine had said so. She knew, she thought in awe, she could tell.

A little flow of confidence began to trickle slowly through her veins, bringing with it a fortifying warmth. To think that Lynne Tremaine had once been unattractive, had suffered through an evening worse than this one! And now she could laugh about it, look back upon it as something funny, pathetically funny, to remember.

In a sudden reshifting of values, Eileen was able to see her own evening. It was as if for a long time her gaze had been thrust close to the fabric of her life and one glaringly ugly design had filled her eyes, blotting out everything else. But now the cloth had receded—farther and farther away it went until she saw with a sense of shock that the all-over pattern was tremendous and varied and that what she had considered huge and hideous was now only a tiny little mark tucked away in the corner.

Why, it's only one evening out of my life, she thought. It's something I'll laugh about later on too. It will all seem funny then.

For a flashing moment, she projected herself into the future and saw herself, pretty and wearing her clothes like a dream. She was seated at the dinner table in a charmingly appointed room and her four beautiful children watched her admiringly as she laughed with her husband, a tall, handsome man who was a graduate of Harvard. "You should have seen me that night!" she heard herself cry. "I was a mess—simply a mess!"

With a start, she returned to the present as two chattering girls entered the room. But her spirit was refreshed by what she had seen, and a sense of peace enveloped her. I might as well go back to the lions' den, she thought as she picked up her purse.

The music had stopped, and when she went outside to the foyer she found it crowded with buzzing groups of boys and girls. As she weaved her way across the room, she held her head at a charming angle, her steps were light and graceful and she seemed to walk in the beauty which she knew would someday be hers.

At the threshold of the ballroom, she saw Bill and the others leaning against a wall. A pall of boredom seemed to hang over them. The group no longer struck her as being glamorous and superior; they seemed like stale French pastries, the icing a little hardened, the filling spoiled. She realized, too, that she didn't like them very much. They were too knowing, too world-weary; they lacked the freshness and enthusiasm that were a part of youth.

Why, she thought, in a couple of years they'll be all burned out and I'll be just beginning to have fun.

Bill's face lit up with relief when he saw her. "Well," he said, "where have you been? We've been looking all over for you."

She smiled easily and leaned back against the wall, completely relaxed. "Oh," she said, "I got into a conversation with Lynne Tremaine in the ladies' room and I couldn't tear myself away. She's simply fascinating."

They gazed at her doubtfully, but a flurry of sound on the other side of the room pulled their heads in that direction. The mink-jacketed figure of Lynne Tremaine was on its way to the elevator, a swarm of young people surrounding it.

The actress caught Eileen's eye and waved her hand. "So long, Eileen," she called out. "Come and see me at the theater!"

Eileen waved back. "I will," she said. But she had not moved from her position, nor did her triumph reveal itself in her eyes.

"Well!" said Vi in sudden respect. "What did you talk about with her?"

"Oh," Eileen said, "just chitchat."

The music had begun again.

"Let's dance," said Bill quickly, grabbing her arm and steering her into the ballroom.

Eileen, with a body suddenly relaxed and free from strain, drifted off in his arms. He looked down at her in surprise and took two quick, experimental steps. She followed him easily.

"Hey!" he said. "You can really dance!"

She nodded, but didn't bother to answer, knowing that he was gazing down admiringly at her. I don't care a bit, she thought coolly, if you think I can dance or not—you're just an incident in my life, that's all.

"Freckles," he said in a teasing voice, his tones low and caressing, "I think I'll call you 'Freckle-face.'"

She looked up at him, her eyes faintly amused. "I may not have a face that has launched a thousand ships," she said, "but I've sent off a canoe or two in my time."

For a moment his face seemed locked in astonishment, then he threw back his head and whooped with laughter. "You're cute," he said. "Hey, you're cute!" He gripped her waist firmly and his feet moved quickly in an intricate series of steps. She followed him effortlessly, her eyes filled with a gathering wonder.

Why, it's all so easy, she thought; it's all so very easy.

Gliding, dipping, spinning in unison, they swirled toward the center of the floor and were lost in the sea of dancers. THE END

"Go ahead and say it! It tasted better the way your father made it."

Meet a Steelworker's Family

The Homestead works of Carnegie-Illinois Steel: 430 acres of furnaces and factories, smokestacks and railroad yards sprawl across the Monongahela Valley.

Arthur and Anne Crouse and seven lively reasons why their life is never dull.

by ROGER BUTTERFIELD

THE phonograph in the cozy living room at 822 Johnston Avenue, Pittsburgh, was blaring out "Hair of gold—eyes of blue—lips like cherry wi-i-ne." Steelworker Art Crouse, who had been cleaning up the second and final batch of family supper dishes, came in from the kitchen with a towel in his hand and a big grin on his face. His wife Anne jumped up from beside a pile of records on the floor and went to meet him. They clasped right hands and twirled back to back in 1949 jitterbug style, then went into a bunny-hug clinch that was reminiscent of the late 1920's.

All around the room their sons and daughters clapped hands and shouted approval. From the stairs, where they had halted on their way to bed at least fifteen minutes before, Kenny, aged 11, and Tubby, 9, chanted the words of the cowboy ballad in a high-pitched duet. Dolores, 19, peeked in from the little side parlor where she was ironing some of her cotton dresses. Janie, 7, who was sprawled out on the davenport in her bathrobe, supposedly recuperating from a cold, bounced up and down like a blue-eyed rubber doll. Gerald, aged 17, leaned back in Art's big easy chair and inspected his parents' steps with the critical eye

In Homestead's smoky, flame-lit Open Hearth No. 5, Art earns $138 every two weeks as a motor repairman. Once a track laborer, he learned his present skilled job by watching and helping the plant's electricians.

PHOTOGRAPHS BY JOSEPH DI PIETRO

"Something's always doing." Even though home's small (6 rooms for 9), it's where everyone has the most fun. Evenings, while the kids give comic books a workout, Art and Anne roll back the rug to try the latest in jive. "We couldn't sleep without dancing," says Anne, but adds that family living takes a firm hand as well as a pair of light feet. Neatness rules are enforced: "The first time one of them leaves something around, I tell them to pick it up. The second time I throw it out on the doorstep. The third time, it goes out the second-story window—there isn't any fourth."

10 Years Ago, Steelworker Arthur Cro

INDUSTRY PAYS

Have bigger pay envelopes matched rising prices? Ten years ago the average manufacturing worker made $23.86 a week. Today, he makes $52.95. His over-all cost of living has risen 76 per cent, with food climbing 128 per cent, clothing 99 per cent and furnishings for his home 94 per cent. The Bureau of Labor Statistics table below shows how wages have changed in some industries since 1939.

Occupation	Average Weekly Wage
	1939	1948
Steelworkers	$27.52	$57.7
Auto workers	32.91	61.2
Shipbuilders	31.91	59.7
Building-construction workers	31.70	70.5
Chemical workers	25.59	56.7
Textile workers	18.17	37.6

"We know we're living from p of a connoisseur. The half-smile on his handsome blond features seemed to say, "Not bad—not bad at all!"

Art and Anne danced to the end of the record, and then danced through two more for good measure. "That's the way it always is with us," said Anne, flouncing into a chair after the third number. "We dance at home every day. Why, we couldn't sleep without dancing."

The dancing and "growing up with the kids" have kept the Crouses young in spirit and looks through twenty rather hectic years of married life. Arthur Roy Crouse, aged 39, is a tall, dark-complexioned, athletic type who could almost pass for a teen-ager when he goes out on the front lawn to throw a football, or give his sons some pointers in boxing. (Boxing is a special family tradition with the Crouses; Art's Uncle Albert "Buck" Crouse was once a top boxer in the middleweight class.) Anne Delegowski Crouse is 38, but hardly looks it. She has red-blond hair, bright blue eyes, a wonderful flair for telling funny family stories, and a

It's competitive over the crossword: Jeff Gerald, 17, and Ken, 14, nicely equable. A champion boxer, baseball and basketball player, Gerald has won a scholarship at the Hunt Armory, home of Cornell's Navy-Tech sports

Big ideas for the future: Jerome, 13, wants to be a cartoonist; Tubby, 9, a "special kind of doctor." But they'll be home week ends when mum and dad have the door on the latch and serve ice cream to all comer

"Wash behind your ears," Doll, 19, tells Janie, 7. A though she's her mother's best second-in-comma when king-size family needs managing, she plans t to marry, likes her job as waitress in a delicatesse ned $37 a Week. Today He Earns $69.

How the Crouses Spend Their Money Each Month

Food	$160.00
Clothing	30.00
Utilities and Rent	43.82
Insurance	10.80
Phone	5.18
Medical	25.00
Recreation and Miscellaneous	9.00
Total	$283.80

Irs. Crouse explains that she does not keep monthly accounts but has figured his average budget from last year's total expenditures. High dental bills account for the gap between income and outgo, with Art making up the difference oing outside mechanical jobs. Utilities are usually included with the rent; last ear, however, the Glen Hazel community used more than its quota. Thus the rouses paid about $2.45 every three months for fuel, cooking gas and electricity.

"He'll make some girl a good wife." Anne teases Arthur Francis, 16, about his many dates and his talent for baking cakes and pies. She'll admit, however, that this knack for K.P. is handy in a family where all meals must be served in two shifts.

pay—but worrying won't help."

youthful voice that is constantly bubbling up into laughter or song. Art thinks quite frankly that she is the most interesting and delightful woman he has ever met.

"I never introduced her to a friend of mine who didn't idolize her," he says. "She's true blue—and original all the way through."

These sentiments are fully reciprocated by Anne, who says there never was a better husband in the world than Art. "He's everything you could want in a man," she says. "A good provider, a perfect lover, and he can do anything around the house. And I mean anything. Every time I had to go to the hospital for another baby, he took care of the whole family."

The Crouses, on the whole, are a happy bunch of extroverts; their living room is constantly spilling with their own and their neighbors' families; youthful visitors rarely bother to ring the bell, but just open the door, shout and come in. Almost every Saturday night the youngsters have a phonograph and dancing party, with pop and ice cream for pajama present from Doll sends Tubby and Janie urrying to the iron so they'll look "just right." ouses don't attempt to budget clothing expenses. f we can't raise the money, we all wait a while."

Busiest appliance in the Crouse household, the telephone: kids have worn out two sets of dials. Ken likes to serenade his girl by wire, a hobby that's still second to patching the family britches or baby sitting for the neighbors.

Perched two flights of steps above the street, the Crouse home is part of a Govt. housing pro

"Have your kids early and grow up with 'em— that's the way to be happy."

refreshments. Art and Anne take a leading part in all such festivities and are accepted without restraint. Their recipe for married happiness, as expressed in their own vernacular, is:

"Have your kids early and grow up with 'em!"

That they have followed their own advice is amply proved by a quick run-down of the seven—count them, seven—young Crouses. First there is Dolores ("Doll"), the oldest, a good-looking girl who inherited her mother's reddish hair and her father's dark eyes. She is the quietest member of the whole family; she says she is more interested in earning her own living than in getting married right now, and she has been working as a waitress since she left high school in 1947. Next comes Gerald, a typical 17-year-old, with blond curly hair and a dimpled grin that most girls his age find irresistible. He is much interested in dates, dancing and every kind of sport, and expects to join the Navy this year if the Army doesn't draft him first. Arthur Francis, 16, is even blonder than his older brother, with a pink complexion that always looks as though he had just emerged from a scrubbing. He likes to bake cakes and make fudge, and his mother says he will "make some girl a good wife." Jerome, 13, is another dark-haired one; he draws cartoons and sketches of his schoolmates, and does very well at it. Kenneth, 11, is the family's hard-luck kid; he lost a year at school because of sickness, and is now in the same grade with his younger brother. But he has the broadest, most infectious smile in the family, and is lively as a cricket. His hobbies are sewing and taking care of babies. Alvin ("Tubby"), aged 9, is definitely a glamour child, with dark blue eyes and long dark lashes; he likes to sing and tell stories, and recently informed his mother he is going to be a "special kind of doctor" when he grows up. Alvira Jane, the baby of the family, is a gay, giggly, curly-haired tomboy, who is currently not at all worried because a few of her front teeth are missing.

By far the busiest appliance in the Crouses' home is the telephone; they have worn the numbers off two sets of dials, and are now on their third. A large share of the incoming calls are from girls trying to get in touch with Gerald or Arthur Francis, whom Anne happily calls "my two little wolves." One day when the phone rang again after a particularly long siege of calls Anne picked up the receiver and shouted, "Grand Central Station. Mrs. Crouse speaking." . . . "Oh, I'm sorry," gasped a schoolgirl voice at the other end. "I didn't know I had New York!"

All this dating very naturally reminds Anne of the day when Art first stepped into her life. It happened on the Sunday after Easter in 1928, when she was walking from her home to her job as a telephone operator. She was wearing a new Easter outfit, all vivid red from head to toe, with her golden-red hair massed appetizingly under a pretty red hat. She must have made a pleasing picture, for presently a roadster full of laughing young folks drew alongside, and a boy's voice called out: "Boy, do I go for red!"

Anne kept on walking, but the boy got out and caught up with her.

"Come on," he said, "we just need one girl for a three-couple date, and you're elected."

Anne brushed him off—"I'm on my way to work," she told him.

"Well, let's us take you there," begged the boy. "Come on, get in the rumble seat." And almost before she realized it, she was sitting in back with Art and another girl.

"I started to cry a little because I was really scared," she says, "so they stopped the car and let me ride in front. But Art made me tell him what time I was through work that night. I tried to fool him by telling him an hour late, but he was there anyway, with a big bunch of flowers. He had gone and called up the company to find out when I was through.

"Now here's the really funny part of the story. Art had his regular girl with him that day, his fiancée. He even had her picture and her initials tattooed on his right arm, near the elbow. He broke up with her and became engaged to me right after that, but he couldn't get rid of the tattoo. I used to wonder why he never wore short-sleeved shirts on the hot summer days in

"It was love right off for us, and we've never split up." Anne first met Art on her way to work and came off the switchboard shift to find him waiting around with flowers. They were married three months later—ages 17 and 19.

"The boys could box when they could stand." Their current ambition is to follow the footwork of a great-uncle who was a top-flight boxer.

"We've taught the kids to work hard and fight square—they'll do all right."

July just before we were married. And then one day I caught him, when he rolled up his sleeves to help do the dishes at our house. I saw that picture in blue ink and I said, 'Oh-oh, so that's your real girl after all!' He still has her there, don't you, Art?"

"Never mind about that," grumbles Art. "I was just a crazy kid in those days—I didn't have enough sense to come in out of the rain."

"In those days," mimicks Anne. "Just what do you think you are now?"

The place where Art works is the biggest steel mill in the whole Pittsburgh district—the gigantic Homestead works of the Carnegie-Illinois Steel Corporation, principal subsidiary of U. S. Steel. To the beholder, looking down from the crest of a near-by hill, the Homestead works is a vast and awe-inspiring cluster of furnaces, factories, smokestacks and railroad yards covering 430 acres in the narrow Monongahela River valley. Corporation statistics tell you that Homestead's furnaces devour 300 carloads of raw materials a day, and turn out 3,800,000 tons of steel a year; that the electric power which they consume would service the homes of more than a million people; that there are 450 separate buildings in the plant, linked by 150 miles of railroad track.

Art is just one of 14,000 people employed at Homestead, but that does not mean he is a mere industrial automaton. His job as motor repairman in the open-hearth-furnace department requires plenty of skill and individual initiative. Essentially he is a trouble shooter; the whole plant runs on electric power, and Art's job is to go wherever there is an electrical breakdown or delay, and get things rolling again. The job takes him up into the highest girders and down into every nook and corner of the huge, smoky, flame-lit building which is known as Open Hearth No. 5.

Art is proud of his job, and takes his responsibilities seriously. Thirteen years ago, when he got his first job at Homestead, he was a "second helper" on a furnace—practically a day laborer. He had quit school in the seventh grade (very foolishly, he admits now) and he was not equipped for any trade. But he learned the electrical work by watching and helping other men, and today he is one of the best. Lately he has been "doing turns" for foremen on vacation, and sooner or later he will rate a foreman's job himself.

His work is dangerous; in 1944 a high-voltage switchbox he was repairing blew up in his face, blinded him, and seared his skin from his chest to the roots of his hair. After seven harrowing days in the hospital he regained his sight, but the burns laid him up for nearly six months, during which he received only $18 a week in (Continued on Page 195)

★ HOW AMERICA LIVES ★

"I'd rather be here with my gang than alone in the biggest palace on earth." But when kids are grown, Anne wants to try an outdoor life in the Far West.

Safe! easy! fast!

CLEANS KITCHEN SINKS

No scratchy grit to dull shiny surfaces.
No hard scrubbing. No rough hands.

Compare Bon Ami with any other cleanser!

You can't help but notice the difference. It's so smooth. So safe. Not a particle of grit to leave dirt-catching scratches. Not a trace of harsh caustics to make your hands red or rough. Yet fine, white Bon Ami gets even stubborn kitchen grease. Gets it fast. And actually polishes as it cleans. Use Bon Ami in your kitchen. Use it in your bathroom, too. You'll find you save work—save time—with the fast, easy, safe cleanser that "hasn't scratched yet!"

FOR SPARKLING WINDOWS USE BON AMI CAKE

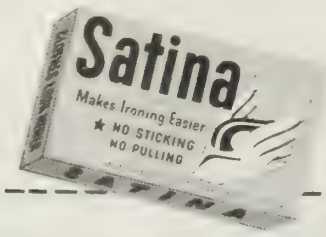
No streaks. No oily dust-catching film. Polishes as it cleans. Thrifty, too—cleans 10 windows, inside and out, for a penny.

Bon Ami

"hasn't scratched yet!"

"My ironing is 3 times easier with Satina in my starch!"

WRITES MRS. GERARD SULLIVAN, ROSEDALE, L. I.



"SATINA GETS MY VOTE as an A-1 helper," writes Mrs. Sullivan. "It makes starched ironing 3 times easier, to say the very least. There's never any sticking."

Satina is a wonderful ironing aid that you use with boiled or unboiled starch. It dissolves easily in boiling water or the boiling starch solution.

It not only makes ironing lots easier, it makes clothes smell fresher, look newer, and stay clean longer, too!

FREE FULL-SIZE PACKAGE

WE'RE SO SURE you'll love Satina, if we can just get you to try it once, that we're sending you a full-size package—I enclose 10¢ for handling and postage! Just you try it and judge Satina for yourself!

SATINA, Dept. 79, Battle Creek, Michigan

Dear Sirs: Satina sounds good to me. Now I'd like a free full-size package to see how much easier it makes my starched ironing.

NAME _____

STREET _____

CITY _____ STATE _____

A PRODUCT OF GENERAL FOODS

Women say: "Put SATINA in your starch! It makes starched ironing 3 times easier!"

What Makes a Child Unsociable?

By GLADYS DENNY SHULTZ

"SOCIABLE" is the word for the Crouse family, if you take it as a whole. "I hope I can die dancing," says Anne Crouse, mother of seven. She and Art, her husband, enjoy people, and take in as many parties as their domestic burdens permit. There is a steady stream of youngsters trooping in and out; often you may find a chattering group in every room of the little house.

Only nineteen-year-old Dolores, the eldest, seems to take little or no part in the social life abounding in the community. In contrast to the friendly, extroverted manner of the other Crouses, she is tight-lipped and unsmiling. She never goes to a party unless someone practically drags her there; she doesn't care for boy friends and insists she won't get married, though she is devoted to her little sister and younger brothers, and fond of children in general. She has worked fantastically long hours at her restaurant job, and loved every minute. She does her home tasks diligently and well. But when it comes to parties and fun and gaiety, she wants no part of it.

All that might be understandable if Dolores were unattractive, but she isn't. This dark, silent girl has a lovely figure and good features. Her face lights up with sweetness on the rare occasions when she smiles. Once one penetrates the hard, protective shell Dolores has drawn about her, one finds that she is intelligent, gentle, a pleasant and considerate companion. If Dolores would smile more often, if she would cultivate the approachable, outgoing manner which characterizes the other Crouses, the little world of Hazel Housing plainly could be hers.

Yet Dolores not only refuses to make the small effort it would take to open the door to the things most girls yearn for; she brushes aside the opportunities that come her way for companionship with boys, and for fun with people her own age.

ANNE CROUSE shrugs her shoulders when her daughter's withdrawal from the life flowing so richly about her is mentioned. "She's always been like that, ever since she was a little girl. We just let her go her own way. It's all you can do."

Perhaps parents can't be blamed too much for annoyance with teen-agers who cut themselves off deliberately from the good times, the social approval folk their age are supposed to want, and which are an important part of their development.

And Dolores Crouse is by no means alone in this type of behavior. In many families where there are several children, one is inclined to be shy and withdrawn. It happens with only children too. We hear so much about the boy-crazy and party-mad teen-agers that we are inclined to overlook the ones who decline dancing lessons, stay away from parties, won't go even to a friend's house if they know members of the opposite sex will be there.

(And there are countless grownups, too, who fail to get what they might out of life because they don't know how to use the really excellent qualities for friendliness that they possess. Witness the popularity of the Dale Carnegie books!)

Perhaps no type of behavior is more baffling to a parent. We could understand and sympathize if a youngster were ugly or deformed, or barred by cruel and unjust prejudice from social participation. But what do you do with offspring whose only barriers to the full enjoyment of life and youth are self-raised, and seemingly willfully at that?

True, such an attitude during adolescence doesn't necessarily mean a youngster may not pull out of it later on, marry, perhaps become very well adjusted socially. But the beautiful years of youth are lost, in one important sense. Those who have missed the gaiety that should be part of the teen-age period always feel a lack. Sometimes they try to make up for it later, when that type of gaiety is not very becoming.

And another thing must be taken into account. Every girl wants a good time, attention from boys; in her heart she dreams of marriage. When a nineteen-year-old with all the potentialities for gaining these things persists in turning her back on them, something is wrong.

WHAT would make a normal, intelligent, attractive girl deliberately unsociable? Dolores mentions several items in her own case: a missing tooth or two, of which she is morbidly conscious; lack of dancing skill; sensitiveness to the opinion of others. "I don't like to go to parties or be in any kind of crowd because I imagine people are looking at me, and I don't like to be looked at."

Possibly reasons such as this play some part with every withdrawn, introverted adolescent. Teen-agers are often agonizingly aware of physical blemishes; nearly all feel inept in social skills when they make their first excursions out into the world of mixed parties and of friendships with the opposite sex. But the majority do not let their fears and shortcomings stand in the way of having as good a time as it is possible to have.

If they do, we must realize that in some way self-esteem, confidence in the power to hold one's own in the society of others, has been undermined. The girl who is sure of herself doesn't mind being looked at—far from it. Those who expect to have a good time at parties can't be kept away from them. It takes a deep and painful feeling of inadequacy indeed to cause a girl in her late teens to absent herself from all situations where she might get to meet and know congenial young men.

Sometimes timidity in social participation arises from nothing more complicated than the fact that, for one reason or another, a youngster has had not much opportunity to form friendships. Too careful parents, overcritical of playmates, fearful of relationships with the opposite sex, may bring this about. So can living in remote places, where social contacts are few; or going to schools where chances to know the opposite sex are limited.

But this has not been the case with Dolores, nor with a great many others who suffer from unsociable attitudes. To find the cause here, we must dig more deeply.

Stern, repressive discipline, the reason for which is not understood by a child, can destroy the feeling that he or she is wanted and secure. Hard spankings (a form of discipline on which many parents preen themselves) which seemed to "cure" a minor fault, or entirely natural child behavior, thus may have an aftermath in sullenness, withdrawal, general unsociability.

Where there is antagonism between mother and daughter, a phenomenon not uncommonly seen, it often happens that the more social and outgoing the mother, the more the daughter draws into herself. A very brusque, ungracious, indrawn college freshman, who never mentioned her mother and displayed no picture of her, brought the following comment from her roommate: "I deduce that Alice's mother is either dead or a demon clubwoman." The second guess proved to be correct.

Sometimes it's an attractive, extroverted brother or sister—or perhaps several of them—who makes a timid, sensitive one feel that to try to compete socially is hopeless. This can happen even when no antagonism is present. Or the eldest of a brood, particularly when responsibility is taken seriously, may find it hard to play. ("Oh, yes!" says Dolores Crouse, in one of her rare displays of feeling. "I feel so old, so very serious!")

Perhaps the roots of the trouble go back to early childhood, when the love and attention of the parents were centered on a new arrival. Favoritism of the parents for another child, or seeming favoritism for a frail brother or sister who needs special care, may give a feeling of having been rejected to a child too young to understand.

In fact, there are many possible reasons for unsociability, but in effect they boil down to this: Somewhere along the line, the indrawn adolescent has received a hurt. Not stubbornness, but a desire not to repeat the hurt, underlies the refusal to enter situations where there might be further rejection.

"I get hurt very easily," says Dolores, "and I don't like to be hurt." Who does?

So let's not shrug off the unsociable adolescent as a bad job, for whom nothing can be done. Let's recognize that a girl locked tightly within herself, as Dolores is, in reality often is far more in need of help than the young extrovert who worries her parents by dating too much, staying out too late and betraying rather too much interest in the opposite sex. Dolores and girls like her have all the qualities it takes to permit them to have a fine, happy youth. The emotional blocks that stand in the way can be removed if the parental approach is sympathetic and loving.

All our progress is an unfolding, like the vegetable bud. You have first an instinct, then an opinion, then a knowledge. Trust the instinct to the end, though you can render no reason. —EMERSON.

First of all, remediable physical blemishes should be corrected. In Dolores' case, the teeth that cause her so much distress need to be taken care of for the sake of her morale, as well as for health reasons. Many teen-agers hide away because of pimply skins, so often suffered at this time, and usually curable. Whatever the blemish that is bothering our sensitive adolescent, let's see that it is removed, if it is possible to do so.

Second, let's do something about a lack of social skills. For instance, what could be simpler than for Art Crouse, or one of the older boys, to put records on the phonograph and insist that Dolores dance with him? This is exactly what one father did when his daughter confessed that she stayed away from parties because she didn't dance well. This girl was enough like Dolores to be her twin, though she lived in a mansion, had gone to private schools and had received all the "advantages" she would permit her parents to give her. In her case, natural sensitiveness had been intensified by a scandal in which her mother had figured. The father could not wipe out the scandal, but he could help his daughter to attain a skill that would build confidence in herself. Aided by the oldest son, he soon had the girl tripping lightly and expertly. Big brother then escorted her to several dances, to make sure that she got partners. Thus that particular obstacle to social participation was pushed out of the way.

It seems reasonable that Dolores Crouse, too, would enjoy both boys and parties more if the two main reasons she gives for her withdrawal from social life were removed.

There are other things parents might well do when an adolescent "stubbornly" refuses to take part in recreations, to be gracious and pleasant, to make herself inviting to the other sex:

1. Let's examine carefully our own attitudes toward this child. Have we allowed hostility and antagonism to arise in ourselves as a result of personality clashes? If so, we must replace these with sympathy and a genuine desire to help.

2. Do we nag and criticize the youngster about unsociable behavior? Then let's stop it immediately. Instead, let's try to find out why the child is unsociable, and see if we can correct the cause.

3. Do we build up the child's self-esteem by praising good traits and calling attention to attractive features? A host of homely, awkward people go about the world having a wonderful time, because somebody, through valuing their excellent qualities, has taught them to make use of these, rather than to brood over charms they don't happen to possess. If we parents have been lacking in calling attention to desirable traits, let's substitute for nagging and criticism an appreciation of every good quality exhibited. See if the introvert doesn't begin to emerge from the shell.

4. Do we provide natural, easy, pleasant ways for our adolescent to mingle socially?

So many youngsters seem to manage this with no help at all, it may not occur to us that a timid one requires some diplomatic backstage manipulation to become a part of a social group. The earlier one attacks this problem, to be sure, the easier it is to solve. But taken together with the loving—and sincerely meant—build-up of confidence previously mentioned, it should be possible to make headway at any age.

Perhaps the parents have not been very friendly, sociable people. The place to start, then, would be by taking more part in neighborly exchanges. It isn't hard to arrange family outings which include boys and girls of an appropriate age. On one pretext or another, it should be possible to inveigle small groups of young people to the house.

Some parents have gone to the length of turning their homes into recreation centers, where adolescents are always welcome, and where there is a place to dance and phonograph records to dance to, perhaps other things as well that young people love to do. Indeed, the parents of one boy-shy girl installed, with Machiavellian cunning, a billiard table and shooting range in their basement, and made it available to the neighborhood. Before long the boys were flocking there, and the daughter of the family found it quite easy and natural to make friends with them under such circumstances.

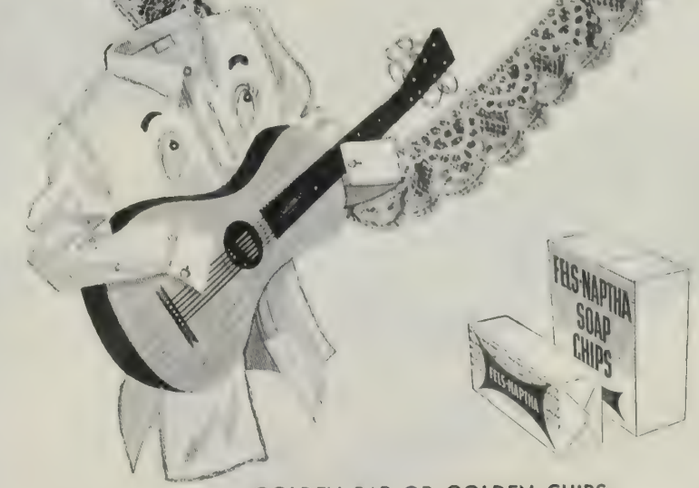
This last, of course, is impossible for many families—it certainly is for the Crouses, and their home as it stands is already a recreation center to all intents and purposes. In such a case, it is for parents to give real thought to means of bringing the perpetual onlooker among their offspring into active participation.

Perhaps the timid youngster needs some indulgences not required by the more extroverted ones, such as a remission of household tasks. Youngsters should do their share. But the boy or girl who works continually, at the expense of all outside interests, must be looked upon as a special case, requiring special treatment.

Or suppose parents manage in such a way that the timid one is given responsibility for the entertainment of guests. It might not be done so gracefully as the heads of the house would do it, but responsibility of this kind is often a help in overcoming self-consciousness. Many a reserved, retiring girl blossoms out when she is away from a mother who takes charge of the conversation, tells the daughter continually what to do, perhaps calls attention to her shortcomings in her presence. It would be interesting, in any event, to learn the reaction when the indrawn girl is given a social situation to handle by herself.

It is not our purpose to make every girl a party habitué or a belle. But let's realize that every young person has an inalienable right, as well as a strong instinct, to be able to enjoy a congenial group, to have friends of both sexes, to learn to be at ease and happy in ordinary social exchanges. Let's recognize that repression of this instinct is a sign of inner turmoil. Then, activated by love and a desire to help, we'll find the way to turn our indrawn adolescent into a sociable being. THE END

To My Favorite Blonde



Oh, lovely Blonde! My voice I raise,
Your tender, golden charms to praise.

When I am soiled beyond belief,
Your perfume heralds prompt relief.

Beneath your swift and gentle care,
I shun all washday wear and tear.

And when with me you've had your way,
I'm cleansed of 'Tattle-Tale-ish' Gray.

All substitutes I now decline,
Dear Blondie, be my Valentine!

GOLDEN BAR OR GOLDEN CHIPS

Fels-Naptha Soap

BANISHES "TATTLE-TALE GRAY"

Very personally yours

Greater freedom than you've ever enjoyed! For all your days are active, unhampered, since you've learned the new secret of comfort:

Softness . . . such as the new Kotex* gives. Softness that lasts, that's dependably safe, because it holds its shape. You have faith in this napkin made to stay soft while you wear it. Equally important . . .

With those flat pressed ends of Kotex you fear no telltale outlines. You feel secure, with the extra protection of an exclusive safety center. Indeed . . .

Safety is among your many wise reasons for choosing the new, softer Kotex; for selecting the absorbency that best suits your needs. Regular, Junior or Super gives you a new definition of confidence . . . very personally yours.

more women choose Kotex than all other sanitary napkins

*T. M. REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

PHOTOGRAPHS BY FRANCESCO SCAVULLO

Side Interest. Part hair on one side. Then, to make equal sections of hair, continue the part diagonally from crown to nape. Comb each section of hair forward and up toward ears. With three bobby pins for each side, secure close to the head, allowing curled ends to dangle. Then comb the fluffy ends into pretty waves.

PERSONALITY BRUSH-UP . . . in three acts

These pictures of pretty Dolores Crouse show one girl in three moods—all through the courtesy of pin curls, comb and brush! You can learn, through patience and practice, to persuade your hair into new lines—to interpret a hair-do to suit yourself. If you think a pageboy is too severe, try waving it on the sides, softening with pretty bangs. If you love upsweeps "on everyone else," experiment until you find one singularly becoming to you. Hair-do's have lots of possibilities—and personalities! Take time to experiment with some tricks of the topknot—and you can be a new woman several times a week! ★ By Dawn Crowell Norman

Beauty Editor of the Journal

Pretty Pageboy. When hair is damp, use a comb to form waved bangs. (Don't use pin curls.) Then comb the rest of your hair smoothly down to the ends. Make two rows of curls with hair turned under on curlers about the size of a quarter. When hair is dry, remove the curlers and brush and comb into this pageboy.

Softly Feminine. Part hair on side, section off bangs and comb all hair smoothly. For straight bangs with fullness, roll a piece of cotton (about an inch in diameter) and put underneath damp bangs. Roll ends of bangs under cotton and pin in place with one bobby pin on each side. Hold in place with a hair net. Set the rest of your hair in two rows of pin curls all the way around your head. When hair is dry, brush into this hair-do.

"Save on Desserts with Carnation Milk"

Says

MRS. HARRY E. DOTSON

Los Angeles Home Economist

It looks expensive—it tastes expensive! But thanks to Carnation Milk, Mrs. Dotson's recipe is "easy as pie" on your budget—costs less than 10c a serving!

Try this delicious Garden of Eden temptation—but follow the recipe exactly. Its success depends on using Carnation Milk.

In dozens of other dishes, Carnation saves you time, trouble, failures, and money. You can even whip Carnation, or sour it! Get several cans of Carnation. Discover its superiority and economy in all milk uses!

She Was a "Carnation Baby"

Mrs. Dotson, Home Economist, Child Nutritionist—and a "Carnation Mother"—is one of the millions of grown-ups who were raised on Carnation Milk. According to nation-wide surveys, more babies are fed on Carnation than on any other brand of evaporated milk. Ask your doctor about Carnation for baby. It's the milk every doctor knows.

LISTEN to Buddy Clark on Carnation's "Contented Hour" every Monday evening on your N. B. C. Station.

Enjoy COFFEE more—with Carnation

★ HOW AMERICA LIVES ★

Mrs. Crouse preparing deviled Swiss steak according to a JOURNAL recipe. Pounding the beef before cooking, plus low moist heat, helps to tenderize this economy cut.

A Dollar A Week Per Person for Meat

By LOUELLA G. SHOUER

MEAT is still one of the big-money items on everyone's food bill. When Mrs. Crouse does her weekly shopping, $7.00 a week is her limit for meat. Rarely does she manage more than three dinners a week with meat. There are usually eight at the table. Dolores eats most of her meals at the delicatessen where she works. Fortunately, the family is fond of hearty main-dish soups and meatless dishes featuring eggs, cheese, rice, macaroni and vegetables. The children eat quantities of bread and milk with their meals. Four loaves of bread and four quarts of milk are regular daily orders.

How you spend your meat money is up to you, but all meat, regardless of price, contains essential proteins, vitamins and minerals. There are always some cuts and kinds that are less expensive than others, and the more of the thrifty cuts you use, the more meat main dishes you can have in your week's menus. As a guide to your meal-planning, we have worked out three combinations, providing five meat main dishes a week for six. The meat bills for these weekly menus were under $1.00 per person in mid-December. These same meat combinations may cost more or less by late winter. However, they will guide you in your planning. The recipes will add interest to your regular weekly specials.

COMBINATION 1

Sunday, roast pork; Monday, cheese fondue; Tuesday, *pork pie; Wednesday, *Bobatee; Thursday, *braised oxtails; Friday, spinach and eggs au gratin; Saturday, *lamb-and-carrot balls.

Meat order (5 meals with meat main dishes—for 6): 5-pound pork roast; (shoulder end,) 1½ pounds hamburger; 3 pounds oxtail joints, 1½ pounds shoulder of lamb. Approximate cost $4.94.

Pork Pie

Dice enough cold cooked leftover pork roast to make 2 cups. Cook 1 medium head cauliflower in boiling salted water. Drain and divide into small flowerets. Mince 2 small onions and brown with 1 clove garlic, minced, in 1 tablespoon salad oil. Add 3½ cups canned tomatoes, a pinch of thyme, ¾ teaspoon salt, a dash of pepper and ¼ teaspoon paprika. Simmer 10 minutes. Put through sieve. Thicken with 3 tablespoons flour blended to smooth paste with a little cold water, cooking until smooth, stirring constantly. Place pork and cauliflower in baking dish. Pour the tomato sauce over it. Cover top with pastry or biscuit crust. Gash and bake in hot oven, 450° F., about 20 minutes until crust is golden brown and thoroughly done. This dish has many variations. If you have leftover roast pork gravy, so much the better. Substitute it or part of canned tomatoes called for. f you have any leftover bits of vege- ables—Lima beans, green beans or car- ots—add these to pork and cauliflower. f you like individual pies, the above uantities will make 6.

Bobatee

Chop 1 onion and sauté in 3 tablespoons utter or margarine until brown. Add ½ cups milk and 1½ cups bread crumbs. et soak 10 minutes. Beat 3 eggs light nd add to the above ingredients and ombine with 1½ pounds hamburger. eason with 1½ teaspoons salt, ¼ tea- oon pepper and 1½ teaspoons curry owder. Lastly, stir in ⅓ cup chopped uts. Mix well. Grease inside of a loaf an. Rub all over with a slice of lemon. ack mixture in the pan and bake 1¼ ours in moderate oven, 350° F. This ay sound like just another meat loaf you, but the curry flavor and texture the nuts lift it out of the ordinary. If ere's any left, it's very good sliced cold. erves 6.

Braised Oxtails

ave your butcher joint 3 oxtails, or ough to make 3 pounds. Frozen oxtail ints now come packed in 2-pound ackages—but it takes 3 pounds for 6 od servings, as this is a bony cut. redge the joints with salt, pepper and our. Brown well on all sides in bacon ippings. When well browned, drain off e fat and add 6 cups stock made from ouillon cubes or meat paste and water liquid saved from cooking vegetables. you're a saver of vegetable liquid, you n always be sure of having good- vored soups and gravies. Keep a jar in e refrigerator and add to it from time time. Now sprinkle a few celery leaves d parsley sprigs, chopped, over the eat. Crush a bay leaf. This goes in next. over and simmer over low heat 2–3 urs. This dish takes long cooking, but s worth it. Stir occasionally during oking and add water from time to time stock cooks down too much. When the eat is almost tender, add 6 carrots, cut to pieces, 1 dozen small white onions, up canned tomato sauce and 1½ table- oons paprika, adding additional water this point if there doesn't seem to be ough sauce for the vegetables. Simmer til meat and vegetables are both ten- r. Skim fat and thicken the liquid in n with a little flour. Serves 6.

This dish may be done in a covered aster in the oven, as well as on top the range. Brown meat in skillet first, wever, before putting in the roaster.

Lamb-and-Carrot Balls

ve 1½ pounds lamb shoulder ground our butcher will do this and there will about 1 pound when ground) and mix h 1½ cups ground raw carrots (it es about 5). Season with 1½ teaspoons t, ¼ teaspoon pepper and 1½ table- oons minced onions. Mix in 2 eggs. ape into small balls 1 inch in diameter. lt enough shortening to cover gener- dly the bottom of a large skillet. Fry meat balls in the hot shortening, ring now and then so that they will wn evenly. Cover pan and cook slowly minutes. Remove to hot platter and ke gravy from the pan drippings. in off all but 3 tablespoons fat. Blend ablespoons flour into the fat and add cups diluted canned consommé or ck made from bouillon cubes or meat te and water or vegetable stock. Pour vy over meat balls. Serves 6.

COMBINATION II

day, *deviled Swiss steak; Monday, caroni and cheese; Tuesday, boneless oked pork butt cooked with vegetables; dnesday, *special bean soup made from over stock in which pork tenderloin cooked; Thursday, *liver terrapin; day, vegetable omelet; Saturday, *spicy nkfurters with rice.

at order (5 meals with meat main ies—for 6): 2½ pounds boneless smoked butt; 2 pounds round steak; 1 pound liver, 1 pound frankfurters. Approxi- e cost: $5.03.

Deviled Swiss Steak

1 tablespoon dry mustard with ½ flour. Pound into a thick 2-pound e of top round steak. It takes punish- nt and rewards you with tenderness! There are gadgets on the market for pounding tough cuts of meat. If you haven't one, use the edge of a saucer. When all the flour and mustard is pounded into the meat, heat 2 table- spoons shortening or salad oil in a skillet. Brown meat in the fat. Season well on both sides with 1½ teaspoons salt and ⅛ teaspoon pepper. Put in small roaster. Pour 1 cup sliced onions, 2 carrots, sliced, 2½ cups canned tomatoes, 2 table- spoons Worcestershire sauce and 1 table- spoon brown sugar over the meat. Cover and bake in moderately slow oven, 325° F., about 1½–2 hours or until meat is tender when pierced with a fork. Serves 6.

Special Bean Soup

Put 1½ cups dried pea beans in a bowl. Cover with boiling water and let soak for ½ hour. Drain; discard soaking water. Put beans in a deep kettle. Add 1½ quarts broth left from cooking smoked pork tenderloin, 1 large onion, chopped, 3 pieces celery, chopped (or ¾ teaspoon celery seed), ¾ teaspoon marjoram, ¼ teaspoon basil, small bay leaf, crushed, 1½ teaspoons Worcestershire sauce and 1 clove garlic, finely minced. Cook until beans are tender. You can do this much more speedily in a pressure saucepan if you have one. Drain beans. Mash with a potato masher or put the beans through a coarse sieve, whichever you prefer. Add beans to broth.

Now for the something special which makes this soup more delicious than any bean soup you've ever tasted. Put 2 cups water, ¾ cup sour cream, 3 tablespoons flour and 2 teaspoons tarragon vinegar in a quart jar. Put on lid and shake vig- orously until all ingredients are well blended. Stir this into the soup, and bring to a boil, stirring constantly. Taste for seasoning. It may or may not need a little salt. Serve garnished with chopped parsley and paprika. Serves 6. This soup is very good reheated a second day, but if you're serving this as the main dish with bread and butter, there won't be any to reheat.

Liver Terrapin

Simmer 1 pound beef liver in salted wa- ter until cooked through. Discard the liquid. Dice liver, removing membrane. There should be about 2 cups. Hard-cook 2 eggs. Melt 2 tablespoons butter or margarine and blend in 2 tablespoons flour. Add 1½ cups diluted canned con- sommé or stock made from bouillon cubes or meat paste and water. Cook until thickened, stirring constantly. Add ¼ teaspoon paprika, 2 tablespoons finely minced onion and 1 teaspoon Worcester- shire sauce. Shell the hard-cooked eggs. Chop whites and mash the yolks. Add the mashed egg yolks and the chopped liver to the sauce. Blend in 1 teaspoon lemon juice and add ½ cup chopped stuffed olives. Season to taste with salt and pep- per. Pour into 6 individual casseroles. Top with buttered crumbs. Bake in a moder- ately hot oven, 275° F., 25 minutes or un- til bubbly. Garnish with the chopped egg whites and parsley. Serves 6.

Spicy Frankfurters

Add 2 onions, chopped, and 1 green pepper, chopped, to 2 cups canned tomato sauce. Slice 1 pound frankfurters into circles and simmer them 20 minutes in the sauce. If sauce thickens too much as the frankfurters cook, add a little water (½ cup). You may use 2 cans of frankfurters in barbecue sauce—adding enough canned tomato sauce to make up the total quantity of liquid. Serve on freshly boiled rice, macaroni or noodles.

COMBINATION III

Sunday, *Hungarian beef pot roast; Mon- day, curried eggs on hot biscuits; Tuesday, shepherd's pie made from pot-roast left- overs; Wednesday, *sweet-and-sour veal; Thursday, *Danish veal soup; Friday, cheese tart; Saturday, *Oriental stew.

Meat order (5 meals with meat main dishes—serves 6): 3 pounds cross-rib pot roast; 2 pounds boneless veal; 2 veal knuckles—these are usually for free if your butcher had them; 1½ pounds blade pork chops. Approximate cost, $4.30.

Hungarian Pot Roast

Brown a 3-pound cross-rib beef pot roast on all sides in a heavy pot or Dutch oven, using a little suet for fat. This cut is all

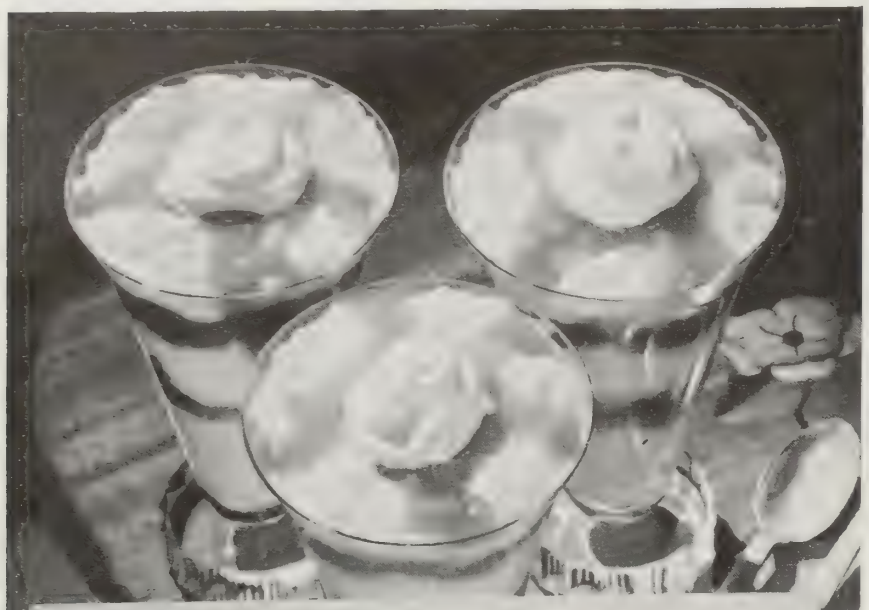
Tender golden kernels in their own rich cream

IT'S DEL MAIZ BRAND - THE CREAM STYLE CORN WITH THE GREEN GIANT ON THE LABEL

If you like summer-fresh corn—and like to get all the sweet corn cream along with the tender kernels —this is your dish. Each gold-and-cream forkful is rich in the goodness grown into our special breed of corn by "flavor farming." You'll find Del Maiz Brand Cream Style Corn at your grocer's—with your old friend, the Green Giant, on the label.

Minnesota Valley Canning Company, headquarters, Le Sueur, Minnesota; Fine Foods of Canada, Ltd., Tecumseh, Ontario. Also packers of Niblets Brand whole kernel corn and Green Giant Brand peas.

Del Maiz BRAND CREAM STYLE Corn



Listen to the Fred Waring Show on NBC every Friday morning for the Green Giant © MVCCo. "Del Maiz," "Niblets" and "Green Giant" Brands Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

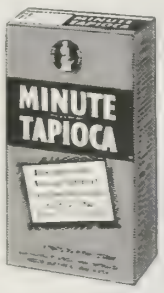
RITZY-BUT EASY!

(IT'S REAL MINUTE TAPIOCA—FULL OF COUNTRY-KITCHEN GOODNESS)



Perfect Parfait — APRICOT TAPIOCA CREAM!

1 egg yolk
2 cups milk
3 tablespoons sugar
⅛ teaspoon salt
3 tablespoons Minute Tapioca
1 egg white
2 tablespoons sugar
½ teaspoon vanilla
1½ cups cooked apricot purée

Mix egg yolk with a small amount of the milk in saucepan. Add remaining milk, 3 tablespoons sugar, salt, and Minute Tapioca. Place over medium heat. Cook until mixture comes to a full boil, stirring constantly—this takes 5 to 8 minutes. (Do not overcook . . . mixture thickens as it cools.) Remove from heat.

Beat egg white until foamy throughout; add 2 tablespoons sugar, 1 tablespoon at a time. Continue beating with rotary egg beater until mixture will stand in soft peaks. Add hot tapioca mixture, stirring constantly. Add vanilla. Cool, stirring after 15 to 20 minutes. Chill. Turn into parfait glasses, alternating tapioca cream with apricot purée. Garnish with whipped cream. An elegant dessert for 6 people! So lavishly luscious—so full of homemade goodness—no one would ever dream it's so quick and easy to fix. And thrifty, too.

A word to brides! If you're a kitchen tenderfoot—you may never have used real, genuine Minute Tapioca! (It was not available during the war years.) So make up for lost time! Discover all the glorious things Minute Tapioca can do for you. More wonderful recipes on box.

A Product of General Foods

FREE! WONDERFUL NEW RECIPE BOOK!

MINUTE TAPIOCA, Department S, Battle Creek, Michigan

Please send me FREE copy of "Miracles with Minute Tapioca," containing more than 50 recipes for creamy desserts—fruit pies that don't run—fluffy omelets and soufflés—tender meat loaves that slice without crumbling—rich

Name_____

Address_____

City_____ State_____

Offer expires September 1, 1949. Good only in U.S.A. L29

"IT'S EASY—IT'S FUN IT'S PROFITABLE"
SELL GREETING CARDS
Says C. L. EVANS

FREE
EXCLUSIVE

ACT NOW!
NEW ENGLAND ART PUBLISHERS
North Abington 14, Mass

AT LAST! SOMETHING NEW AND SENSATIONAL IN EVERYDAY CARDS
MAKE Extra MONEY FAST
Satin and Velour Designs
PURO CO., 2961 Locust, Dept. 51-B, St. Louis 8, Mo.

When it comes to making gravy!
GRAVY MASTER
easy thrifty makes gravy taste and look good too!
EVERY BOTTLE SHOWS HOW—TRY IT

meat, you know—no bone—slices well and is not so fatty as some cuts of chuck. Dice 2 medium-sized onions, 2 stalks celery, 1 tomato, 2 carrots and ¼ green pepper. Add to browned roast. Mix 2 teaspoons salt, ¾ teaspoon herb seasoning for meats, 1 tablespoon liquid gravy seasoning. Spread over top of meat. Cover and bring to boil. Simmer 2 hours. Turn roast and cook 1½ hours longer or until tender. Do not add water unless it cooks dry; and if you have the Dutch-oven type of pot, it won't, as all the juices are kept in. When meat is tender, skim off fat and thicken with flour and cold water, blended to smooth paste. To serve, slice meat; pour gravy and vegetables over it. There should be a piece left to dice, combine with cooked vegetables and gravy, and bake in a casserole with a topping of mashed potatoes for Tuesday's shepherd's pie.

Sweet-and-Sour Veal

Bring 2 quarts water to a boil in a fairly large soup kettle. Add 3 medium onions, sliced, and the leaves from a large bunch of celery. Add 1 or 2 veal knuckles, cracked—2 is better if your butcher has them—and 2 pounds boneless stewing veal cut into stew-size pieces. Add 3 teaspoons salt and ⅛ teaspoon pepper. Simmer slowly 1½–2 hours. Strain stock. Remove meat—discard the bones and vegetables. Put meat in saucepan with 2 cups of the veal stock. Cool and refrigerate the rest of the stock for next day's soup. Add 2 tablespoons flour blended to smooth paste with 3 tablespoons vinegar. Cook until thickened, stirring constantly. Add 1 teaspoon sugar; salt, pepper and a dash of nutmeg to taste. Just before serving, beat 1 egg slightly and stir into the creamed veal. Cook 2 minutes, stirring constantly. Serve over boiled potatoes. Sprinkle with parsley.

Danish Veal Soup

Remove fat from the cold veal stock, which will be almost jellied. Heat and add 6 ounces noodles, freshly cooked in boiling salted water. Season to taste with salt, pepper and nutmeg. Heat to boiling. Stir in 1 beaten egg. Heat until the egg curdles. It really should curdle this time so there will be bits of cooked egg through the soup. Serve as the main dish with bread and cheese. Serves 6.

Oriental Stew

Dice 1½ pounds blade pork shoulder chops in small pieces, removing bone. Fry in 2 tablespoons shortening or salad oil until well browned. Push meat to side of pan. Stir in ¼ cup flour. Blend smooth. Add 2 cups strained canned chicken soup or broth or stock made from water and chicken bouillon cubes. Cook until gravy is thickened. Then add ¼ cup soy sauce and ⅓ cup tomato paste, 1 cup canned mushrooms and liquid, 1 cup sliced onions, 1 clove garlic, minced, and 2 cups finely diced celery and leaves. Simmer 15 minutes or until pork is tender. Celery should still have crisp texture. Serve on rice or Chinese noodles. Serves 6.

THE BARBARISM OF DIVORCE LAWS

(Continued from Page 12)

"unnamed" woman is as innocent of the adultery as a baby sitter. But like a professional baby sitter, she is also financially rewarded, and considerably better than her less adventurous colleague.

This procedure is what the district attorney "exposed" in December. It is not pretty. It rewards lawyers who don't mind circumventing the law; it creates a profession certainly undignified and distasteful to anybody but a coarse woman; it is a fine racket for private detectives. But the law itself is to blame! The fact that the procedure is professionalized at least makes it certain the case will hold up in court.

Many years ago, I had among my acquaintances a rather distinguished man and woman, whom I shall call Arnold and Marian. The man had married, very young, a woman so hysterical that she was close to insanity. His life with her was a hell on earth, and he separated from her very soon, while supporting her well, as he could afford to do. Several years after the separation he met a charming and talented woman, and they came greatly to love each other. He now pressed his wife for a divorce, but she, in her hysteria and vindictiveness, absolutely refused it. He offered her a handsome settlement, but that was not what she wanted. She knew perfectly well that he would never leave her penniless anyhow, because he was sorry for her—he regarded her nature as something she could not help—and because he had a reputation to consider.

After playing hide-and-seek for two years, Marian simply decided that it was far less sordid to live openly as her lover's mistress than go on lying. They took a house together, entertained their friends there, and made no bones about their relationship. It was hard on Marian, but she loved this man with complete devotion, and if I have ever seen a real marriage, it was theirs. Only one thing made both of them unhappy—neither felt they could bring into the world a nameless child.

This open relationship went on for another five years—the couple had actually been "married" in everything but law for seven years—when the wife, in a sudden whim as inexplicable as her previous conduct, offered the husband a divorce in exchange for a considerable settlement. This he immediately agreed to. Money was no object if he could legitimize his relationship with his real wife.

Now this occurred, not in the United States, but in another country with a law as that time just like that of New York—and with, as a result, the same rackets that District Attorney Hogan has recently "exposed." Marian would have none of it. For one thing, her sense of humor was too strong.

"The whole world knows that Arnold and I have been living together," she said, "and I intend that for once there should be some honesty and truth in this ridiculous procedure. I am the corespondent, and I shall be it."

Her lover finally consented, but insisted that they should not be found together in their own home. He didn't want the address in the papers, for obvious reasons. So after consultation with his lawyer and his wife it was arranged that they should go to another city, rent a room, and at ten P.M. ring for the bellboy and order something. This did; the bellboy appeared; they engaged him in conversation long enough to be sure that he would recognize them again, and gave him a generous tip. The lawyers or their representatives, waiting downstairs, cornered the bellboy, and asked him if he had been in Room 500, showing him a tempting bill. The bellboy obliged after he was assured that nothing unpleasant would happen to him.

(Continued on Page 149)

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Home-Coming

By Dan G. Hoffman

Your hair is a sea net aglimmer with stars,
And your eyes—oh, your eyes are not moonlight but mortal
With earth shine. You stand in the dimway, the portal.
To the swell of your breathing night startles with warmth,
Vibrant, slow-rising. Oh, flaming the night!
Through long misty lashes the earth shine is bright,
And I stand in your doorway as Paris at Troy
Laid down hateful arms and drew to him his joy.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Lamb Stew — Hunt Style

2 lbs. lamb shanks, cut in small pieces — 2 tbsp. flour
1 tsp. salt — ¼ tsp. chili powder, if desired — ⅛ tsp. pepper
2 cans Hunt's Tomato Sauce — 2 cups water — 1 bay leaf
½ tsp. salt — 4 carrots cut in pieces — 8 small onions
½ lb. string beans, cut in pieces — Mashed potatoes

Wipe meat with damp cloth. Mix flour, salt, chili powder, and pepper. Roll meat in seasoned flour. Brown on both sides in fat. Drain off excess fat. Then add thin, kettle-simmered Hunt's Tomato Sauce — and the water, bay leaf, and salt. Simmer for 1¼ hours or until meat is tender. Add vegetables and cook for 35 minutes more or until tender. Place mixture into greased casserole. Place potatoes around outside rim. Bake in 375°F. oven 15 minutes or until potatoes are lightly browned. Makes 4 generous servings. Hunt's is the quality tomato sauce for a few cents a can!

How to make low-cost meats delicious

The low-cost way to buy tomatoes for cooking

HERE'S AN AMAZING Hunt cooking secret:

When you include a can of this tomato sauce in a recipe — you are really adding the best part of more than four plump, vine-ripened tomatoes!

We slowly kettle-simmer these tomatoes for you — with delicious seasonings and spices. M-m-m! You just can't beat Hunt's for flavor . . . for richness . . . for velvety smoothness!

That's why Hunt's Tomato Sauce transforms low-cost meats into dishes your family will rave about. And look! . . .

We're putting up so many millions of cans of Hunt's, to supply the terrific demand — that the price is down to a few cents!

Hunt's is the low-cost way to buy tomatoes for cooking. Use it in your stews, meat loaf, gravies, casseroles, spaghetti. And with leftovers.

So, insist on the quality brand for a few cents a can — Hunt's Tomato Sauce!

Hunt-for the best

Hunt's Fruits • Vegetables • Tomato Products Hunt Foods, Inc., Los Angeles, California

"Here comes the Bride"

She's Katherine Ellison. He's George J. Yundt, Jr. Both of Atlanta, Georgia. "Kappy's my dream-girl come true," says George. She's a peaches 'n' cream girl—so-o-o Woodbury lovely!

Beauty queen and queenly bride—that's Kappy. Admiring attendants arrange her soft, white veil . . . her soft, white skin has been cared for with mild Woodbury since Kappy's kindergarten days.

Bridesmaids beg for Kappy's bouquet. Flower-fresh skin like hers is theirs for the asking! "I keep my skin soft the Woodbury way," says Kappy. The beauty-cream ingredient in Woodbury is a "skin-smoother."

Partners on the Piedmont Driving Club court. "Woodbury 'n' me, in this case," laughs Kappy. "A girl's skin has to look smooth under the sun as well as the stars." Yes, Woodbury helps you score, girls.

Another Woodbury Deb Marries

"Wot'll it be," asks the little waiter at Aunt Jane's Cabin. "Just more time to spend with the [illegible] girl in the world," George counters. Kappy keeps her skin bewitching with Woodbury.

"M-m-m looks good!" "M-m-m looks better," answers George. And with all that Woodbury delicious sweetness beside him—he doesn't mean food.

"My facial cocktail—to tone up skin," says Kappy. "First, a lather massage—then, rinse warm, rinse cold. Skin's satiny!"

Now! Woodbury comes in two sizes! Bath-size and facial! Big new Woodbury's bath-perfection.

"Take a bath-size cake o Woodbury to the tub. Woodbury's beauty-cream ingredient is a 'skin-smoother'.

(Continued from Page 146)

but that, on the contrary, there would be more money coming his way for a deposition. They took it next morning.

But when the boy appeared on the stand during the divorce trial, his conscience smote him. Asked to identify the couple, who were in court, he lied his head off, and said they were not the people he had seen; asked if he had gone to Room 500, he faltered and said he had thought so, but he must have been mistaken. The whole case collapsed, and Marian and Arnold were as far from marriage as ever.

When they got hold of him later, in a fine fury, and asked him why he had lied, he said, "You are such charming, nice people, I couldn't bear to verify the nasty things you were charged with. I thought I was doing you a favor!"

So, to complete this bedroom comedy, Arnold finally went through the customary "mill," and got his divorce without a hitch.

Divorce is a bitter thing—often a real tragedy for at least one of the people involved, and almost always a source of misery to children, if any are involved. Many a couple, furthermore, could be kept together by proper counsel. Many a pastor and priest have reknit marriages that seemed ready to fall apart, and many a physician. Some cities have marriage counselors, sympathetic and trained psychologists who prevent divorces by leading the partners into knowledge of how to give their marriages a real chance.

But if two people find that a marriage is intolerable to either, and their religion permits them to sever their relationship, nothing whatever is served by laws that compel them to act in as uncivilized a manner as possible. That, it seems to me, is all that the district attorney's "exposé" can teach us—and the legislators who make the laws.

POINT OF NO RETURN

(Continued from Page 43)

she'll never have anything to do with you. . . . What are you laughing at?"

"She never had anything to do with me anyway," Charles said.

"But she might have," Jack said. "She's going to be here all the time now and you've lost your chance of ever seeing anything of Jessica Lovell."

Those remarks of Jack Mason's came as a great relief because they showed that perhaps after all everyone in Clyde did not know everything immediately, but someone would have seen Jessica's new phaeton, with its top down, as it crossed the intersection of Dock and Johnson streets on Sunday afternoon. There was no way of escaping facts in Clyde, and, indeed, he did not care much what anyone would say. He only felt concerned that the offices at Wright-Sherwin where he was earning his twenty-five dollars a week already seemed smaller since the firemen's muster and he was beginning to realize that it would take years for him to get anywhere in Wright-Sherwin—years and years.

Before long it began to be recognized that he was seeing a good deal of Jessica Lovell, but on the whole it was an acceptable fact. The Grays did not live on Johnson Street, but his father was the son of old Judge Gray and had married Doctor Marchby's daughter, so it was not markedly unusual for Charles Gray to go around with Jessica Lovell.

To write a good love letter you ought to begin without knowing what you mean to say, and to finish without knowing what you have written. —ROUSSEAU.

"Going around" was the expression which was used in Clyde when a boy and a girl saw a good deal of each other. It was not the same as the more vulgar expression "going with" or "keeping company" which was employed when speaking of River Street couples. It was not even the same as saying that Charles was "attentive" to Jessica Lovell, which was more serious.

She was seen with Charles, but she was also seen with Hewitt Thomas, when Hewitt was not busy somewhere else. She was occasionally seen with Lester Gow, who was studying at the Harvard Law School, and now and then with Jackie Mason. Jessica also had young men from Boston as guests sometimes for the week end. Thus if she was seen with Charles it did not mean that they were going around together.

When Jessica joined the Clyde Players, it was natural for Charles to take her home, because the other members of the theater group were married, except Jackie Mason, who was the property man and who had to stay after the others. There was no reason for anyone to know that Charles had joined the Clyde Players only because Jessica had asked him to.

It must have been an evening early in December when Jessica called Charles up, something which she did very seldom in those days. When the telephone in the hall rang, his father was reading by the fire and Dorothea and Elbridge Sterne were playing backgammon.

"Answer it, Charley," Dorothea said.

The telephone was under the stairs in front of a line of coat hooks and it was necessary to bend one's head when one took the receiver off the hook.

"Is that you, Charley?" It was Jessica's voice. "Would you mind coming over for a few minutes?"

It was only a step to Johnson Street. It was the most natural thing in the world, he was telling himself, for Jessica suddenly to ask him to come to see her at nine o'clock. It seemed peculiar only when he came back into the parlor with his overcoat to say he was going out.

"But why are you going out?" Dorothea asked. "Who called you up?"

"It was Jessica Lovell. She wants me to come over for a few minutes."

"Now?" Dorothea said. "At nine o'clock? I didn't know that you knew Jessica Lovell as well as that, Charles."

"I don't see why it shows that I know her very well."

"Oh, doesn't it?" Dorothea said.

When Charles walked up Spruce Street, the clear coldness of the December night air reminded him of new dark ice on a pond, frozen just thick enough to bear one's weight. His pulses danced with a strange elation, not because Jessica Lovell had called him up, certainly not because of that, but because of the beauty of the evening.

Jessica must have been waiting for him because she opened the front door herself. "We'll have to go in the wallpaper room," she said, as Charles was taking off his overcoat. "The library's the only comfortable place, but father's asleep in it. We'll have to sit and look at the Chinese junks."

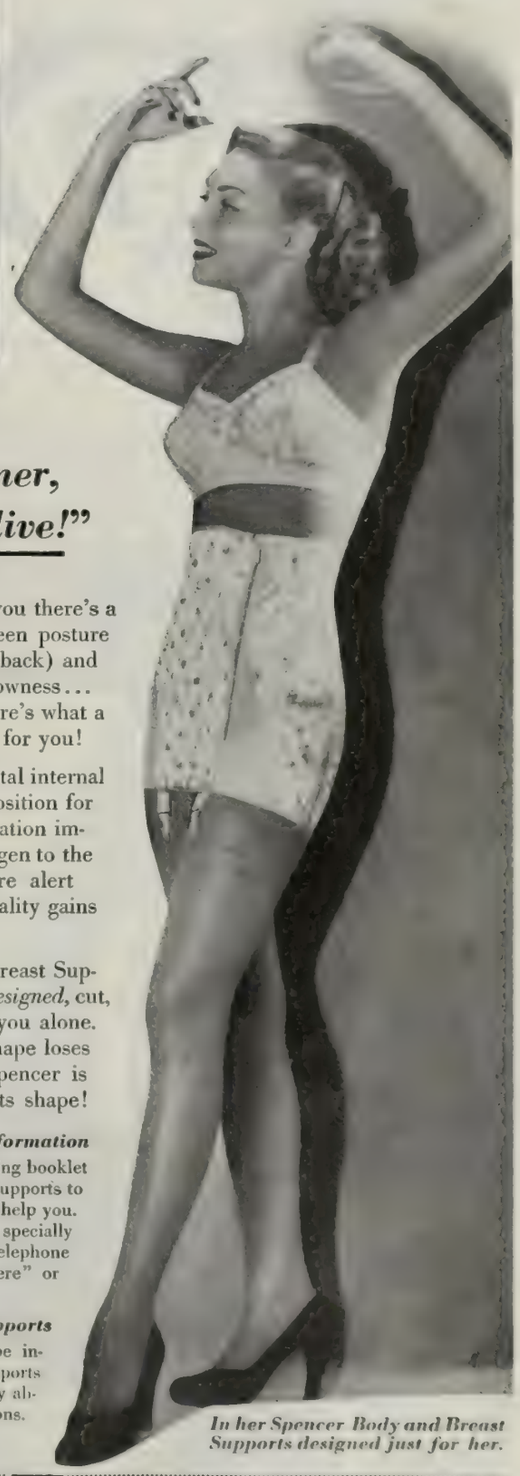
She asked Charles to put a new log on the dying embers of the fire and then curled up on a corner of the Hepplewhite sofa. She was wearing a very simple, purplish woolen dress that fell just below her knees. She gave it a careless pull over her silk stockings and then she pushed her dark hair away from her forehead. She had none of the self-consciousness of other girls he knew, no fear that her hair looked untidy, and she made no fluttering efforts to conceal her knees.

"Charley," she began, "the most awful thing has happened. I've got to join the Clyde Players. Father says I have to."

"Oh," Charles said, "has Mrs. Smythe Leigh been to see you?"

"She just went away. Who is she?"

"She's pretty energetic," Charles told her. "She likes art and she's one of those people who like to run things."



He told Jessica about Mrs. Smythe Leigh. She coached dramatics at the high school. She had also organized the Clyde Players. It was not strange that Mrs. Smythe Leigh

(Continued on Page 151)

"No Lordosis aches and bulges—since I got my SPENCER!

Before she got her Spencer.

In her Spencer Body and Breast Supports designed just for her.

I look trimmer, feel more alive!"

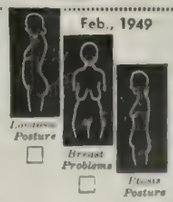
YOUR doctor will tell you there's a close connection between posture faults like Lordosis (sway-back) and back-fatigue... mental slowness... dulled personality. But here's what a change to Spencer will do for you!

Your bulges disappear! Vital internal organs are supported in position for proper functioning! Circulation improves, carrying more oxygen to the brain. Thus you feel more alert mentally, and your personality gains sparkle!

Your Spencer Body and Breast Supports will be individually designed, cut, and made for you — and you alone. A support that loses its shape loses its effectiveness. Every Spencer is guaranteed never to lose its shape!

Send Coupon for FREE Information

Send coupon below for fascinating booklet or ask any dealer in Spencer Supports to show you how a Spencer can help you. Spencer dealers are expert, specially trained corsetieres. Look in telephone book under "Spencer corsetiere" or "Spencer Support Shop".



Also Surgical-Medical Supports

Thousands of doctors prescribe individually designed Spencer Supports as aid to their treatment of many abdominal, back or breast conditions. See your doctor.

Would You Like to Make Money

in a professional type of business? Experience not needed—we train you. Profitable—interesting. Check here ☐ for information.

Feb., 1949

Also made in Canada at Rock Island, Quebec.

TO: ANNE SPENCER SEND TODAY
Spencer, Incorporated
141 Derby Avenue, New Haven 7, Conn.
Please send your free booklet. I have marked my posture problem at left.

Name ..... (Please Print)
Street .....
City & State .....

SPENCER INDIVIDUALLY DESIGNED SUPPORTS ®
FOR ABDOMEN, BACK AND BREASTS

AT LAST! A mix that dazzles even experts!

"No wonder!" says Frances Barton. "This new cake mix is made with Swans Down Cake Flour!"

FRANCES BARTON, of General Foods Consumer Service

WOMEN have been excited about cake mixes ever since they appeared. So simple, so easy, so quick! And yet . . .

. . . many experienced cakemakers have hesitated. Mixes would do, they thought, for hurry-up cakes—not for festive occasions.

But now that Swans Down Instant Cake Mix is here—what a hubbub! Phones buzzing with the news . . . bridge hands forgotten . . . stores "all sold out". . .

"You can see why it's entirely different," women are telling each other. "It's made with Swans Down Cake Flour! Swans Down fineness, of course.

"And taste your piece again! Isn't that tenderness and delicacy just like the best cake you ever made?"

All the other ingredients in this new mix are worthy of Swans Down. That means the very best.

Two high layers of softest white cake slip proudly out of your pans. Yet all you do is add milk, beat and bake!

Yellow cake . . . devil's food, spice cake, orange cake, cookies, brownies . . . you make them all just by adding an extra ingredient or so.

And they all turn out with Swans Down perfection. Recipes with every box!

Get yourself an eye-opening package of Swans Down Instant Cake Mix today!

● At your grocer's now . . . or coming soon!

- Egg whites taste fresh as farm-fresh eggs in this Swans Down cake mix. They're "fluff-dried" by an exclusive process.
- Sweet, fresh shortening is the only kind good enough to go with Swans Down. It is an exceptionally stable, all-vegetable shortening that stays fresh longer.
- Shortening is creamed, just as traditional fine cakes have always been made. No sprayed or powdered shortening or other factory short-cut method.
- Subtle flavoring! Nothing loud or synthetic-tasting. A pure, delicate homey fragrance in every crumb!

Swans Down Instant Cake Mix

A product of General Foods

(Continued from Page 149)

had asked Jessica to take part in a play. She was always asking everybody. All you had to do was to say that you could not do it and then she would ask someone else.

"But father says I ought to do it," Jessica said. "I know it's silly, but things like that make me sick." She was serious about it—the whole idea really frightened her. "Father's making such a point of it," Jessica said. She was wretchedly unhappy.

"Why don't you tell him you really don't want to?"

"Oh, Charley, I can't do that. I simply can't." She passed the back of her hand across her forehead and looked as though she were about to cry. "I don't know what you'll think of me," she said. "I haven't any right to ask you, but if I have to be in this thing, will you be in it too?"

He had never until that moment thought that Jessica Lovell might need him for anything. "All right," Charles said, "if you want me to, Jessica."

"Thanks ever so much." Suddenly everything was settled, and he was saying that it was about time to be getting back home.

When he was in the front hall, getting into his overcoat, and he saw Jessica glance behind her, toward the closed door of Mr. Lovell's library, his call suddenly became a clandestine meeting. Her voice had dropped almost to a whisper and he was sure that she was anxious to have him on the other side of the great front door, walking down the path. When he put his hand on the heavy bronze latch and turned to say good night, she pulled his hand away.

"Let me do it," she whispered. "Don't wake up father," and she opened the front door very gently. It was clear to him that she did not want Mr. Lovell to know that she had asked him to be in the Clyde Players.

When the first meeting was over and Charles took Jessica home, this was something everyone understood, including Mr. Lovell. In fact, when Jessica asked him in, Mr. Lovell seemed pleased to see him. As they stood in the front hall, they could hear voices from the library, and Jessica put her hand on his arm.

"Wait," she whispered. "Let's see who it is." Then she recognized the Midwestern voice. "It's Malcolm Bryant," she whispered. "He keeps dropping in. Oh, dear, father's telling him about the family again."

THE Lovell library was a large, paneled room, with mahogany bookshelves all around it. A celestial and a terrestrial globe stood on each side of the fireplace and above the books were more Lovell portraits and two pictures of Lovell ships. There was a comfortable sofa and there were some reasonably modern leather armchairs. Mr. Lovell was seated in one and Malcolm Bryant was seated opposite him with a notebook on his knee.

"Hello, Jessie," Mr. Lovell said. "Back so soon? Why, hello, Charles."

"Charley took me home," she said. "Charley's in the Players." She gave a little exasperated laugh as though she were telling her father that there was no reason for her to explain everything.

"Why, of course, Jessie," Mr. Lovell said. "I told you you'd find friends there. You know Mr. Malcolm Bryant, don't you, Charles? Jessie, why don't you bring us some milk or some crackers and cheese?"

"Oh, not for me, thanks," Malcolm Bryant said. "Please don't bother."

"No, please don't bother," Charles said. "I've got to be going home."

It seemed to him that Mr. Lovell looked relieved, although he said that it would be no trouble at all and that Jessica would love to get them something. Malcolm Bryant rose. It was time to be going.

"Good night," Mr. Lovell said, "and good night, Charles. It's good news you're in the play. I'm glad there's someone to take Jessica home."

By the time Charles and Malcolm Bryant left the Lovells' house that evening, the other houses on Johnson Street were dark except for an occasional light in their upper windows.

Malcolm Bryant said, "This is a wonderful town! It all fits together without a blur in the pattern. I was lucky to discover it. How well do you know the Lovells, Charley?" It was an impertinent question and Charles felt annoyed.

"Not very well," he answered.

"Oh, I thought you did. You seem to be great friends with Jessica."

Charles caught his breath in astonishment, and then he was angry. "Suppose you mind your own business," he said.

MALCOLM Bryant's voice was placating. "That's just the right thing for you to say. I had it coming to me. I'm sorry."

"All right." Charles could not understand why his resentment was ebbing, but there was a disarming quality in Malcolm Bryant's voice.

"It was rotten investigative technique," Malcolm Bryant was saying. "If one of my team had done that, I'd have fired him. It wasn't a personal question. I was just thinking about your groups, and the Lovells aren't quite in your group—are they?"

"No, I don't suppose they are."

"Now, Charley"—Malcolm Bryant put a hand on his shoulder—"this is scientific—none of it is personal. Look at me as a father confessor—just an old man you can talk to. It won't go any further. You're not mad any more, are you?" Malcolm asked.

"No," Charles said, "that's all right. Good night."

Malcolm Bryant held out his hand. "Well, that's fine. We'll be seeing a lot of each other, Charley."

Don't stay away from church because there are so many hypocrites. There's always room for one more.

—A. R. ADAMS.

The Confessional Club, the men's club to which Charles' father belonged, met at the Grays' house that year in January. Charles remembered the occasion especially because Malcolm Bryant had been invited.

He had not known that his father knew Malcolm Bryant until a week before the meeting and already the house was in a turmoil, because John Gray always wanted to entertain the club properly. Until it was his turn to receive them, he was apt to make fun of the Confessional Club. Nevertheless, whenever it was John Gray's turn to entertain the club, he appeared to forget the bitter things he had previously said.

Malcolm Bryant arrived at Spruce Street early, while John Gray was still arranging glasses. Malcolm stood by the open fire examining the room and stealing glances into the dining room, where everything was on the table except the hot dishes.

John Gray poured the contents of a bottle into the cocktail shaker and gave it a few brisk shakes. "Try some of this, will you," he said, "and tell me how it tastes."

"There should either be liquor at a social function," Malcolm Bryant said, "or a few men beating drums. You'd be surprised—good drumming has nearly the same effect. A year or two ago I happened to be out with the Ojibways in the lake region of Ontario. It was a very unspoiled tribe. One evening they began beating a drum—four or five delightful old gentlemen around a big drum, beating with a quick syncopation that was more subtle than the African. Just after sundown all of us began dancing in a circle, men, women and children, quite slowly. There was a compulsion in that drumming, a mass, hysterical compulsion. It was a wonderful group. I've seen the same thing in Africa, but not so well expressed. We danced until two in the morning. We all loved each other at two in the morning."

"Really," John Gray said, "it must have been a delightful party. I wish you'd brought a drum."

The paper that evening was read by Mr. Virgil Mason, and Charles knew from Jackie that Mr. Mason had been working on it for weeks. It was entitled "Old Streetcar Lines in Clyde." Mr. Mason read it haltingly. He

(Continued on Page 153)

The "Me's that love these

The Smart me.

Little Phi Beta Kappa me! Knew all silverplate wasn't alike. Knew there was a kind superior to the usual extra-plated ones. Knew it was Holmes & Edwards Sterling Inlaid Silverplate, the kind with these

The Glamorous me.

Mrs. Van Astorbilt me! Proud of the way my Holmes & Edwards Silverplate gleams and sparkles... assured that it will stay lovelier longer because it is Sterling Inlaid with two blocks of sterling silver at the backs of bowls and handles of most used spoons and forks.

The Thrifty me!

Hoot mon! Is this me happy! . . . found the price of Holmes & Edwards has not gone up since the war . . . and that there is no finer silverplate at any price!

PICK YOUR PATTERN from these exquisite Holmes & Edwards designs: Danish Princess, Lovely Lady, Youth. All made in the U. S. A. by The International Silver Company.

PLEASE YOUR PURSE with wonderful Holmes & Edwards prices. They have not gone up. Still only $68.50 for 52-piece service for eight with chest, also 76-piece service for twelve at $99.95. (No Federal Tax).

NOW! At the silverware counters of your jewelry or department store.

Copyright 1949, The International Silver Co., Holmes & Edwards Div., Meriden, Conn. Sold in Canada by: The T. Eaton Co., Ltd. *Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

a lesson in lighthearted housekeeping

Clock and calendar say Winter, but here's a room that sings of Spring! It's a Daystrom room—and wouldn't you know it, with that look of livable luxury! Such easy elegance too! The table top is Daystrom's own plastic, satin-smooth, but hankering for hard wear. Washable Duran upholstery, blossom-bright, is mounted on superbly styled electroplated chrome. (By the way, this hospitable table welcomes six, has an extension that zips in for a full foot of extra seating space.)

DON'T WORRY! All Daystromite table tops are laminated plastic—resist heat, scratches, stains! They're even cigarette-proof!

—it's DAYSTROM furniture!

Look at the cook's nook! It doubles as a dinette, a desk area, or a durable work table. Not even hot casseroles or acids can mar that bright beauty of the plastic table top. It swishes clean—in a jiffy—with a damp cloth. (So, by the way, will the chrome-plated surfaces!) All Daystrom furniture is designed for hard wear, easy care, and modern, lighthearted livability. At furniture and department stores everywhere. Be sure it's Daystrom. You can have Daystrom dinette sets from $49.95* to $149.50*.

Furniture for casual living—featured by stores from coast to coast

Daystrom Corporation, Olean, N. Y. • Daystrom Pacific Corporation, Pasadena, California

DAYSTROM
AN ASSOCIATE

(Continued from Page 151)

dealt with the river line that used to run up Johnson Street and with the Dock Street line that used to go to the beach. Instead of listening attentively, Charles found himself glancing at Malcolm Bryant, wondering what he might be thinking.

When the paper was over, Mr. Blashfield said it was a delightful paper, but he was sure that Moses Wilkins had never been a motorman on the old beach line. On the other hand, Doctor Marchby was sure that he had been, and when Mr. Crewe said he was sure he had not been, everyone said that Mr. Crewe had not been in Clyde long enough to remember. The argument became more heated, but every member had said his say by ten-fifteen and it was time to be going home.

"Charley," Malcolm Bryant said, "why don't you walk back with me? It's still pretty early."

There had been a heavy snowfall two days before and Charles could remember the walls of snow on either side of the cleared path as they walked up Dock Street and the penetrating chill that came from the ground.

"I'm trying to get it straight in my mind," Malcolm Bryant said, after Charles asked him what he thought of the evening. "These male groups are always the same. They are simply the projection of the old men's council. They have the same taboos and the same drawing-together habits. Now out there with the headhunters there were three councils. They discussed tribal exploits, just like the streetcars—exactly like the streetcars."

"I don't see how the headhunters in Borneo have anything to do with the Confessional Club."

"They have everything to do with it, but you're too involved with this locale to understand."

"Are you really going to the Orinoco?" Charles asked.

"Oh, I suppose so. There's never been any first-class work in the area. There's a rumor that they have a very interesting way of getting rid of old people there; but not a line of documented investigation. These explorers are all exhibitionists. Thank God, I'm not an explorer." Malcolm Bryant was walking more rapidly. "Now the women were hidden tonight, weren't they? It's a characteristic pattern, that hiding of the women."

"What women?" Charles asked.

"Your mother and your sister. I saw them flitting about but they didn't dare to show their faces. And they ate in the women's hut."

"It wasn't a hut," Charles said, and laughed. "They were eating in the kitchen. Where else would they eat?"

"Nowhere else. It was absolutely perfect."

They did not speak again until they came to the rooms Malcolm Bryant had rented on Fanning Street, a bedroom and sitting room on the second floor of Mrs. Mooney's house. The rooms were plainly furnished and Malcolm Bryant had done little to improve them. He had brought in only a draftsman's trestle table and two battered trunks. When he turned on the light, Charles saw that a blueprint map of Clyde, marked with colored crayons, was tacked on the drafting table and that there was a pile of yellow paper beside the blueprint.

"Just a few notes," Malcolm Bryant said as he took off his coat. "All the real work is in the Boston office."

Charles sat down in a rickety rocking chair.

"You know, I'm just beginning to get this town straight," Malcolm said. "I'm just beginning to get a pattern. That's the first thing you have to do on a job like this."

"I don't exactly know what you're talking about."

"Of course you don't. There are only a very few people who can understand what I'm talking about."

"Then why did you ask me up here?"

"Because you interest me, Charley. You have the greatest happiness vouchsafed any human being; you're an integrated, contented part of a group. You don't know how I envy you. You see—I'm personally not contented."

"Why aren't you? You can go anywhere you want, and you must like what you're doing."

"That's the trouble. I'm tired of moving."

Charles had not been sure of Malcolm Bryant's seriousness before, but now he was obviously saying that he was lonely and that he wanted friends. Charles heard the bell of the Baptist church striking.

"Well," Charles said, "I guess I'd better be going. It's getting pretty late." It occurred to him that this was what he was always saying in Clyde. Malcolm was standing up in his shirt sleeves and open vest and he looked uncertain.

"Wait a minute, Charley," he said. "There's something I want to say to you. As a human being, not as a social entity . . . frankly, just how interested are you in Jessica Lovell?"

Charles felt his back stiffen and his face grow red. "I don't know," he said. "I've told you that I don't really know Jessica Lovell very well."

"You don't?" Malcolm Bryant repeated. "Well, that's fine. It makes everything easier. This is a sort of hard thing for me to say, but I believe in being honest. Frankly, I've fallen in love with Jessica Lovell." Malcolm looked at Charles questioningly and for a moment Charles' mind was as vacant as his face must have been.

"Why did you think you ought to tell me?" he asked.

"Because I thought it was the honest thing to do. I know it sounds silly, and of course you're in no position to marry her.

(Continued on Page 155)

"The world is nothing but a big sandbox."

Greasy knife to wipe?

Tear a clean ScotTowel off the neat white roll. And here's another tip for kitchen cleanliness: ScotTowels are grand for draining bacon and wiping drips from bottles and jars!

Too many towels to launder?

Then use ScotTowels for drying hands, wiping pots, drying the percolator, and dozens of other uses. So strong, sturdy and absorbent—ScotTowels really dry. 150 to a roll. Scott Paper Co., Chester, Pa.

Trade Mark "ScotTowels" Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

...FEEL SO NICE—YET WORK SO HARD!

MAKE $25 or more quickly, in spare time, with fast-selling Writewell Greeting Cards, Stationery, Name Labels, Gift Wrappings, etc. Friends, family, neighbors, everybody a buyer. Costs nothing to try. Credit to Clubs. "How to Make Money" Booklet FREE with samples on approval. WRITEWELL CO. 302 Transit Bldg. Boston 15

AMAZING OFFER—$50 IS YOURS FOR SELLING ONLY 100 BOXES of entirely different new Deluxe All Occasion cards. Patented feature relieves you of the Individual Package sells for $1.00 your profit 50c. Surprise item. It costs nothing to try. Write today. CHEERFUL CARD CO., Dept. G-18, White Plains, N. Y. WRITE FOR SAMPLES

It's decorating MAGIC!

the HARVARD BED FRAME

You'll thrill to the decorating magic of the Hollywood bed using the amazing Harvard All-Metal Frame. Outstanding features include casters, recessed legs and glove fit. Adaptable for use with or without any headboard. Fits any coil or box spring. Any size available.

AT YOUR FURNITURE OR DEPARTMENT STORE

FREE ILLUSTRATED BOOKLET GIVES FULL DETAILS. WRITE TODAY!

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

THE Harvard MANUFACTURING CO.

6201 WOODLAND AVENUE • DEPT. LH • CLEVELAND 4, OHIO

The Harvard Frame

THIS 5 ROOM ALADDIN $1396 FREIGHT PAID

HOW TO BEAT THE BUILDING GAME

The Aladdin Readi-Cut System of construction enables you to save 18% lumber waste and up to 30% labor costs, and guarantees you will receive the highest quality lumber and a COMPLETE house as specified, shipped anywhere, all in one shipment.

65 DESIGNS TO CHOOSE FROM—HERE'S WHAT YOU GET

You get all the lumber cut to fit by fast machinery production line methods—marked and numbered, ready to erect practically without the use of a saw; also siding, flooring, trim, all millwork, doors, windows, glass, hardware, nails, roofing, paint and complete drawings with instructions. During the past 40 years many Aladdin home buyers have erected their own homes.

IMMEDIATE DELIVERY SEND 25c FOR CATALOG 18

THE ALADDIN CO. BAY CITY, MICHIGAN

Everybody's Pointing to HOTPOINT'S "Pushbutton-Cooking"

Just Press the Button. Choose your cooking speed—then press the button. A colored light shows you that the Calrod® unit is on at the exact speed you've selected.

And You Get 37 Other Wonderful Features With Hotpoint—America's Leading Electric Range

No wonder the whole country is talking about the sensational new Hotpoint! With Pushbutton Controls and "Talking Colors," this brand-new kind of electric range makes cooking easier, more accurate and far more convenient than you ever dreamed possible.

● ● "Pushbutton-Cooking" is as simple as snapping on an electric light. Just select your cooking speed—and press the button. It's far easier, far surer than old-fashioned methods. Pushbutton Controls put everything right at your finger tips—and right before your eyes.

● ● And Hotpoint brings you 37 other kitchen-planned features including the Hi-Speed Hotpoint Broiler that broils steaks for 12 in 1(minutes, Automatic Timer Clock, Sealed-Hea Oven, and Calrod® Cooking Units. Ask you Hotpoint dealer for a demonstration. He's listed in your classified phone book.

HOTPOINT INC. (A General Electric Affiliate), CHICAGO

Hotpoint Automatic Electric Ranges

Hotpoint's Famous Pan-Hugging Calrod® Units re- ond quickly with accurately measured heat—make cooking speedy, sure and safe.

Two Complete Sealed-Heat Ovens—available in the Doubl Oven Model—allow simultaneous baking and broilin Provide oven space for any cooking needs.

(Continued from Page 153)

You're just a kid, but I thought you had a right to know."

It sounded silly and yet at the same time Charles, in spite of a hollow feeling in the pit of his stomach, realized that not everyone would have been so honest. "Whoever said I wanted to marry her?" he asked. "I've never thought of marrying her."

It was true. He had never thought until that moment of marrying Jessica Lovell.

The worried look had gone from Malcolm's face. "Well, that's fine," he said. "Of course, I haven't much to offer her, but there's some talk about something in the museum at Harvard or there might be a permanent fellowship on the Sykes Foundation. You know, I think I might make her quite happy."

Charles found himself standing up without ever remembering that he had risen from the rocking chair. He knew that he was smiling, because his face felt stiff and contorted. "Of course, she may throw you down."

"Oh, yes," Malcolm Bryant said, "she may."

"And of course"—his voice sounded louder—"I'll go on seeing her if I want to. Well, good night."

It did not definitely dawn on Charles until the spring of 1928 that he was in love with Jessica Lovell. Then suddenly he was so much in love that nothing else seemed to matter and everything seemed possible. When all those reticences of caution or barriers of common sense, or whatever you cared to call them, broke, it was plain that this situation must have been developing for a long while without either of them having consciously perceived it. Yet it was possible that he would never have fallen in love with Jessica or she with him if it had not been for the irritating stimulus of Malcolm Bryant.

> What humbugs we are, who pretend to live for beauty, and never see the dawn.
> —LOGAN PEARSALL SMITH: All Trivia (Harcourt, Brace).

Charles met Jessica in the Dock Street Savings Bank unexpectedly one Saturday morning near the middle of April. He had asked Mr. Howell for permission to go there before the bank closed in order to cash his pay check and deposit a part of it, and Mr. Howell had told him that it would be all right if he would hurry. Charles had cashed his check and had given Mr. Gregg five dollars and his deposit book when Jessica Lovell came in. Jessica, too, was holding her savings book. Her cheeks were red and fresh from the April wind and she was wearing a short coat of gray fur, and one of her tight felt hats was pulled down close over her unruly hair.

"Hello, Charley," she said. "I'll be through with this in a minute. It's my Wright-Sherwin check. Father likes to have me bring it in myself." She was entirely at home, friendly and confiding. "Where are you going?"

He told her he was going back to the office.

"But it's Saturday," Jessica said. "What are you doing this afternoon? Suppose we go for a drive?" She asked the question as though she were sure he would have nothing else to do and he understood, when she asked him where they would meet, that it would be better to have it seem like an accidental meeting. "How about the courthouse at half past two?" she said.

It was much easier than meeting at the Lovells' front door and going through explanations. It meant there would be nothing underlined or portentous about it. They had simply met at the bank.

Charles arrived in front of the courthouse at half past two. When he saw Jessica's black phaeton glide around the curve of Johnson Street, it seemed like an accident that Jessica should see him and slow down and wave.

"Why, hello," Jessica said. "Can't I give you a lift?"

"Are you sure it won't be too much trouble?" Charles asked.

"Oh, no. Not a bit of trouble."

Neither of them laughed until the car was moving again and then they both laughed at once. The sun kept trying to come out from behind the scudding clouds and it was still like winter as they drove through town, but when they were on the edge of town the sun was brighter and the brown fields seemed warmer. Jessica turned to the right at the common and they crossed the river at the third bridge and drove over the hilly road that led to Walton Spring. He and Jessica were talking as though they had not seen each other for a long while and when they were silent they still seemed to be talking.

She was wearing the same gray suit and the same red hat that she had worn at the firemen's muster and though her eyes were on the road she would glance at him now and then in a quick, amused way. She asked what he had been doing since she had seen him last, and she was thankful that the winter was over. It was the longest winter she had ever spent. Granted she had been to New York and she had been in Boston quite often for the symphony, still it had been a long winter. It had been a long winter for Charles, too, though he had been working. He could tell her a good deal about brass and precision instruments, but he was not going to tell her.

"No," Jessica said, "don't. Let's not talk about anything constructive. I'm tired of being constructive. I'm tired of sitting around and being nice too. I wonder how nice anyone is, really."

"Everyone has to pretend," Charles said.

"That's the trouble. So you never know what anyone is really like."

He never could remember how Malcolm Bryant's name came up, but it must have been Jessica who spoke of him first. She was saying that Malcolm Bryant was always dropping in and giving travel talks about Central African beads and life in beehive huts. She always felt as though she were sitting in a lecture hall.

"But he's interesting sometimes," Charles said. "He's been around a lot."

"Everybody acts as though I ought to like him. Charley, did you think I liked him?"

It was the most beautiful question that anyone had ever asked him. They were crossing a culvert, over a piece of swampy land, and there was a row of old willows on either side of the road.

"Did you really?" she asked again, and then before he could answer she slowed down the car and asked him what that singing noise was.

"It's the peepers," he said, "the frogs. Sam used to take me out to catch them, but they were pretty hard to catch."

If you came near where they were they always stopped their singing, but if you stood still long enough you could see them, sometimes. They blew their throats up like balloons. You had to wait a long while, absolutely still, before they began to sing again.

"Sam could make the best willow whistles," he said.

This was just the time for whistles, now that the sap was running in the willows and the branches were growing yellow. You could always tell by looking at the willows when spring was coming.

"Can you make a whistle?" she asked.

But he was not good at making whistles. He never could carve boats or do any of those things in the American Boy's Handy Book.

Once long ago, she said, one spring in Clyde, she had gone out picking wild flowers in a place called the High Woods. She had always wanted to go again, but somehow there had never been a chance.

"Do you suppose there are any flowers yet?" she asked.

It was just the time of year when you thought of such things, whether you cared for flowers or not. He told her that the grape hyacinths were out by the front door at Spruce Street and this meant that there might be hepaticas in the woods.

"Do you suppose there are any in those woods?"

She had stopped the car and pointed to the woods on a hill above a pasture, and when he said there might be, she said they might walk up and see. There were bars in a

(Continued on Page 157)

The Pride and Joy of Happy Millions!

Almost every woman falls in love with Revere Ware on sight. It is so rich looking, so beautifully designed. But the real joy comes when you first try these Copper-Clad Stainless Steel utensils. Revere "waterless" cooking seems to make foods taste so much more delicious while retaining their precious vitamins and minerals. Revere utensils are so easy to use—they save time and fuel because they heat up so quickly and evenly—they need so little watching—they're so easy to keep looking ever-new.

The purchase of Revere Ware is a good investment no matter what your budget may be, for the extra-thick copper bottom makes it practically indestructible. (We have never heard of a piece of Revere Ware wearing out.) There's a complete line which includes skillets, sauce pans, double boilers, sauce pots, Dutch ovens, coffee percolators. Truly, Revere Ware is just what you want. Buy it. To make sure you get it, look for the trademark in the thick copper bottom.

REVERE COPPER AND BRASS INCORPORATED
Rome Manufacturing Company Division
Rome, New York

How to make Corn Pattycake

Brand new! And the wonderful flavor of DEL MONTE Brand Corn makes it the hot sandwich idea of the year.

First, be sure you do get DEL MONTE Corn for this recipe. You need such rich flavor and tender kernels. For two Pattycakes (each serves 3) prepare 1 pkg. hot roll mix according to maker's directions, mixing thoroughly and letting rise once in covered bowl.

Pat, pull dough into two 11" rounds with ½"-thick rims. Place on oiled cooky sheets; spread with mixture of 1 No. 2 can DEL MONTE Tomatoes, drained and chopped; 1 clove garlic, minced; 1 tbsp. olive oil; ½ tsp. oregano or marjoram; salt and pepper to taste.

Top with thin slices of American cheese and salami or ham, as shown. Sprinkle with grated Parmesan cheese and olive oil. Bake in moderately hot oven (400°F.) 20-25 min. or till browned. Heat and season 12-oz. can DEL MONTE Golden Whole Kernel Corn.

Spoon hot corn on baked Pattycakes.* (See what nice, bright kernels—that's DEL MONTE for you!) Serve at once. Cut a wedge and taste the amazingly sweet, hearty flavor of that corn! That's why you want DEL MONTE in this dish—or any way you serve corn.

Del Monte

CORN

Two styles to enjoy:
Golden Cream Style
Golden Whole Kernel

One more good food from the brand that puts FLAVOR FIRST

*Illustration shows only one of the two Pattycakes

This is DEL MONTE Golden Whole Kernel Corn. Be sure to try DEL MONTE Golden Cream Style, too!

(Continued from Page 155)

gap in the stone wall and he pulled the bars down carefully so that she could step over them. They walked quickly up the rocky, grassy slope and he held up a strand of a barbed-wire fence so that she could crawl under. There was a stand of oak and hickory on top of the hill and when their feet rustled through the dead, sodden leaves there was a musty smell, half of winter and half of spring, but there was not a single hepatica.

The buds on the branches above them were as tight as though it were still winter. There was not a sign of life in those woods, not even a trace of green, except for some rock ferns growing in a crevice of a granite ledge. Nevertheless, they kept on walking. The hill was higher than it looked, and when they reached the crest and turned around they could see a wide expanse of country below them through the bare branches of the trees. They could see the curve of the river and, farther off, the roofs of Clyde.

They were both a little out of breath, and they both must have turned toward each other at the same moment. He stared straight at her and she had a grave, startled look and her eyes were opened very wide.

"Oh," she said, in a dry, matter-of-fact sort of voice, and then the next moment they were in each other's arms. "Oh," she said again, and he kissed her and they clung to each other, eyes closed, not speaking. When she turned her head away and let it rest a second on his shoulder he dropped his arms, but suddenly she pulled him close to her again and they stood side by side, looking into the half-defined distance. "Well," she said, "there's Clyde." It was just as though nothing had happened.

"Yes," he answered, "there it is."

The sun had broken through the clouds again, the slanting sun of late afternoon. It was just as though nothing had happened when Jessica and he walked down the hill, as though they had never stood locked in each other's arms and had never kissed, except that she put her arm through his while they were still in the woods.

WHEN they were in the car, she pulled a gold compact from her pocket, opened it, stared at herself in its little mirror, put a dab of powder on her nose, and snapped the compact shut. Then she pulled down her hat.

"I wish my hair didn't always blow," she said.

"I like it when it blows," he told her. It was almost as though it had never happened, but he never would have said such a thing before they walked up the hill.

"Do you? I'm glad somebody does."

The truth was that so much had happened that it was better not to talk about it. It was better to sit quietly as they were driving home, conscious that they were near each other and thinking of what had happened.

"I might as well get out here," he said, when they came near the courthouse.

"Well, all right," she said, "I suppose it's better." Everything was in its place and there was a place for everything.

"Thanks ever so much," Charles said when the car stopped. "I had a wonderful time."

"So did I," she said, and then she smiled. "I loved every minute of it."

"Did you?" Charles asked.

"Yes, every minute of it. If it's a good day, let's do it again next Saturday."

Charles used occasionally to see himself through the perspective of elapsed time. His mind still worked in much the same way as that of the Charles Gray who must have exulted that spring in Clyde. He still had a desire to accept what was around him and to develop according to established rules. He had never been a revolutionary, but still that spring he could perceive undercurrents of discontent. He was acutely conscious of his own deficiencies and of his inexperience. He wanted, of course, to be more like Jessica.

Charles could see that though Jessica Lovell was touchable she was still unattainable, because they had different positions in the plan of Clyde. Though their clandestine meetings that spring had occurred in fact, they still held elements of the unreal and consequently their moments together were the more vivid. He also knew that this situation was bound to change and that the reticences between them would have to break.

THIS happened on a warm day in May when the trees were all a soft green. They had driven along the Spring Road again to the same pasture and they had left the car and had walked up the same hill. They had spoken much as they had before as they walked across the pasture, shyly and uncertainly as though neither of them could be sure of what would happen when they reached the woods.

"It's been such a late spring, hasn't it?" Jessica said. "I was afraid it was going to rain today."

"So was I," Charles said.

"But if it had, we could have driven in the rain."

"Yes, of course we could have driven in the rain."

That meaningless conversation carried them across the pasture and into the woods.

"I like that coat of yours," she said. "It's old but it looks nice." It was the tweed coat he had worn at the firemen's muster. "You always look so nice, so self-possessed."

"So do you. You always do."

It did not seem possible that the same thing might happen again that had now happened several times before. It did not seem possible that he had ever touched her, because she was unattainable.

"I'm getting pretty good at walking up this hill," she said.

"Yes, but it's good exercise."

And then the same thing happened, the same impossible thing.

"Darling," she whispered, when he held her in his arms, "darling," and then he told her that he loved her. He could not have said it if she had not spoken first. "Yes," she said, "I know."

It was still too immense to talk about intelligently, but suddenly it was fact, now that they had put it into words.

"Oh, Charley," she said, "what are we going to do?"

"I don't know, but I don't mind right now."

"I always wondered what would happen if we said it," she said. "Do you still love me?"

"Yes."

"Darling, everybody's going to find out."

"Yes, I suppose they will."

"I wish they'd let us alone." She stopped and rested her head on his shoulders. "Charley, are you happy?"

Yes, he had never been so happy.

"I don't think father will mind so much," she said, "if he gets to know it gradually and not all at once."

"You mean your father won't like it," he said. "I don't suppose he will."

"I wish he could just see more of you without its disturbing him. You're not cross, are you, Charley?"

"No, I'm not cross."

"Charley, don't look so unhappy." She took his arm and pressed it tight against her. "If we had only met each other somewhere else. Do you see what I mean?"

She was saying, of course, that everything would have been all right if he had only lived on Johnson Street. She was saying, without saying it, that everything would have been

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

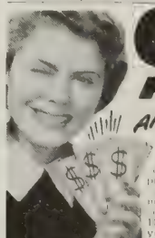
How the Heart Dies

By G. M. White

This is the way the heart dies:
Like a dove with a broken wing,
Drawn in itself, unable to fly,
Too miserable to sing.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Admiral
RADIOS—TELEVISION
REFRIGERATORS—RANGES



AMERICA'S MOST WANTED REFRIGERATOR! . . . because only DUAL-TEMP offers all these time-saving, food-saving features. Built-in HOME FREEZER really quick-freezes at 15° below zero. Stores up to 70 lbs. of frozen food safely for months. Huge, MOIST COLD COMPARTMENT never requires defrosting! Keeps food fresh and moist without covering dishes. STERILAMP kills germs, helps preserve food longer. These and many other features make DUAL-TEMP America's finest refrigerator.

EARN MONEY QUICK EASY

Call on friends, relatives, neighbors with HERTELART All Occasion Greeting Card Assort. 14 exquisite designs only $1. Make up to 100% profit. Also Floral Notes, Gift Wraps, Favors, Stationery. Complete line. Money back guarantee. Ask for fast-selling All-Occasion Ass't. sample on approval.

FREE SAMPLE
Imprinted Personal Notes

HERTELART, 305 W. Adams St., Dept. B-2, Chicago 6, Ill

CASH FOR YOU— AND DRESSES TOO!

It's easy to earn up to $22.00 a week IN SPARE TIME, and get beautiful new dresses for your self at extra bonus! Just call on friends, neighbors, with gorgeous presentation newest styles Harford Frocks and take their orders. No experience, no money needed. FREE! Big Style Line in full color, actual fabric samples. Your Own Dress Plan—all sent you FREE, if you mail your name, address. Send no money. Write!

HARFORD FROCKS
DEPT. A-8012, CINCINNATI 25, OHIO

Knitting Yarns BY MAIL

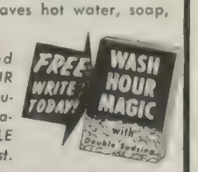
Finer quality yarns of all types—spun in our own mill...sold to you at lowest possible price. Choose the colors you want—bright and gay or soft and delicate—

Write for FREE Sample Card

Cliveden Yarns have been manufactured for over 40 years by Walter McCook & Son, Inc. See and feel their lovely texture before you order.

Almost all orders shipped within 24 hrs.

WRITE TO DEPT. 1
CLIVEDEN YARNS
711 Arch St., Phila 6, Pa.



"that's why we both chose a DEXTER TWIN TUB

The only washer with two washing tubs. Only Dexter Twin does your entire week's washing best in one hour or less—turns out a tub of spotlessly clean clothes every four minutes. EXCLUSIVE DEXTER DOUBLE SUDSING does a perfect washing every time. Without hand rubbing, soaking, or pre-treating—and it saves hot water, soap, and electricity.

Write for illustrated booklet "WASH HOUR MAGIC." Gives valuable washing information—tells why DOUBLE SUDSING washes best.

THE DEXTER COMPANY, Dept. L-29, Fairfield, Iowa

WASHES CLEANER • QUICKER • EASIER

A LITTLE MEAT GOES A LONG, LONG WAY WITH THIS

Eat Better - Spend Less - with this delicious HEINZ RECIPE

OLD HOME MEAT LOAF

Combine ¼ cup Heinz Tomato Ketchup, 1 cup dry bread crumbs, 1 cup milk. Let stand 5 min. Add 2 lbs. ground beef, 2 eggs, ½ cup chopped onion, 1 Tbs. salt. Bake in flat pan in moderate oven (350° F.) 1 hr. Serves 6 to 8.

Give your thrifty dishes a taste-thrill by adding Heinz Tomato Ketchup! This luscious blend of "Aristocrat" tomatoes and spice makes stews, casseroles, low-cost meats delectable! Just a little does a lot for your cooking!

Heinz Ketchup 57

all right if the Grays had been better off or even if he had not been a Clyde boy, and it made him angry. It might have been better if he had been a Marchby, but at the same time he was Judge Gray's grandson. He was thinking that if Jessica had been Priscilla Meader or one of the Latham girls everything would have been all right.

"Oh, Charley," she was saying. "Charley, please."

He had forgotten until she spoke that she was still close beside him.

"Oh, Charley, I don't care what anyone's going to say."

"If you think I'm as bad as all that, why did you ever have anything to do with me?" he asked.

"Oh, Charley," she said, and they stood there in the pasture and she began to cry. It made him feel hopeless and desperate, but there was nothing he could do about it. "I only said I didn't care."

"Then don't say it again."

They stood there without speaking, and Jessica Lovell was still crying.

"Lend me your handkerchief," she said.

"All right," Charles said. "Just stop crying, Jessica. It's going to be all right."

It was then that the idea came to him that changed so much of his life. It came to him suddenly, but perhaps it had been in the back of his mind for a long while.

"Jessica," he said, "I guess I'd better make some money."

When Charles arrived at Spruce Street, his mother was in the dining room in her oldest gingham apron, polishing the flat silver. "Hello, dear," she said. "What have you been doing with yourself all afternoon?"

"Oh, I've been for a walk in the country. Where's father?"

His father was upstairs working on the paper which he was to read at the next meeting of the Confessional Club. Though he knew his father disliked being interrupted, Charles went upstairs to see him. John Gray was sitting in shirt sleeves and suspenders, writing with a pencil on sheets of yellow paper.

"Well," he said, "what's the matter? Are you lonely, Charley?"

His dropping in was so unusual that Charley realized how seldom there had been anything he had wanted from his father.

"No," Charles said. "It's just a question about something I'm thinking of doing."

His father tilted back in his chair and stroked his closely clipped mustache.

"I was thinking of getting a job somewhere in Boston," Charles went on. "I don't believe I'm going to get anywhere if I stay at Wright-Sherwin."

"You mean," John Gray asked softly, "that there isn't enough hay in the bundle?"

"The truth is, I'd like a chance to make some money."

John Gray said nothing for a moment. "You couldn't be thinking of a brokerage office or a bond house, could you?"

"As a matter of fact, I was just thinking that if you know anyone—if you wouldn't mind speaking to someone ——"

"Why, Charley," his father said, and Charles had never seen him look so pleased. "I never thought our minds could ever work in the same way. It's about time you realized you can't get anywhere without money. Do you mind if I ask you a question? How did this idea ever get into your head?"

CHARLES looked at his father and tried to speak casually. "It just came over me."

"It couldn't have anything to do with Jessica Lovell, could it?"

"How did you know?" Charles asked. "Yes, I've been seeing quite a lot of Jessica."

"And you're in love with her?"

"Yes."

John Gray pushed his chair back from the table. "This really does me a lot of good. I wonder what Laurence Lovell will say. You and I have certainly got to do something about this, Charley. We had certainly better go up to Boston on Monday."

"Not Monday," Charles said. "I'd better tell them I'm through at Wright-Sherwin on Monday, but I guess they'll let me take the day off Tuesday."

"Do you want to do that before you get another job? I never thought you'd do a thing like that."

"I'll find something else," Charles said.

He was through with Wright-Sherwin, but he had no way of knowing that the whole course of his life was changing, and his father's too.

"Charley," John Gray said, and put his hand on his shoulder, "if you want her, I'll see you get her." John Gray walked to the sofa and picked up his coat. "And now I think I'll go downtown and get the Transcript. It ought to be in now."

"Charley!" He heard his mother's voice calling from downstairs. "Where are you?"

John Gray opened the door.

"It's that Mr. Bryant, Charley. He wants you on the telephone."

MALCOLM wanted him to come over at eight o'clock that night. "I wish you'd come as a special favor," Malcolm said. "I want you to meet the team."

"What team?"

"My team." Malcolm's voice sounded sharper. "My investigatory team. They're starting in on Clyde on Monday. We're just talking over the field and I'd like to show them one firsthand exhibit. You don't mind co-operating, do you, Charley?"

It was a relief that Malcolm did not want to talk about Jessica Lovell, such a relief that he was glad to go; and besides, he was curious to see Malcolm in his own environment, surrounded by his own kind.

I am not one of those who do not believe in love at first sight. But I do believe in taking a second look.

—H. VINCENT.

There were in Malcolm's room that night eight or ten people who all looked somewhat like Malcolm. Their faces were sharp with eager perspicacity and at the same time complacent with hidden knowledge. It was the peculiar look of the professional investigator which, he often thought later, was worn by everybody trained to interfere in other people's business, whether they were social workers, bank examiners or income-tax examiners.

Malcolm Bryant's team sat on the couch and on Malcolm's trunk and on chairs which must have been brought from Mrs. Mooney's kitchen. Malcolm himself was perched on the drawing table with two glass gallon jugs of wine beside him.

"Well, here he is," Malcolm said. "This is Charley Gray, everybody, and I think Charley will be as much of a help to you tonight as he's been to me. This is Evangeline Scroll. Evangeline's back from Yucatan. And here's Bill Horsley. You've heard me talk about Bill."

As Malcolm mentioned the names he waved his arm at each one, but Charles did not remember them distinctly. Malcolm and all the rest of them, he imagined, were trying to put their subject at ease. They made him feel as a Polynesian on an atoll must have felt when he suddenly encountered a boatload of strangers from a whaling ship.

"Sit down in the rocking chair," Malcolm said, "where everyone can see you, and have a drink. Now, my idea is for you and me to talk as though no one else were here. Let's think of Clyde as a big aquarium—and it's a wonderful aquarium—and I scooped you out and put you in a globe to show the team."

"I hope the team likes it," Charles said. And everyone laughed.

"Now, Charley here lives on Spruce Street. Spruce Street runs into Johnson Street and yet Charley is not a side streeter, in the broader sense of the term. He has an upward and downward mobility that is very interesting. He is able to touch, without belonging to, the cliques on Johnson Street, and yet at the same time he can move downward. The first time I laid eyes on him I knew he was a beautifully conditioned type."

Malcolm Bryant paused and Charles sat there staring blankly at the team.

(Continued on Page 161)

So easy to give everyday meals a festive touch! Add cherries to muffins, or to biscuits cut in holiday shapes. And vary your menus with delicious kinds of breads from the stores.

What nutritionists say about the 6-way nourishment of ENRICHED BREAD and FLOUR

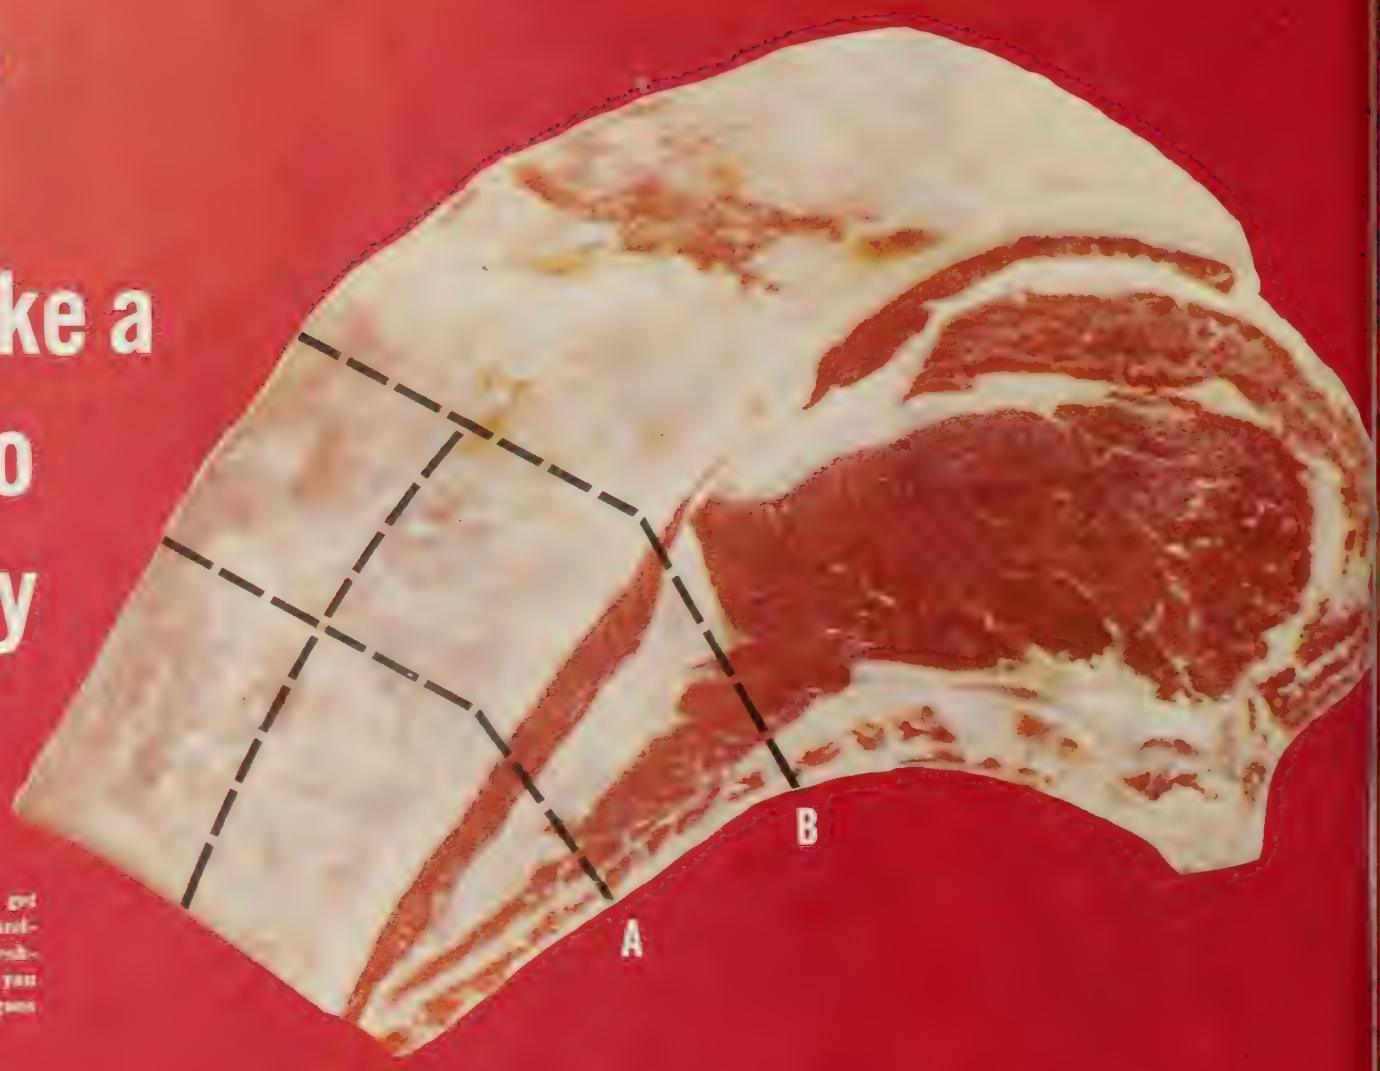
ERVE PLENTY OF BREAD EVERY DAY. t's so economical, and delicious so nany ways. Look for the panel that ays "Enriched" on the wrappers of he white bread that you buy.

UCH DELICIOUS VARIETY at your aker's. Mouth-watering rolls, breads. ookies. Ask whether they're enriched hen you buy . . . it's important to get his added 6-way nourishment.

RIGHT OUT OF THE OVEN" . . . those eather-light biscuits, muffins, cookies, akes and pies that win cheers from our family and friends. Be sure you uy flour labeled "Enriched" for its dded nourishment.

Nutrition authorities give a prominent place in the all-round balanced diet to enriched breads and other baked foods. These scientists, whose job it is to show us how to eat well to keep well, say over and over that bread is a most economical source of food energy. They call enriched bread "an important carrier of nutrients" . . . they say "it contributes to better nutrition." See those flags up there? Read what these contributions actually are . . . 6-way nourishment for you and your family at meal-time and between-time!

"IS BREAD FATTENING?" Not a bit more so than any other food of equal energy content. Nutritionists point out that the carbohydrates of bread are readily and easily converted into energy which is then used by the body as needed.



WHEAT FLOUR INSTITUTE

ACCEPTED
COUNCIL ON FOOD AND NUTRITION

The nutritional statements in this announcement are approved by the Council on Foods and Nutrition of the American Medical Association.

the Meat page

how to make a rib roast do double duty

Lady, here's a thrifty trick that lets you get not only a fine party dinner from that handsome beef rib roast, but also another fresh-cooked meal of braised short ribs. And you can depend on it, that man in your life goes for short ribs.

Here's what you do: Have your meat-man saw through the bones at A and B as in this picture. You can then cut between the ribs to make individual servings of short ribs. Braise them slowly with vegetables or noodles to stretch their good meat flavor further in the meal.

Now, for your roast, you have just the tenderest "heart" of the piece you bought. To make it juicier—and to get more servings from it, too—keep oven heat at 325 degrees to cut shrinkage to a minimum. When nearly done, put whole peeled potatoes in the pan to brown in the drippings.

1. Braised Short Ribs

2. Juicy Roast Beef

Only a knife cut separates meat that is best for braising and meat that is best for roasting. But which is better for good nutrition? The answer is that all meat and all cuts of meat supply the kind of protein that everyone, from growing child to grownup, needs every day. Careful buying and knowledge of thrifty ways to use meat are both big helps in keeping meat with its nourishment in more of the week's meals.

P.S.—Illustrated booklet, showing six "thrifty meat" ideas like this, yours for 5¢ in coin sent to Box 1123, Chicago 77, Illinois.

ACCEPTED COUNCIL ON FOODS AND NUTRITION AMERICAN MEDICAL ASSOCIATION

This Seal means that all nutritional statements made in this advertisement are acceptable to the Council on Foods and Nutrition of the American Medical Association.

AMERICAN MEAT INSTITUTE Headquarters, Chicago · Members throughout the U. S.

(Continued from Page 158)

"I think Mr. Gray is a very nice type," Miss Scroll said. "Don't let Malc disturb you, Mr. Gray."

Charles' face flushed and he looked around him uneasily. "Well," he said, "what do you want me to do for you—sing a song?"

"Nothing," Malcolm said. "That's the beauty of it, Charley. I just want the team to see you react. You're being a great help, Charley."

"Give him another drink," Miss Scroll said. "I think Charley's wonderful. You don't mind if I call you Charley, do you, Mr. Gray?"

"No," Charles said, "not if it makes you feel any better." It may have been the second glass of wine he drank that made him want to speak. "All right," he said, "I'll tell you something about Clyde. I'm pretty tired of all this talk about classes and about Johnson Street and Spruce Street. It doesn't matter. Nobody thinks about classes because everyone in Clyde knows he's as good as everyone else. This is a free country and Clyde's a free town." He was surprised at himself for having said so much.

"Listen to him," he heard Malcolm say. "You see he has great mobility."

He did not care what Malcolm Bryant said. He could see all of Clyde in one piece. Johnson Street, Spruce Street, Dock Street, River Street, the North End, the South End. You could pull it apart and classify it, as these preposterous strangers would try to do, but all of it fitted together and there was no reason to disturb it. He forgot about Wright-Sherwin and the Lovells and Johnson Street. "You ought to be here," he said, "for Decoration Day. And for the Fourth of July. That's when you'll see what I mean. Everyone's as good as everyone else."

That evening in Malcolm's room was a most peculiar ending for a peculiar day. Charles had never thought of himself as convertible into diagrams and geometric curves and a mass of static, regimented fact. What was the social position of the Grays—in Clyde in the eighteenth century? In the nineteenth century? How often did he go to church? Were there cliques in the Clyde High School, and to what extent did the cliques mingle?

As time went on the team began dividing into groups and cliques, arguing about charts and graphs and methods of cataloguing.

It was after eleven when Charles left, but it was a beautiful night and he did not want to go home at once. Nearly all of Clyde was sound asleep. There was a faint smell of lilacs in the air, although the lilacs were not in bloom. When he walked up Dock Street and turned left to Johnson Street there was no sound except his own footsteps on the brick sidewalk. Johnson Street was sleeping in the starlight. The trees made black patches on the Lovells' lawn which hardly could be called shadows, but the fence and the house itself looked very white as he stood there for a minute looking at them. The night light was burning in his Aunt Jane's room on Gow Street. He had never felt the unity of Clyde as he felt it then. It all belonged to him that night, because he was in love with Jessica Lovell.

CHARLES had often heard his father speak at length on the old days of downtown Boston. Those were the days, he used to say, when Boston's alleys all led to dignified bars and secluded restaurants which served the best food in the world. In those days, Boston had respect for the male, particularly in the State Street district, and Boston was a comfortable, civilized town.

John Gray repeated all this to Charles on that Tuesday morning in 1928, but Charles was too concerned with the future to bother with the past.

"Did you say this place is on Congress Street?" Charles asked.

"Yes, Congress Street, and on a third floor. Old E. P., the father of the present Mr. Rush, said an upstairs office stopped the riffraff from dropping in."

"Don't you think, if you're going to introduce me to Mr. Rush, you'd better tell me a little more about him?"

"I'm not introducing you to E. P. Rush. E. P. Rush is dead and perhaps it's just as well because I'm afraid he didn't approve of me. It's his son whom I met during my brief sojourn at Harvard University. We played poker and did other things together."

"I know, you've told me that. But you haven't told me what he's like."

"IT doesn't matter," John Gray said, "because he'll probably make a different impression on you from any he has made on me. I wonder how the market's opening."

E. P. Rush & Co. occupied half of the third floor of a building on Congress Street. It was a curiously planned office which seemed to have grown like a living organism, producing small clusters of desks and typewriters, throwing out new railed enclosures and rearing new counters and pieces of grillwork and acquiring, as an afterthought, a few leather armchairs grouped in front of a board on which were listed in abbreviations some but not all of the stocks on the New York exchange. Two tickers near the board stamped quotations upon reels of tape which poured into tall wicker baskets. The exchange had not opened yet so the tickers were almost silent. The bookkeepers were already at work and the young men in the bond department were reading prospectuses and making their morning telephone calls. Charles did not know then that the studied, dusty carelessness of E. P. Rush & Co. was an effect which was deliberately cultivated to create a sound atmosphere.

Adam and Eve had many advantages, but the principal one was that they escaped teething. —MARK TWAIN.

Behind this outer office was a railing guarding the ground-glass doors of the partners' rooms. A switchboard operator guarded the railing gate. John Gray, with Charles following, walked across the room and bowed to her and she said that Mr. Gray was quite a stranger lately.

"Yes," John Gray said, "lately, but my thoughts are often here, Miss Swift. Is Mr. Rush in yet?"

"Oh, yes," Miss Swift said. "I know he'll be glad to see you."

Mr. Rush sat at a shabby roll-top desk. The morning mail, opened and in a neat pile before him, was weighted down by an Indian hatchet head. In the corner behind him, like a leafless tree, stood a mahogany hatrack on which hung Mr. Rush's leghorn hat. The lenses of his horn-rimmed spectacles gave his light blue eyes a surprised look which did not fit with his mouth.

"Hello," he said. "Where did you drop from?"

"Don't let me interrupt your train of thought, Moulton," John Gray answered. "This is my son Charles."

"He looks the way you used to."

"But he isn't like me," John Gray said. "Charley wants to get on."

"What class were you in?" Mr. Rush asked Charles.

John Gray sighed and spoke before Charles could answer. "My sister Jane wanted him to go to Dartmouth. Don't hold it against him, Moulton."

"Does he want a job?"

"Why, Moulton," John Gray answered, "why do you think we're here?"

Mr. Rush pulled a thick gold watch from his waistcoat pocket. "It's five minutes after ten. Why don't you go out and see the opening, Johnny?" After John Gray had left, Mr. Rush looked at Charles for a moment. "Your father is a remarkable man."

"Yes, sir. I suppose he is."

Mr. Rush stood up. "Well, I suppose I'd better introduce you to Mr. Stoker. He runs our bond department."

They walked down the partners' row to Mr. Stoker's office. Mr. Stoker was younger, a man who looked like a football coach. In fact, Charles learned later that Lawrence Stoker had once been a line coach for Harvard.

"Lawrence," Mr. Rush said, "this is Charles Gray. He comes from Dartmouth, Ambrosia. Cold [illegible] to eat—so [illegible] Just swirl luscious, tropic-fresh Baker's Coconut into a bowlful of [illegible] and grapes if you like. Other wonderful Ambrosia variations . . . combine Baker's Coconut with pineapple, peaches, or bananas.

Sweetheart Cake...so lovely, so easy with Baker's Coconut!

WANT HIM to kiss you at the dinner table on Valentine's Day? Bake him this romantic Sweetheart Cake—and drift it high with luscious, snowy Baker's Coconut!

For it's ten to one he loves coconut cake! Specially when the coconut's tender n'moist—Baker's Coconut!

You'll find Baker's Coconut in stores everywhere. Use it often!

For SWEETHEART CAKE, spread white cake with Coconut Frosting (see recipe on Baker's Coconut packages). Place wax-paper heart patterns on cake and edge with extra frosting. Remove patterns and fill heart outlines with red jelly. Drift snowy Baker's Coconut high around cake! Decorate with silver dragees.

Cherry Coconut Pie. Drain 2 cups quick-frozen or canned red cherries, reserving juice. Dissolve 1 package Cherry Jell-O in 2 cups hot cherry juice and water. Chill 1½ cups Jell-O until slightly thickened. Then whip as directed on package. Fold in ¾ cup Baker's Coconut and turn into baked 9-inch pie shell. Chill until firm. Add cherries to remaining Jell-O. Chill until slightly thickened. Pour over whipped Jell-O and chill until almost firm. Sprinkle with ¾ cup coconut. Chill until firm.

BAKER'S COCONUT

NEW RECIPE BOOK!

For colorful, idea-packed "Coconut Glamour Desserts," send 10¢ to Baker's Coconut, Box B 29, Battle Creek, Mich.

Products of General Foods

but I'd like you to find something for him to do."

It astonished Charles that Mr. Rush had not asked him a single question, but later when he knew the office better he approved of that method. Mr. Rush knew who he was and had passed on his personal appearance and this was about all that was necessary. As in Victorian England younger sons once rushed to join the church and the army, so in those days on America's Eastern seaboard they crowded into reputable investment houses. Not one in twenty of these young men ever developed a permanent value. It was not the policy of Rush & Co. to expend much time on their education. It was a matter of sink or swim, and there were always lots more waiting.

That was how he started with E. P. Rush & Co. He was entering the finest investment house in Boston, a firm whose backing meant that any issue in which it participated was as sound as a nut. It was like being in a club to be in Mr. Stoker's crowd. E. P. Rush & Co. was a gentlemen's firm, with gentlemen's ethics. There was money enough to build an office that would look like an Italian palace, but E. P. Rush did not want the type of customer who was attracted by upholstery.

When Charles returned to Clyde at six o'clock, his manner was already changing. He was in the old-line house of E. P. Rush & Co. and someday he would be a partner. The prospect was a long way off, but already its charm was working. If he had not been in E. P. Rush he would not have called up Jessica Lovell that evening after supper.

"Why, Charley," Jessica said over the telephone. "Of course I'm not doing anything. We'd love to see you."

It was eight o'clock, but it was still light, and all Johnson Street was bathed in a misty, mysterious afterglow that gave the Lovells' house a remote look, but his sense of never having been there before vanished when Jessica opened the front door herself. Her silk afternoon dress was a grayish-green color very much like the color of the new leaves in the fading light. She clasped his hand very tightly, and her own hand felt cold.

"I've been wondering where you've been," she said. "We're all in the wallpaper room."

He walked slowly in behind her and shook hands with Miss Lovell and Mr. Lovell.

"Let me see." Mr. Lovell was speaking. "I don't think I've set eyes on you, Charles, since the Players were finished. How is everything going at Wright-Sherwin?"

"I'm leaving there at the end of next week, sir."

"Oh," Mr. Lovell said. "I'm sorry. Was anything the matter?"

"No, nothing was the matter. I'm starting work in Boston at E. P. Rush & Co."

A change had come over Mr. Lovell. "Why, Charles," he said, "how did you ever get into E. P. Rush?"

"Father knows Mr. Rush."

Mr. Lovell still looked at Charles as though he had heard something incredible. "Why, that's splendid. Congratulations."

Charles wanted to look again at Jessica, but he restrained himself, and then Miss Lovell spoke quickly. "Charley, I'm awfully glad for you," she said. He always liked Miss Lovell after that.

"E. P. Rush & Co." Mr. Lovell was speaking again. "If you hear of anything interesting in the way of securities, Charles, be sure you let me know."

"Jessica," Miss Lovell said, "why don't you show Charles the tulips in the garden? It's still light enough."

"It's getting damp tonight," Mr. Lovell said. "Jessica's the only girl I have and I don't want her catching cold. Well, just walk around the garden, Jessica, and then come back."

When they were opening the door at the end of the hall, Charles could still hear Miss Lovell's voice.

"Laurence," he heard her say, "try not to be so ridiculous."

The tulips made a beautiful show in the beds on the lower terrace and above them on the second terrace the petunias were just ready to bloom. Though there was no strong scent of flowers, the air was filled with that strange repressed vigor of a New England spring.

"I can't stay out long," Jessica said. "You understand, don't you, dear? Father hates seeing me grow up. He always has." She sounded as though she were talking to an imaginary person, much as Charles in his thoughts had often spoken to her. "I wish I weren't the only thing he had."

The third terrace, a level, close-cropped lawn called the bowling green, was shut off from all the rest of the garden by a high, carefully clipped spruce hedge and she seemed uncertain that he was beside her until they were in that dusky green enclosure.

"Oh, darling," she whispered, "I've missed you so."

"I've missed you too. We've got to see each other, Jessica."

"Yes," she said, "we've got to. Everything's going to be all right, isn't it?"

"Of course. Everything's all right."

"Darling, wasn't Aunt Georgianna sweet?"

"Have you told her anything?"

"Not exactly. I've talked about you. I have to talk about you, dear, and there's no one else."

"Have you told your father anything?"

"Of course not. That's a silly question. Darling, you can see, can't you? It's got to come over him by degrees. We'd better be going back now."

"Yes," Charles said, "I suppose we had."

Charles never believed that his or Jessica's manner, aside from all appearances, might

"I see where Dick Tracy is in another jam."

helena rubinstein says:

"over 30? you can look younger!

ESTROGENIC HORMONE CREAM"

"If you are over-30, there is one cream you should never be without—my ESTROGENIC HORMONE CREAM. Why?

"Because estrogenic hormones are one of the best substances yet known to science that can make your skin look younger...

"Because I experimented until I found the right formula that would bring you the fullest benefits of these amazing substances...

"Because thousands of women in their 30's, 40's, 50's, 60's already have found that daily use of this remarkable cream can truly smooth out fine lines and wrinkles.

"Use ESTROGENIC HORMONE CREAM faithfully for 30 consecutive days and see how quickly your skin responds to its dynamic action. See how much younger your skin can look!" 3.50

"PASTEURIZED" FACE CREAM SPECIAL—massage daily to texturize as you cleanse. Cream away flaky dryness. Soothe! Soften! Refresh! 1.00 plus tax

helena rubinstein

55 FIFTH AVENUE, NEW YORK 22

indicate the probability of what had happened in the garden, because they took great pains to walk into the room decorously, far apart and entirely unconcerned with each other.

"Hello," Mr. Lovell said. "So you're back."

"You were right," Jessica said, and she bent down and kissed his forehead. "It was very cold out there. You're always right."

"Patrick's doing pretty well with the garden," Mr. Lovell said. "None of the boxwood winterkilled."

"I suppose it's pretty far north for box, sir," Charles said, and Mr. Lovell gave him a searching look.

"Virginia's the place for box, Virginia and England. Were you ever in Virginia?"

"No, sir."

"You must go someday. Jessie"—Mr. Lovell smiled at her—"I've just been thinking you and I might go abroad again this summer."

"This summer?" Jessica repeated.

"I was just speaking of it to Aunt Georgianna. Why, don't you like the idea, Jessica?"

"I thought you wanted me to get used to Clyde. Now I'm getting used to it you want to go away."

"Now, Jessie"—Mr. Lovell laughed—"Clyde's always an easy place to come back to, and don't look so upset. We couldn't possibly leave till toward the end of June. I think it would do us a lot of good to get a change."

"But you were just saying yesterday——" Jessica began, and she stopped.

"When we get back, Charles may be a partner at E. P. Rush; but I'm afraid it's dull for you, Charles, our talking over plans," Mr. Lovell said.

It was clearly time to be leaving, but he did not want it to look as though he were hurrying away. "I hope you have a good trip, sir," he said.

"Don't go, Charles." Mr. Lovell smiled, but Charles knew when it was time to go. He said good night to Miss Lovell and shook Mr. Lovell's hand.

"Good night, Jessica," he said.

"Oh, Charley," she said, quite loudly, "don't forget tomorrow night." And she turned away from him before she dropped his hand. "Charles is going to take me to the movies tomorrow night."

He certainly had not asked her, but she said it so convincingly that he almost thought he had.

"Why," Mr. Lovell said, "that's very nice of Charles to take you," and his words rang with complete conviction. "Good night, Charles, and come in any time."

"Yes," Miss Lovell said, "any time. Good night."

He must have been thinking more of how he had behaved than of anything else in the first few minutes after he left. He hoped he had shown no surprise; he had never asked her to the motion pictures and perhaps everyone had known it. Nothing had been as wonderful as the moment when Jessica had said, "Don't forget tomorrow night," for she might as well have said that she cared for him no matter what anyone thought. She might as well have stood beside him and have said that she would see him any time she pleased and that no one could prevent it.

"You're always on time, aren't you?" Jessica said when he called for her the next evening. "Do I look all right for the movies?"

Naturally he told her that she did, though it was obvious that she would not have been wearing a semi-evening dress and a short, dark velvet cloak if she had gone often to the movies in Clyde.

"I suppose you know that everyone will see us there," he said.

She moved closer to him. "You don't mind, do you?"

Of course, he said, he did not mind who saw them.

"It's been a dreadful day," she said. "It isn't anything father says. It's the way he looks. But he's really trying to be sweet. It isn't you, you know, it's me. Do you know what he said at supper?"

"No. What did he say?"

Ottawa, Canada's capital, from the Rideau Canal

Discover the romance of new places... in CANADA

Canada's coasts and inland lakes provide safe, clean beaches for the young 'uns

You get close-ups on Nature riding mountain trails, woodland bridle paths

FOR a complete change, an exciting new kind of vacation—cross the border into Canada, the land of Vacations Unlimited.

Visit her charming cities, see old friends again, shop for hand-loomed tweeds and home-spuns, English bone china, colourful native crafts. Or roam scenic highways, the lake-and-woodland loveliness of famed resort areas, the green inspiration of Canada's National Parks.

Write for detailed information or use the coupon below.

7 VACATION "POINTERS"—ALL POINTING TO CANADA

1. New, interesting — "foreign" atmosphere. 2. A million square miles of scenic playground. 3. Friendly cities, hospitable people. 4. Friends and relatives waiting to welcome you. 5. Lots to do — sports, recreation, sightseeing. 6. Near — easy to get to — no border "red tape". 7. Your vacation dollar buys more, goes further.

NO PASSPORT NEEDED

Canadian Government Travel Bureau
Ottawa, Canada D. Leo Dolan, Director

Please send me your illustrated book, "CANADA, VACATIONS UNLIMITED."

Name.....
(PLEASE PRINT)

Street and No......

Town..... State..... 011164901

"Easy as anything!"

HONEY CRUNCH APPLES

4 large apples
⅓ cup Sioux Bee Honey
⅓ cup corn flakes
⅓ cup raisins
½ teaspoon cinnamon
2 teaspoons lemon juice
2 tablespoons butter
½ cup water (about)

Wash and core apples; make 4 slits in top edges. Arrange in baking dish. Mix honey with corn flakes, raisins, cinnamon, and lemon juice and fill apple cavities; top with butter. Add water to cover bottom of baking dish. Bake in moderate oven (350°-375° F.) until apples are tender (50 to 60 minutes, depending on apples). Serve warm.

Sue Bee

Such a clever new way to use SIOUX BEE Honey!

Clever . . . and easy . . . and the eating's easy too. Sioux Bee Honey makes these rosy red apples simply irresistible . . . and so nourishingly good for people, into the bargain. Menu hint: serve them as dessert after a pork roast. Or just serve them after anything!

You'll like Sioux Bee Honey every way. It's so delicate in flavor, so golden-clear in color. It's purest, choicest honey, with its quality controlled by the world's largest honey packers. So . . . always ask your grocer for Sioux Bee!

HOT BISCUITS, griddle cakes . . . aren't they good with Sioux Bee Honey! Honey and cream on cereals . . . that's another treat. And here's something . . . Sioux Bee Honey-Creme. It's pure honey, but it spreads like butter. Try it!

93 HONEY RECIPES—different, delicious. They're in a free booklet, yours for a post card to Sioux Honey Association, Dept. L-29, Sioux City, Iowa.

For finest honey, say "Sue Bee"

SIOUX HONEY ASSOCIATION
SIOUX CITY, IOWA

"He said to be sure to ask you in when you took me home. He didn't want me to catch cold walking around outside. Oh, darling." He heard her catch her breath. "It has to be all right. As long as he sees there's nothing he can do."

Two years before, the only motion-picture house at Clyde had been called the Acme Theater. The Acme Theater was called the Savoy now and was equipped with new soft seats and Romanesque decorations and an electrically lit marquee which cast a harsh halo of bright light on the sidewalk. Lon Chaney in Laugh, Clown, Laugh was on that night. Though it was the Savoy and not the Acme, and though its lights were brighter, the whole scene reminded Charles of high-school days when he used to take Doris Wormser to the same late show. There were different faces but the same crowds of adolescent boys and girls, who must have been in grammar school when Charles had taken Doris there. There were all sorts of familiar faces too. First he saw Earl Wilkins, who had been tackle when he had been left end on the high-school team, and Earl was with Lizzie Jenkins, one of the Wright-Sherwin girls.

"Hi, Earl," he said.

"Hi, Charley." Earl looked at him as if he had not seen him for a long while.

Then he saw Doris Wormser with Willie Woodbury, who was working in the Clyde Grain and Implement Company. Both he and Doris must have looked startled, but they called out to each other, and then he saw Melville Meader and Jackie Mason and Priscilla Meader.

"There's Jackie Mason," Jessica said.

He did not want it to seem unusual for him to be there with Jessica Lovell. He told himself that it was only his imagination that made him feel that everyone was staring at them It was a relief when he was in the dark theater, holding Jessica's hand, until he saw that Priscilla Meader was beside him and then he dropped her hand hastily.

> A woman unsatisfied must have luxuries. But a woman who loves a man would sleep on a board. —D. H. LAWRENCE.

"I thought you never went to the movies any more, Charley," Priscilla said.

"I don't often," Charles answered. "You know Jessica Lovell, don't you, Priscilla?" It would have been much better if he had not asked, since it indicated that perhaps Priscilla did not know her.

Priscilla nodded. "Oh, yes," she said, and there was no need for Jessica's having been quite so cordial.

"I haven't seen you for a long while," Jessica said.

"It was when the gardens were open, wasn't it?" Priscilla said. "I don't see how you ever got Charley to the movies."

"I had to ask him. He wouldn't have thought of it," Jessica said.

Tomorrow everyone would know that he had taken her to the movies and that she had asked him.

"How about going to Walters' after the show?" Charles asked. "How about it, Jack?"

Everyone always went around to Walters' for ice cream after the pictures, but Jessica looked incongruous there in her velvet cape. They had divided decorously, like changing partners at a dance, so Charles looked across one of the little booths at Jessica sitting beside Jackie Mason. They were all speaking above the giggles and whistles of the high-school crowd.

"This place is dreadfully crowded, isn't it?" Priscilla said. "But at the same time, I can't count how often I've been here. Can you, Charley? Do you remember Saturday nights at high school?" She beamed across the table. "You ought to have been with our crowd at high school, Jessica. We used to have more fun."

Jessica said, "I wish I had gone to high school."

Priscilla said, "We had more fun in high school. We all paired off. There was Jackie and you know who——"

"There's Earl Wilkins over there now," Charles said.

"Oh, Earl," Priscilla said. "Just because Earl used to take me to the movies. . . . What about you and Doris Wormser, Charley?"

Charles laughed. He had almost forgotten Jessica. He was back with the old crowd again. "What about you and Wilkins in the physics laboratory?" he said, and then he remembered Jessica. "You ought to have been in high school, Jessica. If you'd been there, I wouldn't have worried about Doris Wormser."

"He never did worry about her much, and I ought to know," Jackie Mason said.

"You don't want to believe him," Priscilla said. "Jackie's always sticking up for Charley. I'm just being funny. I never meant it was anything serious at all. Why, Charley and I played post office. Do you want a letter, Charley?"

Charles wondered what it would have been like if Jessica had been there, playing tag in the Meaders' back yard. He felt almost sorry for her because he knew she had missed a lot.

"I wish Priscilla hadn't talked so much," Jackie murmured, after they had paid the check at the cigar counter. "I'm afraid she gave a wrong impression." Jackie always worried about impressions.

Priscilla and Jessica were waiting for them on the sidewalk.

"There's nobody like Charley," he heard Priscilla saying. "I've always been crazy about Charley, Jessica."

When he and Jessica were walking up Dock Street, he remembered thinking that he must not apologize for any of it—that she was the one who had asked to go.

"Priscilla Meader," she said, and obviously she had no previous recollection of Priscilla Meader at all. "Is her father the one who has the real-estate and insurance office?"

"Yes. That's the one," he told her.

Then they were silent again.

"I wish I'd been to high school," she said. "I wouldn't feel so far away and I wouldn't have worn this damn dress."

Charles at this time did not understand that there was a purpose behind many social gestures. As long as Mr. Lovell had especially asked that Jessica invite him in afterward, Charles believed that Mr. Lovell might end by liking him after all. As early as a year later, however, Charles was able to appreciate Mr. Lovell's motives.

It happened that Mr. Rush had called Charles into his office to explain some details concerning the bond issue of the King Wassoit Textile Company to a trustee named Mr Garvin, but when Charles entered they were talking about their children and especially about Mr. Rush's daughter Ruth, whom Charles had never met but whose picture in riding clothes stood on Mr. Rush's desk.

"She met him somewhere," Mr. Rush was saying. "I never saw him until she brought him out to Brookline for Sunday dinner. God knows where girls pick up men nowadays."

"It's a phase that girls go through," Mr. Garvin said. "Just don't let her see you don't like him, Moulton. That's the worst mistake you can make."

"Yes," Mr. Rush answered, "that's what Alice and everyone keep saying."

Charles never knew what happened to that boy of whom Ruth Rush had been fond, but he understood why Mr. Lovell had told Jessica to be sure to bring him home that night and why Mr. Lovell had asked him to drop in sometimes in the evening, in those few short weeks before he took Jessica abroad.

Everything had seemed possible that evening. He no longer worried about the creases in his trousers when he sat beside Jessica on the sofa. The Chinese junks and the pagodas on the wall and the studied elegance of that English furniture had a homelike, welcoming quality, as though it were natural and proper for him to be there with Jessica.

They talked for a while about those arid days when they had hardly known each

(Continued on Page 166)

FORGET RECIPES, MESS and work with these..

Quickest-'n-Grandest HOT BISCUITS

... out of the package... into the oven onto the table ...

in just 9 minutes... the Ballard workless way!

No Measuring • No Mixing • No Rolling
No Cutting • No Waste • NO FAILURES

They're luscious-light and fluffy biscuits! Ballard OvenReady Biscuits! Golden brown and delicate as a lace-edged Valentine. M-m-m, they're as good as they are quick and easy! Imagine—real old-fashioned Dixie-land biscuits with none of the old-fashioned fuss, muss and bother! And never a failure!

Ballard uses only finest ingredients—snowy white flour, purest shortening. Then, all mixed, rolled, cut . . . delicious OvenReady Biscuits are rushed vacuum-packed to your grocer's refrigerator. Have these hot southern biscuits for sure on a heart-warming day like this—or any day, at any meal. One package makes a whole heaping plateful!

IN YOUR GROCER'S REFRIGERATOR!

BALLARD OvenReady BISCUITS

Best you ever tasted or your money back

Distributed exclusively by Kraft

So small...so helpless, she needs my love...

"The more love I show her, the more confident she will become, my doctor tells me. Every day I will give the love and care she needs to grow strong in spirit and in body...

"Regularly without fail, I will provide my baby with the special help she must have to build a well-shaped head, a straight, strong back, a fine, full chest, straight legs and sound teeth. I will take care to give her extra Vitamin D daily."

A natural source

All over the world, cod liver oil is a source of Vitamin D preferred by many physicians. Time has proved the value of this wholly natural Vitamin D source in helping babies build sound bones and teeth. Start your baby now on Squibb Cod Liver Oil, and give it regularly every day.

Remember, with every spoonful of Squibb Cod Liver Oil, your baby also receives important growth-promoting Vitamin A. Today and every day, give this reliable source of both vitamins.

For you and the older children, there's Squibb Mint-Flavored Cod Liver Oil! These winter days, you too may need the benefit of the extra Vitamins A and D it provides. And the Mint-Flavored Oil is so pleasant to take! Put in a family supply today—Squibb Cod Liver Oil, both the Plain and Mint Flavored.

SQUIBB cod liver oil

preferred by more mothers than any other cod liver oil

(Continued from Page 164)

other. He must have laid his whole life, such as it was, before Jessica Lovell in a magnificent, prodigal gesture, and Jessica did the same. There was nothing more lonely than being an only child, Jessica said, particularly in a place like Clyde. Her father had often said that he would have sent her to school in Clyde, at least for a year or two, if she had been a boy. He often said that he was disturbed at how the school system had changed. It was run now by politicians, and so many foreigners had entered Clyde that there was not the background of good Yankee stock in the schools that he had known. He had never wanted Jessica to learn the habits of some girls, particularly foreign girls, at grammar school.

It was not that he was snobbish in the least. If her mother had lived, instead of dying so suddenly when she was six, her father might not have wanted her to be so perfect. As it was, there had been a governess for her until she went to school in Boston and she never belonged anywhere at all. Her father always brought her home for week ends because he never wanted to be away from her too long. He had always given up so much for her. It was the same way at Westover and Smith. He was always at Northampton for week ends and they were always together at vacation time.

"I sound like Emily Dickinson," she said.

She did not mean that she had not seen other men, but there had always been something, something. It was just as though she had been asleep, or almost asleep, until that day she saw Charles at the firemen's muster.

"I don't know why it happened then," she said. "I don't see why you liked me."

"I guess it was your red hat and your hair," he told her.

They were sitting together on the sofa so close that her hair brushed his cheek. Then she drew away from him because Mr. Lovell was calling from the top of the stairs.

"Oh, Jessie."

At least they did not spring guiltily apart; her hand was still on his shoulder when she answered. "Yes, father."

"Is Charles there?"

"Yes, father."

"You'll excuse me for not coming down, won't you, Charles?" Mr. Lovell called. "What was the name of the picture you went to see?"

"It was Laugh, Clown, Laugh," Charles called back.

"Well, Jessie," Mr. Lovell said, "when Charles goes, don't forget to put out the lights."

Uncle Gerald Marchby had said as recently as the beginning of May that there was no reason to be concerned about Aunt Jane. Doctor Marchby had been practicing medicine in Clyde for years, as his father had before him, and Doctor Marchby had seen a lot of people live and die. There was no reason for Charles to feel that his uncle was wrong when he said that the Gray heart was only a cardiac condition common in older people and not serious in itself. Charles, as a layman, could see that his Aunt Jane was not so well as she had been six months ago. Still, Gerald Marchby said not to worry, that Jane was in fair physical condition.

Yet, in spite of reassurance, when Charles called on her the Sunday before he started to work at E. P. Rush & Co., he was disturbed by the thinness of her hands and by her general frailty.

"Charley," she said, as soon as he had kissed her, "are you going to remember those letters in the right-hand drawer of the desk, or had I better burn them now?"

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Prairie Born

By Viola Perry Wanger

Some folks like gray days,
Some the rain's beat;
I like bright days when winds
Run across wheat.

Some like the blue sea's surge,
Some the mountain pass;
I love the lift and fall
Of prairie grass.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

She had often brought up the subject o letters lately, and once he had asked her wha was in them and she had told him they wer just old letters. She wanted them burned be cause she did not want parts of herself drift ing around after she was gone. She wanted t go, when she was gone, and not have the fam ily prying into everything.

"Why, no, Aunt Jane," he said, " wouldn't burn them now," and then she be gan again about the silver.

"I wish I could get the silver settled onc and for all," Aunt Jane said. "I can't eve seem to get it settled because everythin keeps changing."

"Why don't you just leave it? Everythin can't be exactly right."

"I don't know why everything shouldn' be. Everything used to be. Charley, tell m once and for all, is Dorothea going to marr that Elbridge Sterne or isn't she?"

"I guess she is, but you know Dorothea she never talks."

She sighed and put down the silver list She was sitting very straight in her stiff backed chair with her head half turne toward him. "Are you attentive to Jessic Lovell or aren't you?" The word "attentive as she spoke it had delicate, half archa sound.

"Yes," he said, " suppose I'm attentive.

"Well, I'm glad th someone tells me som thing, Charles."

"Yes."

"It isn't anything t be excited about. I'm not excited at all. I hop she is a nice girl, bu there's no reason to b excited, Charles." An she picked up the silve list from the table.

"Aunt Jane," Charle said, "don't bothe about the silver."

"I'm not botherin about anything. I wis you'd go to the kitche and call Mary. Sh never brings my medicine on time. And the you can read to me if you want to."

"All right," Charles said. "What do yo want me to read?"

"Why, anything, as long as it's reading.

She might have asked so many questior but that was all she ever said and somehow gave him a warm and pleasant feeling. Sh said it again before he left:

"You might have told me without my as ing, but I'm not excited at all."

What was it that he saw and thought i those last years of the twenties? He mu have been oblivious of nearly everything ou side himself, and Clyde had become a bac ground which he had no time to examin It was just as well that Jessica was abroa If she had been in Clyde that summer, h could never have concentrated so fully o E. P. Rush & Co.—and what he learned the was still valuable.

On his way home in the train Charles ofte reread Jessica's letters. She was in Londo darling, and she wished he were there i large, scrawling strokes. She was in Pari darling, and she had bought an old book fo him and she wished that he were there. Sh was in the châteaux country, darling, and i Rome, darling. She could not wait to ge home, but they were staying a little longe They were coming back in September—no, i October. Truthfully, there was not muc time to remember Jessica, but she was sa around the corner. There was so much el without Jessica that he sometimes wondere how things would have turned out if she ha come home later than she did.

His Aunt Jane died suddenly in her slee that summer. The Crawford Mill, where h father had worked so long, folded up, an John Gray was going into Boston every da when October came around. The house ha been painted and equipped with electri

(Continued on Page 168)

Wedded to a sloshy dishrag?

Don't rub and scrub crusty muffin tins with a slimy dishrag! Use a metal-fiber Brillo pad-with-soap!

Shine pans easy with BRILLO

A Brillo pad-with-soap cleans scorchy pots and pans fast! Shines 'em, too! Use Brillo every day!
GREEN box—pads and cake soap
RED box—soap-filled pads

contains JEWELER'S POLISH

Shines aluminum fast!

A Complete Mexican Meal...

To give your family a real taste thrill, serve Gebhardt's Chili con Carne and Tamales. A meal in itself. Just heat and serve.

Gebhardt's Chili con Carne and Tamales

MADE IN SAN ANTONIO, HOME OF CHILI CON CARNE AND TAMALES

"I don't like to talk to you this way," Charles said, and his father nodded.

"I know you don't," he said, "and, frankly, Charley, of course I'm going to do it. I wouldn't be able to help myself."

"You know it's everybody's business," Charles began. "I don't care about myself, but what about mother and Dorothea?"

He saw his father's face flush and then he saw him fold his hands. "Well, go ahead and tell me why I shouldn't. Do the best you can."

Charles could only say what anyone would have said. The market was like a wild river, that year, breaking through all the dams of prudence and common sense. It was time to invest in sound bonds, preferably Governments. There was bound to be a break. It was only a question of when.

"You put it very clearly, Charley," John Gray said. "Do you know what I begin to think? You may be a good investment man someday. You're dead right, but it's all a matter of self-restraint. I know when to stop—but you don't believe that, do you?"

Charles did not answer. There was no use saying aloud that he did not believe it.

"Let's leave it this way. You can watch me, and I'll be careful, Charley. How are you going to get anywhere if you never take a chance? What is life but a chance, Charley? After all, what is seventy-five thousand dollars? Do you expect me to live on the income, at four per cent?" John Gray shrugged his shoulders. He opened his hands and closed them. Did he really want his mother to live on three thousand dollars a year? And what was it Samuel Johnson said? "A man who both spends and saves money is the happiest man, because he has both enjoyments." That was what he was going to do, both spend and save. As soon as he made a profit—and any fool could make a profit in this bull market—he would put the original sum in a bank, he swore he would, and he would go on with the rest.

"When is Jessica coming back; in October? All right, we'll have a big car by October. Don't look as though I were hurting you, Charley. I'm going to spend and save and it's perfectly possible."

There was no use in being angry, there was no use in being hurt.

"Come to think of it," John Gray said, "I might as well go up to Boston tomorrow; and, Charley, I wonder whether you would do something for me now—that is, if you don't mind? Would you mind going downtown and seeing if the New York Times has come in yet, and would you please stop at Southern's and buy me a small account book? I'm the one who's going to do the worrying."

Charles must have known that morning that his aunt's legacy was as good as gone. He must have already acquired a capacity for balancing and cutting losses. There was no use in going to anyone for advice. It was pointless to tell his mother and Dorothea what he knew.

He walked out the front door and stared for a long while at Spruce Street. While he stood there at the front-yard gate, he conceived a fear and contempt for certain aspects of finance, but it was a respectful contempt. He was afraid of it and he never lost that fear, and it was not a bad attitude, either, if you had to deal with investments—caution and contempt held together by respect. He was thinking of his mother and Dorothea. He was trying, for the first time in his life, to cut a loss. He was thinking of the five thousand dollars his aunt had left him, an immense sum in one way and so insignificant in another, and someone had to do something. At least he was sure that he knew when to stop.

That was his only reason for playing the stock market that next year, a desperate and feeble reason. Circumstances forced him and he did it without satisfaction, as though he were engaged in a secret vice. It was interesting, sometimes, to imagine what would have happened to his mother and indirectly to Dorothea if he had not, or if he had not known when to stop, but it was hardly worth the time. Nothing could have changed what happened, though he did not know it then.

(To be Continued)

BETTER BETTER BETTER RICE

"Uncle Ben's" and "Converted" are trade-marks of Converted Rice, Inc.

New Uncle Ben's Rice Recipe

Uncle Ben's Spanish Rice

1 cup diced onions
3 tablespoons fat or bacon drippings
1¾ teaspoons salt
½ cup diced green pepper
2 cups cooked tomatoes
1 bay leaf
2 teaspoons sugar
3 cups hot cooked Uncle Ben's Rice
5 slices diced cooked bacon

Cook onions in fat 3 minutes, but do not brown. Add salt, green pepper, tomatoes, bay leaf and sugar; simmer 15 minutes. Remove bay leaf; add rice and diced bacon; cook 10 minutes. Serves 6.

Better to Cook—Yes, this is the sensational new rice that always comes out white and fluffy, each grain separate, never gummy. No rinsing, steaming. Stays fluffy, even cold or reheated.

Better to Eat—Most people who have tasted it say they'll never use any other rice—its flavor is so good.

Better For You—New scientific process, exclusive in this country with Uncle Ben's Rice, seals into long-grain polished rice B vitamins that used to be polished off.

Ideal for overseas packages or for your pantry shelf—every grain weevilproof.

If your grocer hasn't Uncle Ben's Rice, ask him to order it for you. ©C. R., Inc.

Converted Rice, Inc., Dept. LHJ 3
P. O. Box 1752, Houston, Texas
Please send me your new recipe booklet, "Rice Can Be Wonderful." Enclosed is top from package of Uncle Ben's Converted Long Grain Rice.

NAME_____
ADDRESS_____
CITY_____ STATE_____

"Having tough sledding, Mom?"

BABY: Why the chilly looks, Mom? Folks will think you're not enjoying your chance to lead a baby's life for a day!

MOM: Folks will be right! After crawling around all morning, and now wriggling and twisting in this sleigh, my skin's so uncomfortable I could shriek!

BABY: Tut, tut, Mom! You don't like shrieking when I'm doing it. But maybe now you'll get the drift: I need Johnson's Baby Powder and Johnson's Baby Oil!

MOM: My little snowflake, something soothing is called for! But why both?

BABY: Babies need both, Mom. Pure, gentle Johnson's Baby Oil after my bath, to help keep me smooth and satiny. More of it at diaper changes, to help chase what my doctor calls "urine irritation."

As for Johnson's Baby Powder—well, winter woolies can give a baby little chafes and prickles. Plenty of cool, soothing sprinkles, please!

MOM: Honey, I've really let things slide, haven't I?

BABY: You didn't know, Mom. You didn't mean to slip up. But let's go get the Johnson's right now—and life will be smoother sledding from now on!

MARGARET DU PIE

Children of three years and over will benefit most from a new, inexpensive, painless treatment which can reduce dental decay by 40 per cent.

Let's End Dental Crippling

By Dr. Herman N. Bundesen

President, Chicago Board of Health

ONE of my dentist friends has aptly called us "a nation of dental cripples." For public-health records show that ninety-eight out of one hundred Americans suffer some form of tooth decay. When decay (doctors and dentists call it "dental caries") rots away healthy tooth structures, infection is sure to follow sooner or later.

Moreover, from what we see in our offices and in schools, hospitals and clinics, we can estimate roughly that only about one person in four gets anything like adequate dental care, including some regular effort to keep teeth healthy and free of cavities. The other three see the dentist only in emergencies, when disease or decay has carried its destruction to the point of painful toothache.

Most adults suffering from neglected teeth have only their own carelessness, or sometimes lack of knowledge, to blame. When children have troublesome cavities, however, it is the parents' fault. I have seen many four- and five-year-olds with infected teeth that could easily have caused lymph-gland and kidney infections or other illnesses, possibly even affecting the heart. The mothers of some of these children have told me the reason they didn't do anything about it was that these baby teeth would come out pretty soon anyway—"So why bother?"

This is a common misunderstanding and a dangerous one. The fact is that decay in the first or deciduous teeth is harmful for exactly the same reasons that it is in the later, permanent teeth: It invites infection that may spread to adjacent tissues in the mouth, and to other parts of the body. Moreover, premature loss of the first teeth because of caries will mean that they cannot perform the important function of preparing the way for the permanent teeth. Decayed baby teeth keep the child from chewing his food properly; in addition to possible nutritional loss, this may mean that the whole jaw structure will not develop as it should, with consequent poor alignment of the permanent teeth.

The chief cause of dental decay is an acid that is released by bacteria present in the mouth. Their activity is apparently stimulated by the sugar in foods, this is why excessive amounts of candy or other sweets in the child's diet may in time lead to tooth decay.

Until quite recently, the only things parents could do to combat these dental problems were to see that the child had a well-balanced diet (milk, lean meat, fresh fruits and vegetables to build strong teeth; limited sweets to guard against decay), and to make regular trips—twice a year—to the dentist to make certain cavities were found early and repaired promptly. Now another weapon is available that helps to keep dental caries from occurring.

The new weapon is sodium fluoride, a chemical compound. Its relationship to tooth decay was discovered accidentally a few years ago when public-health doctors noticed a peculiar, gray mottling on the teeth of residents of certain areas in the Southwest part of the country. Investigation showed that residents of these same GRATEFUL young mothers from Maine to California tell us that Doctor Bundesen's baby booklets have been of the greatest help to them in caring for their own babies. The first eight booklets cover your baby's first eight months. They sell for 50 cents. The second series of booklets covers the baby's health from nine months to two years—seven booklets for 50 cents. The booklets will be sent monthly; be sure to tell us when you want the first booklet. A complete book on the care of the baby, a necessary supplement to the monthly booklets, OUR BABIES, No. 1345, is 25 cents. A booklet on breast feeding, A DOCTOR'S FIRST DUTY TO THE MOTHER, No. 1346, sells for 6 cents. Address all requests to the Reference Library, LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, Philadelphia 5, Pennsylvania.

areas were comparatively free of dental decay. Eventually, both circumstances were traced to sodium fluoride in the water supplying the area.

Large-scale experiments carried on during the next year or so demonstrated that if the amount of sodium fluoride in the water was reduced to just the right proportion, the mottling could be eliminated and the protection against dental caries retained.

Some towns now are adding sodium fluoride to their water as a public-health measure. If the resulting improvement in dental health lives up to expectations, this method will be adopted elsewhere, and eventually sodium-fluoride-in-water may become a routine community health safeguard. When that time comes, we may expect a substantial reduction in the $750,000,000 a year the nation pays for dental treatment today. Until then, parents who want to take advantage of this marvelous new way to insure better teeth should ask the dentist about individual treatment with sodium fluoride.

This method, which dentists are prepared to offer today, has reduced tooth decay 40 per cent in children receiving the treatment. In one interesting experiment, doctors treated all the teeth in the left side of the mouth in one large group of children, and left the teeth on the right side untreated. When the children were examined after several months, about 40 per cent fewer teeth were attacked by caries on the treated side than on the untreated side. No wonder the American Dental Association has referred to the sodium-fluoride treatment as one of the greatest discoveries of modern dentistry!

Mothers who have read or heard about sodium fluoride and what it can do for their children's teeth have asked me many questions about the treatment. Does it hurt? How long will it take? Is it expensive? How old should the child be? Would you recommend that I have my child treated right away?

Possibly the best answer I can give to the last question is this: I am now urging that every one of my own ten grandchildren who is over three years old have the sodium-fluoride treatment. (As a matter of fact, I am recommending it for the adult members of my family, too, and have had it myself.)

The procedure is simple. The teeth are first cleaned thoroughly by the dentist, who next inserts rubber or cotton packs into the mouth to keep moisture away from the teeth. Then he "paints" the teeth with a dilute solution of sodium fluoride and allows it to dry for about fifteen minutes. That's all there is to it. Simple, isn't it?

For best results, it is suggested that a series of four of these treatments should be given, about a week apart. It can be started when the child is three years old—or as soon as all the baby teeth have appeared. The second teeth should then be treated after most of them have erupted, at seven or eight; the series may be repeated again at ten or eleven and, later, at thirteen or fourteen, when all but the wisdom teeth have appeared.

The treatments are inexpensive, costing only what the dentist may charge for the small amount of his time that is required, plus a few cents for the fluoride itself. Contrasted with the hundreds of dollars most families eventually spend having teeth repaired or straightened because they were neglected or decayed, or both, the cost of the sodium-fluoride treatment is negligible.

By all means, have your children's teeth treated (and your own) at the first opportunity. Then talk the subject over with the interested groups in your community—parent-teachers, school and health officers, doctors and dentists. If we all do this, it won't be long before our reputation as "a nation of dental cripples" will be a thing of the past.

THE END

Friendship ought not to be unripped, but unstitched. —CATO.

INSIST ON "E-Z"

for your child—
because the famous E-Z trade mark means:

- ample size, according to weight, for better fit
- strong seams for lasting wear
- soft knit fabric for utmost comfort

Send for "Let the Scales Help You". FREE weight-size charts for infants and children. E-Z Mills, Inc., 57 Worth St., N.Y. 13

E-Z UNDERWEAR SPORTSWEAR AND HOSIERY "for any Child, of any Age"

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

GOOD MONEY IN WEAVING

Earn money at home weaving rugs, carpets, etc. from old rags or new yarn—in your community! No experience necessary. 31,000 doing it with easy running Union Looms costing less than $50.00! Send for our free booklet today. UNION LOOM WORKS, 44 Factory St., BOONVILLE, N.Y.

TUMBLE-PROOF For Feeding or Play

BABEE-TENDA Low Safety Chair

Your lively baby is snugly safe from spills. Low balanced chair-table, comes swing-easy seat, adjusts for baby's growth. Patented safety features. Rolls thru doorway, folds for storing. Converts to play table. Doctor-approved, used by a million babies. Not sold in store.

Grand Gift for New Mothers

TESTED AND COMMENDED BY PARENTS' MAGAZINE

Send for FREE FOLDER... See phone book for authorized agency or write today for illustrated Humpty Dumpty folder.

THE BABEE-TENDA CORP. Dept. 5-2, 750 Prospect Ave., Cleveland 15, O.

*Reg U S Pat Off © 1948

KEEP Q-TIPS HANDY FOR: BABY CARE

WAXY EARS

STUFFY NOSE

STERILIZED Q-TIPS SWABS

9¢, 49¢, 98¢ — At all stores

SEND 10¢

Mail 10¢ today for sample package of Q-Tips (sent postpaid) to Q-Tips, Inc., Dept. A, 37-11 47th Ave., Long Island City 1, N. Y.

Do you want your baby to grow like Martha?

If you need proof that early foods really influence your baby's lifetime health, look at Martha Michener. With her doctor's approval, she was fed Clapp's throughout her babyhood. A systematic check was kept on her progress. Read on for results . . .

Martha's first solid food was Clapp's Baby Cereal. (It is 3 times richer in iron than unfortified home-cooked cereals.) Next, came Clapp's Strained Foods. When she was 1, she was eating all the Clapp varieties. She thrived—gaining 4 pounds 3 ounces in 3 months!

Martha didn't fuss when she was put on Clapp's Junior Foods. She found chewing fun because the morsels were just the right size for her little teeth. And she found the same uniform, delicate flavor she was used to in Clapp's Strained Varieties.

There is no question about Martha's glowing health. Her mother and doctor agree it's largely due to such a good start. Your baby, too, will be well-fed on Clapp's. A well-fed baby has a much better chance to grow up healthy. Start your baby on Clapp's today.

CLAPP'S BABY FOODS

THE FIRST IN BABY FOODS

Products of American Home Foods

3 simple steps to make you Queen of Hearts with

Fruit Flower Tarts

STEP 1—USE PIE CRUST MIX . . . or your favorite pastry recipe. Roll out dough. With a small biscuit cutter, the size of the bottom of your muffin pans, cut circles. Use 5 circles for each tart—one for the bottom, four for the "petals". Arrange in the muffin pans, prick with a fork and bake about twelve minutes at 450°. Cool.

STEP 2—USE PUDDING MIX FOR FILLING . . . quick-made vanilla or butterscotch pudding. Cool. Half fill the tarts.

STEP 3—USE THE DE LUXE FRUIT COCKTAIL. From a can of Libby's Fruit Cocktail drain off the rich syrup (to be used later in gelatin). Arrange the jewel-like fruits on each tart. They're truly elegant, cut from the same quality of whole, hand-picked fruits Libby packs individually. See them sparkle! You'll serve luscious Libby's Fruit Cocktail often in combinations and "as is". It's perfect—whether you use it for first course or jiffy-quick dessert.

Libby, McNeill & Libby, Chicago 9, Ill.

IT'S AMERICA'S FAVORITE BRAND! From the world's newest and finest fruit cocktail kitchens

IN ALL CANNED FOODS LOOK TO Libby's FOR PERFECTION

Quick and Easys for Two

By LOUELLA GUNSHOUER

BARRING the birthdays of famous people and that special event on the fourteenth, February has its share of anonymous days—the usual Mondays and Tuesdays when you're neither dining out nor having company. You enjoy these week-night dinners alone. You're just a cub chef, but doing very well, thank you. You can't spend much money on groceries or time and skill in translating them into something good to set before your king. Meals with limited additions are what you need most, and you're most welcome to these little dinners for busy nights.

Shelf Analysis

Scalloped Shad Roe
Green Beans
Bing-Cherry-and-Pineapple Salad
Melba Toast
Coffee

How many meals do you keep on the shelf? At least one at a time, I hope. You don't need to buy out the grocery store to have a good-provider cupboard. Shop for combinations that go together, and keep them together to remind you of their meal possibilities. Replenish with new combinations on your next shopping trip. I do this myself and find it fun to cook off the shelf.

SCALLOPED SHAD ROE

Open 1 can shad roe. Drain. Cut into cubes. Thin 1 can condensed mushroom soup to sauce consistency with ¼ cup milk. Heat and add shad roe, 1 tablespoon chopped parsley, 2 tablespoons grated Parmesan cheese. Season with salt and pepper and mix gently so as not to break up the roe. Pour into ramekins or a shallow glass casserole. Sprinkle with buttered cracker crumbs. Bake in hot oven, 425° F., 10–15 minutes.

BING-CHERRY-AND-PINEAPPLE SALAD

Drain enough canned pitted bing cherries and canned pineapple slices for 2 salads. Arrange on bed of greens. Serve with French dressing and blue cheese.

What's Your Amateur Rating?

Liver Italienne
Noodles Florentine
Cucumber and Carrot Sticks
Hot Rolls Strawberry Rhubarb
Coffee

There are certain rules to learn about cooking, of course, but the priceless ingredient in any good dish is imagination. Once you have the performance of a basic recipe well in hand, experiment and make your own substitutions. Knowing how to fry liver so it stays juicy and tender, as well as how to make a rhubarb sauce so that the rhubarb stays in nice whole pieces, is important, but giving the two flavor changes will be your contribution to good cooking.

STRAWBERRY RHUBARB

Put one 12-ounce package frozen rhubarb or 2 cups diced fresh rhubarb in the top of double boiler. Add 1 tablespoon lemon juice, ½ cup strawberry jam, ⅓ cup sugar and 2 tablespoons water. Cover and cook over hot water until rhubarb is tender. Stir only enough to blend after rhubarb is thawed (if you use frozen rhubarb). Cool in refrigerator while you prepare rest of dinner

LIVER ITALIENNE

Marinate slices of beef or calf's liver (½–¾ pound—as much as you usually buy for 2) in wine vinegar for flavor. Let stand about 20 minutes. This can marinate while you fix the noodles. Lift liver out of vinegar and dip in flour. Put 2 tablespoons shortening or salad oil in skillet with 1 clove garlic, peeled. When fat is sputtery hot, remove garlic and put in liver. Season with salt and pepper. Turn down heat and brown liver on both sides just until done through. Too high heat and too long cooking will toughen liver.

NOODLES FLORENTINE

Cook half an 8-ounce package medium-wide noodles in boiling salted water until tender. Drain. Also cook 1 pound fresh or 1 package frozen spinach. Drain and chop. Or still quicker, use canned spinach, heated, drained and chopped. Mix with the noodles. Season with 2 tablespoons butter or margarine, salt, pepper and a little nutmeg to taste. Serve with buttered bread crumbs sprinkled over the top.

A Man's Choice

Pork Tenderloins with Mushrooms
Cauliflower or Broccoli with Mustard Sauce
Celery Curls Corn Muffins
Fig Gingerbread—Applesauce
Coffee

A dinner without meat is no meal at all to some men. And usually they want potatoes with it; but if you're battling bulges in a tactful way, you'll not serve them unless requested, as the dessert has a starchy finish.

FIG GINGERBREAD

To ½ package gingerbread mix, add ½ the quantity of water called for on the package and ½ cup dried figs cut into small pieces. (To prepare the figs, pour boiling water over figs and let stand 5 minutes. Drain. Cut off stems and cut figs into pieces with the scissors.) Mix according to package directions. Fill greased muffin pans ⅔ full—bake in moderate oven, 350° F., 30 minutes. Makes ½ dozen.

SLICED PORK TENDERLOIN WITH MUSHROOMS

Fresh pork tenderloins have often been hard to get. Some butchers carried them—some didn't. Now they are being packed sliced and frozen in 1-pound packages—ready to use—and will be generally available. Since fresh pork tenderloins are all solid meat—no bone—½ pound is ample for 2 if your butcher slices them fresh for you; or it is easy to divide a 1-pound package of frozen tenderloin, as the slices are separated with paper. Thaw before cooking. Season tenderloins with salt and pepper and dredge with flour. Brown on both sides in 2 tablespoons hot melted shortening or salad oil. Add 1 onion, chopped, and one 3-ounce can mushrooms—use liquid and all. Simmer until pork is tender. Since they are thinly sliced, they take only about 20 minutes to cook.

CAULIFLOWER OR BROCCOLI WITH MUSTARD SAUCE

To 3 tablespoons mayonnaise, add 1 tablespoon prepared mustard. Thin with 1 teaspoon vinegar. Mix well and serve over freshly cooked cauliflower or broccoli. If you can buy a mustard salad or meat dressing, you can use this just as it is without adding mayonnaise or vinegar.

One for the Money

Rice-Cheese Puff
Peas Creole
Rye wafers—Coleslaw
Cinnamon Apricots
Coffee

If you feel that you've been a bit spendthrifty this past week and want to reform, here's a meal to start on.

RICE-CHEESE PUFF

Cook ¼ cup rice in 1 pint boiling water to which ½ teaspoon salt has been added. If you have a package of quick-cooking rice on the shelf, use ¼ package and ½ cup water. It saves the time of boiling the water and cooking rice in the usual way. Melt 2 tablespoons shortening in a saucepan. Add 2 tablespoons flour. Blend smooth. Add 1 cup milk. Cook until thickened—stirring constantly. Remove from heat. Stir in ¼ cup grated Cheddar cheese, the rice, ½ teaspoon salt, a dash of paprika and a pinch of dry mustard. Mix well. Separate 2 eggs. Beat yolks until thick and whites until stiff—fold both into rice mixture. Pour into greased 1-quart shallow casserole. Bake in moderate oven, 350° F., 30 minutes or until puffed, brown and firm to touch. Cut in squares or pie-shaped pieces.

PEAS CREOLE

Open 1 small can peas. Drain liquid into saucepan. Simmer until liquid is reduced to half. Add peas, ¼ green pepper. Cut fine 1 small onion, minced, and add with 3 tablespoons canned tomato sauce or soup. Season with salt and pepper. Add 1 tablespoon butter or margarine. Cook just 2 minutes.

CINNAMON APRICOTS

Cook ¼ pound dried apricots in 2 cups water. Add 3 tablespoons honey, 2 tablespoons lemon juice and ½ cinnamon stick and simmer until apricots are tender.

Quick Change

Lamb Chops
Potatoes with Sauce Soubise
Beets and Cress Bread Sticks
Green Salad
Sliced Oranges and
Bananas with Coconut Cream
Coffee

You usually plan your meals by the week. Not being particularly inspired at the time, you planned tonight to have lamb chops and boiled potatoes; to open a can of beets; make a salad and have bananas and cream for dessert. On the way home, you got to thinking the meal was certainly uninspired and you hadn't put forth much effort the night before. Flavor is the handmaiden of variety, and with a few adroit changes in just the right places, your dinner is no longer a plain Jane.

SAUCE SOUBISE

Chop 2 onions and cook gently in 1½ tablespoons butter or margarine until tender. Do not let them brown. Blend in 1 tablespoon flour. Add ¾ cup milk gradually and stir until thickened. Season with salt and pepper and a pinch of marjoram. Serve over freshly boiled and drained potatoes.

BEETS AND CRESS

Heat half of a No. 2 can small whole or sliced beets in some of the beet liquor. Drain. Add ½ cup chopped water cress, 1 tablespoon lemon juice, 2 tablespoons butter or margarine, and salt and pepper to taste. Mix well before serving. The rest of the can of beets not used can be chopped and added to your salad bowl another night.

SLICED BANANAS AND ORANGES WITH COCONUT CREAM

Whip ½ cup heavy cream. Sweeten with 1 tablespoon sugar and flavor with ¼ teaspoon vanilla. Fold in ½ cup canned moist coconut and serve on sliced oranges and bananas; or you might slice the banana (1 is enough) and section 1 orange. Fold the coconut cream into the fruit.

Something special for breakfast made from Libby's...

3 fruit "quickies"

Hear radio's greatest morning show. It's fascinating! "MY TRUE STORY" Mon. thru Fri. ABC Stations.

IN ALL CANNED FOODS LOOK TO Libby's FOR PERFECTION

COLDS

In a minute—relief from miseries begins

Rub MINIT-RUB on chest and back.

1. In a minute, Minit-Rub begins to stimulate circulation, begins to bring a sensation of warmth. That quickly helps relieve surface aches and pains.

2. In a minute, Minit-Rub's welcome pain-relieving action begins to soothe that raspy local irritation.

3. In a minute, Minit-Rub's active menthol vapors begin to ease that nasal stuffiness feeling.

MINIT-RUB also helps soothe pains resulting from neuralgia, sciatica, rheumatism and lumbago. Try it!

MINIT-RUB is wonderful for both children and adults. Greaseless! Stainless! Disappears like vanishing cream! Won't harm linens.

Get a tube of Minit-Rub today!

GREASELESS
STAINLESS

MINIT-RUB

Available in small and large tubes

PRODUCT OF BRISTOL-MYERS

ADD A YEAR'S WEAR means extra wear. All Bambury Fashions have this important feature. Even simple style garments become more than a year's wear.

BAMBURY FASHIONS, INC., 520 Eighth Ave., N. Y. C.

Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

Copyright 1949 Rosenblatt & Rosenblatt, Inc.

Left: All wool navy diagonal weave with white pique collar and closing trim. Sizes 7-10. Size shown, under $15.

Right: (Shown on Margaret O'Brien) All wool crash coat tweed. Has comes in a four pocket. Sizes 7-14, and mid-teen 10-14. Size shown, under $40.

Matching Little Women Hat, about $4.50

SARAH AND THE SEAPLANE

(Continued from Page 40)

What did he think of, in this pensive attitude? In the air he was indivisible from the miracle of flight, cleansed of everything but the clean essentials of flight, more arrogant and more at ease than a god because he was master of space and took it for granted. But on the ground he was genial and undiscriminating, casually self-sufficient, and his requirements, Sarah deduced, were at best represented by such words as "coffee," "billfold," "gas" and "sleep." It was difficult for her to accept him as he was, and not endow him with splendor.

He raised his head and saw her. "Hey, kid," he said, breaking into his unconscious smile, and his candid blue eyes received her without qualification. It was not difficult for him to accept her as she was, and she was grateful for his good-natured, platonic regard; it saved the conspiracy from her romanticism and obviated her shyness. He was, in fact, the first comrade she had ever had. He rose, flipping away his cigarette. "You okay?"

"Oh, yes! And you?"

"Well, me, I'm tired." He scowled, smiling at the same time. "Up late."

She remembered. There had been a dance at the club last night. So he had dates, went to dances, kissed pretty girls. She remembered Gwen-Ellyn, with the speculative look on her beautiful face, saying she thought the new flight instructor was "rather attractive"; it meant she would take him into her group. Sarah had not gone to the dance because she wanted to be alert for her lesson and because, as usual, she had been asked by John Pease Whitefield III.

"I'm sorry," she murmured, unconsciously bowing her head. "I wish I didn't have to make it so early."

"Listen, I don't mind." In the Navy he had been tired all the time. He bumped her chin with his closed, golden fist. "Long as I get paid for it. Best time of day anyway. Listen, bring your ma down sometime—might soften her up a little."

She broke into laughter; that anyone could speak so of Mrs. Gillis! "She might ask you to give me lessons."

"Listen, she might ask me to give her lessons. Well, come on, let's get on with the business." He opened the cabin door for her.

She climbed up, putting in the wrong foot as usual in an attempt to show as little as possible of her long brown legs. She fastened her safety belt while Henry settled beside her; and with the gladness of being back in the familiar cabin, the wonderful nervousness commenced.

"Okay," he said, "it's all yours."

She set the altimeter, glanced up at the stabilizer, and set the throttle. "On left," she murmured, cautiously turning on the switch, and working the prop around with the starter. She pulled and nothing happened. Henry sat waiting in watchful silence. She tried again and the motor caught raucously and settled into a rhythmic whispering. She moved the switch to Both, and, pleased with herself, turned to smile at him. He signed to continue. He was chary with his praise.

She waited for a speedboat to pass, and eased in the throttle. She brought the ship around to the east and they rode out into the glistening bay.

"Wind?" she queried.

"What do you think?" he responded.

She peered back at the flag, hanging furled over the village square. "There isn't any," she said.

He nodded. "Okay, if you say so."

"Well, maybe there is. I'm just a beginner."

"If you find any let me know."

"I don't see any."

He snorted. "Okay, take off, then."

"Shall I test the mags?"

"That might be a good idea."

But she turned and smiled at him; his sarcasm didn't frighten her because they were comrades, and here she was free of herself and happy. "By the way, what are mags?"

He looked at her hopelessly through his olive-green sunglasses. His face was not more than a foot from hers. "Remind me to tell you."

"Well, the mags are okay," she told him. "Shall we go?"

"Any time you're ready."

She located the speedboat again and, satisfied, drove in the throttle. The motor roared out and the seaplane crouched and strained forward, and Sarah exulted silently with the momentous impulse. She was aware of Henry sitting beside her, alert and observant, like a passenger, with his hands on his knees.

"It takes longer on smooth water," he said. "Don't fight her. Let her fly herself off." He raised one hand and tenderly eased his own

(Continued on Page 176)

JENNIFER

"But that's what I like about it, mommy—it hides my age!"

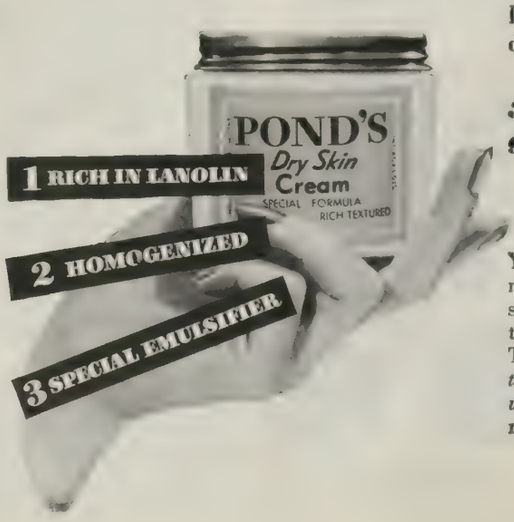
MRS. ELLEN TUCK ASTOR
"I'm never without this rich, softening cream."

THE DUCHESS OF SUTHERLAND
"I find this cream almost a necessity for dry skin."

MRS. NICHOLAS R. DU PONT
"The nicest cream I know for softening dry skin."

THE LADY DAPHNE STRAIGHT
"This rich, soft cream is really remarkable."

MRS. JOHN A. ROOSEVELT
"The loveliest cream for dry skin I've ever used."



If you are over 25

Beware of Dry Skin

FROM ABOUT 25 ON many women find the natural oil that keeps skin soft and smooth, gradually decreases. Even before 40, a woman may lose as much as 20% of this skin oil.

Replacement help is right at your fingertips when you use Pond's Dry Skin Cream. This cream is very rich in lanolin—the oil that is most like your own skin oil. It is homogenized—to help it soak in better. And it has a special emulsifier for extra softening.

You will feel the softening results the very first time you use this satiny, rich Pond's Dry Skin Cream. Day-by-day you'll see your skin look fresher, smoother, younger.

Arrests Dry Skin 2 Ways

Lanolin-Softens by Night—after your regular bedtime cleansing, work plenty of rich-in-lanolin Pond's Dry Skin Cream over your face, and throat. Leave a few minutes—then wipe off lightly, so a soft film of cream is left to help your skin all night.

Feel how your dry skin seems to "drink up" this lanolin-rich cream. Feel how your skin softens. See how those tiny dry lines are smoothed so they don't show.

Lanolin-Protects by Day—for extra daytime softening, too, smooth on a very light touch of lanolin-rich Pond's Dry Skin Cream before you make-up. This soft, rich cream helps protect your skin against dryness all day. Keeps your skin soft and smooth looking.

3 Features give it Extra Softening

Get this truly remarkable dry skin corrector—today!

You'll find lanolin-rich Pond's Dry Skin Cream never leaves your skin feeling sticky. Instead—it smooths on with a delicious softening feeling. Use this rich cream generously every day for a week. Then, look at your face carefully. See if this isn't the finest help for correcting dry skin you've ever used. Don't wait—get your jar of Pond's lanolin-rich Dry Skin Cream today.

QUAKER OATS HELPS GROW

"Stars of the Future"

Doctors say the more often youngsters eat a good oatmeal breakfast, the better they grow

THE GIANT OF THE CEREALS IS QUAKER OATS!

A GIANT in Nutrition!

Your youngsters get more growth, more endurance—your grownups get more energy, more stamina from nourishing oatmeal than any other whole-grain cereal! That's why Quaker Oats is recommended for a better breakfast! According to a recent survey, only 1 school child in 5 gets the kind of breakfast he should have. So doctors say, the more often youngsters eat a good oatmeal breakfast, the better they grow! Serve Quaker Oats often!

A GIANT in Value!

Nutritious Quaker Oats helps keep your grocery bills down. Saves you money, and saves precious time, too—Quick Quaker Oats cooks in 2½ minutes!

A GIANT in Flavor!

People eat more Quaker Oats than any other cereal in the world because THEY LOVE THAT QUAKER OATS FLAVOR! Tempting recipes on the package. Remember to buy delicious Quaker Oats.

Still Less than 1¢ a Serving!

Quaker and Mother's Oats are the same

QUAKER OATS

(Continued from Page 174)

wheel forward and at once the floats freed themselves, and he relaxed again.

She completed the field pattern and leveled off at 600 feet. She turned at last to the window. Now the august panorama, green and gold, the privileged revelation of fields and hills and mountains guarding incandescent water, the limitless and lovely world, expanded for them, the airborne. Sarah had come home again.

She clenched her fist and gently, wordlessly, pounded Henry's knee. He took her hand and gently replaced it on the throttle.

"You forgot something." He pulled up the water rudder. "Okay, you're sorry, but remember it next time. Let's go upstairs; we're going to do some stalls." After a moment he said quietly, "It is beautiful, isn't it?"

Mrs. Gillis was already seated in the dining room. It had no windows. It was paneled in black oak, with stained-glass panes extending along the top of one wall and beneath them a black Moorish lattice through which filtered the light of the sun porch. There was a white brick fireplace that had evidently been used, once.

Mrs. Gillis, wearing a white dress, loomed large and pear-shaped at the end of the Elizabethan refectory. "Good morning, Sarah," she said in her husky voice, pronouncing it Say-ra. "You were up early."

Intuitively Sarah recognized in her voice the expectation of an apology. "I'm sorry, mother." For what? the rebel in her demanded. Oh, well, she told it, anything to keep peace. She went to Mrs. Gillis and kissed the pendulous, gray and surprisingly soft cheek which was held at an angle for this obligation. Trembling still with tension, she seated herself, and Bridget brought her grapefruit and a finger bowl with a flower floating in it. Then Sarah noticed the extra place. "Oh, who's here?"

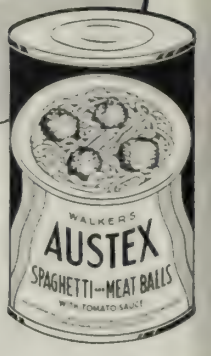
If Mrs. Gillis had done no more than bridle, Sarah would have guessed. "Doctor Frienze. Late for breakfast, naughty man." She said archly, as though it were a compliment to herself. "He has come for a week." She turned to Sarah, closing her eyes as she did so, and demanded, "Why didn't you hear him arrive last night?"

ANOTHER apology: "I went to bed early." In her dislocated state of excitement and secrecy, happiness and restraint, she was indifferent to the arrival of Doctor Frienze. He was some sort of distant cousin or nephew twice removed; all Mrs. Gillis' favorites were "connections." Even Sarah was related to her distantly. It seemed to Sarah sometimes that all Boston society consisted of the hinterland relationships of cousins, nieces and nephews. Doctor Frienze, with the double handicap of being both a foreigner and a scientist, invited before the war to Princeton, would never have made the grade if it had not been for his aunt's sister-in-law.

"I shall require you," Mrs. Gillis stated hoarsely, with her eyes closed, "to drive me to the village after breakfast. We will stop and leave flowers at the hospital. We will then drive to the club, where the Garden Club is meeting at eleven. We will lunch there, and after my rest we will take Doctor Frienze with us to tea at Mrs. Whitefield's. We will dine at home, and I am having a few couples in for bridge and so shan't need you."

"Yes, mother." And the rebel made her add, "And thank you, mother."

At once the bright gray eyes snapped open, the gray face assumed its terrible rigidity, the jawbones set and slightly protruding. "Are you being impertinent?"



In the awful muffled voice Sarah heard herself mumble, "No, mother," and her heart thudded heavily. The sick pressure began its upward rise, and the rebel was reduced once more as it had been reduced for nineteen years.

Mrs. Gillis made a sound of satisfaction and then assumed a powerful silence, directed at Sarah, which except for exigencies would continue throughout the day, a monumental sulk that was at the same time a punishment.

And only Sarah knew how terrible a punishment it was. Oh, Henry, she cried, ashamed

TODAY'S QUICK MEAL

It's AUSTEX Good!

Spaghetti and Meat Balls with HOT ROLLS and SALAD

Here's Spaghetti at its piquant best... Austex Spaghetti with rich Meat Balls and zesty sauce, made doubly appetizing when served with bread and butter or hot rolls, plus a crisp, green salad. It's a quick meal that's Austex Good!

AUSTEX
CHILI • TAMALES • BEEF STEW
MEXENE SEASONING

NO WASHING • NO DRYING • NO BREAKAGE • NO HELP OR HUBBY NEEDED FOR DISHES

PAPER PLATES Save You Plenty

MORE THAN A CLEANER . . . IT
BEAUTIFIES SILVERWARE

America's Largest Selling Silver Cleaner

GET Everyday Card CASH!

Make $50.00 cash for selling only 100 boxes of gorgeous new Everyday Cards. Fine quality. Big name $1 Assortment pays you up to 50c profit. Many new styles of 21c Assortments bring you easy extra orders—Deluxe, Humorous, Gift Wrappings, Personalized Keepsake Notes 40 for $1.00. Imported Napkins. Stationery. Write for SAM-PLES on Approval. CHAS. C. SCHWER CO. 165 Elm St., Dept. V-16, Westfield, Mass.

14-CARD $1 Assortment PAYS YOU UP TO 50c Samples on Approval

Spare-Time MONEY!

DO YOU want to increase your income? All right—just send us your name and address on a postcard. By return mail we will send you a generous commission offer. Write today to CURTIS CIRCULATION COMPANY, 836 Independence Square, Phila. 5, Pa.

Dennison, Dept. P-1, Framingham, Mass.
FREE Please send me a whole day's supply of Dennison Diaper Liners.
Name.....
Street.....
City.....State.....

HEY, MOM! Don't be a Diaper Drudge! Dennison Diaper Liners reduce unpleasantness in changing and washing my diapers. Just fold a Liner inside diaper next to my skin. When soiled, flush away. No hard scrubbing. Sanitary. Helps prevent diaper rash. Costs only a few cents a day. DELUXE: 180 for $1; CRADLE TIME & DOWNEESOFT: 180 for 69¢.

Dennison
DIAPER LINERS
Wherever Baby Goods Are Sold

DIAPERS that are
KNITTED TO FIT YOUR BABY

PANT-EASE diapers stay in place on the most active infant and the elasticity of this specially knitted cotton fabric keeps your baby comfortable at all times

No Folding—No Seams—No Loose Ends to slip, hang down or become bunched where they do not belong - - - -

EVEN DADDY CAN CHANGE
Pant-Ease diapers
Highly absorbent—Easy to launder and the double thickness with open ends, permits hanging so the air can circulate through each garment and — DRY IN LESS TIME

Pant-ease
DIAPERS
are used and approved by Doctors, Nurses and thousands of modern Mothers See Pant-ease at Department Stores and Shops or Send for FREE LITERATURE
SAMPLE GARMENT 25¢
PANT-EASE INFANT WEAR CO. DEPT. 015 ARCADE, N.Y.

21 SELL FAMOUS SUNSHINE $1 EVERYDAY CARDS
SIX FLORAL LINED ENVELOPES

NEVER BEFORE SUCH VALUES
Easy to make BIG PROFITS in your spare time with these sensational values. Exclusive Sunshine creations. Your friends, neighbors, associates will enthuse and buy these boxes on sight. Samples on approval.
OTHER 1949 QUALITY CREATIONS
Complete line, Get-Well, Birthday, Gift Wraps, Stationery, Decorative Napkins. No experience needed. It costs nothing to try. Write today for samples on approval.
THE SUNSHINE ART STUDIOS
115 Fulton St., Dept. LE-2, New York 8, N.Y.

48 SUNSHINE NOTES $1.00
21 CARD EASTER ASST. $1.00

Hi-Life
9 out of 10 DOGS LIKE IT!
CANNED DOG FOOD
PUP CHEF
Vitamin Rich!
At your Grocer
Hi-Life Packing Co., Chicago 5, Ill.

MATERNITY STYLE BOOK
FREE

LANE BRYANT
Maternity clothes help to conceal your condition and keep you smart throughout your pregnancy. Adjust easily to your changing figure.
Sizes from 32 to 46 bust; also misses' sizes from 12 to 20 and junior sizes from 11 to 19.
Latest styles in Dresses and Corsets. Also apparel for baby. Send the coupon today for your FREE Style Book.

Lane Bryant
DEPT. 5-B • 752 E. MARKET ST.
INDIANAPOLIS 17, IND.

Mail FREE Maternity Style Book in plain wrapper. (5-B)
Name.....
Address.....
Post Office.....State.....

of her humility, despising her ignominy; oh, my beautiful sun and sky.

Her mother's voice was as caressing as silk: "Good morning, Doctor Frienze!"

"Madame!" Doctor Frienze went at once to Mrs. Gillis and kissed her hand with passionate, automatic tenderness. "Forgive me for being late," he implored. He glared at her. "But you shouldn't have left that book by my bed," he told her. "I sat up all night reading it!"

He was a slender, broad-shouldered man of about forty, with a thin, fine face burdened by European tortoise-shell glasses. In winter his skin was creamy white under his black hair; in summer, the color of waxed pine. He moved impetuously as though he were bad-tempered, but actually he had the simplicity of disposition which accompanies cosmic knowledge. He had been commensurately honored for his work so that now his name was familiar to growing American boys.

"I am a sucker," he told Mrs. Gillis, "for mysteries."

Mrs. Gillis made a sound of arch deprecation, for she did not permit slang and Doctor Frienze used it in her presence at every opportunity.

He strode abruptly around the table to Sarah, but she caught his hand and shook it, and he laughed, "Okay, have it your way."

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Low Comedy

By Georgie Starbuck Galbraith

I might maintain some dignity
If love, in taking leave of me,
Should try to knife me in the side,
Or dose my tea with cyanide,
Or strangle me up some dark alley
To show we'd reached the grand finale.
Such gestures speak of high romance
And tragedy. But what's my chance
Of keeping pride and poise intact
When love concludes our little act
By taking aim and letting fly
A well-directed custard pie?

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

And he shook her hand some more for good measure, enjoying it, while his great, black, ingenuous eyes smiled at her, and Mrs. Gillis made sounds suggesting they leave off.

He rushed about to his place. "It beats me," he said, and his grapefruit could just as well have been boiled turnips, "why the detective never looks for a plain old robber who wandered in to steal something. Good grief, no; what are interesting house guests for?" He gabbled on enthusiastically, and Sarah sat gazing into his face. She gazed so long and so blankly that she was not aware when his eyes rested on hers.

Mrs. Gillis managed to interrupt. "I must leave you, dear boy. Pray do exactly as you please, and ask for whatever you like." She closed her lids briefly and said to Sarah, "I shall be ready in ten minutes." She took her departure while they stood respectfully beside their chairs.

"Do sit down again," Doctor Frienze begged, and absent-mindedly Sarah obeyed. He smiled across the table at her. "At six-thirty this morning," he said, "I was awakened by an antique car leaving the drive. Ah," he cried, pushing back his chair, "forgive me, I didn't mean to intrude, I am very sorry ——"

She clasped her hands and leaned forward. "Please ——"

"No. I will tell no one." He regarded her gravely, and all at once, from his sobered voice and expression—a quietness of manner never disclosed in the presence of Mrs. Gillis—Sarah derived the curious sense of being as much an adult as he was. "Is there anyone in the

(Continued on Page 179)

Will You Let Baby Fears Cast Lifelong Shadows?

Literally millions of our most intelligent people have never risen to the success and happiness they might have achieved, simply because their spirits have been twisted and crushed by the fears and anxieties of childhood. Often these fears are deeply concealed in the child, and it takes a trained parent to detect them and to know what to do about them.

A complete and authoritative plan to guide your child safely from infancy to adolescence

Our universities and child-guidance centers have spent millions of dollars in child study. So that you might have the benefit of this study in solving your child's problems, over 50 famous educators have created CHILDCRAFT. Four big volumes of the set are packed with parent guidance alone, bringing you the advice of not just one, but many specialists on a particular problem. For example, on the subject of your child's fears and anxieties, you will find the following:

In infancy—19 topics by 7 child specialists
As a toddler—19 topics by 12 child specialists
Pre-school—19 topics by 12 child specialists
Pre-adolescent—21 topics by 13 child specialists

Added to these books are ten more big volumes of verse, fiction, arts and sciences, created by other child specialists. Beautifully illustrated, they are designed to stimulate the mental growth and reading interest of your child. And to meet any unusual problems concerning your child, CHILDCRAFT offers an additional FREE personal advisory service to owners.

Of course, you'd do anything to assure your child's success. Just a few cents a day, just a few minutes a day spent with CHILDCRAFT may do much to protect your child's future. Write now for the free booklet "51 Perplexing Problems Solved for Parents."

CHILDCRAFT, 35 E. Wacker Drive, Chicago 1, Illinois
C. C. Ruch
Please send me the FREE Booklet "51 Perplexing Problems Solved for Parents."
Name.....
Address.....
(If outside city, give R. F. D. and name of road.)
City.....State.....

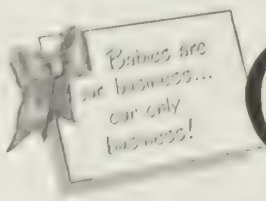
TESTED AND RECOMMENDED BY PARENTS MAGAZINE

Childcraft is sold only by authorized representatives. There may be an opportunity to represent CHILDCRAFT in your community. Dignified, profitable employment if you qualify. Free training. No investment required. Write Manager, Mr. Robert R. Barker, CHILDCRAFT, 35 East Wacker Drive, Chicago 1, Illinois.

Now it's easy!

Gerber's NEW Meats for Baby so good . . . so time-saving . . . so economical!

They're ARMOUR Quality Beef! Veal! Liver!



In these new meats produced and brought to you by Gerber's and Armour, you can see the high quality—you can taste it too! For these meats for your baby have true-meat color, plus the lean-meat goodness for which Armour is famous. And you can get this quality at real savings in time, work and money.

Spend 3 minutes instead of 35 preparing tasty veal for baby. Just heat! No tiresome scraping! You'll save from 10 to 20 minutes of your precious time with strained beef or liver.

All with important high-quality proteins. So, ask your doctor how early in the first year you can add Gerber's Meats to baby's Gerber-good menus of Fruits, Vegetables and Desserts.

All this . . . and savings, too! Several servings in each can. Gerber's Strained Meats for tiny babies and Junior Meats for older tots come in one size can at one moderate price. Far less expensive than home-prepared baby meats.

Accepted by the Council on Foods and Nutrition of the American Medical Association

Gerber's
BABY FOODS
FREMONT, MICH. OAKLAND, CAL.

3 Cereals • 20 Strained Foods • 15 Junior Foods • 3 Strained Meats • 3 Junior Meats

(Continued from Page 177)

world," he asked her, "whom you can confide in?"

"No. But it doesn't matter. There isn't much to confide."

"Ah, no?" And his great, gentle eyes encompassed a Sarah she refused to credit. He looked almost as though he could weep. And he said softly, "My dear Sarah, every day, all the time, you are committing suicide. It is a greater crime than not pleasing others: not doing justice to yourself."

Shaking, she got up from her place. "Yes," she gasped, "and what of it?" And she went quickly away to get out the station wagon.

They sat in a circle on Mrs. Whitefield's large screened veranda, a rectangular wilderness of Chinese wicker chairs, Oriental rugs and tabourets. Mrs. Whitefield was a tall, white, gently eccentric woman with short red hair who wore silk draperies she had dyed herself, and her son had light red hair and a mouth that always looked sore. He passed cups and cucumber sandwiches, and with an exaggerated accent which was intended to convey the impression both of superior intellect and of Harvard University, questioned Doctor Frienze on the subject of nuclear physics. Doctor Frienze responded agreeably, volubly and incomprehensibly, while Mrs. Gillis, with her eyes closed, told Mrs. Whitefield how to make better tea, and Sarah, dressed becomingly in white, gazed at the mountains.

Into this genteel circle wandered Gwen-Ellyn, her beautiful brown legs and thighs spectacularly bare. Mrs. Gillis made an offended sound and closed her eyes again, but she did not turn her back because Gwen-Ellyn was Mrs. Whitefield's niece and formidably well connected with a good many sovereign old ladies in Boston. John Pease Whitefield III leaped to his feet, transformed from an intellectual to a nervous youth.

"H'lo," Gwen-Ellyn told them negligently. "Tea? No, thanks." She seated herself with the indifference of a pagan goddess, flung aside her long, pale hair, and seemed to go into a trance. After an interval during which everyone pretended her nearly naked presence was not disturbing and made anxious conversation (except Doctor Frienze, who frankly beamed at her legs), she suddenly rose and said, "Hey, Sal, c'mon out with me." It was well known that Mrs. Gillis did not permit Sarah to leave her side without an explanation, but Gwen-Ellyn disdained to offer one, and Mrs. Gillis for some reason hesitated to demand one of her. All at once Gwen-Ellyn smiled an enchanting, childlike smile. "G'by, Aunt Becky," she said, and without a word to anyone else she drifted away with Sarah.

They groped through the dark living room and came out on the drive. Thunderheads had mounted over the sun, and insects hummed moodily in the sultry, shadowless glare. (Cumulo-nimbus, Sarah observed conscientiously.)

"Say-ra," Gwen-Ellyn said, folding her arms, "what is this I find—you getting into an airplane at six-thirty in the morning?"

A coppery blush had begun to spread from the base of the cumulo-nimbus, and the afternoon suddenly quieted. "Who told you? Henry?"

"Hank? No, that great big beautiful blond, he never says anything interesting." Gwen-Ellyn relaxed her weight from one splendid hip and shifted it to the other, and her face all at once was not agreeable. "No, Say-ra, I saw you myself. Didn't you see me, Say-ra? I went by several times in my boat. Or were you too engrossed with Hank to notice?"

"I saw the boat."

"What are you up to, Say-ra? Taking lessons from Hank?"

Sarah stooped and picked a drooping dark petunia; she inhaled its fragrance, the velvet petals drawing about her nostrils, and over the blossom her eyes moved, brooding, toward the house.

"You just happen to be lucky, so far," Gwen-Ellyn said, curling her exquisite lips, "having your own money so you can do things on the sly. Me, I just have my own mother,

Chix Chat

About your baby and you

by Louise Zabriskie, R.N.

DIRECTOR, MATERNITY CONSULTATION SERVICE, NEW YORK CITY

BABY YOUR BABY. Yes, new mothers soon discover that baby is healthier and happier if a not too rigid routine is established for feeding and sleeping. Regular habits will give him a needed sense of security. And a comfortable baby makes for a happy baby, too. That's why modern mothers choose CHIX Diapers. Surgically-pure gauze in an exclusive Cushion Weave makes them the softest, most absorbent diapers ever! And light, airy CHIX Diapers wash easier, dry quicker.

GRANDMA NEVER HAD IT SO EASY for there are many work-saving items for today's mother. Now you can cut diaper washing drudgery with CHIX Diaper Liners! You just put a CHIX Liner inside of baby's diaper. When baby has a bowel movement the Liner holds the stool so that it doesn't touch and stain the diaper. Best of all, these soft, absorbent cottoned Liners are completely disposable . . . you just flush them away when they're soiled. How convenient!

BABY'S GOING BYE-BYE. Be sure to take baby's favorite toy along to keep him content and happy. And to make traveling with baby easier for yourself, be sure to take CHUX along, too—the wonderfully convenient 100% Disposable Diaper. Made with a soft cottoned facing that can't chafe, with highly absorbent cellulose underneath.

ABSOLUTE QUIET ISN'T NECESSARY when baby's asleep. The little ones are pretty sound sleepers and even the sound of a radio (not blaring, of course) should not disturb them. But always be sure that baby is completely comfortable for sleeping. CHIX Fitted Crib Sheets of fine percale can't crawl or creep. And for baby's bath, wondersoft CHIX Baby Bath Sets include a bath blanket, towel and 2 washcloths. Wash easier, dry faster than regular towels.

Send for a free copy of Louise Zabriskie's helpful booklet—"Common Sense in Dressing Baby." Address CHIX, Dept. LH-I.

CHICOPEE MILLS, INC.

47 Worth Street, New York 13, N. Y.

SERVE THIS UP IN 20 MINUTES: You'll need a frying pan and a griddle • Mix a batter of any good prepared pancake mix • Slice one or two cans of SPAM fairly thick; brown the slices quickly in hot fat in the frying pan; turn heat low • Spoon batter on hot griddle, turn when bubbles show • When cakes are browned both sides, spread with jam or jelly and roll 'em • Arrange as pictured • Say "stay to supper", mean it . . . and make a hit.

LUCKY BREAK FOR BREAKFAST—golden brown SPAM and fried eggs, or with eggs any style. For variety, enjoy SPAM with waffles, pancakes or hot breads.

HUNCH FOR LUNCH—SPAM cheeseburger. Just put sliced SPAM and cheese on bun halves, slip under broiler long enough for SPAM to brown and cheese get bubbly hot.

and father, and they won't let me fly. Listen, Say-ra," she hissed suddenly, "if I can't get Hank there isn't much use in you trying, is there? So my advice to you is to give it up; otherwise somebody's liable to tell your mamma and you're liable to get into trouble." She sighed, expanding her magnificent bosom, and strolled away to her yellow jeep.

But there were still a few more days of grace left to Sarah. She sensed that the time was growing short, and mutely, desperately, she tried to preserve her good luck with good behavior, surrendering herself without a sound to the wishes of Mrs. Gillis. Only now and then she gave a short gasp, as though she found it difficult to breathe.

For an hour each morning she was released. She would slide back the cabin window and let in the fresh morning wind; and when she made a perfect landing and Henry, taken by surprise, grinned and clapped her on the shoulder, she could not speak for joy. And when she came in cross-wind and bounced, and he said, "Well, you're tired now, we better quit," the golden hour ended and the gray, unbreathing day began, the long dead day that had somehow to be lived through. She knew now that Henry was preparing her to solo.

Doctor Frienze found her in the garden one night. He was not welcome, but he turned out to be a comfortable companion, oddly and mercifully silent, yet silently sympathetic. They sat side by side on an Italian bench before a Japanese shrine, and studied the vast, star-crowded rotunda.

When at last he spoke it was with the dignified voice which endowed her, too, with dignity and maturity. "Sarah, I wonder, will you take offense if I ask you a personal question? Very personal?"

"Probably not." Sarah—taking offense!

"Well, then." He asked quietly, "Are you in love with someone?"

It took her a long time to answer. She found it difficult to answer with the maturity he assumed in her. In love? In love with the good-natured Henry, the beautiful Henry? In love with the flashing water and the lift of wings at the instant of freedom, and the vision of the smiling, limitless world?

"Yes," she answered. "I think I am."

"Ah." He was silent again. Then at last he said, and his voice trembled, "That is good. I am glad for you. Because you cannot do this thing alone; someone must help you." He rose and bade her good night and went away.

Do what thing alone? And yet as she went on staring upward at the stars she thought she could discern his meaning. And for the first time in many years the tears fell like raindrops on her breast.

Henry pulled out the throttle. "You've lost your motor."

She pulled on the carburetor heater, thrust the wheel forward and gained air speed, and brought the ship down to the water for a landing.

"Okay," he said. "Now take me back."

This was it, then. It was too perfect a morning to waste, cloudless, the wind from the south, and she had guessed it was to be today. She was appalled, and yet filled with exultation, for she had been afraid her luck wouldn't last and there wouldn't be time.

"Just do the three landings," he told her on the way back to the wharf. "If you feel nervous, fly around and try it again. Use your throttle if you need to. Take it easy, and watch out for boats—that Gwen-Ellyn female has been getting up early lately. Remember when I'm out of the ship it will be that much lighter and you'll take off faster." The knuckles of his hands were white on his knees.

At the wharf he jumped out and held the ship, his head in the door.

"You okay, kid?"

"Yes." Sitting quite still in her seat, she smiled at him because his blue eyes had darkened with anxiety. "Are you?"

"I will be when you get back." He took her hand awkwardly and squeezed it. "You be good, now." And he stepped away, slamming the cabin door shut, and swung the ship about for her.

She was alone. There was a heady moment when everything she had learned left her, when she had to adjust herself to be alone, entirely alone, in the familiar cabin. Then she drew a deep breath, and suddenly a wonderful sense of competence made her sit erect and smiling: She was alone! She was answerable to herself alone, and she was sufficient.

"I can do it!" she told herself aloud.

She checked for boats, pulled up the water rudder and triumphantly drove in the throttle. The seaplane gathered momentum, nodding obediently, reared up on its steps, and scudded south out of the bay toward the open lake and the mountains. The water flew back from the floats in glittering streaks, and then effortlessly the ship lifted itself free and soared.

★ ★

Ask Any Woman

BY MARCELENE COX

LESSONS of life learned during childhood in a small town: Neighbor North finds joy in hanging colored laundry on the line in true rainbow continuity. Neighbor South pulls the tail feathers from roosters and sells the latter for hens at higher prices.

Efficiency is a thief of time when it leaves no leisure.

As I remember, we nearly stopped sterilizing the baby's bottle when she started drinking her bath water.

The psychologists' idea of the perfect non-worrying mother would be the one who would say cheerfully, "My runaway child has to come back eventually because the world is round."

The most thoughtful husband I know never reads Dagwood to his wife.

Pulling strings sometimes tangles lives.

For wives only: Hubbies make the best hobbies.

She's the kind of woman you always have to take leave of in the middle of a paragraph.

The three b's of teen-agers: bangs, blue jeans, boys.

Note on dieting: Leanness may lead to meanness.

Tumbleweeds have the right idea; they make sure that the seedlings shall not take root too close to the parent.

It is not required of a woman that she be her husband's better three fourths.

What an easy time our ancestors had bringing up children; when a child misbehaved there was only one cause: something he ate.

Getting my son's gym pants away from him long enough to wash them is equal to wresting the heavyweight championship from Joe Louis.

"What difference does it make as long as no one sees it but us?" is an excuse sometimes made for using chipped dishes, old utensils, faded cloths. The answer is it makes a lot of difference if you have better; memory heirlooms are more precious than physical heirlooms.

Child eating ear of corn: "Mother, will you please take these cobwebs off for me?"

Her self-sacrifice may make a woman a saint, her husband a martyr.

If everyone could disassociate age with persons the way children do with parents I would be as young as I feel.

half pound $1
more shampoo...
more quality...
for the money

(LARGE REG. SIZE, 60c)

Helene Curtis
creme shampoo

rich in emulsified lanolin

Who knows what shampoo is best? Your beautician! Use this 2-to-1 favorite of professional beauticians. Leaves hair misty-soft, dazzling clean, manageable, glowing. Billows of foam instantly even in hard water. No soap film! Rich emulsified Lanolin prevents drying. America's greatest value.

REPLACEMENT OR REFUND OF MONEY
Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping
IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN

THE ONLY CREME SHAMPOO USED BY MORE THAN 100,000 BEAUTICIANS

HELENE CURTIS INDUSTRIES, INC.

Concentrated and businesslike, Sarah climbed to 400 feet, checking her instruments as she rose, made a 90-degree turn, climbed to 600 feet and made a second 90-degree turn. She forswore the view, for she was approaching the bay again. She drew out the carburetor heater and cut the throttle, drawing down her left aileron. She straightened out for an instant at the end of the cross-wind leg to check again for boats, and now she could see the tiny white figure on the wharf.

"It's all right," she reassured him aloud. "Watch me!"

She resumed the gliding turn into the wind, straightened out and gently drew up the nose as the ship settled. A moment later she felt the floats break water—cleanly, riding swiftly forward as she held back the wheel.

She thrust in the throttle once more. This time she relaxed and scanned the fields and neat farmyards and the undulating green hills and blue-green mountains. In the shallows that rose to the rocky shores she could see the delicate brown pebbles, lying beneath the water as though beneath green glass. And at the top of the world, far to the north, the ranks of greater hills gave way to the White Mountains, standing lofty and self-communing in space. She was at peace; she was not afraid, of life or of death, for although she had never been so alone she had never felt so close to the mystery of existence, the detached and infinite existence of earth and sky.

She had relaxed too much and her second landing was not so good as her first, but the bounce was not a bad one, and she took off for the third and last landing.

She didn't see Gwen-Ellyn in the bay until she had completed her cross-wind leg, but the speedboat was headed out of her landing approach and she would overshoot the boat's wake, and she continued her glide. Then Gwen-Ellyn wheeled about and came flashing back in a wide arc, at right angles to Sarah's approach. At first Sarah couldn't believe Gwen-Ellyn saw her or would not alter her course, but she realized with a paralyzing start of certainty that unless one of them altered they would collide in a few seconds. Sarah gave the seaplane full throttle, drew back the wheel and pushed left rudder, heading in to the shore, and Gwen-Ellyn and her boat shot beneath her. Henry, watching on the wharf, sank without knowing it to his knees.

But Sarah was not gaining altitude, and as she cleared the shore line by a few feet she realized she had left the carburetor heater on. Idiot! It was too late. A field of timothy rushed beneath her floats, and at the end of it the pines rose on Cable Ridge and barred her way. She cut the throttle and, on second thought, the switch, drew up the nose and held the wheel with both hands; the floats settled, protesting, shrieking at the unfamiliar terrain, and the seaplane slid to a halt at the end of the field.

She was sitting in the grass when Henry leaped over the stone wall. She got to her feet, anxiously smiling, and he caught her by the arms and glared at her, the thudding of his chest reaching even into his face.

"I'm sorry, I'm sorry," she sobbed. "You told me a forced landing was easier in a seaplane than ——"

"You're sorry! They'll have to investigate this and Gwen-Ellyn's the baby who'll be sorry!"

They turned then and looked at the seaplane, stranded and undamaged in the timothy, and they began to laugh; he lifted her off her feet and kissed her, hurting her cheeks, and they laughed until their sides ached. Then he stopped kissing her cheeks, and a sudden warmth flooded their awkward embrace and softened it, and his lips moved to hers. And with the momentous silence thundering for the first time in her ears, Sarah felt herself emerge, like the locust leaving its shell, and for a few minutes she lingered, glorying in the leavetaking.

They freed themselves at last to catch their breath. "You're sweet," he whispered, trying to recapture her, "you're okay. You're my girl."

But already she could take flight. "Am I?" She smiled brilliantly. "Well, Henry, I think

METROPOLITAN OPERA STAR RISË STEVENS SAYS:

"for dream hands, Cream your hands"

"I give my hands the same beauty care I give my face—I CREAM them! That's why it's Pacquins for me," says

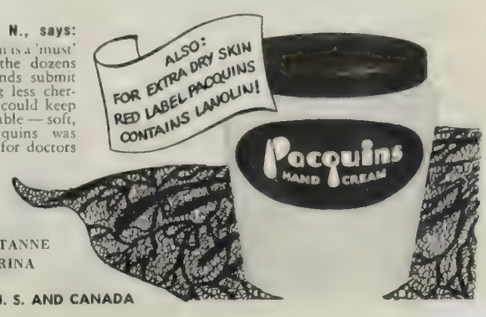
Risë Stevens

Try her method for just 3 days... a 12-second massage with non-sticky, non-greasy

Pacquins Hand Cream

...morning...night...whenever your skin needs softening

TRY THIS Pacquins hand massage ... morning ... night ... any time your hands need soothing, softening. Your own lovelier hands will tell you why Pacquins is the favorite hand beauty treatment of so many stars.



Pacquins is a "must" if hands are chapped, roughened, or dry. If housework leaves your hands scrub-ugly, smooth them ... soothe them ... after every chore—with Pacquins. There's no waste, no spilling ... and Pacquins leaves no greasy after-film.

Keep that jar of Pacquins within easy reach. Protect the precious loveliness of your hands! For truly dream hands ... follow opera star Risë Stevens's advice: CREAM them regularly with Pacquins.

MARION PUNCH, R. N., says: "Pacquins Hand Cream is a 'must' on my chart! With the dozens of scrubbings my hands submit to every day, nothing less cherishing than Pacquins could keep them socially acceptable — soft, smooth, lovely. Pacquins was originally formulated for doctors and nurses."

Among the famous stars who use Pacquins are:
GLADYS SWARTHOUT · LYNN FONTANNE
GERTRUDE LAWRENCE · VERA ZORINA

ON SALE AT ALL COSMETIC COUNTERS IN U. S. AND CANADA finish this suit in a jiffy with

DOT® SNAPPERS

A few blows of the hammer and these laundryproof fasteners are on to stay, thanks to the professional attaching tool. They're the same Dot Snappers used on fine ready-made clothes. No buttonholes to make, no buttons to pop off. Quick and easy for children to fasten. At your favorite notions counter. John Dritz & Sons, Dept. LHJ2, 1115 Broadway, N. Y. 10, N. Y.

Ask to see Pearl Dot Snappers for blouses and sportswear.

Simplicity Pattern No. 2750

DOT SNAPPERS KIT

$1.00 a box

Refills 25¢

free Send stamped addressed envelope for free booklet "Dritz Tips for Home Sewers"

ANOTHER DOT PRODUCT OF UNITED-CARR FASTENER CORP.

"From my very first wearing I found immediate relief from Varicose Veins!"

says Mrs. Frank Dedenbach, Detroit

"It is with genuine sincerity that I highly recommend Bauer & Black Elastic Stockings for their appearance, their comfort and their wearing qualities," says Mrs. Dedenbach.

This is typical of many comments. And if you suffer from the pain and unsightliness of surface varicose veins, there may be new beauty and new relief ahead for you, too.

Bauer & Black Elastic Stockings are genuine two-way stretch, lightweight, neutral in tint, with authentic fashioned leg and instep. They withstand repeated launderings.

If your doctor recommends elastic stockings—be sure you get Bauer & Black . . . almost invisible for beauty, firmly supporting for comfort and relief.

At drug, department and surgical stores

Elastic STOCKINGS

A product of

BAUER & BLACK

Division of The Kendall Company, Chicago 16

Write for Free Booklet!

BAUER & BLACK, Dept. U9-2
Division of The Kendall Company
2500 S. Dearborn St., Chicago 16, Ill.

Please send me your new FREE booklet, "Dritz Tips for Home Sewers and Proof for You."

Name

Address

City Zone State

some people are coming. Let's arrange about getting the ship out, and then I must go home."

It was long past breakfasttime, but they were waiting for her in the dining room. Mrs. Gillis, immobilized at the end of the long table, loomed in her white dress like a tombstone, and Doctor Frienze rose, troubled and sympathetic, warning Sarah with his silence.

Sarah went to her chair and stood behind it. "Good morning," she bade them pleasantly.

The small bright eyes steadied on her with the glittering focus of anticipated triumph, and after a pregnant interval during which she allowed Sarah to appreciate her expression, Mrs. Gillis spoke: "Gwen-Ellyn telephoned for you half an hour ago. She mentioned in passing what she assumed I already knew, that you have been taking flying lessons." There was an ominous pause. "Is this true?"

"Yes, quite true."

Already something in Sarah's manner disconcerted Mrs. Gillis; the glittering focus shifted. But she withheld comment because she was the judge and it was her privilege to pronounce sentence. She closed her lids. "What have you to say for yourself?"

Opposite Sarah, Doctor Frienze's great, dark, gentle eyes begged her to try, to rise at last and fight her own battle; but his tightly drawn lips, the anger of his white face, his long, fine hands gripping his chair, told her that he was ready, if she could not, to fight it for her.

She smiled. "Why, I have a great deal to say for myself, mother, but I'm awfully tired and I shan't be able to say it all now. I will later. I shall go on with my flying lessons and get my license because I mean to have my own plane." She glanced reassuringly at Doctor Frienze, and he smiled, and something beautiful and sad filled his eyes. "You see, mother," she continued before Mrs. Gillis, her jaw open and protruding, could speak, "I've always been afraid, afraid of you and afraid of discovering my own way of life, and now it isn't possible for me to be afraid any more, and ——"

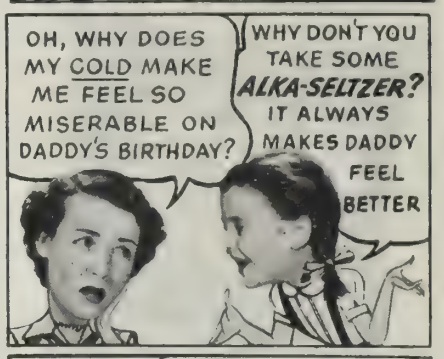
"Sarah," Doctor Frienze cried softly, "what happened?"

"Nothing, nothing," she told him. She would not buy forgiveness with the margin of her narrow escape. She was grateful that she had got home ahead of the news. Doctor Frienze's hands clasped tightly together and beads of sweat started forward on his brow, but he understood: whatever had happened was not the important thing now.

"Sarah," Mrs. Gillis croaked hoarsely, her cheeks shaking as though she would cry, "I haven't the faintest idea what you are talking about!"

"Ah, but you have, haven't you?"

"You will go at once to your room while I decide what is to be done!"



"No," Sarah murmured, clinging to the back of the chair—she longed to go to her room—"I must begin right now. I have decided myself what is to be done, and this is it: I shall sit down and have a glass of brandy."

Doctor Frienze leaped like a tiger to the hideous buffet, and Mrs. Gillis, with a rending cry of dissolution, burst into tears.

Sarah had never seen her weep; shuddering, she moved to comfort her. But fiercely Doctor Frienze signaled her, and together, in silence, they watched Mrs. Gillis get to her feet and run with little staggering steps from the room.

Doctor Frienze helped Sarah into her chair, drew another close by and put his arm about her and held the glass to her lips. She closed her eyes and sipped, thankful that they need say nothing. She sighed sleepily, remembering how Henry had said, "You're my girl." Henry's girl! She smiled. No, she wasn't Henry's girl. She was Sarah. Just Sarah. And that was sufficient. And with such a late start it would be some time before she got to know herself. Half in a dream now, she wondered if at the end of that time she would need someone else, and who it would be. She went happily to sleep then on Doctor Frienze's comforting shoulder. THE END high, awkward wooden cupboards, and there was no storage space to mention, and not much light. As was customary in an earlier period, there was a long passageway to the dining room. This became a bad handicap when the poet and her husband took over the farm and the house as a job.

POET'S KITCHEN

(Continued from Page 56)

Usually they carried trays to the living room rather than struggle with the big dining room.

There was no electric current except that generated by an old and worn-out gasoline engine, an erratic and difficult system. Therefore, modern equipment was out of the question, and many poems were written by the light of candles that had to last the night.

Miss Millay, however, used her fine mind to advantage with what there was. Her small and beautiful hands are immensely capable. The poet who once planned to be a concert pianist found her reach too short for the big chords, but she is the handy man of the house.

She adores fine tools, and Eugen delights her with gifts of such things as hammers, planes and sets of screw drivers. Her little workroom off the kitchen has a small carpenter bench with vise, and all her tools are arranged in an orderly manner above it. Screws and nails are filed as neatly as table silver.

Miss Millay oils the squeaking hinges, tightens loose windows, repairs worn steps.

And I kept thinking how the disciplined mind that created sonnets like Euclid alone has looked on Beauty bare.

or

Moon, that against the lintel of the west
Your forehead lean until the gate be swung, could attack the details of living as swiftly and accurately.

The old kitchen was as inconvenient and difficult as a room could be; but even with no modern conveniences, Edna kept it in spotless order. Lacking a towel rack, she made one of an old curtain roller. In the dark awkward cupboards, she arranged her supplies in shining jars and bottles placed diagonally on the wooden shelves, each one easily seen and reached. An old cheese box held her clothespins in rows with their heads together like toy soldiers.

Housekeeping was difficult in this narrow dark room, and meal getting a hard task. This affected Eugen, too, for he is one of those men who can really cook to the queen's taste—or a poet's. He used to be a great game hunter, and traveled all over the world. In every country he collected recipes, and cooking is

(Continued on Page 185)

Bringing up Parents

DR. BARBARA BIBER, Consultant
Child Psychologist, Bank Street Schools, New York

NEARLY all children love to dress up "as something," and parents like it too—because it makes the children look so cute. But much more than cuteness is involved. In fact, dressing up is one of the important ways by which a child grows up—through imagining himself in other people's shoes. A very little child is content to borrow mother's purse to play "mummy," but to older children costume details are more important. That's why stores sell so many ready-made costumes. However, it's better (and cheaper) to encourage children to assemble their own costumes. A little forethought on parents' part can help a lot. Even if you don't have an attic, it's a good idea to restrain that impulse to throw out old purses, belts, gloves, hats (mother's and father's), rubber boots, ties, dresses, sashes, scarves. Try to spare a drawer to pile them in. For they are the raw material for the kind of dressed-up dramatic play that helps children's minds to grow.

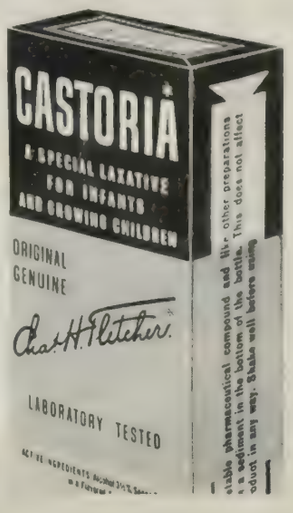
"But how can I be a real cowboy if she won't lend me her guitar?"

When baby's crankiness means

"Childhood Constipation"

..give Fletcher's Castoria!

"It's the laxative made especially for infants and children."



WHEN your child is cross and that crankiness comes from "Childhood Constipation" . . . it's wise to know what to do. Give her Fletcher's Castoria.

Thorough and effective—yet so gentle, it won't upset sensitive digestive systems.

Made especially for children—contains no harsh drugs, will not cause griping or discomfort.

So pleasant-tasting—children love it and take it gladly without any struggle.

Get Fletcher's Castoria at your druggist today. Be sure you see the green band and the Charles H. Fletcher signature on the package—then you will know that what you are getting is the original and genuine.*

Chas. H. Fletcher
The original and genuine
CASTORIA

TO PAY AN EMPLOYE FOR AN HOUR'S WORK THE RAILROADS HAVE TO HAUL FREIGHT MORE THAN TWICE AS FAR AS IN 1921

YEAR 1921

TO EARN THE MONEY TO PAY ONE HOUR'S WAGE TO ONE EMPLOYE—RAILROADS HAD TO HAUL ONE TON OF FREIGHT

48 MILES

JULY 1948

TO EARN THE MONEY TO PAY ONE HOUR'S WAGE —RAILROADS HAD TO HAUL ONE TON OF FREIGHT

105 MILES

The average hourly wage of railroad employes—without overtime—has more than doubled since 1921, after World War I. But the railroads have been receiving less for hauling the average ton of freight one mile than they received in 1921.

With greatly increased wage levels in other industries, increased railroad wages obviously would be expected. Some of the increased cost of labor, materials and supplies has been offset by great economies which railroads have achieved through technological improvements.

It takes large amounts of money to make these improvements. More are urgently needed. Additional wage increases are taking place and the cost of materials and supplies has doubled since 1939 and continues to rise. Despite postwar increases, freight rates are insufficient to pay these operating expenses and to provide money for changes required to reduce costs and improve service.

That's why the railroads had to ask for increased freight rates.

PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD

(Continued from Page 183)

his creative art. When he isn't off haying or helping John the farmer with the cows, he loves to simmer a bouillabaisse, or make his famous "snert," which is a Dutch version of pea soup, or use the fresh herbs from their own herb garden for his special bouillon.

The bringing in of electricity was the first step in remodeling the poet's kitchen. And as the last pole was lifted into place Edna showed us a poem which she had written while the men were working high in the air those cool autumn days. She read it aloud to the linemen.

It was a cold brilliant day, and the men stood in the clear light by the tall dark pole and listened to Miss Millay's lovely voice. It was the first time, one man said, he had realized that there was beauty in work, his kind of work. Their response made me realize all over again that poetry is an integral part of living, never an ivory-tower kind of art.

Edna had definite ideas about her kitchen. She wanted it streamlined, functional (a sonnet has only fourteen lines, never an extra one). She wanted a big window over the sink. "Give me all the sky you can," she said. She did not want curtains or pots of trailing ivy—"No hanging gardens of Babylon."

The new kitchen fits her personality perfectly, and Eugen, the chef, now has an electric range, plenty of work surface, cabinets for all his supplies, excellent lighting for the early dark of winter evenings; and while he puts beans to soak on Friday night, Edna can wash dishes and watch the sky darken over the hilltop.

A bank of aluminum casement windows stretching from ceiling to the counter and filling the whole end of the room, and a new cabinet sink under it, delighted Miss Millay. She is an expert on all North American birds and loves to watch them feeding in winter and nesting in summer as she washes dishes. The squirrels and the chipmunks also keep her friendly company. Someday next summer, "the dappled child of the deer" will surely come back and set his polished hoofs on the grass and look in at her window.

The new automatic electric water heater gives her a constant supply of hot water, and as she scours the pans she recites Catullus and the French poets. Or maybe she recalls again her own:

O world, I cannot hold thee close enough!
Thy winds, thy wide grey skies!
Thy mists, that roll and rise!
Thy woods, this autumn day, that ache and sag
And all but cry with colour!

She may see the wild ducks winging over outside her wide casement and think again:

Lord, I do fear
Thou'st made the world too beautiful this year;
My soul is all but out of me,—let fall
No burning leaf; prithee, let no bird call.

It is extremely hard to mention Miss Millay without remembering her poetry. For instance, in the new kitchen the colors of the sea she loves and writes about are translated into the deep turquoise of the floor. The doors, the covers on the bench seat and other accents in the room are the color of deep-sea coral sprays. The wall behind the table and the ceiling are the color of the sea in early morning, the wall behind the shelves is deeper, almost an aquamarine. The shading of the walls gives the effect of shifting light on the ocean.

The new eating center makes gay meals for two easy. And Edna and Eugen say it's like the little cafés in Paris, the bistros where they had so many happy meals in the days before the war. They love France, and this small piece of remembrance is a special thing to them. And to me a fine illustration of the importance of making your home reflect your heart.

On a cold February day, the kitchen is toast-warm. The old range which furnished difficult heat is gone, but piping heat in from a small furnace which formerly heated another part of the house supplies a steady and comfortable warmth.

Edna enjoys washing her own silks and woolens at home. Eugen does not like laundry going on under his nose as he cooks. So the laundry trays and the new electric washer were moved to the back entry. Also the water there is handy for John and Eugen when they need it for farm chores, and they do not interrupt the dishwashing just when the water is hot and sudsy.

The addition of a freezer makes it possible to store their own chickens and vegetables—and they grow all their own. At this season they have endive fresh from a sandy rooting in the cellar, for salads with Eugen's special dressing.

Herbs have long been a specialty of Edna's. She grows quantities of lavender and gathers it every season for her sheets and linen chests. Herbs season her poetry too:

For the sake of some things
That be now no more
I will strew rushes
On my chamber-floor,
I will plant bergamot
At my kitchen-door.

It was late autumn when I last visited the white house at the end of the road. The bulletin board was up in the kitchen and a message from Edna written firmly on it: "Tell John not to cut the grass around my York and Lancaster roses."

Eugen was off on the farm. Edna was out of sight— reading a new poem aloud to someone on the windy darkening terrace overlooking the orchard. But her vivid presence was there—how could so much greatness be in one small person, I wondered.

The kitchen was bright and "domestic as a plate." All the last light of the sky came in the windowed wall; there would be hard frost, and soon the "soft spitting snow." But the poet's kitchen would be a place to work in with contentment, and as I turned to the door I thought of Edna's Winter Night:

Pile high the hickory and the light
Log of chestnut struck by the blight.
Welcome-in the winter night.

The day has gone in hewing and felling,
Sawing and drawing wood to the dwelling
For the night of talk and story telling.

These are the hours that give the edge
To the blunted axe and the bent wedge,
Straighten the saw and lighten the sledge.

Here are question and reply,
And the fire reflected in the thinking eye.
So peace, and let the bob-cat cry.

THE END

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Sailing to Poughkeepsie

By JOAN AUCOURT

Wings, towers, bells and bridges fall away,
Shining behind us into milky light.
Ahead, the giant river draws the day
Down to its breast, silver and straight and bright;
And in the distance, draws the mountains down
The steep stone hills that stand on either hand
Turning from agate to obsidian
Against the velvet brilliance of the land.
Far, far ahead a solid shadow stands
Star-cast and sorrowful in northern snow,
Gathering all rivers into silent hands,
Keeping their secrets as they come and go,
While still behind us, bridges, birds and towers
Gleam, and sink slowly in a cloud of hours.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

"Smackin' good...it's GRO-PUP"

For "sniff appeal" heap his dish with wonderful Gro-Pup Ribbon. Crunchy-good . . . and nourishing!

Dogs crave solid food . . . and that's what they get in Gro-Pup. Top quality protein—in skim milk and homogenized fish. Meat meal, too. Plus many "dog thrive" ingredients, including every vitamin and mineral dogs are known to need!

Give your dog Gro-Pup—for sleek coat, good condition and lively bounce! It's veterinary-approved . . . it's the only Ribbon-type dog food available!

THRIFTY, TOO! Not 70% water like most canned dog foods. With Gro-Pup you add the water! You get over 1½ lbs. of solid nourishing food in a single package of Gro-Pup Ribbon . . . it's the biggest box on the shelf!

Yes, Smackin' Good...it's Kellogg's

It's still the thing to do...

It's still the thing, as it was in 1847, for a girl's fiancé to ask her father for her hand! And as the two men you love most observe this old tradition, your thoughts turn happily toward your future home...

It's still the thing to own...

The most dearly treasured silverplate in all the world is 1847 Rogers Bros. A gracious tradition for over 100 years!

The modern patterns with the yearmark "1847" have an extra height and depth of ornament, a perfection of finish and balance that you find, as a rule, only in solid silver.

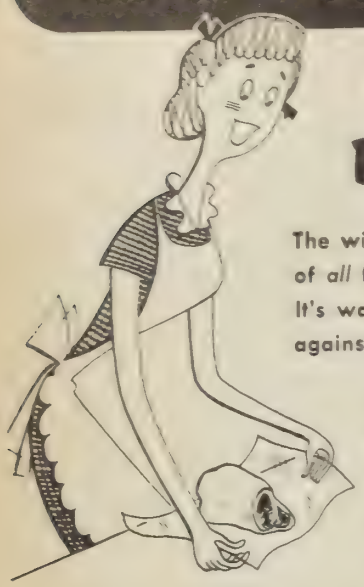
52-piece service for eight, $64.75, with chest. No Federal tax. Same price as in 1945!

COPYRIGHT 1949 THE INTERNATIONAL SILVER COMPANY, MERIDEN, CONN.

TUNE IN: "THE ADVENTURES OF OZZIE AND HARRIET," SUNDAY, 6:30 P.M., E.S.T., NBC.

1847 ROGERS BROS.

for 101 years
America's Finest Silverplate



Gloxinias

By RICHARD PRATT

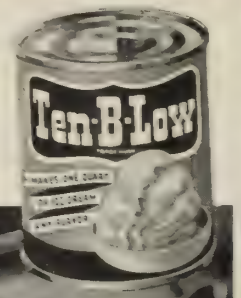
While you may find blooms almost as beautiful for words, a gloxinia by your window this summer will manage to make more talk than any other indoor plant you've ever grown. From clustered leaves as large as your hand, more velvety than those of the African violet, will rise big, upfacing flowers in colors astonishing to the bulbs you buy, from the white and white-fringed scarlet kinds in our photograph down to deep indigo. Now until May is the time to start them.

For all the information you'll need, consult Page 188.

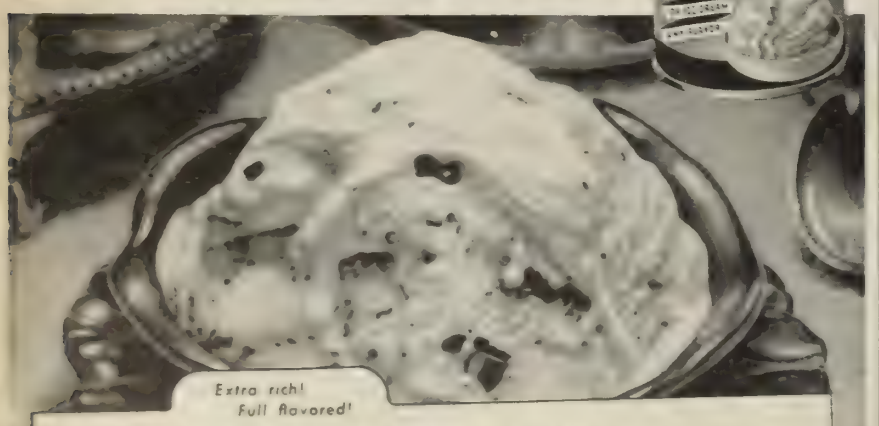
The Wise Wife Buys Waxtex!

Easy-to-Use FOOD SAVER!

The wise wife protects the flavor and freshness of all foods by wrapping them in Waxtex. It's waxed through and on both sides to protect against air, drying out, odors.



- Heavy Waxed Paper
- Strong, Pliable
- More Transparent
- Better Dispenser Box
- Full 125-Foot Roll



Now it's easy...

to make extra-delicious ice cream

Extra rich! Full flavored!

CHOCOLATE CHIP ICE CREAM

1 can Ten-B-Low
2 cups water
2 teaspoons vanilla
½ cup crushed, chilled chocolate chip candy

1. Set refrigerator control to coldest ...
2. Pour Ten-B-Low in mixing bowl ... Mix thoroughly.
3. Pour into refrigerator tray; set freezer ... minutes or longer. ...
4. Break up and spoon frozen Ten-B-Low into mixing bowl. Whip to a consistency a little softer than creamy mashed potatoes. Stir in crushed chocolate chip candy.
5. Return to freezing tray and freeze. Ten-B-Low is NOT a powder, NOT a so-called "mix," but a genuine ice cream in heavy concentrated form. Get several cans of Ten-B-Low today.

need only add water and flavoring because each can contains all the sugar, heavier than whipping cream, milk and egg yolks necessary for extra-rich ice cream.

Ten-B-Low

CONCENTRATED REAL ICE CREAM

HOW TO GROW GLOXINIAS

THIS superb house plant can be grown indoors from seed, seedlings, leaf cuttings and bulbs. Bulbs, which cost anywhere from 25 to 50 cents apiece, depending on the size, are the easiest and quickest; and planted from now until May, will bloom this summer in the colors of your choice. Seeds, which come in mixtures, if sown now will form small flowering plants by August or September, and will make larger ones next year, by which time you will know what colors you have. Domestic seedlings ordinarily cost as much to buy as large bulbs imported from Belgium, but from them you get a far greater variety of colors and markings. Leaf cuttings you learn to make when you gain some gloxinia experience.

Bulbs require little or no experience, so I suggest you start with them. Get two or three of the largest you can, and an ordinary 5-inch clay flowerpot for each one. Put about an inch of charcoal in the bottom of the pot for drainage and soil sweetening, then fill the pot with the following soil mixture: 1 part sand, 2 parts leaf mold, 1 part peat moss, 1 part good garden soil and 1 part well-rotted cow manure. This is the recipe of an outstanding gloxinia grower, and practically the same as the soil mixture we used for the plants in our picture on the preceding page. It is purposely rich and porous, as gloxinias demand plenty of good drainage and nourishment.

You set the bulb with the top barely protruding from the soil; but after a first good watering, water sparingly until leaves begin to show, then keep the soil constantly moist, but without wetting the leaves. Gloxinias like a covered porch, out of the wind and direct sun, or a light but not too sunny window; a temperature between 60° and 70°F. In a heated room, humidity is necessary for their good health, as with people. A tablet or two of fertilizer once a week when the leaves have formed, and while the plant is in flower, will enhance the general effect.

The bulbs will last for years. When the flowers have finished blooming and the leaves begun to fade, stop watering, and keep the plant in its pot in a cool, dry place until it begins to sprout again, which will be about February. Then renew the potting mixture, and start right in again where you left off.

If you have difficulty finding gloxinia bulbs at local seed stores, ask the seedsman for the name and address of a large mail-order seed firm which lists gloxinia bulbs in its catalogue. Follow directions carefully, and you will be proud to have in your possession one of the handsomest house plants of them all.

—R. P.

REPRISAL

(Continued from Page 37)

Last year everybody had gathered at the Oak Street Pharmacy; now they had switched to The Joint, as Brick called it. There was never any method or motive in the selection of a hangout; you went to a place for a while and then you all changed and started going somewhere else. In this case it wasn't the beer, really; at least not with Jud, because he didn't even like the stuff. Some of the boys and even the girls drank it, and drank enough to make them tight, but Jud stuck to soft drinks and ice cream. But The Joint was convenient—on the fringe of the expensive residential district where Jud and most of the gang lived—and you could get home in a hurry even if you had to walk.

Reaching the place, he saw with delight that Brick's convertible was parked in front. Maybe they'd go for a ride, maybe Brick would even let him drive. Being sixteen and a half and in senior high, Brick already had a car, but with the war over, some drip had to change the driving age back to sixteen and make Jud wait a year longer for a license. He could drive now a lot better than his mother—but she wouldn't even let him take the wheel

Rich Brown Gravy! EVERY SINGLE TIME

Recipe from "THE RECTOR KITCHENS"

Melt 2 tbsp. fat or drippings and blend in 2 tbsp. flour. Add 1 cup liquid (water, milk or vegetable water) and stir until smooth. When hot, add 1 tsp. Wilson's B-V dissolved in small amount of the hot mixture. Cook until thickened. Serves 3 or 4.

Wilson's B-V is a rich meat and vegetable extract.

WILSON & CO

B-V

The Wilson label protects your table.

Burpee GIANT SNAPDRAGONS Special! 3 PACKETS 10¢

Rust-Resistant Real Tie value. Five Gorgeous Pink, Yellow, Red, a 50c-Pkt. of each! Exquisite spikes 2 to 3 ft. tall. All 3 Packets Sent for 10¢ Now Dime Today! Burpee Seed Catalog FREE

W. ATLEE BURPEE CO.
416 Burpee Building Philadelphia 32, Pa. or 416 Burpee Building Clinton, Iowa

BUIST GIANT ZINNIAS

Large 10c Packet 5¢

Free Garden Guide & Catalog

Seeds • Bulbs • Fertilizers

ROBERT BUIST CO.
DEPT. K, 4 S. FRONT ST., PHILA. 5, PA.

SEEDSMEN FOR OVER A CENTURY

Sensational Tetra SNAPDRAGONS

New SCIENTIFIC INTRODUCTION

Chromatically created. Produces the largest flowers. Sturdy, tall, free branching plants. Strong stems. Big flowers. Unsurpassed coloring. Send for Blumm 48-page Seed and Nursery Catalog. FREE

R. H. SHUMWAY SEEDSMAN Box 550 Rockford, ILL.

DOUBLE POPPIES

Shirley, All Double, Mixed. Give richest display of color imaginable. Early flowering. Bushy plants grow about 28 in. high. Excellent cut flowers. Packet 10¢

Send for FREE Seed Book

L. L. OLDS SEED CO.
DEPT. 51 MADISON 1, WIS.

AFRICAN VIOLETS

each $1.25

each $2.00

VIRDANS FARMS Box 123-L PHELPS, NEW YORK

HAND KNITTING Yarns SAVE!!! BUY FROM MANUFACTURERS WORSTED • SPORT YARN HEATHERS • CASHMERE INSTRUCTIONS WITH ORDER FREE SAMPLE CARD

PETER PAN YARNS • 363 GRAND ST., N. Y. 2, N. Y.

MAKE MORE MONEY QUICK!

Sell New 1949 GREETING CARDS and STATIONERY

FREE SAMPLES PERSONAL STATIONERY

Elmira Greeting Card Co. Dept. M-45 Elmira, N. Y.

He shouldered the door open and stepped inside; into the noise of voices and the juke box, and the sour-sweet smell that goes with such places. Now that he was here, the hurry went out of his movements and he slouched forward, his eyes sweeping the littered room like a beacon.

Brick was holding court in a booth, but there were already six people in it, sitting high-shouldered and cross-legged because there wasn't enough room. Jud passed them up regretfully; if Brick was tangled up with a couple of women there was no chance for a ride. Instead he ambled to the fountain and muttered his order for a chocolate malt, then ambled to the magazine rack and selected a new comic to read while he drank. Dick Dunham was at the fountain, too, sucking up the last drops of a soda, so Jud gave him an expressionless greeting and opened the comic book.

Dick finished the soda and shoved it away. "You wanta go out tonight?" He spoke right-lipped out of the corner of his mouth, because he was a Bogart admirer.

Jud pulled a swallow of malt into his mouth before he answered. "Where?"

"The Ambersons are off on some kind of cruise."

"Oh." Jud's spine tingled pleasantly. "What time, and where they getting together?"

"Art's garage; seven-thirty. It's good and dark by then." Art's father had fixed up a playroom over the garage for him and it made a swell hangout.

"Oke. I'll be there."

He had expected an argument from his mother about going out tonight; he hadn't gone so hot in school lately and she kept making those silly appeals and threats: "Jud, you've simply got to apply yourself better. If you fail, you'll have to study all summer and you won't be able to go to the beach with us." That sort of stuff. He wasn't alarmed: before it was too late he could take a little time out and catch up. Lessons were easy as dirt if you had a reason to learn them; he had made an A-plus in math when that was the price of a new bicycle. (For a convertible, he thought resignedly, he'd probably have to produce a whole string of A's.)

But the argument failed to materialize because when he finally reached home his mother and father were out to dinner. George, the negro houseman, relayed their message.

"Your mother said for you to stay home tonight and study your lessons good."

"Nuts." He fell to eating noisily. "I got kept in and did my homework then. I'm going over to Art Emmons', but I'll be in before they will."

"Well"—George shrugged—"don't say I didn't tell you."

THERE were three boys at Art's when he got there, all of them about his age and all in a state of excitement. Art said, "You took your time. Let's get going," and grabbed up his jacket. Then he remembered to load the record player and leave it going at the top of its voice. (Most of the records had the initials of other owners scratched on them, but that was unimportant; the only time Art had been embarrassed was when he carelessly gave a girl one of her own records for Christmas, but she had thought it a screaming joke, so it didn't matter.) Twelve records would play a long time.

Even if one of them had been old enough to have a car, they would still have had to walk the three blocks to the Amberson place. It was a big, rambling brick house set in an acre of landscaped grounds, and there was a dim light burning downstairs. The light made them pause until Dick reassured them.

"There's nobody there. I cased the place. They just left a light to make people think they were at home."

They deployed then, converging on the rear of the house. French doors opening onto a terrace seemed the most promising, so they huddled silently around the center door while Art expertly produced a hammer and a very dirty handkerchief, laid the folded handkerchief against a pane of glass and struck once. Inside there was a tinkle of falling glass that made them hold their breath, but the night remained empty and silent around them.

"Oke," Dick breathed, and inserted an arm through the jagged hole. When he had found the key and turned it they slid silently into the house.

JUD'S heart was racing and his eyes had a curious glitter. This was the part that gave you such a big kick. "We got to pull all those shades and pull the curtains across 'em first," he whispered.

Bennie Temple helped him and when the job was done Art switched on a lamp. The room was handsome, expensive and immaculate.

"Some joint," Art said approvingly, and pulled out a pocketknife.

Jud raced for the pantry, excitement mounting in him until he felt dizzy. He had never quite reached the point of liking to smash fine things, the way Art and Bennie did, but he enjoyed making a mess. Sirup and oatmeal on a rug, catchup designs on imported wallpaper: those did something for him, released some pent-up energy and protest that he could neither recognize nor understand.

While Art was slashing upholstery Jud worked feverishly, his boyish face transformed with a kind of inner frenzy. He traced intricate patterns of sirup over the deep-piled rug, poured flour on top of it and smeared the mixture with a tablespoon. (He had learned that the stuff stuck to your hands.)

Bennie came up from the basement brandishing a saw. "Look!" he gasped with delight. "I'm gonna fix that dining-room table so they won't need chairs when they eat at it. They can sit on the floor, and save money." He giggled insanely.

They all worked swiftly and intently, each at his favorite type of destruction, and sometimes they paused to admire someone's handiwork or applaud his ingenuity. Hearing footsteps overhead, Jud rushed upstairs and met Dick, coming out of a room. Jud's face fell; Dick was holding the prettiest rod and reel he had ever looked at.

"Where'd you find it?"

"In a closet. Oh, brother!" He flexed the rod and regarded it with gentle adoration.

"I wish I'd seen it first. Which closet?"

Dick pointed with his head and Jud raced on. There were no more rods, but he did have one break: in the drawer of a bedside table he found a Colt automatic, the sweetest little job he had ever seen. (He had never handled a pistol before, but he was still certain it was the sweetest job in ten states.) He slipped it reverently into the pocket of his jacket and went slowly downstairs, trying to slouch like a movie gangster.

Art's face fell when he saw the rod and pistol. "And I'll bet there's not another thing in the whole damn house." He kicked the mutilated table in disgust, as if it had somehow been responsible for his deprivation. "Just for that, I'm going up and work over the old lady's room."

Jud looked uneasily at his watch. "It's after nine o'clock and the police patrol out here pretty regular. Hadn't we better scram?"

Art wanted to stay, but they outvoted him. Bennie considered taking the saw, then decided it was too hard to hide; Art gave one

♥ ♥ ♥ ♥ ♥ ♥ ♥ ♥ ♥

Valentine

By Elizabeth McFarland

Things that are greatest seem most small.
If riddles pall,
Then I will say that little things
Are greatly coveted by kings.
This love—as rich as queenly dower—
I offer you, like any flower.

♥ ♥ ♥ ♥ ♥ ♥ ♥ ♥ ♥

M'm m... have some!

IT'S THE ORIGINAL CROSSE & BLACKWELL

DATE AND NUT BREAD

WHETHER you have it for fancy parties or quick snacks . . . there's nothing quite like this nutty, golden-brown loaf packed with choice imported dates and cashew nuts. Yes . . . Crosse & Blackwell Date & Nut Bread is always fresh . . . always ready to serve . . . for desserts . . . for sandwiches with your favorite spread . . . or just as it comes out of the handy vacuum tin. At your local dealer's.

FREE RECIPE BOOK!
Send for tempting recipes for serving other famous C&B foods, to The Crosse & Blackwell Company, Dept. J-2, Baltimore 24, Md.

Other Famous Favorites from CROSSE & BLACKWELL
America's Finest Name in Foods

C&B Orange Marmalade
An unforgettable flavor. Made from the original, prized C&B formula—famous for centuries.

C&B Chocolate Nut Roll
Another delicious treat. Rich, chocolate flavored roll with cashew nuts. Just right for sandwiches or easy, tasty desserts.

C&B Beef Stew
Hearty, take-it-easy meal in a can . . . just heat and eat. Choice beef, succulent vegetables, in vitamin-rich gravy.

C&B Date Dessert
Just enough for two! Tender roll, made of dates, spices and selected ingredients. Economical . . . ready to serve. You'll like delicious C&B Fig Dessert, too.

Washes Clothes Whiter, Brighter, Quicker!

The BIG DOLLAR Value in Washers

Yes! You can wash more clothes clean in less time and with less effort in a Norge —a full nine pounds of sparkling-white or color-bright clothes in seven minutes!

Famous Norge triple washing-action—up, down, around—really gets rid of dirt. Over and over your laundry is swirled through cleansing, sudsy water in the giant Norge tub... It's this rapid washing motion—in a super-capacity tub —that really gets clothes cleaner, faster.

Norge washers give you everything . . . dependable service, economical operation, rugged construction, and a host of time-, work- and money-saving features. You get more for your money when you buy Norge!

© 1949; Norge Division, Borg-Warner Corporation
Detroit 26, Michigan
In Canada, Addison Industries, Ltd., Toronto, Ontario

*REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

See Norge before you buy

REFRIGERATORS • ELECTRIC RANGES • WATER COOLERS • WASHERS • HOME HEATERS

more disgusted swipe at a drapery and went out empty-handed.

The next night, a radio patrolman found the broken window and the devastation. He cursed softly and fluently and turned to his partner with a hopeless gesture.

"It's the brats in this neighborhood. We've got more juvenile delinquents and jail fodder in Jefferson Heights than in any slum in town."

His partner pushed back his cap and spat eloquently. "And try to prove it. We might get some good fingerprints out of this mess, but try to match 'em up to anybody."

"You try," the first patrolman said dryly. "I've got a family to support."

Jud's mother, who was a friend of Mrs. Amberson, heard the details at first hand when the Ambersons came back. She went to view the destruction and came home wide-eyed with horror.

"I can't imagine who would do a thing like that—or why," she told her husband. "It doesn't make sense."

Harry Denton looked at Jud, who was lying on his shoulders in a chair and swinging his legs over the arm while he read the comic strips. "George says you went out that night," he said uneasily. "Did you have anything to do with it?"

"Of course I didn't," Jud growled. "I was at Art's house and I came home by nine o'clock. Ask George. Or you can ask Art's mother."

"Of course he didn't have anything to do with it!" his mother said hotly, and glared at her husband. "I don't see how you can even ask him such a question."

Harry Denton kept on frowning at his son. "When I was your age, I usually heard about devilment by the grapevine, even if I wasn't in on it. What about it, son? Do you know who did do it?"

Jud tore his eyes from Dick Tracy. They were blue and innocent and slightly hurt. "No, sir. There's a sort of gang at school—they all live over in Swamptown and they like to brag about how tough they are—but I haven't heard 'em say anything about any house wrecking."

Sally Denton turned on her husband. "I wanted him to go to prep school this year, but you said it would do him good to associate with—with these toughs. I hope you're satisfied. He's going next year if I have to sell my dinner ring."

"And if they'll take him." He gave Jud a tired, meaningful look. "The scholastic requirements may be too high for him in a decent school." He retreated behind his newspaper.

"I can make it, all right," Jud said sullenly.

His father was not impressed. "Then you'd better get a move on."

If a man think well of you, make his thought true.
—ARABIC PROVERB.

Things happened to Jud in the next few weeks, both inside and out. He grew an inch but that was explainable and a source of satisfaction; it was the way he felt that confused and irritated him. Funny inside, and his parents bored him more than ever; the things they didn't know, he reflected sorrowfully, would fill a library. His mother kept on harping on the Amberson business—everybody harped on it, in fact—so Art decided that the gang had better lie low for a while. The newspapers wrote editorials; the chief of police issued a statement saying that the department had certain unverified suspicions, and if there was any further vandalism the consequences would be surprising and unpleasant no matter who was involved.

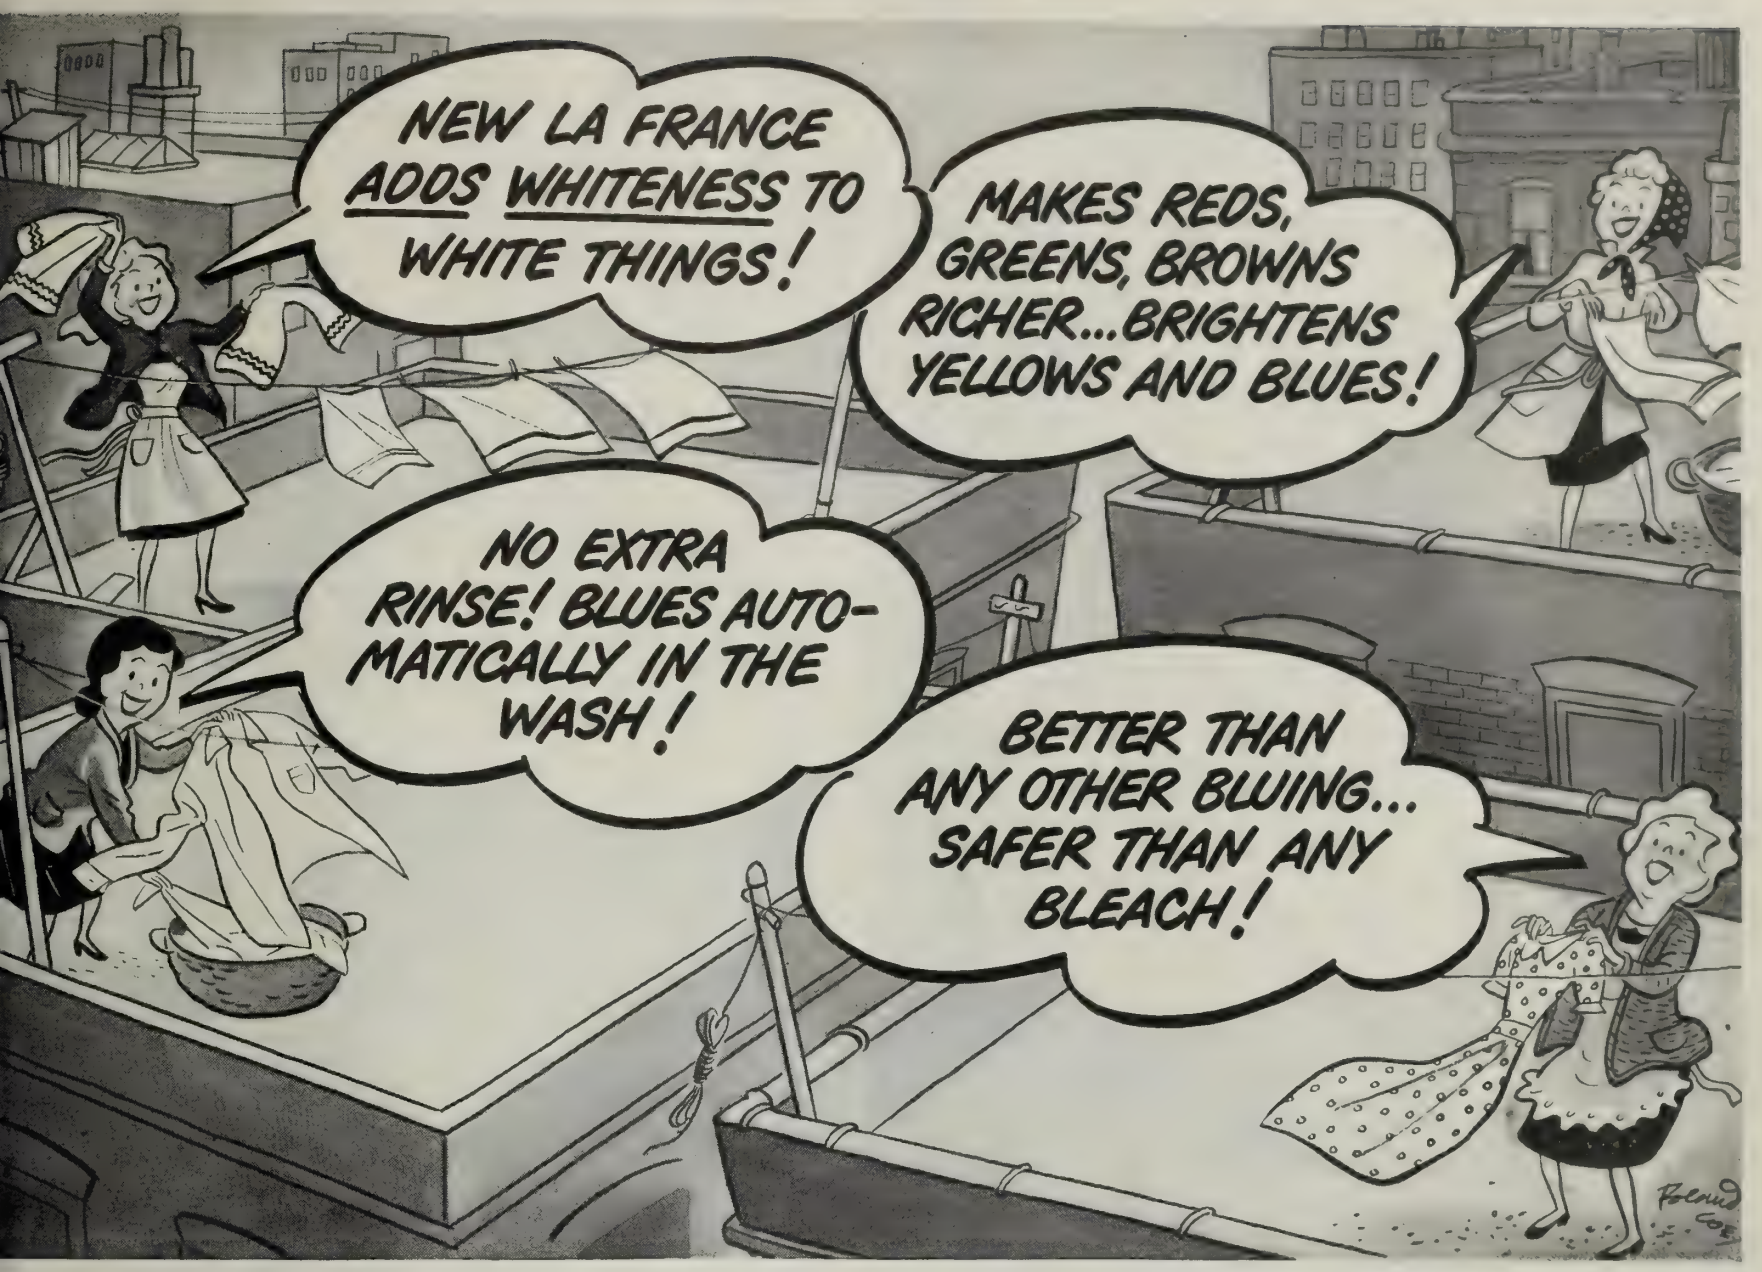
Jud kept the little Colt in a cabinet in his room, hidden behind a lot of kid junk that his mother never touched; and sometimes when she was away, he would take it out and caress it. He hadn't had a chance to shoot it—wasn't even certain he wanted to shoot it yet—he was satisfied that it existed, and was in his possession. He told Brick about it proudly, but when Brick suggested that they drive out in the country for a little target practice he stalled and made excuses.

March came, and the end of school was near enough to be believable. He got down to studying not because he cared about passing, but because he certainly didn't want to stay in town with his grandmother and miss out on going to the beach for a month.

There was a new girl in his home room—girl named Mimi Howard—who said that her father was a District Representative and had just been transferred to town. Jud noticed her at first because she was a new face to look at; later, because she was a girl and he was becoming aware of girls. Art and Dick had already discovered them and done a lot of talking about them, but until Mimi came Jud had always groaned or hooted.

She was small and delicately pretty, with big brown eyes and a lot of silky yellow hair, but there were ways in which she deviated from the norm. She was feminine and immaculately clean, for one thing, and instead of trying to look terrible the way most girls did, she wore pretty clothes and let herself be pretty. And she liked school; she even seemed to enjoy classes. He couldn't figure her, but he would fall into step with her sometimes on the way to classes and talk in a gruff, swaggering kind of way, mostly about himself.

She wasn't exactly comfortable to be with; she asked a lot of questions and spoke her thoughts too freely.



"Your hair certainly does look funny with that peroxide on the ends," she told him one day. "Why don't you cut it off to the natural part? It's too long for a boy, anyway."

(Continued on Page 192)

Back Views and Prices of Vogue Patterns on Pages 50 and 51.

Vogue Design No. 6674. "Easy-to-Make" one-piece dress; 12 to 20, 30 to 38. 60c.
Vogue Design No. 6676. Suit; 12 to 20, 30 to 38. 75c.
Vogue Design No. 6657. "Easy-to-Make" one-piece dress; 12 to 20, 30 to 38. 60c.
Vogue Design No. 6555. Waistcoat; 10 to 20, 28 to 38. 40c.
Vogue Design No. 6673. "Easy-to-Make" dickeys and stole. Sizes Small (32-34); Medium (36-38). 50c.
Vogue Design No. 6687. Blouse; 12 to 20, 30 to 42. 50c.
Vogue Design No. 6672. Coat; 12 to 20, 30 to 38. 60c.

LUMINESS — AMAZING NEW COMPOUND ADDS WHITENESS, BRIGHTNESS TO CLOTHES!

YES, LUMINESS, amazing new whitening compound now in La France Bluing Flakes, will actually add whiteness and brightness to your clothes!

Here's the amazing reason why: All white clothes are white and all colored clothes are bright . . . because they reflect light.

Luminess increases the amount of light clothes reflect...actually making white clothes WHITER and colored things BRIGHTER each and every time you wash!

What's more—La France isn't a regular bluing . . . it can't possibly streak or spot! And it isn't a bleach either . . . so it can't weaken or harm any fabric.

You can wash fast-color and white things in the same washer load or tubful. New La France with Luminess will whiten the white things and brighten the colored things at the same time.

Try new La France with Luminess next time you wash! See the wonderful, wonderful difference La France makes!

The price is amazingly low...all it costs is two to three cents a week.

LA FRANCE BLUING FLAKES

with whitening—brightening Luminess!

A PRODUCT OF GENERAL FOODS

"SUCH AN EASY WAY TO GET BETTER CAKES— Spry with Cake-Improver!" SAYS AUNT JENNY

"JUST picture yourself bringing in a cake like this, drinking in the compliments! And you can make one as easy as can be. Just follow this recipe, using Spry and Spry's One-Bowl Method. There's a special Cake-Improver ingredient in Spry that no other type shortening has! It makes cakes lighter, richer-tasting, better in every way. Use Spry for all cakes and pastry. Fry with Spry for crisp, delicate-tasting, digestible foods."

TRY MY LUSCIOUS VALENTINE CAKE

2 cups sifted cake flour
1¼ cups sugar
3½ teaspoons baking powder (or 5 teaspoons tartrate baking powder)
1 teaspoon salt
½ cup Spry
1 cup less 2 tablespoons milk
1½ teaspoons vanilla
3 egg whites, unbeaten

Sift flour, sugar, baking powder and salt into mixing bowl, all at the same time . . . Drop in Spry. (No need to cream it first. Pure all-vegetable Spry doesn't have to be kept in the refrigerator, so it never gets stiff and hard but is always creamy-soft and ready for instant mixing.) . . . Add ⅔ of milk, then vanilla, and beat 200 strokes (2 minutes by hand or on mixer at low speed). Scrape bowl and spoon or beater . . . Add egg whites and remaining milk and beat 200 strokes (2 minutes by hand or on mixer at low speed). Bake in 2 deep 8-inch Spry-coated layer pans in moderate oven (360° F.) 25–30 minutes. Spread Lollypop Frosting between layers and on top and sides of cake. Sprinkle crushed red candy (cherry-flavored lollypops, candy sticks, etc.) generously on sides, bringing to top of cake. Across top print "Love Me True" with additional crushed red candy.

Lollypop Frosting—Put 2 egg whites, unbeaten, 1½ cups sugar, 5 tablespoons cold water, 1 teaspoon light corn sirup and ⅛ teaspoon salt in top of double boiler and mix thoroughly. Place over rapidly boiling water and beat constantly with a rotary egg beater until mixture will hold a peak (about 7 minutes). Remove from hot water, add 1 teaspoon vanilla and beat until cool and thick enough to spread. Spread frosting between layers and on top and sides of cake. Decorate with red cherry-flavored lollypops, crushed. Makes enough frosting to cover top and sides of two 8-inch layers.

Save Money! Get Spry in economical 3 lb. can

SPRY WITH CAKE-IMPROVER

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

Another fine Lever Product

(Continued from Page 190)

And the next Saturday—an adolescent Samson—he went to the barbershop and came away with a crew haircut. Art and Dick kidded him without mercy, but he found a surprising satisfaction in sharing Mimi's defiance of the current fashions.

The next week, he invited Mimi to have a drink at The Joint after school, thereby making his implicit declaration of submission. Art and Bennie, who were there when he ushered her through the door, gave them a casual, expressionless greeting; but they drifted carelessly to Jud's booth a few minutes later and sat down uninvited.

Mimi didn't giggle and squirm like most girls; she ate her fudge sundae and took in everything and everybody. "That boy's drinking beer, isn't he?" she said in surprise.

Jud looked around and saw Brick nursing a bottle of ale. "Yeah." He jerked his chin upward in greeting and Brick jerked his in return. In a few minutes, Jud thought proudly, Brick would probably drift over to join the crowd in the booth. He turned back to Mimi. "You rather have beer?"

"Goodness, no!" She wrinkled her nose. "My father made me drink a bottle one time when I kept worrying him. Said it would cure me—and it did. Jeepers, was I ever sick!" She scraped remnants of fudge sauce from the dish before her. "I just thought it was against the law for boys to buy it."

"It is." Jud wasn't sure whether he ought to feel proud or ashamed.

"Oh." Her brown eyes were level and searching and he looked uncomfortably away. She sat quiet for a minute, and Brick drifted over just as Jud had guessed he would.

"Hi, Jud."

"Hi, Brick." Jud introduced him to Mimi, because that was what he had come for. Even if she was two whole years younger, she was pretty enough to interest even Brick.

"Wanta take a ride?" The question was ostensibly meant for Jud, but it was Mimi that Brick was looking at.

Jud's eyes consulted her. He wanted to go, but on the other hand, sixteen and a half—plus a convertible—might be irresistible to her. "How about it?"

She made a last scrape at the fudge sauce. "Thanks a lot, but I better get on home. My mother said they'd take me to the early show tonight if I got my lessons before supper."

Brick raised an eloquent eyebrow and drifted away. Jud felt hot and unhappy; he was glad to see that somebody could take Brick down a notch, but he didn't want Mimi to look like any drip. Bragging about having to study, and all that.

"He's got a swell convertible," Jud said.

She laughed. "Oh. A four-wheel personality. Well, I want to see that picture at the Empire and I can't do both." She got up purposefully. "Thanks a lot for the sundae, Jud."

But the next time he invited her to The Joint she gave him the sweet, level look. "I—I don't much like that place, Jud. I told my mother about the beer, and she said if she was me she'd stay away from there. Tha they might raid it someday, and I'd feel aw fully silly in police court."

He was voiceless with surprise. "I told m mother. . . . She said if she was me." . . . Wha kind of deal was this, anyway? What kind girl was Mimi?

"Well," he conceded handsomely, "w don't have to go there. We can go some where else."

"Then I'd love to," she said quickly.

Love came to Jud with a bittersweet re luctance. Mimi was the prettiest and th smartest girl in the class, but she was . . different. The fact that she lived in a littl house and that her mother only had a clean ing woman was entirely unimportant: it wa her independence that worried him. If sh didn't like a thing, she said so; if she didn want to do something that was currentl fashionable, she didn't do it. After the gan found out how she was, they rode him har and pretended to scorn her, so that he live in a turmoil of conflicting desires and loya ties.

April Fools' came, and Jud joined briefl and halfheartedly in the celebration. The turned in half a dozen false alarms an shrieked uproariously when the fire truc wailed past their observation posts; the stole a few bracelets from radiator caps an gave them to their girls. Jud gave his loot Art because he knew that Mimi would n only refuse it, but would give him fits f having acquired it. Bennie, who had had birthday in March, had a new air rifle, they shot out street lights until it was time report home and go to bed. The newspap editorials, which Jud read in secret, gave hi little satisfaction: most of the disorder ha occurred in Jefferson Heights, the editoria said, and there was talk of a teen-age curfe

Mimi's frank opinion, expressed over chocolate soda, made him squirm. "M father says those boys ought to have the da lights licked out of them," she said flatl "Personally, I think it was the most childis thing I ever heard of, and I certainl would hate for a friend of mine to act lik that."

He bowed his face over a glass. "I thin it's childish too." Hearing the gruff word he discovered that he meant them. Love ha severed his allegiance to the gang.

Art and Dick weren't in love and the didn't know about the sea change in hin When the Sheridans went to California fo two weeks in May, Art knew all about it an called a conclave in his headquarters.

"We been lying low for three months," h said earnestly. "Everybody thinks we' scared off. Dick, you case the place."

Jud took a deep breath. "We're not gon do it. It's kid stuff and it costs folks a lot money and trouble."

Three faces swiveled toward him in asto ishment and he felt himself getting red.

"Well, blow me down," Art said softl "Preacher Denton's ratting on us." I smirked at Dick and Bennie. "Ain't lur

". . . the water in the percolator. Then you take your coffee, regular grind . . ."

Queen of hearts

by Trifari

The giver holds the winning hand when he bids for romance with this most charming and sentimental of Valentine's Day Gifts.

$7.50*

The necklace—a chain of golden hearts, each crowned with a make-believe diamond. The graceful bracelet repeats the same design.

$4.00*

And to make the story complete, a pair of matching earrings.

$3.00*

A royal flush in hearts, worthy of your "Queen of Hearts"—and so typical of that royal house of—

Jewels by TRIFARI

*design patent Pending

*Tax Extra

grand? I guess we'll have to take in somebody else; plenty of 'em wanting to come in anyhow."

Jud sat up, his face working. "If you wreck the Sheridan house, I'll tell the police who did it."

"You can't," Bennie reminded him. "If they got us for one job they might as well get us for two, and we'll tell 'em you were at the Ambersons' too. Besides, our fathers aren't going to let any flatfoot put us in jail. We're under age."

"Then I'll call 'em ahead of time without letting 'em know who I am, and tell 'em to watch it. Then if you tell on me, you'll be telling on yourselves when you don't have to."

He wasn't sure of his argument or his reasoning, but it was the best he could think of. He sat there trembling until their uncertain faces and their hesitation told him that he had scared them, then he stumbled out of the playroom and ran home, sobbing dryly. He even hated Mimi, for a few minutes, because she had mixed him up inside; he hated the gang for forcing him to choose and to accept a self-imposed exile; he hated everything.

His mother and father were out. He wanted them desperately, even if he couldn't explain his misery; or at least, he wanted somebody. The need for confession and absolution was strong in him, but remembering his mother's shocked face and her angry repudiation of his father's questions about the Amberson affair, he knew he couldn't ever tell her. It would amount to admitting that he was the kind of boy she didn't even want him to associate with. She was a dope and she didn't know the score on anything, but in his wretchedness he missed her and wanted her anyway.

When his heart had slowed down and he had fortified his spirit with a banana, a glass of milk and half a lemon pie, he went to his parents' room. He flopped on the bed with his feet propped on the headboard, cradled the phone in his shoulder, and dialed Mimi's number. She answered the phone herself, and the sound of her voice made his skin tingle.

"What you doing?" he asked carelessly.

"Playing three-handed gin with mother and dad."

"Then go on back and play." Envy made him rude.

"We'd just finished a game. They like to play two-handed anyhow."

He began to feel better after a few minutes of this, even a little happier. He plaited his legs and hitched his feet higher on the headboard. "What'd you make on that history test?"

"A. What did you make?"

"A-minus," he confessed. A few months ago, an A of any sort would have seemed incredible and even shameful. "Bet I beat you on the math test next week."

"I guess you will." He could feel rather than hear her sigh. "I'm not so hot in math."

His bruised ego felt better. "Girls aren't supposed to be." He cleared his throat and lowered his voice. "I have to go to the beach right after school's out. You gonna miss me?"

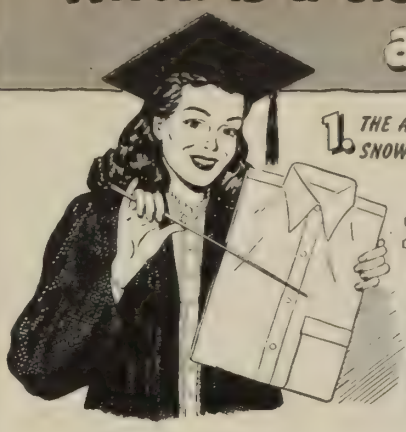
"Of course I'll miss you."

"How about writing me a letter?"

There was a pause. "Well . . . if you write me first."

"It's a deal."

When he hung up, thirty minutes later, he was feeling swell again—except when he thought of the gang and their contempt.



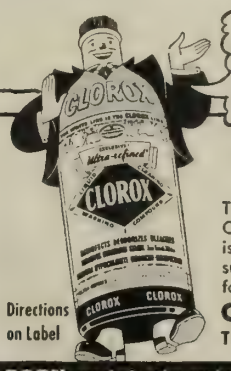
After that night, they called him Preacher in a sneering voice every time they spoke to him. And they manufactured opportunities to speak, just so they could call him Preacher. He brooded and suffered, and growled when anybody spoke to him.

His parents exchanged significant, resigned glances. "We'll have to endure it," his father told his mother. "I wish kids could be put in cold storage until they get past this stage, but I was probably the same way."

When school ended he had passed all his studies. Passed them grimly, trying to assert his masculine superiority over Mimi. And the next week he left for the beach.

He had always loved the beach, and this summer he would have loved it more than ever if he could have invited Mimi to go

When is a clean shirt not a clean shirt?



1. THE ANSWER IS: WHEN IT ISN'T SNOWY-WHITE AND SANITARY, TOO.

2. HOUSEWIVES KNOW THAT ORDINARY WASHING FREQUENTLY LEAVES A GRAYISH FILM ON SHIRTS. AND, MICROSCOPES REVEAL GERMS OFTEN SURVIVE THE BEST SUDSING.

3. BUT...LAUNDERING WITH CLOROX MAKES SHIRTS AND OTHER WHITE COTTONS AND LINENS SNOWY-WHITE (BRIGHTENS FAST COLORS). AND BECAUSE CLOROX WHITENS WITHOUT HARD RUBBING IT CONSERVES FABRICS...SAVES YOU MONEY. CLOROX HAS GERM-KILLING POWER, TOO! IT MAKES LAUNDRY FRESH, SANITARY...PROVIDES AN ADDED SAFEGUARD TO FAMILY HEALTH!

Directions on Label

CLOROX...FIRST WITH AMERICA'S HOUSEWIVES BECAUSE IT OFFERS BOTH:

GENTLER Bleaching Action... Longer Life for Linens!

There's no gentler bleach than Clorox in laundering. For Clorox is free from caustic and other harsh substances... made by an exclusive formula protected by U. S. patent!

GREATER Disinfecting Efficiency ...Added Health Protection!

Because Clorox is caustic-free, it works faster in killing germs... does a better job of disinfecting. Give your family the extra health protection of a Clorox-clean home!

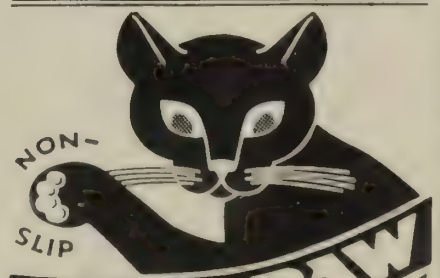
CLOROX BLEACHES • REMOVES STAINS • DEODORIZES • DISINFECTS

There's only one CLOROX... it's always uniform... always dependable!

BOON, made by the makers of Clorox, is another "first aid" to easy housecleaning. It wipes away dirt and grease quickly, easily from washable surfaces. Cleaning with BOON is simplicity itself!

KNITTING YARNS

Finest Quality Yarns at Low Prices



Send 10¢ for Sample Folder to cover mailing cost

SUNRAY YARN HOUSE, Dept. L2
349 Grand St., New York 2, N. Y.

LIKE TO BOWL?

Write us for full particulars on how you can earn a nationally advertised Mineralite Bowling Ball without cost. Send a postal today to

CURTIS CIRCULATION COMPANY
833 Independence Square, Phila. 5, Pa.

CAT'S PAW

Finest Rubber Heels & Soles!

WOMEN! EARN MONEY SHOWING

FREE SAMPLE STOCKING and Amazing Hi Service!

Mail coupon . . . ask for free outfit with sample stocking. Enjoy taking orders for Yours-Truly Nylon Hosiery. Sensational Individual Customer Fit Service to fit every type of leg: short, long, extra long, slim, stout, average. Earn money of your own. No experience needed. Mail coupon. Send letter about yourself.

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

AMERICAN HOSIERY MILLS
Dept. M-156, Indianapolis 7, Ind.

American Hosiery Mills, Dept. M-156, Indianapolis 7, Ind.
Send me FREE, Complete Selling Outfit with FREE Sample Yours-Truly Nylon Hosiery. Letter about myself enclosed.

NAME.....
ADDRESS.....
CITY..... STATE .....

Stardust

Life-Insured Slips GUARANTEED FOR 1 YEAR

Enchanting

Here's the slip that prevents twisting, sagging or riding up . . . thanks to its 4 gore feature. Rich acetate rayon crepe, double bodice top.

NOW only $1.98

FAME AND FORTUNE CAN BE YOURS...

Pictured is lovely Cindy Lou Bayes, last Stardust Beauty Contest winner. Enter our 1949 contest now. YOU may be the lucky winner of $500 first prize plus a modeling and television career under Harry Conover management, or 27 other awards! Just send recent non-returnable photo with height, weight, bust, waist and hip measurements before May 1, 1949. Decisions of famous beauty judges are final. Mail entry to P. O. Box 65, Murray Hill Station, New York.

STARDUST, INC. Empire State Bldg., N.Y. 1

LOOK FOR GENUINE Stardust SLIPS, UNGIES, GIRDLES, GARTER-BELTS, BRAS & BLOUSES

SMILES COME EASIER WITH

Brighter Breakfasts!

SWIFT'S PREMIUM BACON FOR BREAKFAST starts the day right. It's rich in needed energy value—with a come-on flavor the sleepiest appetite can't resist. Have you tasted it? That zesty sweet smoke taste—plus quality that never varies—has made Swift's Premium far and away America's best-liked bacon.

COOK IT RIGHT! Place Swift's Premium Bacon in cold frying pan. Do not overcrowd. Cook slowly; turn often. Drain on absorbent paper. For crisp bacon, pour off fat as it collects.

Swift's Premium

The Bacon with the sweet smoke taste!

along even for a week. He made the suggestion diffidently to his mother, and as usual she let him down.

"That little girl you're always talking to on the phone?"

"Yeah."

She went on sorting their beach clothes. "But Jud, I don't even know her mother and father. If we invited anybody, there are a dozen of my own friends' daughters I'd have to ask first. And George has refused to go this year, so we won't have any help but Louella. I'm worn out," she said plaintively. "I'm looking forward to a real rest."

He scuffed his feet on the rug and wanted to bark at her, Yeah, and you'll go to cocktail parties every day, and all that boloney. Worse than at home.... Last summer he would have said it, but he was nearly fifteen now, and he was discovering subterfuge and diplomacy. If he pestered her too much she might start making cracks about Mimi: "Jud, why couldn't you pick somebody we at least know?" And he couldn't take that; he didn't want Mimi criticized even by indirection, and for something she couldn't help.

Sally Denton threw aside a pair of trunks to be mended. "Besides, honey, there are always a lot of darling girls already down there. You'll have a wonderful time."

"Okay, skip it," he growled, and walked away.

He did have a pretty good time, because he loved the sand and sun and water, and because he could run around with a crowd from other places, who didn't know about his apostasy and exile. But none of the girls could touch Mimi and his love never wavered. He wrote to her several times—each awkward, inarticulate letter a duplicate of the preceding one—and she answered with the same kind of letters. He made a collection of small, delicate shells for her, wondering if you could maybe string them into a necklace; and spent a week's allowance on a pink satin pillow with flowers and "Souvenir of Pebble Beach" painted on it. The pink satin and the flowers sort of reminded him of Mimi. And when the month had ended he turned his face eagerly toward home.

> A proverb is a short sentence based on long experience.
>
> —CERVANTES
> Don Quixote.

When they got to the house that afternoon his father drove around to the back, because it was easier to carry all their junk in that way. Jud saw it then: a missing pane in one of the ground-floor windows. His heart quit for a second; the rising wave of fury brought sweat to his upper lip. You bastards, he cried silently; you lousy, stinking bastards. Words he hadn't even used since Mimi expressed her opinion of them. He couldn't speak; he had to let his parents find it out for themselves.

His mother, sweeping the house with an anxious, housewife's eye, saw it first. "Harry! Somebody's broken in the house." Her voice died in a wail as she plunged out of the car with his father right behind her, and Jud made his feet take him after them.

Downstairs, the house looked all right. Sally raced from room to room, making wordless, frantic sounds, then raced for the stairs with her husband right behind her once more. Jud was a dragging third.

He had to go and look at his room, much as he wanted to escape. He had to look at it and learn how it felt when it was your possessions that had been violated. The door was open and he stepped over the threshold and stopped.

They had done a good job, all right. His rug—with the compass in the middle—was in shreds, his collection of airplanes was a pile of splinters, his collection of bird eggs had been ground to powder. Felt protruded from gaping holes in his mattress, torn pages from his books were scattered everywhere.

He stumbled forward and threw himself face down on the mutilated bed and cried in bitterness and despair. Having investigated their own domain, his father and mother found him there; through his sobs he heard his mother's cry and his father's profanity.

"Jud!" His father's hand gripped one heaving shoulder. "Who did this? And why just your room? You're bound to know, son. Who was it?"

He grew very still, but his mind raced. If he told, his father would ask next, "How do you know?" And then the rest would come out. His father wasn't dumb the way his mother was—maybe because he had been a boy himself. He would be sure to find out about the Amberson house and then he would insist on paying his share to the insurance company. And everybody in town—including Mimi—would know what Jud Denton had done.

Six months ago it wouldn't have mattered so much. In those days he would have taken his medicine and swaggered it out, the way the others would do now if they were caught. He might even have felt a little proud of himself. But Mimi wouldn't; and being the kind they were, Mimi's mother and father wouldn't even let her speak to him again. They had been smart, all right: if they had touched anything in the rest of the house he would have had to tell. Since he was the only victim—in their eyes, anyhow—they were gambling on his silence.

His father's hand tightened and turned him over, baring his ravaged face. "Jud, who did it?"

He met the angry, searching eyes as squarely as he could. "I don't know."

"Of course you know. What had you done to make them this mad?"

"Nothing." His full mouth, that had lately been sweeter and more boyish, was sullen and bitter.

His father almost lifted him off the bed. "Come into my room," he ordered. "I can't think straight in all this mess."

His mother protested tearfully, "He's all to pieces. Please don't worry the poor child right now."

Harry Denton just looked at her and gripped Jud's arm. "Come on, son. I've got to find out the truth."

Jud's feet lagged behind his mind as he went. There was a way out—or part of a way. Half truth and half lie. He decided to take it; decided he had to take it, because it was the best he could do.

"All right," his father said when they were seated, "who was it?"

Jud looked at the floor. "I won't tell you."

Remembering the rigorous code of his boyhood, Harry Denton tabled the question. "Then tell me why. What they had against you."

"I found out they were planning on wrecking the Sheridans' house and I said I'd call the police and tell 'em to watch it good. They laid off, but they got mad."

Behind him he heard his mother gasp. "Boys you know? Friends of ours?"

Jud gave her a weary glance. The question was too dopey to rate an answer.

"They ought to be punished, son," his father went on. "Private property is still sacred—thank God. If these boys don't find it out now, they may land in the penitentiary. Actually, you'll be doing them a favor."

Jud's eyes stung. "No," he said flatly. "I'm not gonna be the one to tell. They're even with me now and this'll finish it. If it doesn't, I promise I'll tell you."

Because he had them now. His broken possessions were smeared with their prints and he meant to save enough scraps. And he meant to sound the warning. If they tried to ride him any more, if another house was even touched, he was ready to go down with all his guns firing. That was the only way it could be.

His mother gasped again. "Honestly, Harry, it's the most unbelievable thing I ever heard. I don't know what some parents are thinking of."

Harry Denton flicked a tired look at her and turned back to Jud. "That's not all, is it? There's more to it than that."

Jud's mouth was set, but he felt a reluctant pride in his father's astuteness. "It's all I'm gonna tell unless something else happens."

His father gave him a long, steady look. "Is it the truth—the part you've told me?"

Yes, now you can

bake real yeast coffee cake*

with

PY-O-MY Coffee Cake Mix

JUST ADD WATER

One package (dry yeast is included) makes TWO delicious 9-inch cakes.

*Or use this same wonderful mix for sweet rolls, pecan rolls, twists.

At leading chain and independent grocers

Perfect results too, from: PY-O-MY Brownie Mix, Piecrust Mix, Cookie Mix, Hot Roll Mix, Cake Frosting & Fudge Mix.

CHEN ART FOODS, INC., 226 W. Ontario St., Chicago

KNITTING WOOL

Send for 250 FREE Samples

Prompt Mail Service

onial Yarn House, 1231-R Cherry St., Phila. 7, Pa.

Make Money Fast

SPARE HOURS BRING $$$

Sell EVERYDAY CARDS

Easy earnings showing smart Everyday Greeting Cards to friends, others. Fast-selling 14-card $1 Assortments of Birthday, Get-Well, and other cards pay you up to 50c profit. Other assortments, retail 60c up. Stationery, Gift Wrappings. Send for a Sample Box on Approval. ACT NOW!

PHILLIPS CARD COMPANY

519 HUNT STREET NEWTON, MASS.

..I'M KIND TO BUSY HANDS!

"I'm CHORE GIRL—the original knitted copper pot cleaner. I don't rust... splinter...get in your fingers. BUT, I do clean messy, crusty pots and pans in a jiffy! I'm 10¢ at dealers everywhere."

CHORE GIRL

Metal Textile Corp. Roselle 12, N. J.

In Canada, Hamilton, Ont.

"GOLDEN FLEECE is back. If your dealer says 'NO,' his name and 12¢ for one till I see him." C. G.

Save work and time in housecleaning . . . end messy, dangerous oily rags. Use KVP Dusting Paper. Picks up dust and polishes in one clean, easy sweep. Throw away after use. Put KVP Dusting Paper on your shopping list.

He could look at his father when he answered that question. He had a funny feeling that it was the first time he and his father had ever really seen each other; the first time they had ever really talked, even though the important words were not being spoken aloud.

"Yes, sir. It's the truth."

"If I didn't have this hunch, I'd keep after you. But I guess it's better to let it ride." He sighed and rubbed a hand over his eyes and Jud knew he was thinking of his wife; protecting her innocence. "You'd better move into the front guest room till this mess is cleaned up. I'm sorry about all your things."

Jud was too. The thought of his ravished treasures made his chin quiver and his eyes burn. "It's all right, I guess," he said huskily. "Just a lot of kid junk, but I'm sorry about the furniture." He stood up. "Can I have the key to the toolhouse, dad? I want to get my bicycle."

"Going somewhere already?" His father smiled a little.

"Yes, sir. I brought Mimi some shells and things." He made himself say her name and it tasted sweet and clean in his mouth.

His father found the key and passed it over. "Give her my love," he said, not being funny at all. "I'd like to meet her; why don't you ask her to eat dinner with us uptown tonight? Your mother can phone her mother and make it official."

"Gee! Could I?" His eyes sparkled and his voice cracked with his happiness.

"Sure." Harry Denton did grin then. "She must be quite a gal."

Jud grinned back, man to man. "Brother, you ain't kiddin'." He clattered down the stairs, whistling.

MEET A STEELWORKER'S FAMILY

(Continued from Page 138)

state compensation. Art came out of this accident with no physical scars, but a total wreck so far as finances were concerned. His War Bonds and all his savings were eaten up by hospital and living expenses, and the Crouses have never been able to catch up since. Ask Anne what their savings plan is today, and she answers, "There isn't any. Period!"

Art's pay check comes to approximately $138 every two weeks. Out of this comes $1.38 for social security, plus $2 each month for union dues, $2.91 a month for their new group hospitalization plan, and 89 cents for his "Red Feather" Community Chest contribution. The Crouses pay $43 rent a month for their Government-owned house, plus $2.45 every three months for utilities. Their telephone bill (unlimited service is a "must") is $5.18 a month, with long-distance calls extra. Life insurance costs them $2.70 a week—every member of the family has at least a $400 policy, and Art carries $4500. Art pays no income tax because of his large number of exemptions, so his only tax bill is about $10 a year for schools.

The Crouses make no attempt to figure what they spend on such major expenses as food and clothing. Any kind of budget, they say, would be useless in these days of high and higher prices. "We get enough to eat," says Art. "And when one of the kids needs shoes or something, I can usually raise the money. If I can't, we wait a while." One thing is sure—the Crouses may go without meat for five or six days every week, but they get plenty of nourishment from the meals which Anne cooks up in her big three-gallon pots (see page 144). Art swears stoutly that a dish of her vegetable soup is as good as a steak any time.

On most expenses except groceries, the Crouses operate on a "pay to pay" schedule. That is, the milkman and the breadman and the man who runs the corner gasoline station all carry Art on their books from one payday to another. Barbering is cheap—a friend of Art's comes to the house and cuts six heads of masculine hair every two weeks for a dollar! Most of their furniture was inherited cook chuck roast tender as rib!

Club Aluminum

HAMMERCRAFT WATERLESS COOKWARE

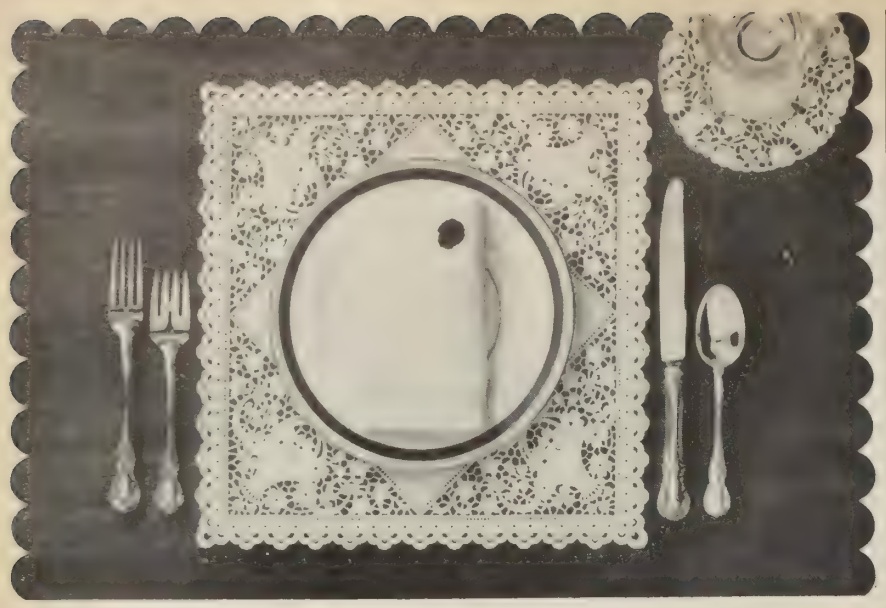
Yes, you can . . . and without adding a drop of water, either. In fact, that's one of the secrets of Club Aluminum's juicy, tender way with meat. The only moisture needed is supplied by the roast itself. Cooks in its own rich juices, over low heat. Wonderful! And what gravy!

What makes Club Aluminum perform "waterless" wonders on top of the stove like this? You'll find the answer below . . .

As you can see from this diagram, Club Aluminum cookware doesn't need any water to cook fresh foods uniformly. So, precious vitamins and minerals aren't poured down the drain. Fresh vegetables, fruits, meats cook in their own natural juices, flavor and reflavor themselves instead of the water. It's "Full-Flavor" cooking!

A. Moisture-sealed lid holds heat in—bastes juices back into food

B. Thick, molded aluminum walls spread heat evenly



Shown here is Club's 4½-qt. Dutch oven. Other Club Aluminum pieces now available include the 6- and 10-qt. Dutch ovens and assorted sizes of covered saucepans, open fry pans, chicken fryers, oval roasters, 10-in. handled griddle, coffee makers, handled rack. Also, Club glass coffee makers, Club Coffee Dispenser, Club Pot 'n' Pan Pads and Club Hot Dish Pads.

When you cook the Club Aluminum way, foods taste better—and they're better for you. Besides, you save money doing it. This is the Club Aluminum that was once sold through home demonstrations at about double today's prices. Full 18-piece line now available at your dealer. Ideal for gifts. Every piece has Club's hammered "jewelry-store" finish. You'll love 'em all.

CLUB ALUMINUM PRODUCTS CO.

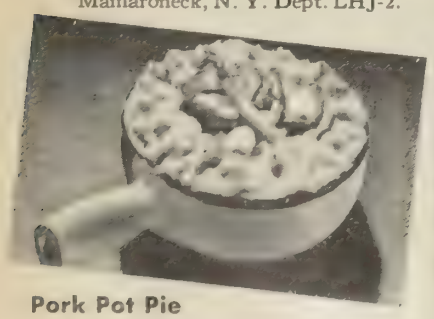
Chicago 14, Illinois

Tune in "Club Time," ABC network, Tuesday mornings, and hear favorite hymns of famous people.

How to give every meal . . . more appeal!

Give every meal an inviting look with crisp, white, lace paper Roylie place mats. Use matching Roylies under glasses, under salads, on dessert plates, etc. Beautiful as real linen—seeing is believing. They cost less than the mere laundering of linens. Handsomer than plastics. More convenient and economical too! Use Roylies for every meal. Rounds, squares, oblongs—many sizes and patterns, from 5" round to 10" x 15". At 5-and-10's, naborhood, dept. stores.

ROYLIES
Lace Paper Doylies



Trade Mark "Roylies" Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.
Royal Lace Paper Works, (Inc.), Brooklyn 1, N. Y.

EXTRA PAY DAY can be yours each week. Thousands of men and women earn up to $1.50 an hour by accepting subscriptions to Curtis publications and other popular publications. Write to CURTIS CIRCULATION COMPANY, 831 Independence Square, Phila. 5, Penna.

make a tempting treat with lower cost meat

Wonderful Flavor—flavor that makes economy dishes family favorites—that's what you get when you add Herb-Ox Bouillon and Chicken Cubes. Use them for soup stock and gravy base, too! For a menu book with delicious special occasion recipes, write The Pure Food Co., Inc., Mamaroneck, N. Y. Dept. LHJ-2.

Pork Pot Pie

Cut 1 lb. boneless pork shoulder in 1" cubes. Brown in drippings. Add 2 c. Herb-Ox Bouillon, 1 bay leaf, dash of pepper. Simmer 1 hour or till meat is tender. Thicken gravy. Add 1 c. cooked carrots, 1 c. cooked celery, 8 small, cooked onions. Pour into casserole and top with whipped sweet potatoes (or whole). Brown in oven 15 minutes.

Herb-Ox
BOUILLON CUBES

PROBLEM CHILD

Little Johnny's mother had been trying to curb his excessive use of slang.

So the first morning she served Grape-Nuts Wheat-Meal for breakfast, she corrected him when he exclaimed, "Gee Mom, this hot cereal is the berries. It's tops! It's super-swell eating, but definitely!"

"No, John, you mean it is good, or excellent, or delicious."

"How about okey-doke?" he asked.

"No, Son, you must learn to speak more precisely and accurately."

Johnny thought a moment. "All right, Mom—Grape-Nuts Wheat-Meal is hot stuff. Let's see you make something of that!" from Anne's grandparents, and any additions are strictly on the installment plan. The latest example was a secondhand (but very new-looking) console radio which Art bought for $10 down and $5 a month, until $79 is paid.

(Advertisement)

Before the war the Crouses lived almost next door to the steel mill, in the town of Homestead itself. But in 1942 the U.S. Government tore down their home and more than 1000 others to make way for a huge new building which is now Open Hearth No. 5. Most of the displaced families were moved to new homes in the Glen Hazel Heights Defense Housing Project, on a hilltop about two miles away. That is where the Crouses live today, in a little green row house which is perched high up on a terrace, with two long flights of steps to the street. They are cut off on both sides by their neighbors, but there is room in front for sandlot baseball, and Anne even manages to grow several kinds of summer flowers in her so-called back yard, which measures about six feet by five.

Their home has none of the grime and dinginess which are traditionally associated with steel towns. Crisp percale curtains hang at the windows; the rugs and upholstery are clean and colorful; and the living room is gay with little shaded lamps and glass and china knickknacks. They have a real space problem, however. There are just six rooms, one bathroom, one (back-door) closet which is big enough to hold the washing machine and a few other utensils—and that is all. No garage, no cellar, and no workshop for Art, who does all his own electrical, plumbing, carpentry and automobile repairs.

Outsiders find it hard to understand how, with only three tiny second-floor bedrooms, the nine Crouses ever manage to get to sleep at all. But Anne makes it sound easy:

"Art and I have the back bedroom," she explains, "and Janie and Doll sleep together in the one in front. Young Arthur and Jerome use the double bed in the middle room, and Kenny sleeps on the cot in there. That leaves Gerald and Tubby, and they sleep downstairs on the day bed in the parlor, along with Dickie, the canary bird."

With so little room to live in, neatness is not just a virtue in the Crouse household—it is a downright necessity. Every member of the family, down to little Janie, helps make his or her bed the first thing in the morning. And Anne has worked out an almost infallible system for keeping clothes, toys and other belongings in their proper places.

"The first time one of them leaves something on a chair or the middle of the floor, I tell them to pick it up," she says. "The second time I just open the door and throw it out on the doorstep. The third time—if there is a third time—it goes out the second-story window. After that, there isn't any fourth time."

Neighbors who have seen Janie's overcoat or Tubby's schoolbooks come flying out the window into a snowbank have been moved to investigate this system, and have sometimes adopted it for themselves.

The Crouses' combination kitchen-and-dining-room is so small that the family eats in two shifts: Art and Anne and the three smaller children first, followed by the four teen-agers. Dirty dishes are disposed of immediately: as soon as the first shift is finished the rinsing and washing begin; the older children take care of their own, and the pots and pans take only a few minut afterward. Anne simply doesn't have ar room to let anything stand around, even she wanted to.

With seven growing youngsters to fe and clothe and supply with cash for movi and footballs and schoolbooks—and with pay check which even in these inflated tim averages about 63 take-home dollars p week—one might expect the Crouses to considerable brooding about the high cost living. But they simply aren't the broodi type. And besides, the present seems rath comfortable to them, when compared wi the fairly recent past.

Not so many years ago, at the bottom the depression, when they already had tw babies and another on the way, the only jo Art could find was part-time truck drivin Some weeks he earned as much as $12, bu usually it was $6 or $7. At that time 55 p cent of the population of Pittsburgh was r ceiving some form of public relief, and th Crouses were among them. When Art earnings fell below $10 a week, "the welfare gave him enough to make up that figur Which wasn't enough, of course, so eve day that his tru didn't run A tramped the stree looking for odd jo Some days he wou walk 25 miles a come back with few quarters, or crumpled dollar bi

"But he alwa brought home som thing," says Ann "And in those da you could manage meal for thirty-fi cents."

Probably the lo point came one co winter mornin when little Dolor refused to go o and play becau she had no mitten Art, looking ve grim, started o right after an ear breakfast, an didn't get back t after dark. That da he earned 75 cen by helping a man start his stalled autom bile, 50 cents more by unloading coal, a a quarter by chopping some wood. H tossed the money on the kitchen table a said, "Take fifty cents for groceries—and dollar for Doll's mittens."

Next to the depression, sickness and ac dents have been the greatest obstacles in t Crouses' climb. But in this they have had t stanch allies in a pair of greathearted Hom stead medical men—Dr. P. J. ("Paddy Hughes, their family physician, and Dr. P. McGuire, who is Anne's "baby doctor."

"We don't owe much to our doctors," sa Art, with husky sincerity. "Just our who lives, that's all." The Crouses have found difficult to get any kind of bill from these t generous men—"Two years ago I tried give Doctor Hughes ten dollars," says A "but I finally had to compromise on three

Anne, of course, has been in the hospit more than any other member of the famil Besides her seven successful pregnancies s had two others that did not turn out we One baby boy was born between Jerome a Kenny, but lived only a few months. S also suffered one miscarriage when she f downstairs with a load of blankets in h arms. After Janie, her last baby, was bor Anne had to return to the hospital and u dergo a partial hysterectomy.

All the children have had sieges of the own. Gerald was a real problem baby, bo with an obstruction in his stomach whi prevented normal feeding for nearly a ye and a double hernia which did not fully he until he was 3. After he recovered from s this he got in the way of his father's truc and was run over right in front of Anne

(Continued on Page 198)

What Does a Woman Do

when the housework floors her, the budget won't balance and the kids won't behave? "You should see mom as I represent her," writes Dorothy Dennis Smith, of Frankfort, Indiana.

DOROTHY and her dentist husband own their home clear, have the four kids they wanted and a tidy income of about $6000 a year. But there are too many stresses and strains, financially and emotionally, and the Smiths have asked for help. Share the problems of a

REBEL HOUSEWIFE

By Ruth Shapley Matthews

HOW AMERICA LIVES

In the March Journal

LISTEN TO THE CHEERS FOR THRIFTY Cheese Strata

. . . made with mellow-good Kraft American

It's even more delicious than it looks. Thrifty main dish that's protein-rich. For, while the eggs in Cheese Strata provide some protein, there's lots of it—high-quality, complete protein—in the Kraft American.

Start with simple sandwiches. Make six, using a slice of Kraft American Pasteurized Process Cheese between two slices of bread. Beat 4 eggs, add 2½ cups of milk, with salt and pepper to taste, and pour this custard over the sandwiches arranged in a shallow baking dish or casserole. Let this stand for 45 minutes, then bake in a very moderate oven, 325°, for 40 minutes, or until puffed and golden brown, with the custard firm. Serve it right away.

More grand recipes FREE! Write for new, beautifully illustrated "CHEESE CLASSICS" book. Wonderful dishes made with medium-mellow Kraft American, sharp "Old English" Brand, the famous cheese food Velveeta and other Kraft favorites. Address Kraft Foods Company, Dept. CC-1, Chicago 90, Ill.

America's tastiest sandwich
For each serving, toast a slice of bread (crusts trimmed) on one side. Spread the untoasted side with Kraft Mayonnaise and cover with slices of peeled tomato.

Now put on a good thick slice of Kraft Pasteurized Process American Cheese. Top with a strip or two of partially broiled bacon and slip into a 350° oven or under low broiler heat for a few minutes. When the bacon is crisp and Kraft American melted you've got it.

When you buy cheese in a portion or slices

You are familiar with the transparent wrapper that comes around Kraft American in the 5-lb. package. Slices or portions of genuine Kraft American are cut from a 5-lb. loaf with a wrapper of that same design. Ask! Look! Protect yourself against substitution.

THE WORLD'S FAVORITE CHEESES ARE MADE OR IMPORTED BY KRAFT

A little still buys a lot in a telephone call

Even in these days of higher prices, a small sum still buys a telephone call.

Telephone rates have gone up much less than the increases in the cost of telephone materials and wages . . . and much less than the increases in most other things you buy.

Yes, the telephone keeps on being a bargain—a great big one in convenience, friendship, security and success.

BELL TELEPHONE SYSTEM

(Continued from Page 196)

eyes. She picked him up, then went all to pieces and fainted. Fortunately, he was only slightly bruised and cut. Later on he was the victim of an accident that was almost funny—while waltzing around the living room on a New Year's Day, he caught his toe in a register and broke it!

But Arthur Francis is the real family champion when it comes to accidents; he has been sewed up so many times his mother calls him "Stitches." The first time he ever walked he fell and cut his head on the stove. A week later he did the same thing in his grandmother's bathroom. At the age of 8 he was badly hurt by an auto while coming home from school, and he seems to have a downright affinity for falling on broken milk bottles, or slicing his fingers while trying to carve the Thanksgiving turkey.

Jerome had double pneumonia twice, and a strep-throat infection that required radium treatment. Kenny was hit on the eye with a baseball bat, broke his wrist falling from a tree, and lost a year of school because of badly infected tonsils which the doctor did not want to remove because of a polio epidemic. Tubby, who was the most robust of all the babies, had bronchial pneumonia at seven months, and soon afterward fell against a hot iron, which seared the whole side of his leg, bedding him for six weeks. Janie has been comparatively lucky; she had one scooter accident which resulted in a deep cut on her chin, but otherwise she has escaped with only the normal attacks of chicken pox, measles, whooping cough and grippe which have periodically afflicted all the children.

Lest all this medical history should sound too much like a tale of woe, let it be said that the Crouses are definitely not the complaining kind. "You've got to expect those things when you have a lot of children," says Anne. "And we've really been lucky so far—we've brought them all through in good shape." Which is true—the seven younger Crouses are a healthy, husky, clean-looking lot.

Probably partly because they have been through so much together, Art and Anne Crouse seem closer and better adjusted emotionally than many American couples who have more money to spend. Their entire social life revolves around their family, and this includes Anne's two sisters and her warm-hearted Polish parents, who always come visiting with candy and small change for the youngsters, along with such substantial gifts as shoes and overcoats.

Art gets along fine with the men he works with, and on paydays he frequently stops off at one of the Homestead bars for a couple of beers, or a shot of medium-priced whisky. But he never stays more than a few minutes, and Anne never says anything to him about it when he gets home. He used to belong to a Democratic club and the Eagles, but he dropped them because he rarely went there anyway. On his off days he often does some neighborhood job of electric wiring or plumbing to earn a little extra cash.

He gets a two-week vacation with pay, but he does not feel he can afford to go anywhere with his big family. There is a big pub swimming pool near the Crouses' home, a the youngsters go there every day in the su mer—Art figures they have as good a ti there as they would anywhere.

Art is a member of Local No. 1397, Unit Steelworkers of America—CIO; he atter most of the union meetings, and votes every election. He was working at Hon stead in the exciting days when the C first began to organize "Big Steel," and thinks the union has done a first-rate job "speaking for the men." But he also ha good word for the company, and especia for the foremen he works under. "They O.K.," he says. "They've always been squ with me." Politically he and Anne have ways been New Deal Democrats, and t voted for Truman last November.

Art and Anne were born and married the Roman Catholic Church. They att Mass fairly often, but not so often as t children. And they contribute what they they can afford to the church, but it is rar more than a dollar at a time.

None of the Crouses are much for readi They subscribe to three newspapers, Anne borrows back numbers of LADIES' H JOURNAL and other magazines from her ters. She doesn't read many stories, but gives the fashion sections a thorough go over. Art reads mostly the sports pages comic strips. There are always stacks of co books around the house, and he enjoys t as much as any of the kids.

The younger Crouses go to the movies or three times a week, but Art and A haven't been for nearly two years. T favorite pastimes at home are danc games with the kids and listening to r quiz shows.

Anne has no hired household help, course, and she belongs to no clubs. U the time this article was written she never been farther from Pittsburgh t Ellwood City, Pennsylvania, which is ab 50 miles. Art used to drive his truck as fa Detroit, and New York and other Eastern ies. He says he'd like to go west somet and see the cattle-ranching country the mountains where there is still " hunting." But Anne has no urge to tra "I do plenty of that right here at home," says. "Upstairs and down, and up again. don't think I don't enjoy it. I'd rather be with my gang than all alone in the big palace on earth."

As for the future, the Crouses have one hope, and practically no worries. Their is that Art will get his promotion to fore soon, with enough added pay so they start saving a few dollars a week again. realize that they are living from han mouth—or rather, from "pay to pay but they don't see how they can help it days. "We don't worry about it," Anne, "because it wouldn't do us any if we did. Besides, I don't think things ever get as bad for us as they were in early days of the depression. And even if did, we could probably live through it a We're still young—and we have our

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Song of Content

By Lucile Stubbs Graham

I

We lived in a house, a substantial house:
It wasn't a mansion; it wasn't a hut.
And when I was nine, I liked our house,
But
I would have liked to live in a cave,
Or a gypsy tent, or, best of all,
A boxcar, a heavenly boxcar,
A tin dishpan hanging outside on the wall.

II

And when I was twelve I liked our house
And knew that I liked it better by far
Than a roofed-in cave or a gypsy tent
Or an old boxcar.
But I would have liked to live in a house
Where tapestries hung on every wall,
Where a second maid dusted the objets d'art
And a liveried butler adorned the hall.

III

We live in a house, a conventional h
It isn't a palace; it isn't a tent.
It's our very first house—for my husband and I
Did honestly find a house to rent
We wrote out a check and were handed a key;
We unpacked our boxes and watered the flowers.
This house is the best there could possibly be,
For this house is ours.

BURLINGAME
PUBLIC LIBRARY
Burlingame, Calif.

dies' Home

Journal

The Magazine Women Believe In

Mar ts

What Makes You Healthy?

Idle Women—Where are They?

Mental Illness Strikes 1 in 10

RED ROPE
MAGAZINE BINDER
Manufactured by
GAYLORD BROS. Inc.
Syracuse, N. Y.
Stockton, Calif

Journal Contents

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ March, 1949
Vol. LXVI, No. 3

PHOTO BY JOHN STEELE

FRANCES SHELLEY WEES

"As a Chautauqua director (genus now extinct), I lived in countless small towns. They are more deeply exciting than cities. In one small town I knew the lawyer and his wife who had not spoken to each other for fifteen years—during which time they had five children. In another we had three unexplained suicides and two other mysterious deaths in one cold, dark winter. In this I found a pattern for Under the Quiet Water (page 34), probably not so fantastic as the true story."

PHOTO BY ELSNER'S

ELEANOR SHALER

"I was an Army child, born in Indiana, educated at Vassar for four years and on the stage with the first Garrick Gaieties for eight. I married another Army child and we moved to the environs of Philadelphia, where we live in a Revolutionary house on forty-two isolated and neglected acres. I began The Wild Horse (page 68) over a year ago, but harvesting, canning, cooking, errand-driving and tending two small boys left time to write only a page at a time."

ROBERT GEORGE HARRIS

(Illustration, page 68)

"I'm from Missouri, but it's a shame to show me. I'd like to substitute a picture of my wife, or our two children, Craig and Marcia, or even our English bulldog. I began as an illustrator for Western stories, but with my wife's encouragement, I hung up my boots and saddle and turned to better things. To this day I still think she encouraged me so that she could pose for me in evening gowns instead of blue jeans and ten-gallon hats."

Complete-in-One-Issue Condensed Novel

54 Under the Quiet Water, Frances Shelley Wees

Fiction

38 Applause of Thousands, Laurie Hillyer
42 We Always Have Each Other, Irma Phorylles
50 Not the Marrying Kind, Ware Torrey Budlong
54 Fraidy Cat, Val Teal
68 The Wild Horse, Eleanor Shaler
72 Point of No Return (Fourth part of five), John P. Marquand

Special Features

11 Occupation—Housewife, Dorothy Thompson
11 What Price Red Cross?
31 Are You Likely to be a Happily Married Woman? Alicia Marsden and James C. Adams
36 Idle Women . . . Where are They? Betty Hannah Hoffman
40 New Friends for Old Masters, John Walker
44 Public Enemy Number One—Mental Illness, Joan Younger
52 What Makes You Healthy? Winifred Raushenbush
53 If You Ask Me, Eleanor Roosevelt
74 People are People the World Over, John Godfrey Morris
201 How America Lives: The Rebel Housewife, Ruth Shapley Matthews

General Features

5 Our Readers Write Us
14 Under-Cover Stuff, Bernardine Kielty
23 Public Affairs . . . Service Station
23 Community Housekeeping, Margaret Hickey
24 Reference Library
26 Making Marriage Work, Clifford R. Adams
28 Time for Everything! (The Sub-Deb), Edited by Maureen Daly
33 Fifty Years Ago in the Journal • Journal About Town
100 Ask Any Woman, Marcelene Cox
143 Bringing Up Parents, Dr. Barbara Biber
144 Diary of Domesticity, Gladys Taber
245 This is a Must-Win, Munro Leaf
251 Watch Virus Infections in Pregnancy, Dr. Herman N. Bundesen

Fashions and Beauty

56 Fashion's New Point of View, Wilhela Cushman
60 Profiles in Taffeta, Wilhela Cushman
62 Today's Wardrobe, Ruth Mary Packard
64 Fashion in the Blouse, Ruth Mary Packard
66 Made for Each Other, Nora O'Leary
209 Middleweight Champion, Dawn Crowell Norman
212 Afternoon Off, Nora O'Leary

Food and Homemaking

70 Today's Utility—Yesterday's Charm, Gladys Taber
76 Do Stay for Dinner, Ann Batchelder
78 Line a Day, Ann Batchelder
111 Come Into My Kitchen, Dorothy Swenson
136 Conversation Piece, Ruth Mills Teague
210 Budget Dinners, Louella G. Shouer
248 Quick and Easys for Two, Louella G. Shouer

Architecture, Interior Decoration and Garden

46 Perfection in Portland, Richard Pratt
126 Lady's Garden, Richard Pratt
224 Make Room for Privacy, H. T. Williams
234 Contemporary Crewel, Henrietta Murdock

Poetry

12 Marjorie Lederer Lee • 84 Elizabeth Coatsworth • 96 Leonora Thornber
106 Jane Morrison • 118 Eleanor Alletta Chaffee • 156 Bianca Bradbury
169 Felix N. Stefanile • 176 May Richstone • 186 Sara King Carleton
192 Joan Aucourt • 217 Elizabeth-Ellen Long • 222 Hilda Conkling
233 Ethel Jacobson • 247 Ruth Mary DuBois

Cover Design by Dawn Crowell Norman
Photograph by Rouben Samberg

LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, copyright 1949 by The Curtis Publishing Company in U. S. and Great Britain. All rights reserved. Title registered in U. S. Patent Office and foreign countries. Published on last Friday of month preceding date by The Curtis Publishing Company, Independence Square, Philadelphia 5, Pa. Entered as Second Class Matter May 6, 1911, at the Post Office at Philadelphia under the Act of March 3, 1879. Entered as Second Class Matter at the Post Office Department, Ottawa, Canada, by Curtis Distributing Company, Ltd., Toronto, Ont., Canada. SUBSCRIPTION PRICES: U. S. and Possessions, Canada, Newfoundland, Labrador, Costa Rica, Cuba, Nicaragua, Dominican Republic, Guatemala, Haiti, Mexico, Panama, Philippine Islands, Republic of Honduras, Salvador, Spain and South America except the Guianas; 1 yr., $3; 2 yrs., $5; 3 yrs., $7; 4 yrs., $9. Other countries 1 yr., $6. Remit by money order or draft on a bank in the U. S. payable in U. S. funds. All prices subject to change without notice. All subscriptions must be paid for in advance. UNCONDITIONAL GUARANTY. We agree, upon request direct from subscribers to the Philadelphia office, to refund the full amount paid for any copies of Curtis publications not previously mailed. The Curtis Publishing Company, Walter D. Fuller, President; Arthur W. Kohler, Vice-President and Advertising Director; Mary Curtis Zimbalist, Vice-President; Cary W. Bok, Vice-President and Treasurer; Lewis W. Trayser, Vice-President and Director of Manufacturing; Benjamin Allen, Vice-President and Director of Circulation; Robert E. MacNeal, Secretary; Richard Ziesing, Jr., Manager of Ladies' Home Journal. The Company also publishes The Saturday Evening Post, Country Gentleman, Jack and Jill, and Holiday.

Change of address: Send your Journal change of address to LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, Independence Square, Philadelphia 5, Pa.
at least 30 days before the date of the issue with which it is to take effect. Send old address with the new, enclosing if possible your address label. The post office will not forward copies unless you provide extra postage. Duplicate copies cannot be sent. The names of characters in all stories are fictitious. Any resemblance to living persons is a coincidence.

The LION'S ROAR

Published here monthly . . . Column No. 116

The greatest star of the screen!

One of the great stage plays of our time, "Command Decision", is on the screen!

★ ★ ★ ★

Clark Gable's in it!

★ ★ ★ ★

Walter Pidgeon's in it!

★ ★ ★ ★

Van Johnson's in it!

★ ★ ★ ★

Brian Donlevy, Charles Bickford, John Hodiak, Edward Arnold are in it, too!

Together with Marshall Thompson, Richard Quine, Cameron Mitchell, Clinton Sundberg, Ray Collins.

★ ★ ★ ★

That is what is known as a cast.

★ ★ ★ ★

"Command Decision" tells of heroes and cowards, braggarts and fighters, liars and lovers . . . and what goes on in their hearts.

★ ★ ★ ★

There is suspense drawn taut, action that crackles with emotional voltage.

★ ★ ★ ★

That's the stuff the play was made of and it made a powerful play.

★ ★ ★ ★

And that's the picture. The first big picture of 1949. And M-G-M made it!

★ ★ ★ ★

Consider the kind of acclaim that greeted its world premiere in Los Angeles . . . "Superb"..."Rip-snorting"..."Gable's best"..."Pidgeon's finest"..."Tears you to pieces and fills your heart with pride"..."Better than the play"..."Perfection"!

★ ★ ★ ★

No applause would be fair which did not include a rousing round for Director Sam Wood and for Producer Sidney Franklin and Associate Producer Gottfried Reinhardt.

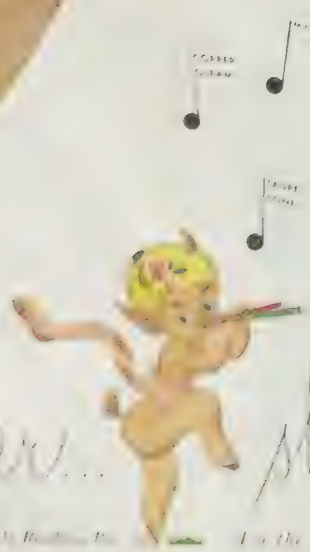
★ ★ ★ ★

The screen play by William R. Laidlaw and George Froeschel is based on the Broadway stage success penned by William Wister Haines.

★ ★ ★ ★

We predict "Command Decision" will be a command performance to the millions of picture-goers who appreciate exciting entertainment.

—Leo



Berkshire's New Stocking Fashions

Gown by Nettie Rosenstein for Filene's, Boston

featuring Color Harmonics

Delicate taupes, beiges, mauves, and greys... cued to the color of a shoe, a wisp of veil, a glove, a hat, a fluff of feather. That's Color Harmonics... Berkshire's wonderful new way to make beautiful costume color harmony with longer lasting, sheer, clear Berkshire Nylons and Nylace Kantruns. The stocking color illustrated is Berkshire's Soft Accent. $1.35 to $1.95.

sheer... sheer... Berkshire Stockings

© 1949 Berkshire Hosiery Mills, Reading, Pa. ... the loveliest legs in the world — by the world's largest manufacturers of full-fashioned stockings. Nylace Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

Our Readers Write us

Profound Thinker

It's a dismal world, I know. . . . People open their newspapers every morning to scare-making headlines about sad and ominous happenings. . . . But. . .

. . . that Red war-monger news . . . I just . . .

. . . can't take it . . .

. . . seriously!

Sincerely yours,
DENNY COLE.

Advice to Brides

Dubuque, Iowa.

Dear Editors: Why, oh why, must every bride follow the same hysterical pattern?

First of all—the wedding dress and veil must be the most expensive that she can possibly squeeze out of her budget. Besides that, it sometimes falls to the bride to take care of the outfits for several attendants.

The breakfast is no longer eaten at home. It must be held "out." Then just try to confine it to the immediate family! Aunt Hetty and Cousin Isabel or Uncle Dudley are sure to be offended if they are not invited, and if they come, naturally, the groom's Aunt Helen and Uncle Bertram with little Louie must be included—after all!

So the expense account grows. Cakes, sandwiches, punch, caterers, restaurant, church fee, decorations, outfits—every little detail exactly like everyone else, and all far too much for the bride's budget. And worse than anything is the long strain, the endless preparation, the dashing here and there for weeks before, so that by the time they are ready to leave for the honeymoon the girl is so tired she is ready to drop in her tracks.

I suppose it would be out of the question for a girl to pick an inexpensive dress and veil, to choose one attendant, if any, to go directly home from church to a quiet, simple breakfast with the families. That just isn't being done. Could it be done? Why not? All it needs is someone to start it.

Sincerely yours,
A GRANDMOTHER.

A Grandma in the Home

Ardsley, New York.

Dear Editors: In our family it's grandma. Seventy years old now, she has been the center of our daily life for twenty years. When the children were little, and mother and dad craved a much deserved evening at the movies, there was no baby-sitter problem here. Grandma was here, wasn't she? Later when mom was perhaps a bit too severe, and the children's tears flowed after punishment (sometimes undeserved) there was the balm of grandma's quiet voice and comforting arms. What on earth would a family do when mother is ill and needs rest in bed if there were no dear old granny to cook and scrub and "do" for the brood?

We do have a magnificent view of the Jersey Hills from our dining-room windows, facing west. Each evening we see the sun set in a burst of glory, and then, as I look at grandma, now in the sunset of her life, I pray that I may be able to do something really big for her to repay her for her life of devotion to us. That's the story of one granny, and aren't there many such sagas of unselfishness throughout this land of ours?

With best wishes,
MARTHA A. STRUCKMAN.

Wants More Poets

Atlanta, Georgia.

Dear Editor: You publish so much good poetry! I love to read it. But I wonder why you select only a few poets over and over, when many unknown poets are also producing fine stuff.

Sincerely,
MRS. PETER J. STELLING.

The JOURNAL has published the work of more than 400 different poets. Our poetry editors, who read carefully as many as 800 poems every week, are especially excited when they discover a new poet.
—ED.

When Baby Sitters Worked

Honolulu, Hawaii.

Dear Editors: Here I am in the midst of reading my favorite magazine, the JOUR-

"Idle hour" Clothes and how to keep them gay

Bed-time clothes with a "dress-up" air help you end the day on a high note. So be sure you give them the best of care—Ivory Flakes care.

Keep all your nice washables away from strong soaps and rough handling . . . because even one wrong washing can spoil their fit and fade their flattering colors. Give them gentle care with Ivory Flakes. Their colors will brighten up . . . they'll keep their fit far longer.

Keep your washables lovelier with this special care

POSY-SPLASHED wool challis housecoats keep their appeal—and their color longer . . . when you give them Ivory Flakes care. No soap is kinder to your nice things than pure, mild Ivory Flakes!

SILK NIGHTIES like this one can be washed time after time in Ivory Flakes. Ivory Flakes is one soap that fashion experts recommend for all fine washables.

Housecoat by Raymodes
Nightgown by Iris Lingerie Co.

Night gown by Little Dorrit Robes Co

COTTON NIGHTGOWNS for little girls look their best with Ivory Flakes care . . . keep bright and new-looking far longer.

NYLONS need nightly washing and the gentlest care! Ivory Flakes will help them wear and wear . . . and keep that new, fresh look up to twice as long!

If it's lovely to wear . . . It's worth

Ivory Flakes care

The fast flake form of baby's pure, mild Ivory . . . 99 44/100 % Pure Quality in every line...

Beauty in every step

Queen Quality
SHOES

Careful beauty for a lovely lady. Superb styles created by the skilled hands of Queen Quality's master craftsman . . . artfully capturing the picture of fashion.

50 YEARS Queen Quality SHOES STYLE QUALITY FIT

$10.95 • $11.95
some styles $12.95

NAL, and hitting me full in the face in How America Lives is this: "Big extravagance—a sitter at 25 cents an hour!" Here in price-inflated Hawaii every time we want to go out for an evening we pay $1.50 for the first hour and 75 cents for every hour thereafter, and our baby is not six months old yet.

Oh, for the good old days when I used to sit (I use the word "sit" loosely) with four kids, do the dishes, bathe them, stop their fights and put them to sleep by making up stories—all for 50 cents the evening!

Sincerely,
MRS. JACK W. SORENSEN.

Busy Mother Quiz-Dizzy

Arvida, Quebec.
ATTENTION: Clifford R. Adams, Ph.D.

I am referring to your quiz Are You a Good Housekeeper? in the LADIES' HOME JOURNAL. You say a score of 12 or less is rarely the case if a woman really loves her home and family. My score was 5½. And my home and my four small children are my whole life. I love them dearly. I am beginning to believe some of your methods of calculation are not quite fair.

1. Does arrival of unexpected guests upset you?

Certainly. I am busy nearly every minute of the day, and if the children are in they are all over the place and they don't just sit and fold their hands.

2. Are you a "fussy" housekeeper?

If I were a fussy housekeeper I would go mad and my children would be unable to stand me. On the days I go on a cleaning spree I am not fit to live with.

3. Does your work pile up and get badly behind?

There's just too much to do.

4. Do you complain to your husband about being overworked?

I try to attract my husband's sympathy, as I figure he'd never know how I was overworked if I didn't tell him. I also try to solicit his help in this way. I don't get it.

5. Do you kill yourself one day, loaf the next?

It's heavenly on the days I loaf and I am a companion to the children and sweet and patient with them.

6. Can you prepare meals from stock if shopping is delayed?

You say "meals"—plural. One meal is all I can manage, so no.

7. Do you have several household skills your friends envy?

My goodness, I haven't one!

8. Can you share two evenings a week with your husband?

No, as it interferes with my night work (work not done in the day).

9. Do you always know how your budget stands?

No. Anything relating to budgets is much too unstable—expenditures go up, and up, and up.

10. Are all clothes mended before laundering?

No, my kids' clothes are too dirty before laundering to be touched with anything less than a six-foot pole.

11. Do you keep remedies and medical aids in a definite place?

No. My medical aids travel around to each scene of accident and stay there until the next casualty. The adhesive bandages disappear on dolls, broken trucks, kites.

12. Are there two comfortable chairs with good light in your living room?

The springs are all broken and there never seems to be a place in aforementioned budget for new comfortable chairs.

13. Before shopping, do you carefully list your needs?

Ah, here's where I get a yes. I get uptown so seldom that when I do, it's a grim-faced, systematic affair.

14. Is your work conveniently scheduled for saving of steps?

No. My work is interlaced with the children's whereabouts, and they certainly do not save their steps, nor are they interested in mine.

15. Are you neat and clean when your husband returns from work?

I gave myself a tentative yes, as I do try to be neat and tidy at I know to the exact minute when my husband will be home. If his arrival is untimely, the situation is quite the same as that of unexpected guests.

16. Does your home have a relaxing "lived in" atmosphere?

One half on this one. I would hardly call the atmosphere in my home "relaxing," although it is very much "lived in."

(Continued on Page 8)

For a Vibrant Lovelier You

No BONES ABOUT IT

Stays up without stays

There's a "Perma•lift"* Pantie designed just for you—the comfortable pantie preferred by millions of smartly styled women. The exclusive magic inset designed in the front panel is your guarantee that your "Perma•lift" Pantie won't roll over, won't wrinkle, won't bind, yet it stays up without stays. Be expertly fitted at your favorite corset department. Buy and try a "Perma•lift" Pantie today—$5.00 to $8.50.

Enjoy a "Perma•lift" Bra—America's favorite bra with "The Lift that never lets you down." Price—$1.50 to $3.50

*"Perma•lift" and "Hickory" are trademarks of A. Stein & Company (Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.)

Now! Easy-to-use Dial-a-Wave takes the guesswork out of Home Permanents!

Your "Rayve Number" is your guide to the one right wave for your hair

The new, easy-to-use "Dial-a-Wave" that's in every Rayve package takes the guesswork out of your home permanent. You simply set the dial for the texture and condition of your hair and the kind of wave you want . . . and find your "Rayve Number." This number is your guide to the correct timing procedure that's best for your kind of hair.

. . . it's exclusive with Rayve ~ the new personalized

HOME PERMANENT

REPLACEMENT OR REFUND OF MONEY
Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping
IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN

At all leading drug and cosmetic counters

THE COMPLETE RAYVE KIT. Everything you need for a perfect permanent. Includes 60 improved "easy-wind" plastic curlers, 80 extra-strong end papers, the "Dial-a-Wave," and simple step-by-step instructions. $2

THE RAYVE REFILL KIT. Includes the "Dial-a-Wave" and everything else you need for a complete Rayve wave, except curlers and bands. $1

FROM THE FAMOUS PEPSODENT LABORATORIES

A Rayve wave is faster, yet gentler . . . far easier too!

There's nothing hit or miss about your Rayve cold wave. It's personalized—for your kind of hair. The "Dial-a-Wave" quickly gives you a guide to the correct timing procedure for every kind of hair. With Rayve, you can be sure of the most perfect permanent you've ever had. And you'll save time, money and trouble.

Rayve waving times are up to twice as fast as old-type home permanents. Yet—because of its modern improved formula—Rayve's waving action is gentler. More than 50,000 women have pretested Rayve for you . . . have found it far easier, more comfortable. No turban to wear . . . it's easy as putting your hair up in curlers.

A Rayve wave is long-lasting—yet softer, more natural. No frizz or fuzzy ends with Rayve. You'll love it from the first day. It will be so much more flattering . . . so easy to fix in any of the new hair styles. Once you've tried Rayve, you'll never again be satisfied with any other kind of wave.

Radiant young loveliness for over-30 skins!

TUSSY BEAUTY PLUS contains a counterpart of the substance that is present in lovely teen-age skins! Every ounce is brimming with 10,000 active units of a dynamic hormone ingredient.

This beauty-giving cream helps smooth away fatigue lines, the aging look of a dried-out skin.

Use Beauty Plus hormone cream daily and watch your mirror for a luscious, younger-looking complexion. $3 and $5 plus tax.

TUSSY beauty plus

(Continued from Page 6)

17. Are your meals served promptly for the family's convenience?

My meals are served promptly, but mostly for my own convenience, as there's always the baby to do after.

18. Does your work schedule permit flexibility if weather changes?

This is one capital YES. I have learned the hard way what weather does to the best laid plans of mice and mothers.

19. Can you speed unpleasant tasks by thinking of other things?

No, my dear sir—it takes just so long to wash dishes, scrub dirty old floors, and so on, no matter what I am thinking about. As a matter of fact, I usually think about the same dishes getting dirty all over again in a few hours, and the same trend of thought applies to the floors.

20. Does your husband think you are a good housekeeper?

No. This is the sad and bitter truth.

Yours very truly,
MRS. ROLAND MARCOTTE.

Yesterday Was Today

San Diego, California.

Dear Editors: Recently I was looking at some back numbers of the LADIES' HOME JOURNAL in the public library, and I came upon these rather familiar titles: Who is to Blame for High Prices? . . . Cutting Down the Butcher Bill. . . . Is the Jew Getting a Square Deal? I turned to the front of the bound copies and found that these articles appeared in 1910!

Oh, yes! There was still another article—with illustrations too. Across the cover of a magazine today, I'll bet it would sell plenty of copies. The title: Common Mistakes We Make in Bedrooms. Let me hasten to add the article dealt with decorations and furniture arrangement, and there wasn't a living soul to be seen in the illustrations.

Sincerely yours,
ERNIE RYDBERG.

One of the charming things about us human beings is that we remain so deliriously human. ED.

Sells First Story

Cambridge City, Indiana.

Dear Editors: To have the first story I ever submitted to a magazine accepted by the LADIES' HOME JOURNAL was beyond my wildest expectations and I am still floating on a rosy cloud. In our little town telegrams are delivered by telephone. Monday afternoon the operator called my husband. "Mr. Feemster," she said, "I've got a wire here for somebody in your family. But I don't know who, and it's the funniest telegram I ever read." She read your telegram:

GET READY TO TOSS YOUR BONNET HIGH FOR THAT SO YOUNG AND SO HURT SALLY IN EVERY SPRING HAS TOUCHED JOURNAL EDITORS' HEARTS FOR SEVEN HUNDRED AND FIFTY DOLLARS BALM.

Then she said, "I sure don't understand that. Do you know what it means?" My husband, who is a lawyer and a very skeptical fellow, replied, "Yes, I know what it means, but I can't understand it either." The operator sighed with relief. "I'm glad you're in the same boat," she said. "I thought I was nuts!"

Sincerely and gratefully,
ELIZABETH FEEMSTER.

For first stories by hitherto unpublished authors JOURNAL pays $750.00. Last year the JOURNAL published 12 firsts. ED.

Teaching Aid

Scarsdale, New York.

Dear Editors: We have been very much interested in the People Are People series. The pictures are very helpful to classroom teachers. Have you ever considered making these pictures available to schools throughout the country?

Very truly yours,
W. PAUL ALLEN,
Principal, Scarsdale Public Schools.

Young America Films, Inc., 18 E. 41st Street, New York City, is producing slide films from the People Are People feature for classroom use. ED.

"I'm a nurse...

I can't afford CORNS, can you?"

"It's hard to be cheerful around patients when your feet hurt. So the minute a corn appears, I use a Blue-Jay Corn Plaster!" Nupercaine*, exclusive with Blue-Jay, soothes surface pain; gentle medication loosens hard "core"—you lift it out in a few days. You can't afford corns either. Get Blue-Jay today (on sale at drug counters everywhere).

"AMERICA'S LARGEST SELLING CORN PLASTER"

STAYS ON BECAUSE IT WRAPS ON

*Reg. U. S. Pat. Off. Ciba's Brand of Dibucaine

BAUER & BLACK
Division of The Kendall Company
Chicago 16

BLUE JAY
Corn Plasters

Catching Cold?

ATTACK THESE GERMS BEFORE THEY ATTACK YOU

Quick germ-killing action can often head off trouble or lessen its severity.

Medical men tell us that while some kind of a virus may frequently start a cold, the so-called "Secondary Invaders" are among the germs that so often complicate it, and are responsible for many of its most distressing symptoms.

When you're under par, over-tired, or when body resistance is lowered by drafts, wet or cold feet, or sudden changes in temperature, these germs can stage a mass invasion of the tissues. You're headed for trouble!

Then is the time to gargle with Listerine Antiseptic to guard against such a mass invasion . . . to help ward off the infection, or lessen its severity.

Germs Killed on Throat Surfaces

Listerine Antiseptic reaches way back on throat and mouth surfaces to kill millions of these germs. Actual tests have shown reductions on mouth and throat surfaces ranging up to 96.7% fifteen minutes after a Listerine Antiseptic gargle, and up to 80% an hour after.

This marked germ-killing action, we believe, helps to explain Listerine Antiseptic's impressive test record in fighting colds.

Fewer Colds In Tests

Tests made over a period of twelve years showed that those who gargled Listerine Antiseptic twice daily had fewer colds and fewer sore throats, than those who did not gargle. Moreover, when Listerine Antiseptic users did have colds, they were usually milder and of shorter duration.

Surely, when you feel a cold coming on, this germ-killing action is a wise precaution which warrants your serious consideration. But don't forget . . . gargle early and often!

LAMBERT PHARMACAL COMPANY, St. Louis, Mo.

At the first sniffle— Gargle LISTERINE ANTISEPTIC

P. S. IT'S NEW! Have you tried Listerine TOOTH PASTE, the MINTY 3-way prescription for your teeth?

TO GET YOU TO TRY DREFT
WE OFFER YOU THIS!

GORGEOUS, GUARANTEED-TO-BLOOM

Gladiolus Garden

12 BULBS FOR ONLY 25¢ REGULAR 75¢ RETAIL VALUE

AND ONE DREFT BOX TOP!

12 healthy bulbs . . . Assortment of colors such as pink, purple, salmon, white, red, and yellow . . . Every one guaranteed to develop into a hearty, large-flowering plant!

You can have 12 bulbs, 24, 36, 48—or more . . . at only 25¢ a dozen. Just include a Dreft box top with every dozen you order.

DREFT washes dishes so clean it HELPS PROTECT YOUR FAMILY'S HEALTH

Mail to DREFT, Dept. C, Box 1459, Cincinnati 1, Ohio

NAME

ADDRESS

CITY STATE

Guarantee: THIS OFFER EXPIRES, MIDNIGHT 3-31-49

Dreft Leaves No Germ-Breeding

DANGER SPOTS

THE SLIGHTEST FILM OR CLOUDINESS IS YOUR WARNING

Health Authorities say that germs breed in dishwater film . . . germs that wiping your dishes won't remove. (Towels, in fact, spread germs.) Dreft leaves no dishwater film . . . leaves no germ-breeding danger spots.

Dreft washes dishes healthfully clean . . . they shine even without wiping!

Health authorities say the way you wash dishes and the kind of suds you use, can mean the difference between sickness and health

Danger may lurk in your dishpan! Doctors have found that germs breed in dishwater film! Even dishes you've washed and polished carefully can carry this film—can carry sickness to the very ones you wish to protect.

Dreft Leaves No Germ-Breeding Film—That's why Dreft actually helps protect your family's health. And this new way of dishwashing, made practical by DREFT, not only helps you safeguard those you care for—it is actually an easier, quicker, happier way of doing dishes!

New Quick Dreft Way—Wash your dishes in Dreft's abundant, lasting suds. Give them a hot rinse (the hotter the better). Then let them drain dry. It's just as easy and quick as that!

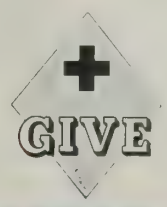
So heed the warning of health authorities . . . help protect your family's health. Wash your dishes healthfully clean—with DREFT.

Ladies' Home Journal

Bruce Gould and Beatrice Blackmar Gould. Editors

What Price Red Cross?

THE questions most frequently asked in Red Cross campaigns are: "What is the overhead? How much of my gift will go for salaries and how much for folks who need the Red Cross?"



These seem to be fair questions, but they become unreasonable if it is assumed that money spent for salaries and other administrative expenses does not help people in need. Many thousands of volunteer Red Cross workers do hard work without pay other than personal satisfaction. In nearly one third of all Red Cross chapters all activities are conducted by volunteers. Yet the larger part of the organization's budget is the salary item. The salaries are paid to people who serve people in need, or who train or supervise people to serve others in need.

"How much of my contribution to the Red Cross campaign actually gets to those who need it?" is the way some people put it. Only a minor share of the annual budget is actually expended for groceries, clothing and shelter. But are these tangible goods the only form of relief? This conception of relief is widely held; but judged by such measures, the Red Cross suffers unfairly.

A child swimming at a picnic is caught in the rapids of a river and screams for help. A Red Cross-trained lifesaver plunges in and rescues him. Is the cost of training this lifesaver overhead or relief?

A whole community is stricken with influenza or typhoid or polio, and scores of Red Cross Home Nursing-trained women are recruited to assist the few graduate nurses available. Lives are saved. Should the cost of this training be called overhead or relief—since again only salaries are involved?

Relief cannot always be wrapped up as a tangible commodity. When a service is essential to the welfare of humanity, it does not matter whether the cost is assigned to overhead or to relief. The American Red Cross is primarily a service organization. The cost of salaries and equipment to produce such service is legitimate relief expenditure. The accounts of the national Red Cross are audited by the Army and by a firm of certified public accountants, submitted to the Congress and made available to the public. You can contribute to the Red Cross with the assurance your dollar will work for a necessary, humane cause.

Occupation—Housewife

By DOROTHY THOMPSON

A WOMAN of my acquaintance, whom I interrupted while she was filling out an official questionnaire, laid down her pen with a sigh. "One question on all official or unofficial papers—government, legal, tax, what not—always gets my goat," she said. "Fills me with an inferiority complex as 'deep as a well and as wide as a barn door.' It's that query 'Occupation?' And I have to write down 'Housewife.' When I write it I realize that here I am, a middle-aged woman, with a university education, and I've never made anything out of my life. I'm just a housewife."

I couldn't help bursting into laughter. "The trouble with you," I said, "is that you have to find one word to cover a dozen occupations all of which you follow expertly and all more or less simultaneously. You might write: 'Business manager, cook, nurse, chauffeur, dressmaker, interior decorator, accountant, caterer, teacher, private secretary'—or just put down 'philanthropist.'"

"Philanthropists are people who give away money," she demurred.

"Not in the exact meaning of the word," I countered. "A philanthropist is a person who loves humanity and gives away something for love. All your life you have been giving away your energies, your skills, your talents, your services—for love."

"Not exactly giving them away," she doubted. "I've been supported. And I guess I've been paid with lots of love in return." She looked happier.

"Or you might put down 'Free woman.'"

"Free?" she countered. "I can hardly call my soul my own."

"Oh, yes you can," I replied firmly, for the woman is a great friend and I know her very well. "And your life has always fulfilled the prime test of a free existence—namely, never to do anything just for money."

"Perhaps you have something there," she smiled. "But here I am, nearly fifty years old, and I have never done what I hoped to do in my youth. Music! I played the piano twenty-five years ago better than I do now. And I had a college education—wasted."

Wasted! Without a mind trained to concentration, to tackling and solving problems, weighing alternative policies, and planning the use of time, this woman never could have done what she has. As for her artistic and intellectual interests ——

"But all your children are musical. And that is simply because you brought music into your home—isn't it?"

(Continued on Page 12)

Executive Editor, Mary Bass ● Managing Editor, Laura Lou Brookman ● Associate Editors: Hugh MacNair Kahler, Bernardine Kielty, Ann Batchelder, Wilhela Cushman, William E. Fink, Alice Blinn, Richard Pratt, Henrietta Murdock, Louella G. Shouer, Mary Lea Page, Maureen Daly, Dawn Crowell Norman, John Godfrey Morris, Joan Younger, Lonnie Coleman, Margaret Davidson, Nora O'Leary ● Contributing Editors: Gladys Taber, Louise Paine Benjamin, Gladys Denny Shultz, Barbara Benson, Margaret Hickey ● Assistant Editors: John Werner, Charlotte Johnson, Donald Stuart, Ruth Mary Packard, Ruth Matthews, Alice Conkling, June Torrey, Lily Glendinning, Dorothy Counselman Selby, Joseph Di Pietro, Anne Einselen, Glenn Matthew White, Betty Niles Gray, Jan Weyl, Jeanne Scribner ● Editorial Assistants: Alice Kastberg, Iris Wilken, Betty Coe, Jeanne Lenton Tracey, Cynthia McAdoo, Eleanor Pownall Simmons, Adrina Casparian, Virginia Price, Marion Plummer, Lois Witherspoon, Philippa Herman, Jeanne Stiles, Elizabeth McFarland, Polly Toland, Leone Seastrom, Elizabeth Crawford, Elizabeth Goetsch, Joan Aucourt, Marthedith F. Stauffer.

LUCKY ME!

My family loves this delicious blend of 8 vegetables

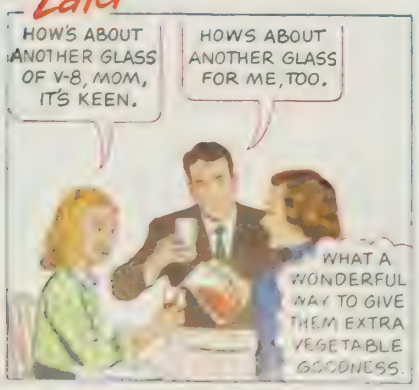
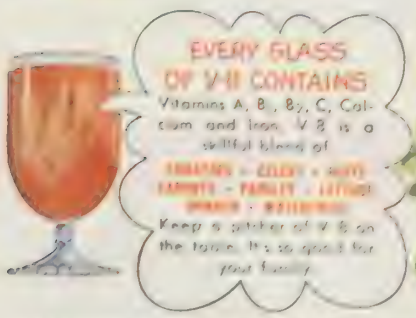
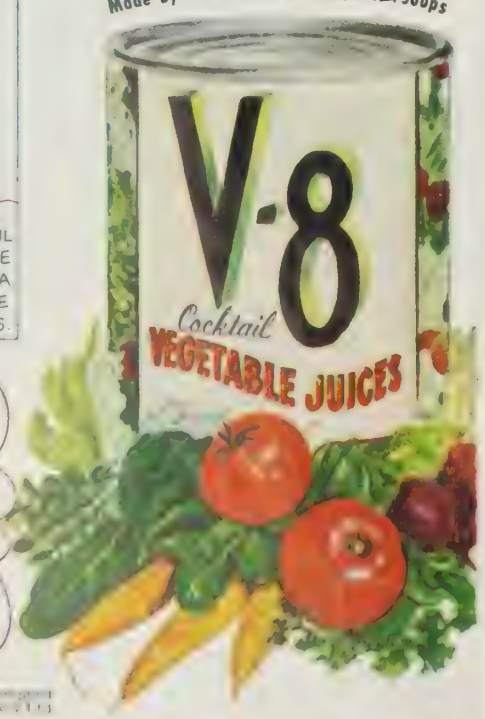
... ready-to-serve in this tasty drink!





Here's how my luck began...



Later

Made by the makers of Campbell's Soups

*V-8 is a trademark owned in the United States by Campbell Soup Company, in Canada by Campbell [illegible]

My friend grinned. "But all this vicarious living—through others"—and she sighed again.

"As vicarious as Napoleon Bonaparte," I scoffed. "Or a queen. I simply refuse to share your self-pity. You are one of the most successful women I know."

And I certainly meant it.

This woman married, at twenty-one, a struggling high-school teacher. They went to housekeeping on $35 a week. They had three children—two sons and a daughter. It took her husband twenty-five years to rise high in his profession, and during fifteen of those years—until an outstanding and popular historical work brought him to the forefront—they had to live on very modest means with exceptionally refined tastes. Their children were grown before teaching and books won him a quite handsome income. But if this break had never happened, my friend would have been no less a success, for her greatest achievements were performed when her husband was earning between $3000 and $5000 a year. During all that time her husband and family never lived in anything but a well-kept, charming home. They never in their lives ate a bad meal. They were always attractively dressed. All three children were (and are) admired for their good manners and exceptional intelligence and industry—which saved their parents much money, for they were largely educated by scholarships. They were also educated for kindness and consideration, because there was always room for one more in that home, and for several years it was shared with a refugee child.

To do what this woman did with her husband's modest income was a feat of management, showing executive ability of a high order. Her gifts as a craftsman were no less formidable. I once found her papering her living room—"a perfect cinch once you get the hang of it," she remarked happily. As a food buyer she would have won a high salary in any restaurant, for she watched the markets like a hawk, and planned delicious meals accordingly. When the children were small she made all their clothes and most of her own, including suits and topcoats, having gone between housekeeping duties to a tailoring school. In "time off" she typed her husband's manuscripts and proofread every book; played piano duets with the children to make practicing more fun; followed them in their reading when they were in high school, the better to discuss the books under study; and as they grew up and went away to college, threw herself into the work of the community: sat on city housing boards; planned festivals to make up the church deficit; took the lead for better schools; and, in fact, when I think of her solid achievements they are matched by few "career" women.

"But I never earned any money." That is the lament of many "housewives."

If the family is considered as a unit, that is simply not so. Millions of women, all over the United States, are contributing as much to the well-being of their families by the services they render and the brains they mobilize, as are their income-earning husbands. Compile the cost of their services, if it had to be paid to half a dozen professionals! And what do most men work for anyhow? They work for their homes! The home they are able to support is the real measure of their financial "success." In that home expenditure is quite as important as income, and 80 per cent of American income is spent by "housewives," for better or for worse. Who does not know $10,000-income homes that cannot match in order, comfort and comeliness homes run on half that income? Who supplies the economic ability which overcomes income deficiencies? Invariably some "housewife."

Who can hire, at any price, a substitute for a mother? Who can find a housekeeper who thinks twice about every purchase, weighing value against available cash? On what labor market is affection to be purchased, patient devotion, good humor, laughter? There is no question that most women can save in the home by their managerial talents more money than they could bring into it from outside work.

How many men would have given up in despair in those troughs of life which come to everyone, but for the patient faith and the carefully concealed sacrifices of a loving wife? That woman of despised occupation!

It seems to me I am continually opening novels about the pretty girl who turns into a slut and a harridan upon marriage; or whose spirit is broken by the boredom of household tasks. Perhaps I know only very nice people, but I know them in all walks of life, and it seems to me that these dismal creatures are the exception, not the rule. It is probably true, as Mrs. Virginia Woolf pointed out in A Room of One's Own, that lack of money of their own, and of leisure, has thwarted the genius of some women. It is true that most conspicuous women geniuses have been childless, and free from household cares. But the world and civilization are not made by genius alone, but by civilization's myriad unsung heroes and heroines. And a world full of feminine genius but poor in children would rapidly come to an end.

One might also ask: What would become of the men geniuses? Someone has said, "When you see a great man, you can induce a great mother." That has been confirmed over and over again, and by great men themselves. But great mothers, like great geniuses, have to work at their task. It isn't just an inborn talent that flourishes without constant effort, and in free time. And most good men had good mothers too. Children—especially boys—usually get their ethical standards, as well as their ambition and courage, largely from their mothers.

The instinct of the masses of the people in Catholic countries, who without benefit of theologians elevated the mother of Christ into part of the Godhead—as eloquently told by Henry Adams in Mont-Saint-Michel and Chartres—was a sound one, growing out of human experience. "If Christ is perfect," they argued wisely, "His mother is perfect, for only a perfect mother has a perfect son." And so they elevated the gentle and inconspicuous Mary into the Queen of Heaven, and built their loveliest cathedrals to "Notre Dame"—Our Lady.

That may seem a far cry from "Occupation: Housewife." But is it so far? The homemaker, the nurturer, the creator of childhood's environment is the constant re-creator of culture, civilization and virtue. Therefore, assuming that she has done and is doing well that great managerial task and creative activity, let her write her occupation proudly: "Housewife!" THE END

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

For Robert, Playing

By Marjorie Lederer Lee

The cowhide drum, the rubber ball
Lie idle now against the wall;
The puppet clown hangs by his strings
In sad ennui; refused are rings
And plastic blocks which, pegged or lined,
Are guaranteed to pique the mind
To keen awareness. Little boys
Are said to need constructive toys,
But here is a culprit, here is a cad
Who never read a toyshop ad,
Under the aspen, quite alone,
Playing with leaves and common stone!

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

95 reasons why Armour Sausage tastes so good 'n' fresh!

95 Armour Sausage Kitchens—one of them right near you—mean Armour Pork Sausage always comes to you with the rosy bloom of freshness upon it! That's why you'll enjoy so much more the good, full, natural flavor of fine pork —undisguised by heavy hit-or-miss seasoning. Just a light blend of imported spices—added lightly and with recipe accuracy—gives extra zest to every bite. Yes, Armour Sausage proves how good good sausage can be—naturally!

Serve 'em with Scrambled Egg Cups! Give your favorite family a new favorite breakfast—egg-filled toast cups with Armour Pork Sausage links. In 12 to 15 minutes the sausage will fry golden brown. The toast cups are easy-to-make frills—just press buttered bread slices, crusts removed and points up, into muffin tins and bake at 450° F. for 10-15 minutes. Then fill with Cloverbloom eggs scrambled as you like 'em best—and the day's started right!

For other Sausage recipes, write Marie Gifford, Dept. 362, P. O. Box 2053, Chicago 9, Illinois

Tune in HINT HUNT—CBS Monday through Friday afternoons
STARS OVER HOLLYWOOD—CBS Saturday

The best and nothing but the best is labeled ARMOUR

BY PERMISSION, COPYRIGHT 1948, THE NEW YORKER MAGAZINE, INC.

"I guess they're literary people. All they talk is sex, sex, sex."

Under-Cover Stuff

By BERNARDINE KIELTY

DON'T fall in love with a novelist, is our advice, unless you are a novelist, too, and can retaliate. After Alfred de Musset, poet, and George Sand, novelist, broke up their passionate affair, Musset put the whole story into his novel, LA CONFESSION D'UN ENFANT DU SIÈCLE. George Sand in turn did it up thoroughly in her novel, ELLE ET LUI; which called forth a third novel from Musset's brother Paul, LUI ET ELLE, followed by a fourth from Louise Colet, poetess, and mistress of both Musset and Flaubert, called, with considerable originality, LUI.

Of course it might work the other way. Three women wrote books about D. H. Lawrence: his wife, Frieda*, NOT I, BUT THE WIND; Mabel Dodge Luhan, LORENZO IN TAOS; and Dorothy Brett*, LAWRENCE AND BRETT, all of them assumedly in love with Lawrence. And Lawrence made Frieda "the woman" in practically every novel he wrote.

N. Y. PUBLIC LIBRARY PICTURE COLLECTION

"New look" in George Sand's day.

Whether you read about the American boy in the '80's, in HUCKLEBERRY FINN and TOM SAWYER, or in the 1940's in THE CITY BOY of Herman Wouk, that boy still seems the most attractive, wholesome, heart-warming, appealing figure in our civilization. But the fact remains that too many of these nice kids go wrong. They get sneered out of their natural decency and their normal activities. To keep up with the smart guys, they become gang hangers-on, later gang members of standing and, too often, criminals. There are novels about them, too, like THE AMBOY DUKES, by Irving Shulman, and THE FUTURE MR. DOLAN, by Charles Gorham, and there are the irrefutable police records across the country.

One of the most effective ways of helping boys to have fun and go straight at the same time is the nation-wide organization, Boys' Clubs of America. There are around 300 of these clubs scattered throughout the 48 states. In large cities they are located in the most congested neighborhoods, and in smaller communities where they are accessible to outlying areas. There is no stipulation for membership. It is only necessary to be a boy. If the boy is a delinquent, the arousing of his interests within the club tends to stop his delinquency; if he is not, he is less likely to become one, once his energies have been directed into club activities.

The chief support of this organization has always been by people who consider it a community investment in the raw material of the future—boys. Usually a boys' club is a modern, clean-lined building with complete up-to-date equipment. Nearly every one has a gym, many have swimming pools. Basketball, tumbling, boxing, wrestling are all going on at the same time, but under capable leadership. There is always a library, and usually a librarian who will help a feller with his homework if he wants help. There are music, carpentry, typewriting. The noise of any boys' club is deafening. But it is a good healthy noise. There are no posted "Do's" or "Don'ts." The motto is "This is your club. Take care of it." When a boy doesn't conform, he becomes a challenge to the leaders,

(Continued on Page 16)

QUESTION: CAN I AFFORD A BEAUTYREST?

ANSWER: CAN YOU AFFORD ABOUT 1½¢ A NIGHT?

Did you ever look at it this way? Is a penny and half a night too much to pay for the healthful, refreshing luxury rest Beautyrest gives you?

Millions of Beautyrest owners say it's worth more! Here's the simple arithmetic of it. Beautyrest costs only $59.50, and it's guaranteed for 10 years. Divide 10 years by $59.50—and it comes out to only about 1½¢ a night!

So don't dream about owning a Beautyrest. Get one today. It's a wise investment in good living!

Beautyrest water-glass test. Glass stays ready, even when surrounding springs are pressed own. Here's why: Each Beautyrest coil spring is individually pocketed. Springs can't touch each other, n't force each other down. Result: No hollows.

3. See the amazing difference! "Ordinary" mattress springs are wired together, can pull each other down—often causing uncomfortable sag. But Beautyrest springs are not tied together. They can't sag! They "give" in the right places. Result: luxury rest!

The "indestructible" mattress. In United States Testing Co. laboratories, a 275-lb. roller pounded Beautyrest 740,744 more times than any other mattress tested. The score: Beautyrest lasts over twice as long as the next best mattress tested!

Beautyrest stays beautiful for the life of the mattress! No-sag edges and pre-built border protect its trim lines. Coils are built in to mattress' edge, giving you mid-mattress comfort right out to the edges.

*Only SIMMONS makes BEAUTYREST

ALSO FROM THE HOUSE OF SIMMONS—the greatest name in bedding: Hide-A-Bed—the sofa that doubles as an "extra bedroom." Electronic Blanket—a new defense against colds. Deepsleep Mattress—a fine Simmons mattress at a lower price. Babybeauty Crib Mattress—made to doctors' specifications. Ace Spring—the modern spring for the modern mattress.

RADE-MARK REG. U. S. PATENT OFFICE. COPR. 1949 BY SIMMONS CO., MDSE. MART, CHICAGO, ILL.

CIRCLE TREAD
Ozite CUSHION MAKES YOU PROUD OF YOUR RUGS!

So deep!
So luxurious!
So quiet!

And SO economical because you save Ozite's cost many times over!

INSIST ON THE CIRCLE TREAD EMBOSSED THAT MEANS IT'S GENUINE OZITE

(Continued from Page 14)

who try to find a solution to his difficulty, and usually succeed. Most of the leaders have been club members themselves, and know their kind.

These boys' clubs have been going on for seventy years, and the records prove them to be a bulwark against delinquency. In a certain area in Detroit, for instance, after a boys' club got going, juvenile delinquency decreased from 222 to 28. The judge of the Children's Court in Schenectady said that in his district the boys' club had eliminated approximately 80 per cent of delinquency and antisocial misconduct. In Salt Lake City, Los Angeles, Pontiac, Baltimore; El Dorado, Arkansas; Westchester County, New York; San Antonio, Tampa, chiefs of police, probation officers, crime-prevention officers, high-school principals all testify to this same record.

The list of boys who made good—former club members—is terrific: clergymen, including a bishop, doctors, professors (Harvard and Princeton among them), artists, judges, members of Congress and a couple of lieutenant governors of states, war heroes, businessmen. There is a formidable number of ballplayers, including Joe DiMaggio and Joe Cronin, quite as many boxers, including the late Benny Leonard, three Yale swimming-team captains, and entertainers galore—Irving Berlin, Joe E. Brown, Dick Powell, Eddie Cantor, George O'Brien, Ezra Stone, Danny Thomas, and on and on and on.

"If you are going to do anything permanent for the average man," said Theodore Roosevelt, "you have got to begin before he is a man. The chance of success lies in working with the boy."

National Boys' Club Week will be celebrated this year from March 28 through April 3.

•

If you were to be imprisoned for life in a solitary cell and could take only one book in with you, what would it be? Several people were asked, but the best answer, to Bennett Cerf's way of thinking, was HOUDINI.

REPRINTED COURTESY COLLIER'S

ALFRED by Foster Humfreville

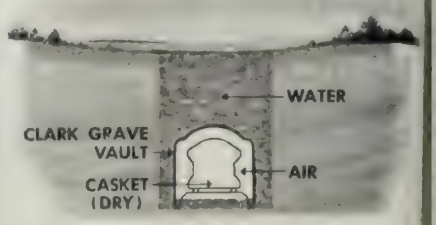
"I'm giving you a ticket anyway, Alfred, even if you are related to former Pres. Millard Fillmore on your mother's side of the family."



No man is a hero to his valet, we're told. But we wonder. In Lakeville, Connecticut, a couple of years ago, the milkman announced to one of his clients, a lady from New York, that Lakeville now had a famous writer in its midst. The lady, who knew a thing or two about the literary world, asked who it was. The milkman wasn't sure, but thought the name was something like Carstairs. Since that didn't register with the lady, she asked what the man had written. "Oh, I dunno. Black Beauty or something." The writer was

(Continued on Page 18)

*THERE ARE MANY WAYS TO FIND PEACE . . . when a dear one departs. Surely one of them is the comforting knowledge th. you have provided the finest tribute . . . the most trusted protection against water in the ground.

*THE CLARK GRAVE VAULT is made of enduring metal instead of porous material. Placed over the casket it is scientifically designed to keep water, from rain and melting snows, from reaching the casket.

Write for FREE 28-page booklet, "My Duty." Copies have gone into millions of homes . . . and hearts. A book of inspiration — and information. Tells those who must "take charge" what to do. The Clark Grave Vault Co., Dept. E-39, Columbus, Ohio. Copyrighted 1949.

CLARK GRAVE VAULTS

THE FINEST TRIBUTE • THE MOST TRUSTED PROTECTIO

JOAN CRAWFORD starring in "FLAMINGO ROAD," A Michael Curtiz Production released by Warner Bros.

Photograph: Bert Six

The Mahogany is SOLID... and so is the VALUE !

Enjoy the graceful beauty and luxurious quality of this Lexington Colonial Grouping...in SOLID MAHOGANY by MENGEL

Want to get most for your money?

Well, feast your eyes on these breathtaking new Lexington pieces by Mengel. Notice the authentic Colonial styling: delicate pierced-brass drawer pulls, graceful Lexington base, handsome pineapple finials on the roomy poster bed . . . the crystal-clear mirror, surrounded by a charming pediment frame. Every detail reflects the American heritage of fine craftsmanship.

Now look at the wood . . . the gleaming, oven-hardened finish . . . the luxurious grain figure . . . the rich, satiny luster that spells fine cabinet wood. That's mahogany. Solid mahogany. From Mengel's own timberlands in Africa.

And you get more. Much more. For . . . like all Mengel Furniture . . . every piece is Permanized.*

"Permanized" is Mengel's name for their exclusive scientific method of building durability into your furniture. Joints and veneers in furniture built by this method will never come apart. No matter what the climate . . . hot or cold, damp or dry . . . your Mengel Permanized Furniture stays sound and beautiful.

There's another point you'll like. This suite is made in solid maple as well as solid mahogany. Choose the wood you prefer. Whichever it is, you can be sure you're getting solid value for your money in this graceful Colonial suite.

Mary Adam's new booklet, "Make Your Own Design for Living," gives you many valuable decorating hints and color harmony suggestions by the famous Rahr Color Clinic. Be sure to mail the coupon and ten cents for your copy. You'll be glad you did.

For the name of the nearest Mengel dealer, phone Western Union by number and ask for Operator 25. The Mengel Company, Louisville 1, Kentucky.

Established 1877

IN MAHOGANY, MENGEL MEANS MORE

Permanized MENGEL Furniture

Mengel furniture is available in both modern and traditional designs. The prices of the pieces shown above are approximately: Poster Bed, $87.95; Vanity, $154.75; Chest, $149.00; Night Stand, $47.95; Bench, $22.95 (slightly more, west of the Rockies). Other Mengel furniture ranges in price from $199 to $369 for three principal pieces.

MARY ADAM — The Mengel Company, Dept. 195
Louisville 1, Kentucky

Enclosed is 10¢. Please send me your new booklet, "Make Your Own Design for Living." (If you live outside Continental U. S., send 25¢.)

Name_____

Street_____

City_____

*Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

Copyright 1949, The Mengel Company

You'll be happier with a HOOVER®

Whichever type you need

Life is too short to clean the hard way. With a Hoover your work is easier, your colors stay brighter, your rugs last longer. You'll be proud to say "I own a Hoover." It's the name preferred 2 to 1 over any other make. Hoover offers you the complete cleaner choice . . . two basic types, four great models.

Get happier today

Call your Hoover dealer today for a home showing of the model you prefer.

MODEL 28 (above). Hoover's new popular-priced Triple Action Cleaner, with the exclusive Hoover cleaning principle—it beats, as it sweeps, as it cleans. Gets deep-down dirt. Instant conversion for above-the-floor cleaning. . . . $74.95 Cleaning tools in handy kit, $19.95.

MODEL 50 (at right). Hoover's great new cylinder cleaner. Easiest-to-use cleaner of its type. Cleans by powerful suction. Features the exclusive new Dirt Ejector. Complete with cleaning tools in handy kit, Mothmizer and sprayer, $79.50

MODEL 115 (at left). Hoover, Junior. Ideal for small homes, handy for all homes. Newest, smallest, lowest-priced Hoover. Trim and light, fully upright, stores in small space. Has Hoover's exclusive Triple Action cleaning principle—it beats, as it sweeps, as it cleans. Only $59.95 Cleaning tools extra.

THE HOOVER COMPANY, North Canton, Ohio; Hamilton, Ont., Canada; Perivale, England

● NOTE: See the new Hoover Iron at leading stores everywhere. $11.45, including excise tax.

(Continued from Page 16)

Thomas Costain, and the novel, of course, THE BLACK ROSE.

The new Costain novel is HIGH TOWERS, story of the fortunes of a famous family of brothers in eighteenth-century Montreal. Mr. Costain takes the slender fragments of known history and with imagination builds them into a full, rich story. The ten Le Moyne brothers—real figures whom history has slighted—were the founders of a French empire on this continent that reached from Hudson Bay to the shores of the Gulf of Mexico. Among them were d'Iberville, a great general, conqueror of the north, and de Bienville, the first governor of Louisiana. Their story moves from Montreal, settled and civilized, to the site of New Orleans, where de Bienville builds his city-in-the-wilderness. The research is scholarly, the actual plot is a love story—the heroine an orphan, the hero a young carpenter, and the villain a French courtier.

In the background priests pace slowly, reading their breviaries, Indians surround the camps of white men, ambassadors from Paris try out their intrigue in the New World. This is traditional historical romance, and it is a medium in which Mr. Costain is past master.

●

Lt. Com. Sylvan Greene was one of the first Navy pilots fired upon at Pearl Harbor. He was also, in 1919, at the age of three, the Ladies' Home Journal's choice as Healthiest Baby.

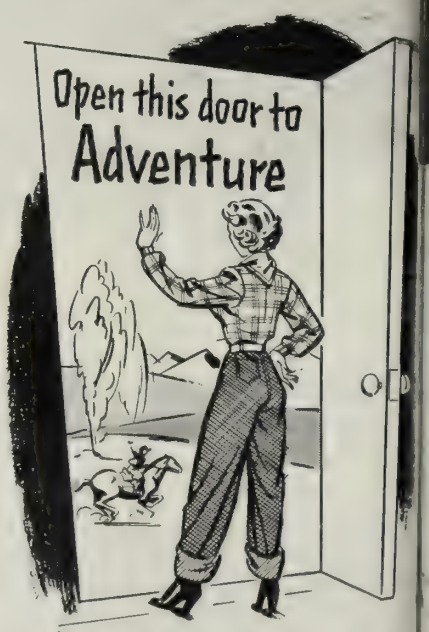
●

In London, in the "City," there used to be, and probably still is, a certain restaurant where businessmen from time immemorial have taken their lunch. In the days before the war, the restaurant host used to display a large round cheese, and all the guests were given a chance to guess its height, weight and girth. If anyone guessed all three correctly, it was port on the house. (Those old chaps wouldn't want champagne.) . . . Which brings us to President Truman, who knows his turnips, and has proved it. Last summer he stated that July twenty-fifth was the day to sow turnips in Missouri. Farmer Miller, of Boonville, Missouri, took him at his word, sowed his turnips on the twenty-sixth (the twenty-fifth fell on a Sunday) and his crop was phenomenal. One turnip weighed ten pounds and measured eight inches around. . . . Which in turn brings us to pumpkins, by now an old story. "The Pumpkin and the Microfilm" scans like "The Yogi and the Commissar," one reader points out. And another says she no longer likes "pumpkin spies."

ACME

President Truman knows his turnips too.

●



It all depends upon the point of view. Those of us who have been fortunate enough not to suffer from tuberculosis find* THE PLAGUE AND I *a moderately lighthearted and sometimes really funny book. Those who have TB apparently feel otherwise. A patient from Bellevue (New York), who has been in the hospital for TB

(Continued on Page 21)

Fincastle's new book, "Interiors Beautiful," shows you how easy it is to make draperies and slip covers that are more beautiful . . . more distinctive. Book contains many other valuable decorating hints. Send 25c in coin or stamps. Address 1324 McHenry Street, Louisville, Ky.

Fincastle FABRICS
LOUISVILLE TEXTILES, INC.
LOUISVILLE, KY.

Yellowstone
via Gallatin Gateway

See Old Faithful, the Paint Pots, the glorious Grand Canyon.

Gallatin Gateway to Yellowstone gives you 85 extra mountain miles through the Montana ranch country.

The Milwaukee Road offers double daily service on the all-new Olympian HIAWATHA and electrified COLUMBIAN. Wide range of accommodations.

FREE YELLOWSTONE FOLDER

For your copy, write to H. Sengstacken, Passenger Traffic Manager, 909 Union Station, Chicago 6, Ill.

THE MILWAUKEE ROAD

For the Thrill No Other Radio Can Give You...

New Zenith "Twin Cobra" Tone Arms

...one "Cobra" for Long-Playing Records ... another for regular records ow—with the new Zenith* "Twin Cobra"—you can enjoy the new long-playing records, at their glorious best .... 45 minutes of high-ity recorded entertainment on a single disk! emember, too, that Zenith alone gives you the yment of genuine Zenith-Armstrong FM. These ous Zenith triumphs in tone can never success-be imitated, because they are the direct results of Zenith's more than 30 years of "know-how" in radionics* exclusively. There is no substitute for the skill and experience that go into every Zenith radio.

Naturally, Zenith welcomes—seeks—challenges comparison! Your Zenith dealer invites you to drop in soon and compare Zenith side-by-side with other makes. See and hear for yourself why no other radio—at any price—can compare with a Zenith!

The Zenith "Twin Cobra" record player is available in ten beautiful console models. New Zenith Regent, shown above, is richly finished in mahogany veneers. Has "Twin Cobra" Tone Arms, Silent-Speed Record Changer, genuine Zenith-Armstrong FM, Standard Broadcast radio, Radiorgan Tone Control, built-in Wavemagnet.

COPR. 1949, ZENITH RADIO CORP.

ZENITH •LONG DISTANCE• RADIO *®

THE ROYALTY OF RADIO*

Over 30 Years of "Know-How" in Radionics Exclusively
Also Makers of America's Finest Hearing Aids

The Famous Cobra* Tone Arm—New Way to Play Records! Invented and perfected by Zenith . . . reveals tone beauty never heard before, keeps records sounding like new for over 2,000 plays by actual test! "Twin Cobra" for long-playing records, too, now available in ten beautiful Zenith consoles.

Genuine Zenith-Armstrong FM—With FM aerial built in—just plug in and play! Gives glorious new radio fidelity—static-free—with quality and sharp tuning not possible with imitation FM sets.

PLUS Radiorgan* Tone Control—makes you master of 64 different tone blendings and shadings; Wavemagnet*—the most efficient built-in aerial ever known; DialSpeaker—in portables and table models, combines dial and speaker into one unit, permits larger speaker than in any other sets of same size; Consoltone*—exclusive Zenith circuit that gives table-size radios the big, rich tone usually found only in large consoles.

ZENITH RADIO CORPORATION. CHICAGO 39, ILLINOIS

IN AS LITTLE AS 3 MINUTES PRELL REMOVES DANDRUFF

LEAVES HAIR Radiantly SOFT, Radiantly SMOOTH!

P-R-E-L-L spells shining radiance—because Prell's the *Radiant*Creme* shampoo that's different . . . emerald-clear for sparkle!

Doctors' examinations proved that Prell—with its exclusive formula and patented cleansing ingredient—removes embarrassing dandruff in as little as 3 minutes! And your hair is so radiantly clean after Prell! Sparkling! Dazzling! More radiant than the finest soap shampoo—cream or liquid. You'll be thrilled with how manageable your Prell-washed hair is too—it's silken-soft yet has plenty of "body." And Prell goes farther than any other known shampoo, because it's more concentrated. No messy jars or breakable bottles either—get a large tube of Prell today!

Created by Procter & Gamble

Mountains of rich, cleansing lather from such a tiny bit of Prell! And that handy tube means no liquid to run down into your eyes!

*T. M. REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

ON A PEDESTAL

GOTHAM GOLD STRIPE
REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.
BEAUTIFUL STOCKINGS

The GOLD-STRIPE tells the story!

It identifies ADJUSTABLES*, made exclusively by Gotham. These famous long stockings adjust to fit every leg, short, medium, long.

Caprice...a muted beige, wonderful with navies, browns, reds, purples, pastels.

GOTHAM HOSIERY COMPANY, INC.
200 MADISON AVENUE, NEW YORK 16, N. Y.
GOTHAM HOSIERY COMPANY OF CANADA, LTD.
DOMINION SQUARE BUILDING, MONTREAL

GOTHAM HOSIERY COMPANY, INC.—DEPT. LHJ3
200 MADISON AVENUE, NEW YORK 16, N. Y.

I would like to buy the stockings illustrated "On A Pedestal." Please send me, through a local store,.....pairs Gotham Gold Stripe Nylon Adjustables* in 45 gauge, 30 denier CAPRICE, Style 4365, at $1.65 a pair. My size is..... I enclose Check ☐ or Money Order ☐. (Don't send stamps.)

NAME_____

ADDRESS_____

CITY_____ STATE_____

Coupon orders filled only in U.S.A.

*REG. U. S. PAT. OFF. PAT NOS 1728924-1824636

(Continued from Page 18)

for eight months, says that she and the other girls find life in a sanatorium "much more fun" than* Mrs. MacDonald *describes it. "TB isn't as bad as all that," she says, "take it from me."

•

It's good to read about the gentle side of humankind. Not long ago a former marine, who lost his sight at Okinawa, went to a public sale of houses in Jersey City, led there by his seeing-eye dog. At least 500 people were on hand to bid on the houses, and when a six-room frame house was put up on the block at $2500, half a dozen persons stood up to bid. When the veteran rose to his feet, however, unaware of the others, and entered the minimum bid, they were silent. When the gavel fell the house was knocked down to the blind man.

•

THE LUNGFISH AND THE UNICORN, by Willy Ley, has been out some time, but it is dateless. And it is good fun, intellectually speaking. It answers all sorts of questions and disposes of many a myth. Were there ever giants? Were there unicorns? Are there still dinosaurs? (The answer to this one is, surprisingly, probably yes!) Mr. Ley rummages through what he calls the zoological "attic"—Australia and New Zealand—where creatures got left over from millenniums past. The lowest in laziness are the lungfish. When the weather gets too warm and dry for comfort where they live, the lungfish go into "estivation" (opposite of hibernation). They form a kind of skin around their rolled-up eel-like bodies, and a layer of caked river mud around that skin. In this condition they just wait. They wait until water comes and dissolves the mud cake.

•

Willy Ley was once wrong, we're told in a mag. article; Life was wrong; this column was wrong: the Teddy bear was not inspired by the Australian koala, but by a wooden, carved Swiss bear. The original Teddy was named after Theodore Roosevelt and wore a pince-nez. He was created at Lansdowne, Pennsylvania, in the book, THE ADVENTURES OF THE ROOSEVELT BEARS, by Seymour Eaton, whose daughter puts us straight. Unfortunately, the book is out of print.

•

The giraffe, which has no vocal cords, talks with his tail. He is faster than a horse, can go longer without water than a camel and can see backward without turning his head. What, in fact, has a shmoo that a giraffe hasn't got? To know the answer, read THE LIFE AND TIMES OF THE SHMOO, by cartoonist Al Capp, or go read L'il Abner, or better yet, forget we ever said a word about the whole thing.

FROM THE LIFE AND TIMES OF THE SHMOO, BY AL CAPP, PUBLISHED BY SIMON AND SCHUSTER. COPYRIGHT, 1948, BY CAPP ENTERPRISES, INC.

Li'l Abner and shmoos.

you see

Paradise Shoes

in the smartest places—on the best-dressed young sophisticates.

Enjoy the long wear and good fit of this elegant footwear—
and get so much fashion
at such practical prices!

Nominee

Viking

Breeze

Most styles $12.95 and $14.95

See these and other Spring Paradise fashions at leading stores everywhere or write for the name of your nearest Paradise dealer. Brauer Bros. Shoe Co., St. Louis, Mo.

Paradise Shoes

Snap!

Dee-licious!

CRISP!

Kellogg's RICE KRISPIES

SNAP! POP!

Kellogg's RICE KRISPIES

KIDS' FAVORITE! We asked thousands of children their favorite ready-to-eat cereal. Most wanted RICE KRISPIES, those swell pops that go snap-crackle-pop in milk! Help 'em to better breakfasts from the Regular Size!

Kellogg's RICE KRISPIES | Kellogg's CORN-SOYA SHREDS | Kellogg's PEP | Kellogg's KRUMBLES | Kellogg's CORN FLAKES

Kellogg's VARIETY 10 Packages 7 Cereals

Choose the one you love the best: Kellogg's Corn Flakes, Rice Krispies, Pep, Shredded Wheat, Bran Flakes, Krumbles, Corn-Soya.

Rice Krispies is a trademark (Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.)

RICE KRISPIES—one of Kellogg's all-star VARIETY PACKAGE favorites!

Watch folks get hungry for a better breakfast when you bring on Kellogg's VARIETY PACKAGE! 7 different, delicious cereals in 10 generous boxes—your choice of nourishing corn, soya, wheat, or rice—flaked, shredded 'n' popped. ALL KELLOGG-FRESH. All "real good food" that makes breakfast a bright-start meal. Most popular assortment of all, because . . .

Crackle! Pop!

MOTHER KNOWS Kellogg's BEST!

PUBLIC AFFAIRS...
Service Station

Community Housekeeping

By MARGARET HICKEY

"I CANNOT honestly join the average club group—to discuss other people's children or to listen to book reviews. Not that I find fault with these things. But I need something to hold on to—to work toward—for inspiration." A young mother wrote this to us just recently. From a mother of grown children comes this: "I have more time to devote to clubwork than ever before. I want that time to count for something. Please tell me how my club can do worth-while work for the community." These letters are typical of many others.

Thoughtful women are concerned with the problems of their towns, their states and their nation. They want desperately to feel that they, as individuals, can be effective in bringing about needed improvements.

There isn't a community in the country which doesn't have some civic problem crying for solution. The needs vary, of course. Steelville needs a library. Morristown needs a recreation center. Madison City needs a better high school. Women interested in good citizenship want to work.

"But what can a lone woman do?" We get this question over and over. The answer isn't difficult. The first step to take is this: study the needs of your (Continued on Page 103)

JUST two years ago in this issue, the JOURNAL introduced to readers its newest department. Christened the "Public Affairs Department," this editorial infant was dedicated to proving that community life can be strengthened through the co-operative efforts of the individual citizen and organizations, public and private. The department was designed to help the club group advance from the fringe of effectiveness to the center of practical participation in community life.

The Public Affairs Department said, simply: "We will help you to volunteer again—your leadership, your interest and your skill—in the battle ahead for a decent and peaceful world."

The editorial youngster has grown. It's time to make a report on our efforts to encourage better community housekeeping and greater individual responsibility on the part of every citizen.

This is not a story with complicated charts and statistics. It is a simple tale of individual progress in community participation and group strength through agency co-operation. The two years have been exciting, rewarding years for everyone who has had a part in editing the Public Affairs Department.

We started with the conviction that good things accomplished in one community should be shared with other communities; that a tried and successful plan would make similar progress easier for another community in need. Our first step was to seek out effective community planning, to find out the combination of circumstances that made them work so successfully, to study these patterns and, finally, to present one each month to our readers. From the laboratory of the community itself have come our discoveries. Great national agencies and readers in out-of-the-way places—over 3000 organizations and individuals—have written us of the ways and means they were using to make their towns better places in which to live. (Continued on Page 103)

Public Affairs Editor Margaret Hickey has traveled over 100,000 miles in two years, visiting scores of communities and investigating their programs. She presents one program each month to Journal readers.

Here's what makes

Toll House Cookies

So Excitingly Different

They're chock-full of delicious morsels of NESTLÉ'S Semi-Sweet Chocolate... that stay WHOLE in baking!

Yes, every bite of crisp, crunchy, golden-brown Toll House Cookies contains delicious whole morsels of Nestle's Semi-Sweet Chocolate. That's what makes them so rich and good—so deliciously different—so tantalizingly tasty. Wonderful for dessert, for between-meal snacks, and a real party treat!

EASY TO MAKE

BAKE IN 12 MINUTES

AMERICA'S FAVORITE!

Make QUICK FUDGE, too

It's so easy to

At Your Grocer's

RECIPES for Toll House Cookies and Quick Fudge on back of package.

Reference Library

STORK CORNER

SWEET, new babies should have dainty little garments with every stitch made by hand. It's easy and it's fun with the patterns listed below. There are also ideas for the preschool group. And for the new mother, the JOURNAL offers helpful booklets covering the baby's care from conception through two years.

BABY'S CARE

2383. BEFORE THE BABY COMES. A handbook for the expectant mother, with information on signs of pregnancy, care of the prenatal baby, preparing for the baby, diet, exercises and after-care of the mother. 25c.

1345. OUR BABIES. A complete reference booklet on the care of the baby during the first two years. This booklet is used as a supplement to the monthly booklets listed at right. 25c.

MONTHLY BOOKLETS ON BABY CARE: First series: Eight booklets, one each for the baby's first eight months. The complete set: 50c. Second series: Seven booklets covering the care of the baby from the ninth month through the twenty-fourth month. The complete set: 50c.
NOTE: We do not break sets.

1346. A DOCTOR'S FIRST DUTY TO THE MOTHER. A booklet on breast feeding. 6c.

BABY'S WARDROBE

For the Very Young:

1907. KNITTED SACK AND BOOTEES. Cardigan-type sweater. Use a color-flecked yarn to make this matching set. 10c.

1908. KNITTED SLIPOVER ROMPER. Slips on over head, snaps together at crotch. Has long sleeves, ribbing around neck, sleeves and waist. 10c.

1910. KNITTED SLIP-ON SWEATER FOR BABIES. Size: 1 year. Buttons on the shoulders, has embroidered detail on front. 10c.

1911. INFANT'S STRIPED SWEATER. A knitted cardigan with a V-neckline. Make it in blue and white or pink and white. 10c.

1912. KNITTED SOAKERS FOR BABIES. To be slipped on over diapers. Drawstring waistline ties in front. 10c.

1915. KNITTED CARRIAGE ROBE. A bulky, easy-to-knit cover. The edge is bound with satin ribbon. 10c.

1975. FLANNEL BABY BOOTEES. Make one side in pink, the other in blue. Bootees can be worn with either side out. 10c.

2064. INFANT'S SET TO KNIT. Infant's size only. Includes sack, cap, longer bootees, thumbless mittens. 10c.

2066. INFANT'S KNITTED SURPLICE SWEATER. To make in 6-months or 1-year size. Right front crosses over left and buttons at left waist. Pattern stitch. 10c.

2067. OUTDOOR SET FOR INFANTS. Knitted double-breasted sweater, helmet cap, long leggings with feet. Size: 1 year. 10c.

2143. KNITTED CARDIGAN SWEATER. In raised pattern to give checked effect. Ribbing at waist, neck and sleeves is solid color. 10c.

2144. CARRIAGE ROBE to match sweater No. 2143. Carriage robe is also done in crossbar design. Also knitted. 10c.

2145. KNITTED SWEATER. Cardigan style. For sizes 6 months, 1 and 2 years. No pattern design. 10c.

2146. LEGGINGS WITH FEET, to match No. 2145. Leggings have drawstring at waist and at ankle. 10c.

2147. HELMET AND MITTENS to match No. 2145. Helmet has ribbing around entire face opening. Pull-over type. 10c.

2150. BOY'S RIB-STITCH SWEATER AND SHORTS. Short-sleeved sweater has round neck. Shorts have drawstring waist. 10c.

2438. NIGHTY. To make from soft flannelette. Ties in back. White featherstitching detail on front. Lace trims sleeves and neck. Approximately 26 inches long. 15c.

2439. WRAPPER, BONNET AND BLANKET. Makes a complete set with No. 2438. Trimmed with tiny satin bowknings and dainty embroidered flowers. 15c.

For Little Girls:

1913. BROTHER-AND-SISTER SET. Knitted suspender dress, 2 to 2½ years. Matches No. 1914. 10c.

2142. GIRL'S CROCHETED BATHROBE. Shell-stitch design. Tiny collar, two pockets. Sizes: 2, 3 and 4. 10c.

2266. LITTLE GIRL'S APRON. Matches MOTHER'S APRON, No. 2265. Has sash ties and gathered pocket. Sizes: 4, 6, 8 and 10. Each pattern 15c.

2282. KNITTED CARDIGAN. Sizes: 2, 4 and 6. Lazy-daisy embroidering trims neckline. 10c.

2285. LITTLE GIRL'S KNITTED SWEATER. Long-sleeved pullover with doll's sweater to match. Sweater has crew neckline. Sizes: 4, 6 and 8. 10c.

2287. PLAIN CARDIGAN. Matches No. 2286, MOTHER'S CARDIGAN. Sizes: 6, 8 and 10. Pattern includes directions for making a striped, V-neck slipover. 10c.

2334. PUFFED-SLEEVE DRESS. Saw-toothed smocking accents front and back of dress. One transfer included in each pattern. Tiny collar. Sizes: 2, 3, 4, 5 and 6. 25c.

2335. SMOCKED-YOKE DRESS. Entire round yoke is smocked. No collar. Dress hangs straight from yoke. Sizes: 1, 2 and 3. 25c.

2336. LATTICEWORK SMOCKED DRESS. Puffed sleeves, tiny collar. Front and back of dress are smocked. Sizes: 2, 3, 4, 5 and 6. 25c.

2337. SMOCKED-WAIST DRESS. Rows of smocking cover entire waist in front and back, also trim sleeveband. Tiny collar. Sizes: 2, 3, 4, 5 and 6. 25c.

2338. SLEEVELESS DRESS WITH SMOCKED TOP. A simple sun dress. Straps over shoulders. Sizes: 1, 2 and 3. 25c.

For Little Boys:

1914. BROTHER-AND-SISTER SET. Knitted suit for boys. 2 to 2½ years. 10c.

2061. BOY'S KNITTED STRIPED SWEATER SUIT. Can be used as separates. 10c.

2062. BOY'S KNITTED SUIT WITH SWEATER TOP. Contrasting top. Long sleeves, turnover collar. Sizes: 2, 4 and 6 years. 10c.

2148. BOY'S CONTRASTING SWEATER AND SHORTS. Decorative border on sweater. Sizes: 2, 4 and 6. 10c.

2152. ARGYLE SWEATER FOR LITTLE BOYS. Knitted cardigan. Chart for design. Sizes: 2, 4 and 6. Pattern includes directions for making plain shorts. 10c.

2279. KNITTED SLEEVELESS PULL-OVER. Cable-stitch stripes, V-neck. Sizes: 6, 8 and 10. 10c.

2284. KNITTED REEFER. Stitch is designed to hold shape. Leather buttons trim front. Sizes: 4, 6 and 8. 10c.

OTHER FEATURES

Items are sent free on request. They give title, number and price of all our booklets and patterns.

2005. LIST OF DEPARTMENTAL BOOKLETS. For your home, garden, beauty, entertaining and child care.

1695. SEWING BOOKLET LIBRARY.

1696. LIST OF JOURNAL HAT AND BAG PATTERNS.

2333. CHILDREN'S PATTERNS LIST.

2076. THINGS-TO-WEAR PATTERNS. Aprons, blouses, accessories.

1571. RELIGIOUS LIST OF KNITTED AND CROCHETED PATTERNS.

1752. HANDICRAFT-PATTERN LIST. Things for you to make for your home, your children, gifts or yourself.

When ordering any of our booklets and patterns, it you'll order by name and number. They will be mailed anywhere in the United States and Canada upon receipt of stamps, cash, check or money order. Do not send stamped, addressed envelope or Stamp Reader in all orders under 10c. Do not send stamps in foreign countries should send International Reply Coupons, purchased at their post office. Please address all requests to the Reference Library, Ladies' Home Journal, Philadelphia 5, Penna.

Her smile

IS OUR BUSINESS

The most precious things in life are health and happiness . . . the happy smile of bright-eyed youth speaks for the pure enjoyment and wholesomeness of all Welch's products.

For 80 years it has been Welch's business to bring to the families of America the purest and finest of fruit products . . . first, famous Welch's Grape Juice . . . then, jellies and preserves . . . now, delicious ripe fruits and nectars in cans . . . all expertly processed in the most modern plants with a devotion to quality that accepts nothing less than the best.

The Welch name is your guarantee that Welch's Grape Juice and all other Welch products are definitely better — now and always.

Famous for Quality since 1869

THE WELCH GRAPE JUICE COMPANY, WESTFIELD, NEW YORK

Making Marriage Work

By CLIFFORD R. ADAMS

Ph.D., The Pennsylvania State College, Department of Psychology

Wives complain their husbands do not talk enough—about the right things.

What's Wrong With Husbands

DIFFICULTIES arise in every marriage. Most wives have complaints, but 80 per cent of them do not create problems. Nevertheless, wives who accept the rules of the marriage contract do all they can to remedy or minimize complaints, regardless of their source or cause. For, as every successful wife realizes, it is almost invariably the wife who must take the initiative in any effort to improve the marriage relationship.

We have already presented a compilation of unhappy husbands' complaints about their wives—the qualities which, the men thought, had most interfered with their married happiness. Now it is the wives' turn.

We questioned hundreds of married women, asking them to list their husbands' faults. Proving that no husband—and no marriage—is perfect, even the very happy wives listed about four complaints each. However, their complaints were likely to be sources of annoyance or irritation, rather than of genuine unhappiness. But among the unhappy wives, the situation is different. Not only did they register more complaints (about eleven each, on the average), but they judged them more serious causes of trouble.

Here are the complaints most often thought by unhappy wives to have interfered with their married happiness:

Our marriage is less happy than it should be because my husband:

"Does not talk things over freely," say 32 per cent of the unhappy wives.

"Is impatient," say 25 per cent.

"Criticizes me," say 23 per cent.

"Does not show his affection," say 22 per cent.

"Is always wrapped up in his business," say 19 per cent.

"Is quick-tempered," say 17 per cent.

"Is nervous or emotional," say 16 per cent.

"Complains too much," say 15 per cent.

"Is selfish and inconsiderate," say 14 per cent.

"Is bored by the happenings of my everyday life," say 13 per cent.

Note that three complaints—the husband's failure to talk things over freely, his being wrapped up in business, and bored by everyday happenings—all reflect the same basic situation: a lack of common interests and understanding between husband and wife.

Many husbands fail to realize how lonely a wife's existence can be. Often, especially if she has young children, her husband is the only adult she sees all day. No wonder she longs for "somebody to talk to."

An understanding husband will make it a point to discuss things—his business as well as the incidents of her day—with his wife when he comes home in the evening. If he and his wife have common goals, he will want to.

But the wife, on the other hand, should consider her husband's situation as well as her own. When a man returns from a day's work, he hasn't had time to read the papers, listen to the radio or attend to personal chores. If he is expected to romp with the children, dry the dishes and empty the garbage and the ashes before he can call his time his own, small wonder if he grows restless during his wife's recital of the number of buttons ripped off in the washing machine, or how the butcher mixed up the order.

Analysis of the wives' statements shows that the husband's impatience usually results from annoyance—because dinner is late, a favorite tool has been misplaced, or some such irritation. Irritability, like quick temper, is not a pleasant trait to live with. The tactful wife will keep excuses for such behavior at a minimum, and will try not to take it too seriously when it does occur. But if unwarranted outbursts persist, suffering in silence is pointless. Let him know how much it hurts; he will probably try to do better.

Criticism is mentioned considerably more often by unhappy wives than by unhappy husbands. Though some husbands are hypercritical, the wife's undue sensitivity may be at fault. The wife's "letting her feelings be hurt too easily" was the commonest single complaint of unhappy husbands.

Failure to show affection, often a justified complaint, may result from childhood training. But remember that it is harder for a man to differentiate between physical desire and affection than it is for a woman. This difference in interpretation is often the base of the trouble.

Nervous or emotional behavior is usually due to tension of some kind. Try to find the cause, and correct it, rather than worry about the trait itself.

Ask Yourself: Should We Marry?

One should be certain before announcing an engagement or setting the wedding date. Answer these questions with a straightforward "Yes" or "No."

1. Do both sets of parents approve this marriage?
2. Have you ever doubted his making a good husband?
3. Do you both think you want children?
4. When married, will you two live with in-laws?
5. Are your religions (and religious attitudes) the same?
6. Does either family have a record of two or more divorces?
7. Do your friends and his favor the marriage?
8. Are there changes in him you want to make?
9. Do your ages differ by less than three years?
10. Will you have to work after marriage?
11. Are you planning to be married in church?
12. Does either have difficulty getting along with others?
13. Is love your biggest reason for marrying him?
14. Does he have any specific habits you object to?
15. Are both of you in good physical health?
16. Have there been any quarrels during the past two months?
17. Are you now a good cook and housekeeper?
18. Is it hard for either to confide in the other?
19. Aside from technical training, are you comparably educated?
20. Is he still preparing for his vocation?

Odd-numbered questions should be answered Yes, even-numbered ones No. Most couples whose outlook for marital happiness is good have 17 or more correct answers. Even one wrong answer may be a matter of concern. A score of 14 or less is a warning to make sure.

If your husband complains too much, the first step is to make sure you aren't giving him cause. If he is genuinely selfish and inconsiderate, you have a real problem, which can be corrected only with the greatest effort over a long period of time. But before you convict your husband, make sure you aren't asking too much. Among wives we talked to who made this complaint, we found it was justified less than half the time.

Perhaps the most significant fact of all is that wives tend to list more complaints than husbands. One reason for this is that men, having more outside interests and contacts than women, are less dependent on marriage for their day-to-day satisfaction in life, and so less preoccupied with domestic problems. That is why we say it is your responsibility to initiate any improvement.

The Marriage Covenant

"I, John, take thee, Mary, to be my wedded wife, and I promise, before God and these witnesses, to be thy loving and faithful husband, from this day forward . . ."

"I, Mary, take thee, John, to be my wedded husband, and I promise, before God and these witnesses, to be thy loving and faithful wife, from this day forward . . ."

". . . for better, for worse; for richer, for poorer; in joy and in sorrow; to love and to cherish you, till death us do part."

IN these or similar words, millions of men and women have declared their solemn purpose of building a new life together. In its dignity and simplicity, the marriage covenant is an ever-thrilling affirmation of the promise and challenge of marriage.

Differing from all other agreements, the marriage contract binds two human beings in a single entity. This man and woman, having accepted the privileges of marriage, have also assumed its duties and responsibilities. Recognized by law, honored by society, protected by the church, their union is the foundation of their future. Their physical relationship is the expression and the symbol of their emotional and spiritual unity. Their happiness depends on their ability to fulfill their contract, in its express terms and in its profound implications as well.

To think of courtship as romance is natural; to think of marriage as no more than romance is to mistake its reality. By the terms of their own agreement, husband and wife are bound together, not for joy alone, but for sorrow; not only for better, but for worse. For any man or woman to embark on marriage seeking a perpetual idyll is to deny its deepest meaning.

Marriage is the most important legal agreement you will ever enter. Your marriage is your affair, but not yours alone. It rests upon the emotional relationship, delicate and difficult, of two people, but this relationship affects their parents, their children, their friends and the community. Society itself depends upon the marriage for continuity of the race.

The married couple as well as the engaged pair will do well to reflect upon the whole meaning of the marriage covenant. If you are engaged, ask yourself if you and your fiancé fully appreciate the significance, the privileges and the obligations of the contract you plan to undertake. If you are married, search your feelings and your actions to see if you are fulfilling your contract, in letter and in spirit. If so, you are participating in the richest of all human relationships. If not, observe this approaching Easter season by resolving to reawaken your marriage to new life and new spirit.

Do You Agree?

Is one too young to marry at age seventeen?

Yes. Even marriage at age 19–20 involves some risk.

Incredible! Just one application and your skin lights up and glows without a mask-y, artificial look!

FASHION PLATE BY REVLON

...the only cream wafer face make-up in the world!

There's never been a face make-up like "Fashion Plate"! After just one application, this wonder of a cream wafer magically changes your complexion...captures the clear, bright beauty of vibrant, alive skin. No muss with water...no fuss with a sponge. Just finger-stroke it on! New purse size 1.00...dressing table size 1.50 (plus tax). Right as Revlon!

COSTUME: LILY DACHE JEWELS MILTON SCHEPPS PHOTO RAWLINGS MAKE-UP BY DEL RUSSO OF REVLON ©1949 REVLON PRODUCTS CORP.

Time For Everything!

GOT ten minutes to spare? You haven't! I may be a wide-eyed greenie, but you'd have to give me a verbal double-take before I'd believe that out of twenty-four hours each day you can't find ten small minutes to call your own. You're a big gal now, old enough to keep track of dates and obligations on your own wrist watch; and learning how to budget time is just another way to prove you've grown up.

So let's take a look at what you and Father Time are up to these days. Out of most round-the-clock periods, a sociable Sub-Deb sleeps nine hours, spends six hours in school and has nine whole hours left to play around with. That means a couple of hours between sunup and breakfast, six hours between last class and shut-eye time and sixty quick minutes in the middle of the day for lunch, chattering with the gals and prettying up for afternoon classes. And what do you do with that extra time?

Keeping Time. Take all the old adages on time—the "early to bed, early to rise, oh, what a beautiful morning" stuff—add them together and you have the one solid fact that by setting the alarm clock just fifteen minutes ahead of your present get-up schedule, you can start the day right. In that extra fifteen minutes you can beat your brother to the shower, listen to a little wake-up music on the radio, give yourself a smoother grooming job and get a cheerful start on the day.

"Let-down time" (the bored and yawning period that hits you round eleven o'clock) really begins around breakfast. It takes a lot of food, enough orange juice, milk and toast, to start you really ticking, to carry you bright-eyed through to lunch-time. Isn't it easier to eat breakfast than to waste an hour each day pining for lunch?

How about a calendar in your bedroom to check yourself on what day and what's doing? Make it bright and decorative in a painted wood frame, or hang it, three months at a time, like pictures on the wall. (Just mount on cardboard, and hang, one month below the other, on double ribbon to match your color scheme.) And a small bulletin board, with notes on things to come and mementos of things past, can keep you up-to-date!

Too tired at the end of a bout with a history book or just a sit-at-home evening to go through the usual chores with cold cream and hairbrush? Then do last things first, by getting showered and into pajamas early in the evening. You'll feel refreshed and wide-awake and can keep at your work right up to shut-eye time.

Try doing that homework with an alarm clock right at your elbow, setting a definite time allotment for each subject. Spend thirty-five minutes each on three subjects instead of worrying about Vergil for sixty minutes!

Saving Time. Next to dreaming about Montgomery Clift, most of your thoughts at bedtime are spent on "what to wear tomorrow." To turn yourself out like a cover girl at eight-thirty, select a complete outfit in your head—or even lay it out on a chair—before you go to bed at night. And a skirt that isn't pressed by ten P.M. is likely to be just as wrinkled in the cold light of next morning!

Set aside one night a week, somewhere between homework and datetime, for a complete personal cleanup. Time for a shampoo, manicure and session with the ironing board that should last you through the week. You won't have to worry about "how do I look" for a last-minute Friday-night date, if you're neat and clean all the time.

Maybe you can find your blue sweater and three dozen other things filed away on the floor of the closet or under the bed. But you could find them even quicker, all tucked away in the bureau drawer where they belong. Clothes (especially "specials" like raincoats, evening bags and tennis shoes) should be put back in the right closet or drawer after each wearing, and schoolbooks won't get lost among your dad's mystery books if you keep the texts on a shelf in your own room!

You may not have discovered it yet, but the half hour before breakfast is just as valuable a work-time as the half hour after supper! Use all parts of the day—study history right after school, read that book report in the half hour before Sunday breakfast or right after lunch. Sew the button on your white blouse or darn that beige wool sock while waiting for your sister to finish setting her hair in the bathroom. These few minutes can add up to hours saved.

Do you have a diary, or an address book to carry in your purse? Then jot down on the back pages the things you must do each week ("Go to library for science paper"; "Write thank-you to Aunt Mary," and so on) and the time it would be best to get each thing done. No rigid schedule, of course, but just a "memo to me" notation to help you!

Making Time. Maybe you just have no time to yourself, with a little sister staring over your shoulder when you're reading Gone With the Wind or teasing you to "play with me" when you're trying to study. Then here's an old "kid sister" trick that may help you out. Set aside one special playtime each week and arrange a treat, such as the Saturday movie or a soda in the drugstore with you after school. Little Janie will spend all week just day-dreaming about the coming fun—and give you some time to yourself.

Many sharp characters "gain time" by setting the clock fifteen minutes ahead of the correct time, and keeping dates accordingly. You can just step up the clock mentally—and arrive everywhere five minutes ahead (then it won't matter if you are three or four minutes late). It will make you a great favorite with teachers, on that part-time job and especially with Joe, who never did like getting stranded in the living room before every date talking politics with your father!

Many teen-agers, especially gals, are plagued with housework and after-school chores. Have your mother outline a weekly schedule of help-at-home work for you (maybe then you can get Monday's ironing and Tuesday's dusting all done on Monday!) and a night-before list of the errands to be run the next day. With a little planning, you can arrange to pick up a loaf of bread at the grocery on the way home from school, instead of making the trip back!

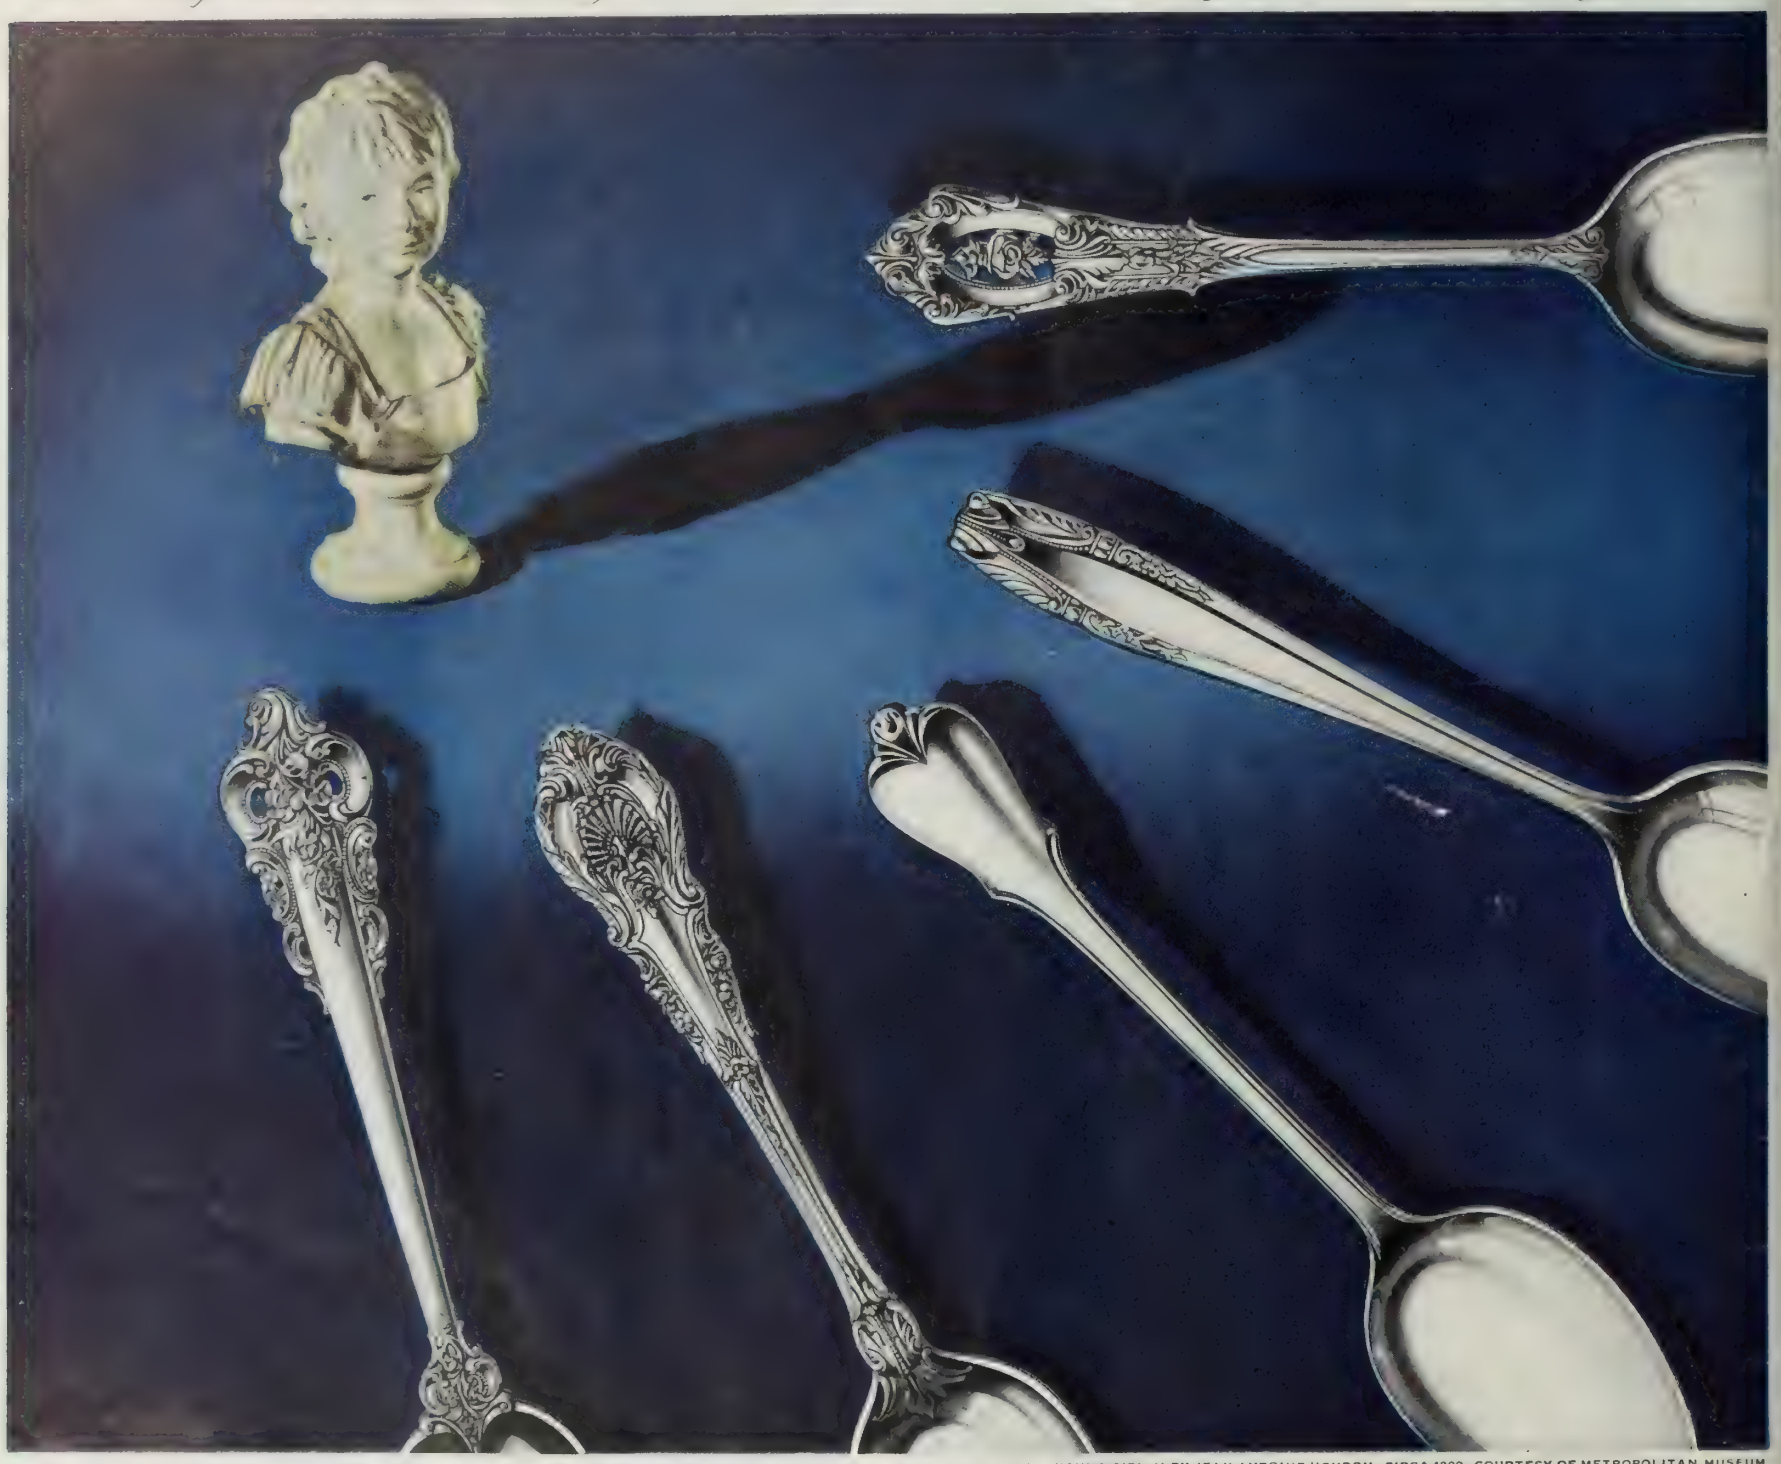
And probably the most important time of all is dead-line time on dates. Most teen-aged gals have a ten-thirty zero hour on school nights, twelve o'clock on date nights, with the dead line extended to the wee small hours of the morning for big dances or parties. But find out ahead of time exactly when your parents insist you be home. Let your date know that dead line early in the evening, so there will be no breaking up of parties, speeding home to get in under the wire or worry on your part to spoil the last hour of the evening. Many fellows have to get home early too! And one of the best ways to make sure you'll have a good time on a date is not to have to worry about what time it's going to end!

New!... Penaten in Woodbury De Luxe Cold Cream Cleanses Skin Cleaner

Today, for beauty as never before... a wonder cream that cleanses skin cleaner, brighter! Woodbury De Luxe Cold Cream contains Penaten—new miracle cleansing aid that penetrates. Reaches deeper into pore openings. Cleanses today's heavy make-up as no cream ever. Delightful—the clear, fresh radiance of your skin!

Glorious smoothness, too! Penaten carries Woodbury's rich skin softeners deeper, to smooth more effectively. Just one deep smoothing cleansing—just one jar of Woodbury De Luxe Cold Cream—will convince you! Penaten truly glorifies your skin!

Jars with smart pink-and-gold labels. Trial size, 20¢ to largest luxury sizes, $1.39. Plus tax.



Your cleansing tissue proves it!

If your skin's dry... New, Deeper Softening with PENATEN in Woodbury De Luxe Dry Skin Cream

New... quicker to velvetize your skin! Rich in lanolin's benefits—plus four special skin softeners. Now Penaten helps carry these smoothing emollients deeper—right into pore openings. Never before has a cream softened tiny lines so soon... smoothed dry skin to younger-looking beauty!

Only Wallace Sterling ... like Sculpture ... is lovely from every angle

SCULPTURE, "YOUNG GIRL," BY JEAN ANTOINE HOUDON, CIRCA 1800. COURTESY OF METROPOLITAN MUSEUM

Only Wallace Sterling ... like Sculpture ... has

Third Dimension Beauty

When you go shopping for sterling, you will find that these five Wallace designs, created by William S. Warren, famous designer, are among the most popular silver patterns in America today. That's because their designs are so distinctive . . . because they are the only silver patterns with the "Third Dimension Beauty" of sculpture — beauty in front, beauty in profile, beauty in back. Before you select your silver, hold a piece of Wallace Sterling in your hand and turn it slowly around. You'll find loveliness from every angle . . . beauty from every possible perspective. This sculptural quality of "Third Dimension Beauty" is found in no other sterling but Wallace . . . America's most sought-after silver.

Left to right: Grande Baroque, Sir Christopher, Grand Colonial, Stradivari, Rose Point. Six-piece place settings from $27 to $35, according to pattern.

WALLACE STERLING

COPYRIGHT 1949 WALLACE SILVERSMITHS, WALLINGFORD, CONNECTICUT • SINCE 1835 • WALLACE SILVERSMITHS, TORONTO, CANADA

Fifty Years Ago In The Journal

ON a blustery March day in 1899, Rudyard Kipling's six-year-old daughter died of pneumonia. In New York, the Windsor Hotel burned with the loss of fifty lives. Only a Bird in a Gilded Cage captivated Broadway. The new Marconi wireless was first used to save lives at sea, and this country had its first electrocution.

According to the JOURNAL, the newest spring colors in March, 1899, were china gray, French blues, and biscuit. As for bonnets, "Flowers, taffeta, tulle, net, quills, ostrich feathers and buckles" were seen everywhere, sometimes all on the same hat.

In this issue, Editor Bok announced the death of JOURNAL style expert Isabel Mallon, who, under the alias Ruth Ashmore, also wrote the immensely popular page, Sidetalks With Girls. Bedridden the last years of her life, Mrs. Mallon still wrote all her copy and sustained a regular correspondence with two hundred JOURNAL daughters and their mothers.

"From a matrimonial point of view, Idaho is the best state in the Union," announced the JOURNAL. "Eleven bachelors to every one unmarried woman."

"Chinchilla, stone marten, mink and ermine are furs for children," writes the fashion expert.

"Separate eleven eggs," Mrs. Rorer begins a recipe for Sunshine Cake.

"President McKinley is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church," Editor Bok tells a curious reader. "He abstains absolutely from all intoxicating liquors."

"Teach your boys to darn their own stockings, to sew on buttons, mend a rip, for they will not always have a woman at hand to do these things for them," writes The Home Dressmaker.

Reveals JOURNAL writer Harrydale Hallmark: "I have seen wildly enthusiastic audiences at the French opera in New Orleans pressing forward with bravos! and passing jewels and silver over the footlights."

"I doubt if there is any authority for the belief that tomatoes cause cancer," states cooking expert Mrs. Rorer.

"Black hose and stockings are worn by children at all times, although red goatskin shoes are pretty for a one-year-old."

"House painters and bricklayers average $20 a week."

Journal about Town

SELZNICK INTERNATIONAL

Hollywood-in-Central-Park: shooting the skating sequences for Portrait of Jennie.

Gossip about people you know, editors you like and what goes on in New York.

PEOPLE kept coming into the Workshop last summer, and even the winter before, telling us about bumping into Jennifer Jones and Joseph Cotten in Central Park, along Fifth Avenue, on Washington Square, or about seeing Ethel Barrymore at the Metropolitan Museum, or Lillian Gish at the Cloisters; always with a great movie crew shooting pictures, of course, and crowds of onlookers. And finally, the other day, we saw the whole thing at a preview of Portrait of Jennie, over at the Rivoli—all but the onlookers; certainly the tenderest love story ever filmed here in town, with the city acting its part to perfection.

•

In the National Needlework Contest here recently, Henrietta Murdock, as a judge, helped choose the two champion crocheters of the country, Mrs. Pauline Ploudre, of Silver Creek, New York, and Mr. Lewis Walter, if you please, of Mason City, Iowa. Miss M. purchased Mrs. Ploudre's prize-winning tablecloth, which took a year to make and contains 8500 yards of crochet cotton; but Mr. Walter, who's a locomotive engineer, wouldn't part with his bedspread, which he made on layover time between runs. Said in order to keep the crochet clean he must have washed his hands a million times.

PHOTO BY MARIAN STEPHENSON

Prize winners Lewis Walter and Pauline Ploudre, judge Murdock.

•

At a recent exhibition of the very latest in home appliances, Dorothy Selby was somewhat startled by her first encounter. The man gesticulating at the entrance, from whom she tried in vain to get some information, turned out to be a robot.

•

Noting in our Fifty Years Ago column a mention of the famous Mrs. Rorer, who was the JOURNAL food editor at the time, a reader from Livingston, Alabama, sends us a clipping from her local paper, recalling that fifty years ago a Mrs. S. C. Coleman down there was the winner of Mrs. Rorer's JOURNAL prize for the best Southern dinner costing not more than $1 for four persons, and believe it or not, here is the menu: Southern gumbo, Beef à la Daube, fricassee of turnips, stuffed squash, pickle, chicken fried in batter, light bread, corn bread, lettuce-and-beet salad, cakes, strawberries and cream, and coffee.

•

A friend of Hugh Kahler's has a son of fourteen, an expert mechanic and mad about cars, but too young to get a driver's license, who, out of his savings from fixing lawn mowers and washing machines, bought himself a little power snowplow that arrived, by a lucky break, the day before the winter's deepest snowfall. Before the snow had gone, the plow had paid for itself, and now, because no license is needed to run a plow, he uses the plow to drive himself and his girl to the movies.

•

A large Belfast, Northern Ireland, department store has installed an elevator to accommodate mothers with baby carriages. . . . According to recent findings, 97 out of every 100 people tell lies at least occasionally, many of them regularly. Women "have a great facility for making their lies sound believable." . . . For a long life, try the Midwest. An insurance-company survey indicates that Nebraska leads the nation in longevity—the average man lives 66.25 years, the average woman 70.04 years, compared with a national average of 62.81 for men and 67.29 years for women. . . . There are at least 1,000,000 stutterers in the U. S. and several million hesitaters, mumblers, repeaters, and the like. . . . In 1948, 2,350,000 children started school, and in 1953 the total is expected to reach 3,450,000. . . . Marjorie Main, childless in real life, has 13 children in The Egg and I, and 15 in the sequel. . . . According to Kipling, "a woman's guess is more accurate than a man's certainty."

The out-of-work young actor we told you about a few months back, who eked out a living playing the real-life role of part-time maid for, among others, Dawn Crowell Norman's assistant, Leone Seastrom, and another girl who share an apartment, now has a part in a play, and his theatrical future looks fine. But he hasn't left Leone and her roommate in the lurch; he's produced another "maid"—this time a struggling playwright.

•

The latest books by members of the JOURNAL staff are Gladys Denny Shultz's YOUR BABY, a regally bound copy of which is to be presented to the Prince of Edinburgh, and QUEEN STREET STORY, a novel by Anne Paterson, who is Anne Einselen on the masthead, and who was presented with this cake edition, bound in white icing, on her birthday.

"Don't judge a book by its cover"—even if it is fit to eat.

•

When Donald Stuart told us about taking a short cut through Rockefeller Center recently, where he heard first one guided tour being addressed in Spanish, then another one in French, we began wondering how close these lofty buildings were to being Towers of Babel. Pretty close, it turns out. For it seems that among the many, many occupants there are thirty-one different nationalities speaking at least eighteen different languages, and goodness knows how many different dialects. "Why, in one office alone," our informant exclaimed, "they speak twenty-six languages—if you can figure that out." We couldn't, though it should have been easy. It's the Berlitz School.

Whose knowledge followed them about the town? Whose eyes would

WHEN John Jordan, who was editor and owner of the Tressady Courier, died, everybody wondered sympathetically what was going to become of poor little Allie. The old house under the hill, and the Courier, were all her father had to leave her. If she sold the paper it wouldn't bring enough to keep her for very many years; and of course, people said sadly, it wasn't as if anybody were likely to marry her, or as if she had any way of earning her own living.

The town was heavy with sympathy for a day or two, until the funeral was over; but something happened to the flavor of that gentle emotion when it was discovered that Judge Spencer had offered Allie a home with him. His daughter, Catherine, had always loved little Allie Jordan, and Catherine was far away in London, studying music. At the time of John Jordan's death she had just begun her work abroad and did not plan to be home for years. The judge was lonely and he suggested that Allie might come and be a daughter to him in Catherine's place. As soon as the news began to spread, people shook their heads and said it wouldn't do. In spite of his age, his dignity and his shining record for justice and personal austerity, the judge was a widower and a man; and in spite of her fragile health, Allie was a woman. A young woman, and, some thought, rather a pretty little thing—certainly a nice little thing—in a wistful, delicate way. No, it wouldn't do.

Of course, Allie would go. What girl wouldn't jump at the chance of living in the judge's beautiful house, surrounded by all the comforts money etray what they needed most to hide? by Frances Shelley Wees

ILLUSTRATED BY AL PARKER

Allie perched on the hammock and looked at Danny. She felt tired and as if she might be going to cry.

would buy? Yes, the girl would go. Spines stiffened at the thought, and gossip began to accumulate like dregs in vinegar, out of nothing.

It wasn't gossip that stopped Allie from accepting the judge's invitation. She had plans of her own, that was all; plans made carefully with her father over the last year or two when he knew there wasn't much longer for him. She explained her plans to the judge and thanked him, quietly and gravely, without saying very much; but in the bottom of her thinking, like a diamond in deep water, was her gratitude.

Her plans were very simple and easily carried out. When her father died she bought three big comfortable down cushions from old Mrs. Slocum, tucked them into her father's round-backed editor's chair, and sat down.

She had been sitting there for five years. She was sole owner and editor of the Tressady Courier, and she got along very well. The only change she had made was to abolish the editorial column. Otherwise, the doubtful businessmen discovered, the paper was her father's paper; a little neater, perhaps—John Jordan having been the fiery type and not always given to tying up loose ends—the proof a little more carefully read, with more consideration for the spelling of people's names and the finer discriminations of human relations.

The paper was slightly more progressive in its general topics from year to year, but it didn't change quickly enough to frighten anyone. Little Allie Jordan had, after all, been

(Continued on Page 147)

Clinton Street in Doylestown is like other American streets where the average is five persons per family and $3400 yearly.

Busy housewives do not punch a time clock before starting to work. For them the quitting whistle never blows and no one counts their overtime hours.

Around the clock on Clinton Street

PHOTOGRAPHS BY ESTHER BUBLEY

IDLE WOMEN . . . WHERE ARE THEY?

by BETTY HANNAH HOFFMAN

MANY people say that American women are spoiled and idle. Modern gadgets have banished the drudgery of housekeeping, they claim, leaving women restless and discontent, with hours of idleness on their hands. Is this true? The JOURNAL determined to find out.

We chose a typical American neighborhood in the typical American town of Doylestown, Pennsylvania, and went ringing doorbells to see how twenty housewives actually spent their days. In four solid days of interviewing, mostly on North Clinton Street, this reporter did not find a single housewife, at any hour of the day, doing nothing.

Take the case of Mrs. Jon Pomrinke, a red-headed registered nurse, wife of a schoolteacher, who cares for a girl of 5½, a boy of 1½, and a bed-ridden invalid of 74. Mrs. Pomrinke rises at 7:15, fixes her husband's breakfast, and, while he is eating, prepares the children's food. She sits down to eat with daughter Judy, feeds the infant in his high chair, then fixes a tray to take upstairs to her invalid father-in-law. After kissing her husband good-by, she runs up with the tray, then downstairs to do the dishes and dress Judy for outdoors. Then she carries the baby up to the bathroom and straightens the patient's room. Her father-in-law has only one leg and a bad heart and requires trays, bedpans and entertainment, since he doesn't read and dislikes listening to the radio.

Marion Weiner

After a morning of house cleaning, Mrs. Pomrinke fixes the baby a soft-boiled egg at 11:30, makes sandwiches for Judy, and runs up with a milk-toast tray for the invalid. Her husband then arrives for lunch, and while he eats she dresses the little girl for afternoon kindergarten, finally sitting down to a solitary lunch herself. After cleaning up the dishes, she gives the patient a bedpan, puts the baby on the toilet and into his bed for a nap. At 5 o'clock it's time

Irene Braznock

Keeping baby daughter dry and happy takes much of young Mrs. David Good's time.

Mrs. Kohler has two boys to feed and keep clean. She washes every other day, but doesn't iron sheets or towels. "Ironing drives me crazy."

When there are five kids, ages 2 to 10, to feed and care for, time flies. Mrs. Nyce's lunch gets cold while she helps the youngest.

Mrs. Tomlinson has never had a week's vacation. She never lies down in the daytime, but says she "thinks of it often."

to start supper—three different meals again. The dishes are left in the sink while she plays with the children a bit. Then the baby gets a bath, the patient a back rub, bath and bedpan, and Judy gets put to bed with a story. Then more dishes, and time to start the ironing.

Virginia Bowman

Mrs. Pomrinke's husband gives her a big hand on Saturdays. She hires a baby sitter to watch the children while Mr. Pomrinke does the big family wash in the machine and she hangs it on the line.

Most of North Clinton Street housewives are up at 7 A.M. and in bed by 10:30 P.M., a 15½-hour day. Thirteen of the twenty women never, under any circumstances, lie down during the day. Most of them are so bushed at night they can hardly put one foot in front of the other to go upstairs. "Some nights I'm so tired I could sit down and cry," one told me; added ruefully, "I didn't have my children young enough!"

Sally Pomrinke

Five persons is the average-sized family on North Clinton Street. It is a wide, maple-bordered street with houses set close together, with cramped porches, high-peaked roofs and an elderly Victorian air. Some of them are double houses, some are divided into apartments, and some—at the far end of the street—are newly built three-bedroom homes of cinder block with gay shutters. Most of the people who live on North Clinton earn about $3400 a year from trades and small businesses. They own their homes and all but two have cars.

I started my interviewing at 10 o'clock one Monday morning, noting the back-yard clotheslines already billowing with wash. Seventeen of the twenty housewives do all the family laundry, including shirts and sheets and towels and diapers. Nineteen of the twenty own washing machines (four of these are the automatic variety where your hands never touch soap or water). Eighteen have vacuum cleaners, fourteen own sewing machines, and eleven have pressure cookers. Seven women do one wash a week, six women wash twice a week, five wash three times a week, and two wash every day.

Barbara Leatherman

The two who wash every day are, needless to say, brides with tiny infants. One of these, Mrs. David Good, 23, taffy-haired, and pretty as a magazine cover, met me at the door of her three-room apartment in a trim tweed suit, nylons and brightly polished moccasins. The costume was enough to give her away as a bride! She took me right into her fresh chintzy bedroom to see the baby, who was lying in the sunlight on a pale pink pad. "She's six months," she breathed with pride. "A great piece of work, my husband calls her!" The baby looked enchantingly sweet and clean in a beautifully starched and ironed white batiste dress with pink smocking. During our interview, the bride leaped up to examine her daughter's diapers every ten minutes, accounting for the daily quota of thirty diapers on the back line (about three times the average number for a child this size, I would say).

Joan Burnside

Ruth Hafler

As well as washing, Mrs. Good cleans every day and is learning to cook. She spends her afternoons wheeling the baby in her slick gray carriage, or singing or playing with her. "It's all I can do to get the kitchen linoleum scrubbed once a week. How does anybody manage with more than one child?" she wailed.

Her sentiments were echoed by another bride, Mrs. John Washell, who has an 8-week-old boy. She had bedroom slippers on her bare feet and was ironing a stack of handmade baby dresses when I arrived at 4:30 in the afternoon. "I have thirty-five of these," she announced with a sigh, "and no washing machine." She and her carpenter husband and tiny son share one room, a bath and kitchen. The baby gets five feedings spaced every four hours, as well as orange juice, and she often spends an hour after each feeding getting the bubbles up. Between feedings there is the never-ending wash (Continued on Page 218)

In addition to housework for three children, Mrs. Lehn works regularly outside her home "to get things for my family." She has two girls and a boy.

You can eat off the floor in Mrs.' Warner's house. She gets up at 5:30 every morning and starts scrubbing. She doesn't use many worksaving gadgets.

Mrs. Huegel makes aprons to sell. She makes all her 13-year-old daughter's slips and dresses. "Kids cost so much when they get in high school," she says.

Mrs. Washell was a secretary, but with an 8-week-old baby who has 35 batiste dresses she works harder as mother.

Mrs. Young has a garbage disposer, washer and dishwasher, but none of these takes care of baby. That's mother's constant, happy task.

Mrs. Frick has three girls, ages 6, 10 and 11. When she gets a chance to sit, there is always "so much lengthening and shortening to do."

Four children under 10 make two big ironings a week routine chores for Mrs. Fairfield.

APPLAUSE OF THOUSANDS

By LAURIE HILLYER

Alone, in her own room, Alicia knew she would never be asked to play a harder part.

EVERYTHING is perfect, Hervey thought; it's June, I'm going to graduate from college and Chan is coming to lunch. She began to drift about the house, touching things lightly with the tips of her fingers. She did not know why she touched them; perhaps because they had their feet on the ground, they proved the existence of gravity. What could she do with herself while she was waiting for Chan? He had just called up from La Guardia Field, he would be here at one o'clock.

She touched the rose-flecked petals of a white peony in a black jar on the hall table. Propped against it was her mother's note: "Welcome home, Skip, in case you turn up—back before eleven." Hervey often came home unexpectedly on Saturday mornings if nothing was happening at college.

On one end of the table, as if her mother had left it there to take upstairs and forgotten it, was a scrapbook. Hervey opened it idly—she had not seen it for years. There was a newspaper picture of her mother taken twenty-five years ago as Rosalind in As You Like It. She looks like me, Hervey thought with the impact of complete surprise. Her mother had a Greek profile, somebody had once said. Have I a Greek profile? Hervey wondered. She studied the face framed by short curls and a little cap with a long feather; the wide mouth was vulnerable, the young chin was firm. "Miss Alicia Creel . . . senior play . . . captivating Rosalind . . . unusual talent . . . destined to win the applause of thousands." Hervey turned the pages, momentarily absorbed. "Alicia Creel Joins Stock Company. . . . Alicia Creel Ingénue in Broadway Play. . . . Alicia Creel Married to Hervey Francis Cavell." She turned another page; hoping to see "Mr. and Mrs. Hervey Francis Cavell Parents of a Daughter." But no, the book ended—there was nothing in it about herself.

Did mother mind giving up her career when daddy had polio? Hervey asked herself. She had never thought much about it. Here is a picture, she said to herself, of someone with a Greek profile who might be me . . . here is a stranger with unusual talent destined to win the applause of thousands and it's my mother. I'll show it to Chan, she thought—he's coming here for lunch today.

She began to sing. She brushed the peonies with her finger tips and then examined her rose-tinted nails; they were all right. She ran upstairs and looked in each room as if she were telling the house, every corner of it, that Chan was coming to lunch.

"Your house is like you, Skip," he had once said, "little and just about perfect."

She had never thought of it as little—three rooms downstairs and three rooms up. Since her father's death, she had anxiously thought of it as rather big and empty for her mother to live in, all alone, except for Nonie, who only came in by the day.

She had said to Chan, "I always wanted a house with a secret staircase."

"Maybe you'll have one someday," he had answered. "What else did you always want?"

"Oh, to go round the world."

"Maybe you will," he told her.

She had met him at a Valentine party. She had been sitting out a dance with a boy who had lost both legs in the war and she had seen Chan across the room, head and shoulders taller than anybody in it; he had a very young face for his broad shoulders and his height. Dance with me, she willed. Their eyes met. He crossed the room. His hair was like a dark helmet and his gray eyes had thick, very thick black lashes. Later he asked her to dance and they both knew that something stupendous had happened.

"I saw you dancing with Chandler Wilde, Skip," one of her friends said to her excitedly. "What's he like?"

"I don't know—I just met him."

"You better latch on—he's fabulous, his family own Chicago, he has millions, he goes to Yale."

Curiously, Hervey was not interested. Anything important about Chan she would have to find out herself or it would not be important. He asked her for several dates, and during the Easter holidays his mother invited her to New York, where the family was spending a week at the Plaza. With all her clothes pressed and her plane ticket bought, Hervey developed tonsillitis and the doctor would not let her go. Once when Mr. Wilde was in Boston he

(Continued on Page 105)

ILLUSTRATED BY HARRY ANDERSON

"Everything is perfect," Hervey thought; "it's June, and Char is coming to lunch."

NEW FRIENDS FOR OLD MASTERS

By JOHN WALKER
Chief Curator, National Gallery of Art

EXTRAORDINARY crowds are swarming to museums everywhere in America today. Some irresistible craving for art seems to have swept through the country. Does this mean that the Old Masters have taken on a special relevance and significance for us? Do these myriad gallery visitors really like paintings and sculpture, do they really enjoy museums?

Since the average person becomes diffident in talking about works of art, there are skeptics who conclude that curiosity, snobbery and conventionality explain this widespreading ardor for beauty. Surprisingly enough, a document exists to refute this conclusion. It is a visitors' book which was kept during the war in a reading and smoking room provided in the National Gallery of Art for servicemen and women.

At that time training camps and hospitals surrounded Washington; and soldiers, sailors, marines, Wacs and Waves arrived at the Gallery in busloads, or came singly or in groups between the trains and boats which were either taking them to Europe or the Pacific, or bringing them home again. Under the stress of intense emotion their shyness about art disappeared, and they wrote with unparalleled frankness about the collections and the Gallery.

Their comments, which run into the hundreds, are as remarkable as they are unself-conscious. They vary from the greatest compliment the Gallery has ever received, a tribute from a soldier who wrote, "It is the second most beautiful thing in the world, the first being my wife," to the surprising admission of another G. I., "I don't mind paying taxes now." Occasionally the familiar remark crops up, "Am already AWOL but it's worth it!"—a comment as old as war itself, but surely never before made in this context!

Sometimes the remarks are facetious: "Next to cantaloupe, Andrew is my favorite Mellon"—a sincere though curious accolade to the founder of the Gallery. But generally they are deadly earnest, even developing into discussions like the following: "So! Is this what we are fighting for? . . . No, no! This structure is too great a tribute to what should comprise only a small, almost insignificant phase of our lives. . . . Beauty comes to those who seek it," a comment made by Michael Diana, which brought forth this reply written beside it by a sergeant from Chicago: "Yes, Michael, beauty comes to those who seek it. And though it be a small part of our lives, insignificant it is not! Through an understanding reached by appreciation of what this building holds our lives will have more meaning."

Again and again these comments reveal a bewilderment at "man's inhumanity to man."

"I am exalted by the greatness of the creations of man. Yet how shamelessly and savagely he kills and destroys his own works," one soldier wrote. "Without a war we could have a National Gallery in every state," and "Only 15 million for this; 80 million for the Pentagon!" others noted. And there is one question so desperately relevant which the G. I.'s ask constantly: "Can the energy of war be diverted later to peace, art, religion, security? Can't we learn from art?"

For many of these servicemen, art meant a renewal of their faith in human beings. A Private Erickson, of Lincoln, Nebraska, sums up their feelings: "Mankind really is 'nice people' after all." Others seem to have gained a stronger belief in the potentialities of life. This they expressed in statements which range from the brusque notation of Joe Bush, of San Francisco, "Don't understand the fine points of art but it gave me a big lift," to "I have seen this evening things of splendor I never expected to see in my life," from Private Carver, of Afton, Oklahoma.

This new sense of joy fills the hearts even of sergeants, who are not supposed to have hearts at all. "Life is good, isn't it?" wrote Sergeant Doherty, of Milwaukee.

The comments are not merely the emotional outbursts of men about to be taken overseas to risk their lives. American soldiers and sailors wrote just as movingly of the meaning of art when they returned from the various fronts. Here is a characteristic comment from Lieutenant Bingham, of Pensacola, Florida: "Next best antidote for three years in the Southwest Pacific"; or from Arthur Lott, of Pearl City, Illinois, "From thirty-seven months of jungles to the rare beauty of art brings tears of joy from my heart to live again." Another serviceman, returning to Aurora, Illinois, wrote, "The beauty that is life—nothing shall ever destroy that," and Corporal Lindamood, of Roanoke, Virginia, commented, "Only in a free country of a free people can such beauty be conceived in the human soul. Who would not gladly give his life to preserve it!"

As I read through this extraordinary book I found myself sharing the sentiment expressed by a servicewoman, Miss Trarey, of Phoenixville, Pennsylvania: "I'm proud of America."

Why has art in recent years taken such hold on the public imagination? There is no doubt that the war (Continued on Page 196)

Thirty thousand people came to Washington's National Gallery of Art every day to stretch, duck and stand on tiptoe for a glimpse at the paintings by old masters. Their frank comments in the gallery's guest book indicate just how much art has come to mean to them in recent years.

THE MILL

REMBRANDT VAN RIJN—1606-1669

"Do I look that old?"
I was terribly flattered.

We Always Have Each Other

How would you choose—YOU!—between your best friend and your first beau?

By IRMA PHORYLLES

ILLUSTRATED BY JON WHITCOMB

NEITHER Sophie nor I had any dates at all that summer. We used to see each other every evening after dinner; either she came over to my house or I went to hers. We used to sit outside and talk about it.

"I don't know what I'd do without you, Soph," I would say. "Honestly, I'd go crazy. I didn't mind last year. I was too dumb to care about going out. I mean we went to the beach all day and if our folks took us to a movie or for a ride at night we thought it was terrific."

"Even I didn't mind," Sophie would agree gloomily, "and I'm a whole year older than you. Listen," she always added, "I'm going to be seventeen on September first. Seventeen, and I've never had a real fellow."

"Well, I'll be sixteen on September first," I would say, "and neither have I. And you're better-looking."

"Oh, Babe!" she would howl. "How can you say that? I'm getting absolutely fat as three pigs!"

Sophie weighed exactly one hundred and forty-five pounds, which was quite a lot for five feet three. But it was such a soft, pink-and-white plumpness, and I thought it looked so feminine with her shiny brown hair and light blue eyes. Anything was better than being skinny the way I was. I was a full inch and a half taller than Sophie, but my weight never seemed to go any higher than ninety-eight, so I had no figure at all. In shorts or a bathing suit I looked like a boy because my shoulders were wide, my hips nonexistent and my thighs didn't look any fuller than my calves. Besides, I was dark and sallow and my face was all angles. If anyone was going to get a boy friend, it would be Sophie, and whenever I thought about that I felt unbearably lonely. Sophie and I had been best friends for five years. We had told each other our secrets and our ambitions. I didn't want to be left out.

Of course we had a pact. If either one of us got a date, she would ask the boy to get a friend of his and make it a double date. Sophie thought of that. But neither of us got a date. We just sat the hot Long Island summer through, hardly going to the beach because Sophie hated to put on a bathing suit, scorning our parents' invitations, clinging to our homes—especially on Friday and Saturday nights, when it would have been disgraceful to be seen in the village without a date.

Once, one of the girls we knew from school had a party and we were invited. No escorts were provided for us, but we looked forward for days to that party; it was going to change our luck. We counted the hours away until it came time to go. We consulted endlessly on what we would wear, and what we would say and how we would act. We had our hair and nails done and we rested and we took bubble baths. We experimented with lipstick colors and face powders. We argued about what would happen if Gene Hay asked Sophie if he could take her home.

(Continued on Page 240)

public enemy number one

MENTAL

Like caged beasts, these women are locked in a typical day room "for exercise and relaxation." They get no exercise, but sit silently for hours. More fortunate inmates made their dresses.

THE room was enormous, yet they filled it. They stood, crouched, sat, moved, body to body, but there was no communication among them. Their eyes stared into space. Their feet shuffled restlessly on the wood floor. Their hands moved over themselves, picking, scratching.

In a corner a man did a slow jig. His lips moved noiselessly. He stopped, smiled. No one smiled back.

Near the center of the room a scarecrow of a man smoked an imaginary cigarette, blowing the invisible smoke toward the high ceiling.

On a bench against the wall, a boy with dark matted hair slid to and fro, silently, rhythmically. The two old men who sat on either side of him seemed not to know he existed.

Some were half naked. From others the rough gray clothing hung almost in shreds, ripped, torn, lacking buttons. A man with a fat stomach circled the room in a sort of crouch, his two hands holding the waistband of his unfastened trousers.

The smell hung over-all pervasive, unforgettable: the smell of filth sharpened with the reek of disinfectant.

Some had spent day upon day in this room for years. Some would never leave. Slowly, quietly, doing nothing, many of them became nothings. When they had any word to say, any sign to give of their humanness, there was none to hear them. One attendant with 450 mentally ill men in his care has small time for a whispered word or a gentle touch. Yet they were not so ill that they did not have some knowledge of where they were, what they were doing. They knew when they found the comfort or care they needed, when they found the kindness they sought. Those who grew well would speak of their memories.

Across the grounds, there were hundreds upon hundreds of others. The disturbed and fighty behind bars, the vicious alone in stripped rooms; the more alert working on bits of embroidery, rugs, paintings; the old, mumbling and nodding to one another. Many were women, their breasts shrunken, their eyes hollow, their hair lank and straggling. And across the land, there were thousands upon thousands more. Some in better rooms, some in worse—more than half a million of them, the legion of the lost, the legion of the mentally ill.

Who are they? How did they get there? What have they done to deserve such neglect?

PHOTOGRAPHS BY ESTHER BUBLEY

To the one person in every ten who will be a mental patient: Will you join in an effort to avoid your fate?

by JOAN YOUNGER

ILLNESS

Like normal human beings, these senile women enjoy a bright room warm with sunlight. They have comfortable chairs, a piano and green plants. A nurse provides magazines and other diversions.

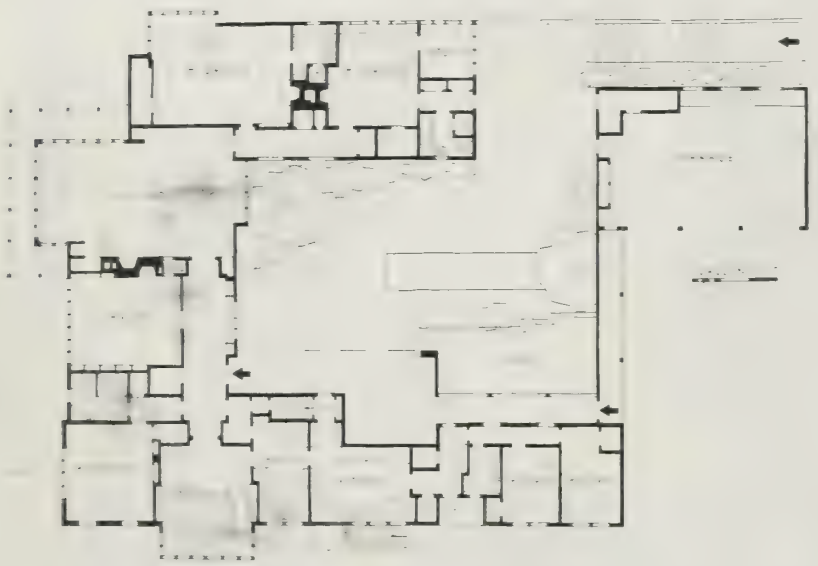
They are people, even as you and I. And there but for the grace of God might we go. They come from every walk of life, from good and bad homes; from poor families and from rich. And they come in increasing numbers. Every minute a man, a woman or a child somewhere in the United States suffers an emotional breakdown. Every two minutes a man, woman or child enters a mental hospital for treatment, for observation or care.

Mental illness is our No. 1 health problem today. Yet we still talk about it behind our hands, trying to pretend it doesn't exist, doing next to nothing to treat, study and prevent it. We spent twice as much last year on restaurant tips as we did on the care of patients in mental hospitals. We educated more than ten times as many barbers as psychiatrists.

Yet the striking thing is that mental illness does not strike like lightning beyond man's power to control it or care for it. Mental diseases are as curable as physical diseases.

A large number of those who will need hospitalization in the coming years can be spared lengthy suffering if society is eager to put the knowledge we have of mental illness to work. And the cruel, unnecessary, tragic thing about our present attitude is that it costs less in the long run to care for the mentally ill than it does to herd them into the crumbling rooms, the bleak, unattended buildings we trustingly call "hospitals." (Continued on Page 214)

●



"If the public wants state hospitals and outpatient clinics which provide proper care and adequate treatment for its mentally ill citizens, it can have them. Although the immediate expenditure will be increased, I believe the cost in the long run will probably be less. The wastage of human beings who could be constructive citizens and profitably employed could be reduced not only by improved treatment but by the development of preventive facilities. These, too, will cost money. In the last analysis, the responsibility for better care lies with the people, and the lawmakers who represent them. The JOURNAL is to be commended for beginning a campaign to enlighten the community with the hope that it might be prodded into restoring mental health to those who can be saved."

WILLIAM C. MENNINGER, M.D.
President, American Psychiatric Association

Perfection in Portland

By RICHARD PRATT

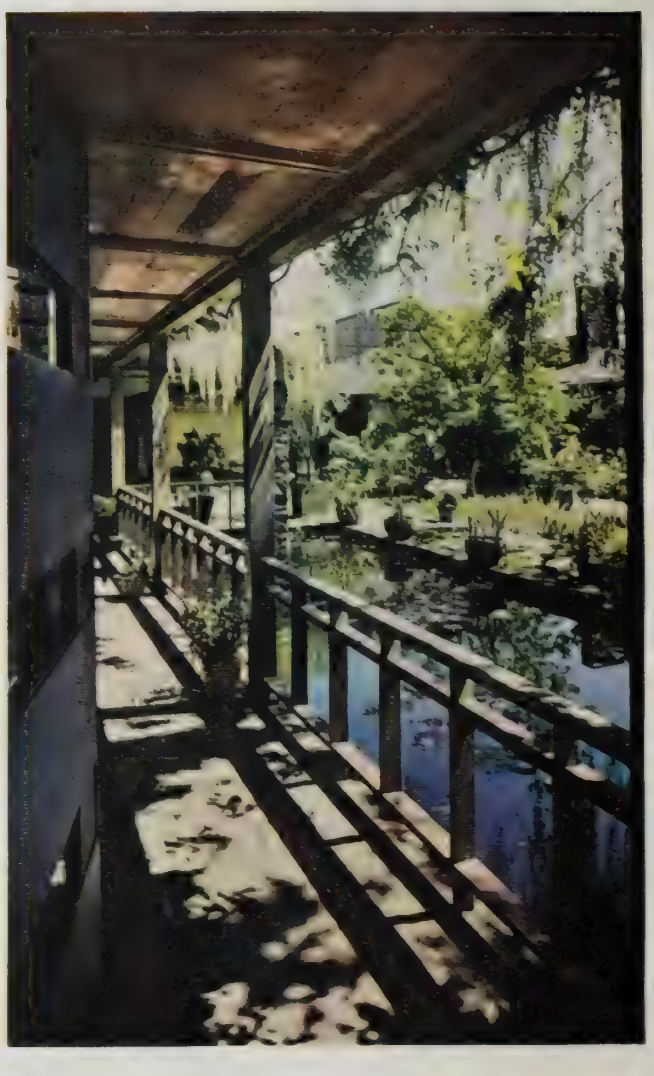
Architectural Editor of the Journal

The floor plan is fascinating to follow throughout the house, from garden entrance to service and family wings, reaching the climax of indoor beauty and outdoor view in the lofty living room below. The house as seen in its leafy setting, on the opposite page, despite its truly modern design, seems as mellow as a medieval manor.

The house that occupies the first three pages here and the one that follows on the fourth page stand within a few miles of each other in the lofty lush-green Oregon landscape which gives the residential outskirts of Portland a loveliness unique in America—a loveliness both houses enhance like carvings on a piece of jade. Both, in fact, do produce a remarkable effect of oneness with their settings—hilltop and woodland—having been designed by an extremely talented young man whose devotion to this luxuriant region is equaled only by the understanding skill with which he cloaks his carefully perfected plans in just the right local materials, and then sets off the finished product with native plants that the region provides in such rich profusion. Even the local climate, which for most of the year remains reasonably mild, while seeming to people from other parts of the country unreasonably moist, is given outside surfaces on which to work in its own wet way to beautify, weathering the young walls of natural wood to silvery grays and greens that in no time match the tones of the surrounding elderly trees. In other words, these houses represent regional building at its best; yet like all works of great honest architecture, anywhere at any time, they are bursting with lessons to learn, wherever you live. Few houses, for instance, have ever exploited the possibilities of wood so effectively and from such a fresh point of view, both inside and out, as you can see; bringing out its natural beauties in a way that is as practical as it is lovely to look at.

The first house happens to be fairly large, the second fairly small; but if you are looking at them with your own requirements in mind, which goodness knows is natural, I suggest that you consider the size in either case as incidental to the contents and the character. For each is presented here as a package of ideas, assembled with the greatest regard for modern livability, with an eye for the charm of the past, and for elegance and simplicity, all in one. You can begin with the simplicity, especially apparent as you approach the house on the hilltop.

PHOTOGRAPHS BY EZRA STOLLER



The House on the Hilltop

designed by JOHN YEON

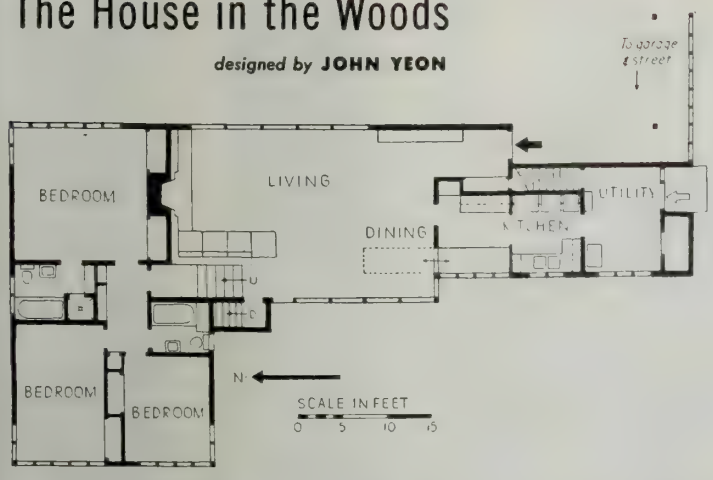
Low and cottagelike as you come up, the silvery weathered walls of unpainted fir along the side you see are completely windowless except for the panels of glass in the entrance door—the door opening not directly into the house but first into a garden, an exquisite outdoor room surrounded by house and alive with flowers. A covered way, draped with wistaria, leads along one side of the garden to the actual house door, the house gaining elegance as you go, yet never losing its simplicity. Even after you enter, and are met by the glow of the paneled walls, blond and lustrous in the great sweep of light from windows that rise to the paneled ceilings, you see the house as its own decoration—a perfect foil for furnishings that are their own decoration too.

The whole far end of the dining room is a glass-paneled living picture of Oregon's rich foliage forms outside, which is reflected on the dark polished modern table top. Chairs and table, designed for this room, are sharp color contrasts against the simple warm brightness of rug, walls and ceiling, with old candelabra in appropriate places for graceful accents.

In the garden through which you enter the house, and which the house surrounds, flowering trees and vines are reflected in the pool along with the sky; all providing a beautiful intimate view from living room and library, whose full-length windows at the opposite ends of those rooms frame the dramatically different and distant view of the mountains.



The House on the Hilltop

From this commanding hilltop the house emerges from the woods that guard the entrance, and on clear days takes in the great sixty-mile view across broad valleys to the snow-capped peak of Mt. Hood. The lawn is modeled to fit, as are the plantings of white-plumed Alpine snow grass, wild pentstemon, and the flowering native shrubs against the library wing.

The House in the Woods

designed by JOHN YEON

Again, within the smaller house, which stands in its pool of sunlight, the walls glow with the warm color of blond-wood panels, and with the light and outdoor pictures coming through panels of glass, all very simply comprising the sides of the house; creating ideal indoor backgrounds for modern furnishings mixed with fine old pieces like the Venetian bed and the grandfather clock. Looking here toward the bedroom wing, you can follow the floor plan down six steps to the living room, across to the kitchen with its table that slides out for dining.

Not the Marrying Kind

What do you do with a man who doesn't want to get married a

By WARE TORREY BUDLONG

BETSY stood by the window in her apartment and practiced being cool and controlled. She would see Joel the minute he turned the corner. Plenty of men were walking along the sidewalk, and from the window they looked pretty much alike in their topcoats and felt hats. Maybe this time Joel would look like any other man; nice, of course, but not—not so shattering.

The late-afternoon light was dull, and the buildings across the way stood brown and heavy, and the traffic jerked and tangled in the street. A man came around the corner. Just a man. Another man came around the corner, just another man. Then suddenly all the traffic stopped for an instant, stock-still and silent, and the sun flared out brightly, and the brown buildings swayed and steadied. Betsy breathed again, cautiously. Oh, yes. That was Joel.

She swung around and caught up her bag, glanced at her hat and lipstick in the mirror by her front door, and ran out to the stairs. If she met him outside, with lots of people around, she might be able to handle the situation. The thing to do was to stay calm, and not trust the emotional undercurrents. Only she wasn't very calm to begin with, and Joel wouldn't help. What could you do about a man who didn't want to get married—and who kept on proposing to you? Every time, just for a moment, she'd think, Maybe this time he means it. He had warned her how he felt about marriage; and yet he might change his mind. Maybe today —— And hurrying down the stairs wasn't helping her to stay calm.

She crossed the little foyer with the mailboxes, and swung the outside door open. Joel was coming along the sidewalk toward her. What was so different about him, different from anyone else? Little things, perhaps: the slant of his hat, the set of his shoulders, the way he walked, as if he were always going somewhere interesting. But that wasn't enough, not enough to explain what his appearance did to her.

His face was quiet and intent, and then he saw her, and the grin changed his face completely, and she had to grin back at him across the space between them. So by the time they reached each other it was a little late to say hello.

"You were watching for me?" said Joel. "I appreciate the way you tore downstairs to meet me."

"Don't bother," Betsy told him. "I just thought we'd be aloof and dignified if we met in public."

"You were wrong," Joel said, kissing her effectively.

Betsy felt that meeting Joel in public wasn't helping much. She took two steps away. He caught hold of her hand lightly and they walked on down the street.

"Where are we going?" asked Betsy.

"Well, let's see." He glanced at her and away again. "We could get married, and go to South America."

"No, we couldn't."

"I was afraid of that," he observed.

"What shall we do tonight?" (Continued on Pag. 252)

ee on proposing

He kissed her again.

"Even if you hate me, Betsy, you might as well admit we're in love."

ILLUSTRATED BY

What makes you Healthy?

Why do Midwest beauties snatch modeling jobs from Easterners? Something they eat, no doubt.

By WINIFRED RAUSHENBUSH

JERRY CUMMINS

YOU won't find them on your map, but across this great country of ours run two major health belts where, just as in the old legends of the fountain of youth, the women grow more beautiful, the men stronger, and the children as healthy as the day is long.

Many people have long suspected it. New Yorkers are continually [illegible] way the girls they call "the co[illegible]eas," snatch modeling jobs from u[illegible]ne noses of Easterners. G. I.'s got fed up [illegible] the endless paeans of praise the Texans directed at their state—and the way they proved they had reason. Statisticians mutter at the difference in average heights between the children of South Carolina and the children of California—and note that the West Coast model has a definite edge in stature over the New England product.

Now, science has proof that there is a geography of health. An analysis of the health examinations of 18,000,000 [illegible] men showed that the majority of the healthy came from a relatively small group of states—and comparison of this information with national health records by states proved it was not coincidence.

It was not until the war was over that the United States Selective Service began to study the men accepted by the draft. Prior to that there had been considerable distress about the millions rejected, almost half of whom were revealed to be malnourished. Now the spotlight was turned on the 6,000,000 men who showed either no physical defects at all, or else very minor ones.

All the forty-eight states turned out thousands of these grade-A men. But certain states of the Midwest and Northwest produced more than did the Eastern and Southern states.

Washington, Wyoming and Oregon got high billing among the ten healthiest states. Washington turned up with twice as many healthy men between the ages of 38 and 44 as the rest of the country. Wyoming rated first in freedom from mental disease; Oregon in freedom from tuberculosis. Close behind came Nevada, Utah and Idaho. Like Wyoming and Oregon, this whole region is low in defects from mental disease and tuberculosis.

A second prime health region runs in a diagonal belt from the Great Lakes to the Gulf of Mexico. It stars Wisconsin, Illinois, Indiana, Missouri, Kansas and Texas. Kansas rates first, Texas second as top producers of healthy men. In Kansas almost three fifths of the men examined in the draft were practically flawless. Kansas and Wisconsin also had fewer eye defects than any other states in the country.

What qualities does a state have to have to produce more healthy adult citizens than the rest of the country?

Prosperity and intelligence help. Money means better medical facilities and more vitamin-rich foods. Good schools, newspapers, magazines and books mean women who know their food values. But prosperity and intelligence are not enough. If they were, New York, Massachusetts and Connecticut would be superhealth states.

What the top-ranking health states of the Northwest and the Middle American health belt have got is middling-to-high prosperity and education, plus soils that range from better-than-average to the most fertile soils to be found in the United States.

Poor soils equal sick plants, sick animals and sick people. In Florida, small patches of land are so miserable that the children, cows and vegetables are all sick. The turnips suffer from iron chlorosis, the cows from salt sickness, and 80 per cent of the children from anemia. Though the sicknesses have different names, they all have the same cause: a soil deficient in iron, copper and cobalt.

The lesson of the draft acceptances is that good soils help to produce healthy men. Consider, for instance, the soils of the Midwestern health belt—studded with square red barns, velvety brown cows, green corn, pigs, farmers, tractors, golden wheat, cyclones and dust storms—the grassy plains from Texas to the Great Lakes.

The black Midwestern soils that produce our good high-protein wheat contain more calcium and other valuable soil minerals than any other soils we possess. The only other countries that possess large areas of this particular kind of black soil—known technically as chernozem soil—are Russia and the Argentine. It was the black chernozem soils of Russia, some of which are so deep as to be inexhaustible, that Hitler had his eye on when he invaded Russia. Our black wheat-belt soils are worth all the gold in Fort Knox. Their closest relation is the brown fertile soil of the corn-and-hog belt, which gets more rain than the wheat belt and is easier to farm.

What it means to live in a region of very fertile soils such as that found in the corn, hog and wheat lands of Middle America is well illustrated by the teeth of the children who live in Hereford, Texas. (Continued on Page 120)

If you ask me

By Eleanor Roosevelt

I am a woman about forty years of age and not bad to look at, have a college education, a good responsible job, sense of humor, good disposition, and am not aggressive or set in my ways. I have never had the opportunity of meeting eligible, unmarried men and I am craving a home and companionship. I enjoy cooking and making others happy. Have you any suggestions?

Your situation does not sound to me very desperate. It seems to me that at your age it ought to be possible to make opportunities for meeting eligible unmarried men. Use a little ingenuity in your business to make friends. It is not impossible for a woman to do some entertaining on her own, and to issue some invitations if she becomes friendly with people whom she meets either in the course of her work or in he course of her outside activities.

Our daughter left our home during the war to work in an airplane plant in another city. She became very much interested in the labor union there. One of the leaders and his wife paid a lot of attention to her, helped her get ahead in the union. They often tried to interest her in communism, but she laughed at them. One night they told her of a speech to be made which they knew would interest her. Arriving at the hall, she found she could not get in without signing a membership card. They told her to go ahead, she could have the card destroyed after the meeting. She is now an ardent communist. All this happened four years ago. She has since married and her husband was trained in the school of communism in New York. We were a happy, close family until this happened, but they cannot help showing their contempt for us since they have finally given up trying to convert us. They very often express their hatred of the middle class. Well, we are of the middle class. How are we to meet this situation?

I think the situation that you describe requires patience. You do not want to have an open break with your daughter. If at some time she needs you, you will want her to feel free to call upon you. Young people are very apt to become ardent crusaders for ideals, and they do not realize sometimes that their ideals exist in their own minds and not in reality. Time, however, may prove this to them, and if I were you I should cease to argue. You certainly can rise above any contempt that they may show. You are the elders and you should not be touched by what the young ones may think. Have patience and I am sure that time will show that the real values are preserved in the long run.

Have you never felt the desperate need of birth control on a massive scale when seeing some of the hopeless, tragic and destitute peoples of the world? Do you not have a feeling of guilt at the delay in not helping these women when you stop to compare conditions in which your children were born and theirs? Isn't it just about agreed that the need for more space is the basic cause of war?

No, I do not really think that the need for more space is the basic cause of war. There are a great many elements that enter into the final difficulties which arise between peoples and force them to resort to force.

Letters should be addressed to Mrs. Roosevelt, c/o the LADIES' HOME JOURNAL. It should be understood that Mrs. Roosevelt's answers reflect only her own opinions, and are not necessarily the opinions of the Editors of the JOURNAL.

I have often felt that in certain conditions birth control might be a help, and it may be one of the answers to the food situation which scientists are trying to solve. I do not feel qualified to judge, however, what are the needs and necessities from the scientific point of view for the preservation and improvement of the life of the human being on this planet. Therefore I cannot say that I have the feelings which you suggest, nor the assurance that in one simple answer all the questions that confront us will be solved.

American history has shown that our government is great because it is a two-party government with each party making its contributions and constantly prodding the opposition to put forth its best efforts. Although your sympathies are understandably allied with the Democratic Party, do you not feel that the balance of power should shift at regular intervals?

I do not know that I would feel that the balance of power had to shift at any regular intervals. I do believe strongly in the two-party system for the reasons which you give, but I think the balance of power should shift when the people feel it necessary or advisable. That does not mean that any precise time should be laid down. It has always been evident that our people shift from time to time. For instance, we had a shift toward conservatism four years ago and again two years ago which affected many congressional candidates and local situations. In the last election that trend was reversed, showing that the swing goes on fairly often and is affected by the needs of the people as they see them.

REPRINTED COURTESY COLLIER'S

"My opponent is sadly behind the times. What does he promise? Higher wages . . . lower taxes . . . world peace. The very things I promised you ten years ago!"

Why does Article I of the United Nations Draft International Declaration of Human Rights read "all human beings are born free and equal"? What is the significance of the term "free" as coordinate with "equal"? Are you, as the United States representative on the committee, satisfied with this disagreement with our own Declaration? Do you not think that a comprehensive application of the truth "all men are created equal" to the West-East situation by the Western democracies would be a move toward durable peace?

It did not occur to me as United States representative that I was writing a document which was to agree with our own Declaration of Independence. There were seventeen other nations besides the United States represented on the Human Rights Commission, and there were eighteen governments represented on the Economic and Social Council and fifty-eight nations represented on Committee No. 3 of the General Assembly of the United Nations.

The Universal Declaration of Human Rights could not and should not be a United States or even an Anglo-Saxon document. It had to meet the needs of the expressed desires of many people believing in other religions and living under other conditions and cultures and legal doctrines and laws. The clause "all human beings are born free and equal" was of course a compromise clause. You must also realize that this document must be translated into five official languages and that such language must be used as can mean the same thing in all five languages. That sometimes leads to a change in the English language. One of the major difficulties arises out of the religious beliefs or nonbeliefs. There are, for instance, far more Mohammedans in the world than Christians. Some of us believe that all men are created equal; some may not; and when you work on an international level you try to come as near as possible to expressing something which can be accepted by all the people represented.

...rents brought foreign names fro... ...ntries with endings such as "... ... I think it would be much ... ...ped those useless endings. ...ld ... it legally without any trouble, or ... we have to go through court and ... ...arges?

I consulted a lawyer who tells me that it is not within the jurisdiction of anyone who is not a lawyer or a judge to tell you what you should do if you desire to change your name. I have known people who changed their names, but this question should be approached through the court or advice of a lawyer. I am sure the Legal Aid Society would give you this information free of charge or for a very small fee.

I have ... ...at you voted against "equal righ... ...legitimate children" at a United Nations meeting. If this is true, please explain why you did so.

There was a very active group in Paris who wished to have inserted in one of the articles of the Universal Bill of Human Rights the absolute equality of illegitimate children with legitimate children. The motion was introduced by the delegate from Yugoslavia. The article as it read asserted the equal rights of all children, and many of us felt that it was a pity to single out illegitimate children for mention, and we also felt that while illegitimate children should have, as is now stated in the article, equal social rights with all other children, there were certain rights which it was impossible to give illegitimate children under many forms of law. It is natural, of course, to want to shelter children as much as one possibly can, but my own feeling was that we had done something better in stating that all children had equal rights than in singling out any one group.

Fraidy Cat

By VAL TEAL

ILLUSTRATED BY ROY SPRUCE

MOTHER came softly through the back hall door into the living room. She looked carefully back around the door out into the kitchen.

"What ho?" father said, putting down his rummy hand.

"Sh-h-h!" mother said. "Someone peeked in the kitchen window."

"What!" father said. "Who?"

"I'm not sure who it was," mother said. "Maybe it was a cow."

"A cow!" father yelled. He ran out to the kitchen.

"Don't go out!" mother said. "It's dangerous."

But father had dashed out the door. We heard him talking in a loud voice to someone.

"It's Mr. Adam," mother said from the dining-room window. "His bull must have gotten loose. My goodness, I wonder how that happened?"

Father came back in. "It's O.K.," he said, "he didn't get on the lawn."

"Well, my goodness. Do we have to worry about that now? I thought that barbed-wire fence was good and strong. I'd never have moved out to the edge of the city if I'd known you had to be surrounded by animals."

"The fence is strong," father said. "Adam was leading Lemmy up the street and he got a yen to look in on you and he got away from him. You don't need to worry. He can't get out of that fence."

"Thank goodness for that," mother said. "Lemmy!" she said. "Names for bulls!"

"It's a cute name," father said. "Lemmy Adam. I wouldn't have thought Adam was that clever. Lemmy wouldn't hurt anyone anyway," father said. "He's gentle as a lamb."

"Oh, yeah! Have you heard him snort?"

"Snorting isn't dangerous," father said.

"He whinnied or something when he looked in the window," mother said. "He looked plenty mad."

Father laughed. "He's safely locked up now," he said. "You can relax."

"That's good," mother said. "I have to hang out the rest of the clothes. With that animal half a block back of us, I'd hate to feel I couldn't trust that fence."

"It's my turn," I said. "Come on, father, let's play." He was ahead and I wanted to beat him.

We started playing again and I got a seven of spades for my run and father laid down threes and then we heard mother screaming. We heard her dash onto the porch and we ran to the window. She was holding the screen door tight shut, her lean brown hands pulling on the hook.

"Go home!" she was saying. "Go home!"

Outside was Poochy, Wehrbacks' fat white poodle dog, barking great guns at mother. Mother stamped her foot in her red play shoe and her striped seersucker skirt flew. You could tell she was good and mad. At the kitchen window father threw back his head and held on to the window sill and laughed and laughed and laughed.

"Go on home, you little imp!" we could hear mother say, but Poochy only stayed there and barked, his whole roly-poly body shaking. I had to laugh too. He sure didn't look ferocious. He looked like a fat little kid in a woolly white suit who was down on all fours pretending he was a dog. Mother turned and stormed into the house. "That beast!" she said. "Whose yard is this anyway?" she said. "I can't even hang up my own clothes!"

Father was still laughing. Tears were running down his (Continued on Page 226)

...al-black taffeta with the trend-setting deep inverted pleats, four pockets, a patent-leather belt.

PHOTOGRAPHS BY BOYNINGEN HUENT

Pin-check taffeta, slim and slim-priced. Wear with a rose.

Today's Wardrobe . . .

IS SMALL AND CHANGEABLE

In these accelerated days when more and more demands are being made on our time and money and even the clothes we wear, the most satisfying wardrobes consist of a few well-planned costumes that can be put through a great many paces. For spring into summer we suggest a suit with a chameleon nature, a black shantung day and dinner dress, and a coat in color.

THE SUIT . . . will be slim and shapely. It will be—preferably—a gray mixture that takes naturally to any accessory color that you like. You could have two or a dozen blouses, changing from white piqué and blue chambray to silk shantung or polka dots in yellow, red, green, pink or navy blue. Its lapel pins could be gold or silver, its boutonnieres fresh field flowers, nasturtiums, garden pinks, primroses or geraniums. You could wear a close felt cloche or beret for March winds, a natural straw with a veil for April sunshine.

The shantung for day—straw hat, pearls and gold jewelry, chamois gloves, patent-leather belt. Silk shantung $45.00, rayon shantung $29.95.

DRAWINGS BY BODI

Black or natural shantung bag and natural raffia pumps, bright scarf—spring and summer accent for the shantung dress. Hand-sewn slip-on chamois gloves.

Sleeveless shantung without its jacket for the evening—with pearls, scarf, matching silk belt.

THE DRESS . . . a new kind of basic that makes more appearances at more hours th you have known before. It's a slender, sleeveless black shantung with a flare-back Think of it with a patent-leather belt and small hat for lunchtime; a silk sash and a big a wisp of a veil for afternoon; and with jewels, scarfs and flowers for dinner and eve

THE COAT . . . long and easy, and in a color you love—lemon-gold, coral-red, royal-b sea-green. A coat in color is not a difficult or an extreme fashion, but a gay asset to o clothes in basic shades. Co-ordinate the gold coat and gray suit with brown or burgu calfskin pumps, a felt cloche and saddle-leather bag. Wear it over the shantung dress w black accessories—suède pumps, suède or shantung bag.

This JOURNAL-selected wardrobe may be assembled literally, or may be u fashion plan for similar clothes which you may have or buy. The four m tumes shown here cost around $180.00. ★ By RUTH MARY PAC ight she had to make the choice no woman first a wife or a mother?

OR SHALER

ring finger hurt with the hard twisting of her hands. She must relax, stop looking at Joe.

She turned her eyes resolutely back to the guests of honor, Mr. and Mrs. Fielding, who had recently settled in the community. Amy had wanted to meet the Fieldings ever since they had arrived with their dogs, their typewriters and their scintillating reputation as collaborators on mystery stories. But now, because of Joe's performance, it wasn't likely she'd ever know them better. After this evening she might as well check the Fieldings off. During cocktails he had held them, like the Ancient Mariner, with a rambling, repetitious monologue, boring them even though Mabel and Biff would have briefed the newcomers on Joe beforehand. She knew the words by heart: "brilliant and erratic." The last word did it. But that was Joe's reputation. There wasn't a smarter lawyer or a keener mind in the county, or a more charming man, when Joe was Joe. But Joe in his (Continued on Page 129) off-one-shoulder evening blouse, mauve tie-silk...

FASHION

BY ALVIN HANDMACHER

Chameleon suit—with twin scarfs, red bag, brown pumps, straw sailor. Suit $69.95.

Gold-silk shantung collar, $8.95. Co navy blue polkadot sur with elbow sleeves...

No spring suit is complete without the ... flaps, turn-back cuffs...

Coat in nubbly gold ... navy polkadot $79.95, by Harry Will ... by JOHN FREDERICS

Women who love and collect blouses have a constant and not-expensive means of looking fresh and adding fashion and color to their wardrobes. Navy-blue polkadots look new with a gray suit, a mauve shantung with navy blue. Pink linen, flower-shade piqués and white jacquard shirting refresh by day. Chiffons, sheers and taffetas dress up for afternoon. Pure silks and pure linens have the fine-quality feeling more and more in demand. Bow necklines, tucked and fagoted yokes, small collars deftly turned are dressmaker-inspired. ★ By RUTH MARY PACKARD

Tonight she had to make the choice no woman can make—was she first a wife or a mother?

By ELEANOR SHALER

"RELAX, Amy!" Biff Hunter leaned over her. "Relax, and stop watching old Joe." His words caught her up short. She thought she had arranged her face into a pattern of intent interest in the conversation eddying around her, even while her eyes were fixed on Joe across the room, on Joe's dinner plate lying unsteadily on his knees, on the sleeve of Joe's dinner jacket where it had dipped into the shrimp creole. "Old Joe's getting along fine." Biff put one fat paw on her shoulder. "You're just nervous, Amy."

"No, I'm not." She tried to keep her voice even. "I just hate to see that food slide off and ruin Mabel's lovely rug."

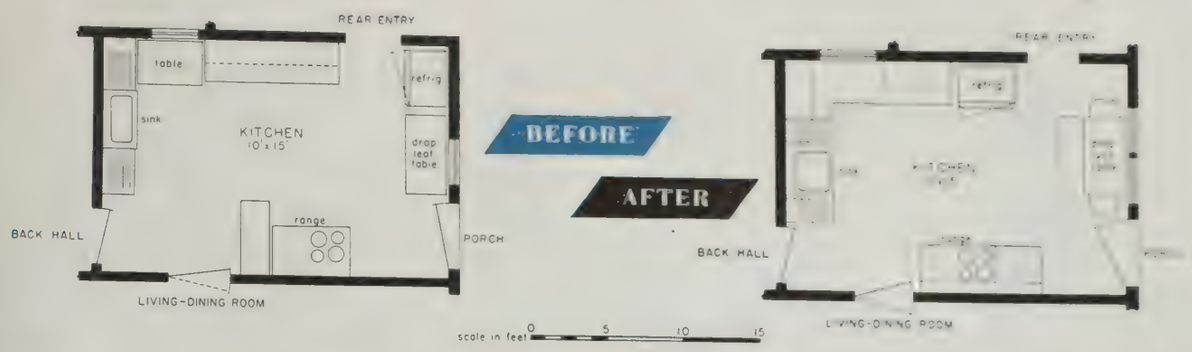
"What you need is a good stiff drink," Biff said in a soothing voice.

Amy laughed a pursed-up little laugh. Biff reminded her of a shyster psychologist she had once consulted—the fatherly pat, the bedside manner. "No, thank you, Biff," she said quietly. "I've had enough." But he was right. Her ring finger hurt with the hard twisting of her hands. She must relax, stop looking at Joe.

She turned her eyes resolutely back to the guests of honor, Mr. and Mrs. Fielding, who had recently settled in the community. Amy had wanted to meet the Fieldings ever since they had arrived with their dogs, their typewriters and their scintillating reputation as collaborators on mystery stories. But now, because of Joe's performance, it wasn't likely she'd ever know them better. After this evening she might as well check the Fieldings off. During cocktails he had held them, like the Ancient Mariner, with a rambling, repetitious monologue, boring them even though Mabel and Biff would have briefed the newcomers on Joe beforehand. She knew the words by heart: "brilliant and erratic." The last word did it. But that was Joe's reputation. There wasn't a smarter lawyer or a keener mind in the county, or a more charming man, when Joe was Joe. But Joe in his (Continued on Page 129)

You have only to look at the pictures and think of the business of getting a meal and washing the dishes to realize what a difference a good sink makes in a kitchen. Pull the refrigerator out of its corner, stretch a long counter under the wide window, put plenty of cabinets above and below, add lights and think again. Like it?

PHOTOS BY STUART-STEPHENSON



The room that two hundred years ago was the kitchen is now a combined living-dining room. The great fireplace is still center of family life.

Today's Utility—Yesterdays Charm meet in this kitchen, which now has a new sink, more light, better arrange

By GLADYS TABER

THERE is something about March that means new beginnings. Women get the carpets on the line and men begin to stir the paint for that new coat on the porch. Here in the old house, spring came just as it has come for two hundred years. The clean smell of wax pervaded every room, curtains blew in the sun, last winter's bouquets of everlastings blazed in the great old fireplace, but in the kitchen a great hammering and sawing was going on. For the winter's planning and figuring had ended with a resolution to do something about the kitchen in the spring. Now spring was here. And the family set to with a determination to improve the kitchen (the sink first of all), to give that room some of the charm of the rest of the house, as well as convenience, without mortgaging the homestead to do the job. (Continued on Page 118)

Placing the equipment at one end of the room gives the table more space and makes eating in the kitchen a pleasant occasion. Sunlight streams into the kitchen through the sheer nylon curtains. The whole room is bright with color. The old cherry table and chairs, wallpaper and a few pieces of old china and glass give this kitchen a personality in keeping with the house.

Point of no Return

By JOHN P. MARQUAND

ILLUSTRATED BY ALEX ROSS

IV

NEARLY everyone in Rush & Co. was in the market, and it may have been just as well that Charles was in it, too, for it afforded a common ground on which to meet all those others who had come there to learn what was called finance. All those young men in Rush & Co. were there because gentlemen handled the broader aspects of money. The early thirties made gaps in their ranks. However, the temptations and spiritual stresses and strains which came later with the depression were negligible when Charles worked in E. P. Rush & Co. with what Lawrence Stoker, the head of the bond department, called the Team.

Football men and crew men were somehow the most desirable material at E. P. Rush & Co., and it seemed to Charles that all the team came from what were known as final clubs at Harvard. They were nice boys and they seemed to accept cheerfully the fact that he had to be more ambitious and brighter than the rest of them, much as Charles himself had accepted the same thing with a Chinese or a Japanese student in a college class.

Although he looked like most of the team, he knew that he would always stand out from them, and it had been just as well. If he had not been a little apart, Arthur Slade would never have noticed him that time when Mr. Slade came on some errand from New York, and he told Charles so, long afterward.

"I saw you right away," he said, "and I wondered if you could be a Yale man, but that could not have been possible in E. P. Rush. It explained everything when you said you came from Dartmouth."

There was every reason why he should have remembered his first meeting with Arthur Slade, for otherwise he might never have gone to New York. Charles's desk was about midway in the center of the open office, and one morning when he was reading market letters he heard Mr. Rush speaking. He had brought a stranger with him to the investment-advisory department.

"Oh, Gray," Mr. Rush called. "Mr. Slade wants to see everything we have on ——"

Copyright 1948, 1949, by John P. Marquand.

and he gave the name of that foreign stock which later was to make so many people poorer. "Gray will get you everything, and you can read it here if you want to."

"Yes, sir," Charles said, and hurried to the files for the folders.

"I think there are a few rather frank office notes on it," Mr. Rush said. "Go ahead and read them, but don't quote us."

Mr. Rush walked away, leaving the stranger from New York. Mr. Slade was, of course, an imitation of Tony Burton, like everyone else in the Stuyvesant Bank. His dark hair, appropriately gray at the temples, was closely clipped. His dark-gray flannel suit had the style of Tony Burton's tailor. His face had Tony Burton's authoritative alertness.

"Wouldn't you like to use my desk, sir?" Charles asked.

"Oh, no," the stranger said. "Go on with what you're doing," and he sat beside the desk reading, while Charles went back to the market letters. Mr. Slade did not speak again for three quarters of an hour. "Dear me," he said, when he had finished, and Charles saw he was holding a memorandum in Mr. Rush's handwriting, "you certainly have a personalized investment service."

"Yes, sir," Charles answered.

"Well," Mr. Slade said, "I'm much obliged to you. You'd better put that away and lock it up." He was smiling and Charles did not like it because it somehow seemed to reflect on Rush & Co.

"You know I was told to show it to you."

"I know you were," Mr. Slade answered, "and I hope you won't leave it around."

"We don't leave things around here much," Charles said, and he sat up straighter because he was a member of the team.

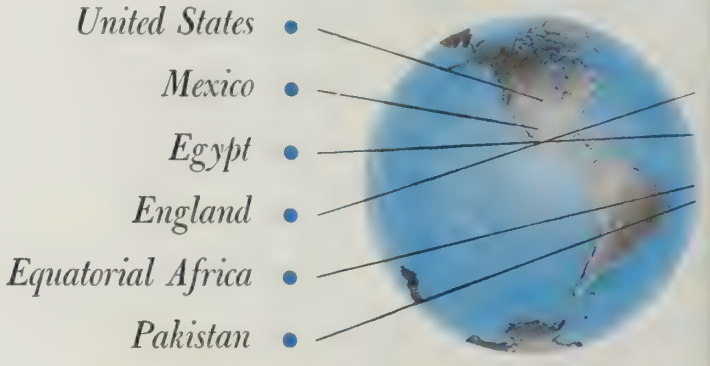
"It's about time for lunch, isn't it?" Mr. Slade said. "How about your coming over with me to the Parker House?"

Arthur Slade must have been curious about Rush & Co., because he asked a good many questions, and Charles answered as he should have, politely and loyally. When Arthur Slade asked about himself, he told him he lived at Clyde, and Mr. Slade had never heard of Clyde. (Continued on Page 80)

PEOPLE ARE PEOPLE THE WORLD OVER

JAPAN: Mrs. Okamoto would love a sewing machine, and although she knows she can't afford it now, she can't resist looking at this old Singer in a shop near her home. She buys cloth and patterns at the Shizuoka department store, does much home sewing.

PAKISTAN: Mrs. Usman purchases goods by the yard from this Hindu merchant in the bazaar at Patni. The transaction will be recorded by the Tapedar, or village administrator (left), who administers rationing and taxes. The Usmans are perennially in debt.



EQUATORIAL AFRICA Shopping is a continual affair for the family of Zamba Aluma, who must walk many miles to the nearest store. Sada, Zamba's second wife (below, at her left), is here buying some beads. Judging from her dress, the girl at left lives in town.

GERMANY: Frau Stieglitz joins a queue for fish in the town of Hochheim, near her home. Although German farmers eat better than city people, they are short of meat, fish, sugar, coffee. Soap is rationed to one cake each month. Hardware goods still have the flimsiness of a tin can.

CZECHOSLOVAKIA: This tiny g eral store in the village of F lac takes care of Mrs. Balo daily needs. For clothing

THIS IS THE WA

ALL the world loves a bargain, and all the world's women love to hunt them. That is except in Moslem Egypt, where a woman of standing does not demean herself by appearing in public places. So Mahfoza, the beautiful brunet wife of Hag Zaki el Gamel, must be content to let her husband do the marketing.

Mrs. Tom Hiatt looks forward each week to Thursday, which is market day in Banbury. For Señora Gonzalez in Mexico the big day is Sunday, when the colorful serapes of the Indians transform the market place of Moravatio into a grounded rainbow. In Iowa the stores stay open late on Saturday nights, and there is apt to be a square dance at the City Hall across from the Glidden post office.

In some countries there are no special market days. The wives of Zamba Aluma, in the dark heart of Africa, go shopping only twice a year, for it involves a round-trip walk of sixty miles. On the other hand, Mrs. Usman of Pakistan shops daily in the bazaars of her village of Patni. In Germany there is a strange war-born practice of marketing in reverse: townspeople invade the countryside to barter goods for food.

FRANCE: The Redouins grow about eighty per cent of their own food, but buy staples in town. Madame is an excellent cook, and tries constantly to add to her kitchen equipment. Here she looks over pans in the market at Blois. Her dream at the moment is to purchase an electric refrigerator.

ENGLAND: At Lipworth's in Hook Norton, Mrs. Hia out pence and "points" f groceries. Each member upplies the family shops in wn of Prešov. The big in background says, "Why he schools nationalized?"

EGYPT: Plodding along on his donkey, Hag Zaki el Gamel goes to market on Saturdays in the village of Khanka, whose shops are strung along the road to Cairo. A shrewd shopper, he augments the family's home-grown diet with meat, fruit, tea, sugar and coffee. The el Gamels follow no budget.

- Germany
- Japan
- Czechoslovakia
- France
- China
- Italy

by JOHN GODFREY MORRIS

HE WORLD SHOPS

Since these families all farm, their purchases are fewer than those of city people. Still, it is interesting to note that in the specialized U. S. the Pratts buy 50 per cent of their food, while in China the Hos buy perhaps 5 per cent of it. The war, of course, brought special shopping problems, and the aftermath has not brought all the answers. Although she can buy a pair of shoes, a scarf or Christmas tie for Tom without a coupon, Mrs. Hiatt finds English clothes rationing almost as strict as during the war. In France, Mme. Redouin gets one fourth of the coffee she wants, and in Germany "coffee" is still made from sugar beets. Even the pleasure of window shopping was denied when the windows were bombed out—and the goods that were in them.

No matter what your money, it's a mystery where it goes. The Okamotos spend yen, the Usmans spend rupees, the Baloghs koruna, the Gonzalezes pesos. The Hos spend Chinese dollars—millions of them. There is no currency common to any two of the twelve countries. Yet there is one shopping fact very common to all: there are things you have to have and can just afford, and things you'd like to have and can't.

has a ration book. Joan,
d on the counter, wist-urveys the old-fashioned f "boiled sweets."

MEXICO: Baby Maria needs shoes, and the Gonzalezes look them over in the market at Moravatio. On Sundays farmers come into town from all the countryside, and the market is aburst with activity. The Gonzalezes follow no budget, but they try very hard to make every peso count.

PHOTOGRAPHS for the story by Horace Bristol (Japan and China), Larry Burrows (England), Robert Capa (United States and Czechoslovakia), Marie Hansen (Italy), George Rodger (Egypt, Pakistan and Equatorial Africa), Phil Schultz (Mexico), David Seymour (France and Germany).

CHINA: In a difficult moment of indecision, Ho Fu-yuan (center) fondles a felt hat in the market at Kia-ting. It would mark him as a man of great distinction in the village, but the price is $90,000 (Chinese; about $7.00 U. S.) and he finally decides against it.

ITALY: Signora Guercini prices a broom in one of the shops in the village of Greve. The arcade fronts on the town square, now named Piazza Giacomo Matteotti, in honor of the great hero of anti-Fascism. The Guercinis shop mostly on Saturday, the big market day.

UNITED STATES: With Arleen, who is fast becoming a smart shopper herself, Mrs. Pratt picks out some canned fruit in one of the stores in Glidden, Iowa. Even with home canning, the Pratts do considerable food buying, and maintain a frozen-food locker in town.

Do stay for Dinner

By ANN BATCHELDER

YOU know how it is. You plan a nice little dinner for six—rather special friends you haven't seen in some time. You get together quite a tasty repast and ring a change or two on some of the old favorites. And just as things have settled down and the last touches are on, the doorbell rings. You know it can't be the paper boy, and the brush man was around last Monday, so you take off the worthy apron, put on your best smile and open the door. Yes, you guessed it. It's two of the contract-club girls dropping in to see why you didn't show up for the game at Bessie's, and they stay and stay. These girls, being quite single, have no dinner worries on their minds, and the clock doesn't mean a thing to them. So there's only one thing to do. One only. That thing you do, with all the casual offhandedness you can summon up. You glance at the clock and, in a lull in the chatter, you brightly say, "Well, girls, if you haven't any special plans for the evening, do stay for dinner."

They are perfectly free. They have not anything special on. So, with simulated reluctance and after a good deal of "Oh, we wouldn't want to put you out," and "I didn't realize it was so late, did you, Jean?" they remove hats and coats and settle down for a good long session. In the meantime you have murmured something about "having a few friends in" and so on. This impresses them no end. And after all, it's sort of nice to have them, and there's something comforting in the thought that you do have enough in the kitchen to feed the whole outfit. All of which goes to prove what I am always saying: have enough—and then have a little to spare. It pays off, and we all know it. So you put on those extra plates and set up those extra places and proceed with the dinner that you had planned to have as good and as eye-smiting as you possibly could. And your unexpected guests, having performed the ancient rite of offering to help, settle themselves for a session of gin rummy, while you, in the kitchen, are playing a quite different but no less absorbing game with the kettle and the skillet. It's a great moment, if you can take it with a smile.

Wanting to be helpful. Thinking on all these things, I have determined to help you out on such

(Continued on Page 116)

PHOTO BY STUART·KOWLER

MENU

Clear Onion Soup

Relishes

Sweetbreads Sauté—Lemon Butter

Rice Croquettes

Green-Bean Medley

Crusty Rolls

Tomato-Avocado Salad

Orange-Almond Bavarian

Coffee

(Will serve 8)

Line a Day

1 Now comes the sugar-bush fiesta up where I came from. Any snow, barring a blizzard, from now on, will be called "sugar snow." And if they don't get cold nights and sunny days, you'll hear something way down here or hereabouts.

2 Having eaten hearty—I hope—all through the winter, it's nice to turn to fish for a change. One thing I do, and you may like to try, is a casserole of scalloped fish, made with fillet of sole (flounder to us) with shrimp. It's different and it's delicious.

3 The receipt: Make a quart of really rich cream sauce, medium thick. I use 3 cups milk and 1 cup cream. Season very well with salt, pepper and paprika. Poach 4 fillets, fresh or frozen, until tender. Flake 2 cups shrimp. Don't break up the fillets too much. Put all in a buttered casserole, fill it up with the sauce. Cover in a sparse way with bread crumbs, sprinkle with Parmesan cheese, dot all over with butter and bake in an oven at 350–375° F. until the sauce bubbles and the top is nicely browned.

4 Well, I thought I'd seen everything, but I find there are surprises every day. Have you tried stuffing spareribs with sweet potatoes, onion, boiled rice and minced celery? Seasoned to the nines, of course. Mix all together, spread the mixture on the spareribs, fold over on the inside of the ribs (they're split, you know), dredge and bake. This is quite a dish. Quite.

5 One more sweet-potato idea. Cut cold boiled potatoes in slices, season and dip in beaten egg, then in fine crumbs, and fry in hot deep fat until the color of an oak leaf in November. Try these with chicken or ham.

6 Egg sauce to serve with baked or boiled fish can be and usually is a limp-looking "white" sauce with a few slices of hard-boiled egg swimming around like minnows in a tub. But—make a real cream sauce, season it well, and add 2 or 3 teaspoons of fine prepared mustard sauce. Plenty of egg slices finish this, and you've improved something that can stand improvement.

7 Along with a repertory of herbs and seasonings, this prepared mustard sauce is a rare condiment and it's the last word for sauces, gravies and meats. As for ham—well, you try it and see. Want to be a chef?

8 When you can get some fresh sweet basil—and I hope you'll grow some in pots or gardens—put some of the leaves in your tomato soup. The dried will do, but the fresh is the stuff. Strain it before serving. Every tomato dish is the better for sweet basil. You've heard that one before.

9 From an old cookbook: "The housewife may profitably write down these maxims and abide by them. Never wait to do your marketing in the middle of the day. Do it right after a hearty breakfast. Else you will buy too much. An appetite is a reckless marketeer." Bet that she was a stingy cook.

10 Now let me set down a word. It's about measuring molasses. Rinse the measuring cup or spoon in hot water. Molasses won't stick. And have your spoon very warm when you're putting vegetable fat in the deep-fat kettle. Then you won't have to bang the spoon or scrape it. There.

11 Baking-powder-biscuit crust is the only crust for chicken or meat pie that is right—for this cook. How about you? Ever try mixing a little sage or savory or marjoram in the dough for meat-pie crust? It's real good.

12 I am old-fashioned enough to go for salt mackerel. Wonderful for folks who ought to drink a lot of water! Soak it overnight in cold water. Drain and dry it. Put it in a shallow dish. Pepper it (forget the salt box), cover it with rich milk and lumps of butter or margarine, and bake it in an oven at 350° F. It will brown slowly, and the milk will disappear as may be. Baked potatoes with this.

13 In turkey or chicken stuffing, sometime mix with the finely crumbled bread plenty of peanuts, roasted ones, chopped to an arm-ache fineness. Leave out the onion, otherwise the green light ahead. If you haven't done it, you've no idea.

14 Another item from my personal archives: Instead of plain water to moisten the stuffing, use good (the best) clear chicken broth. And extend the gravy with the same.

15 May I remind the young members of the class that it's well to oil both fish and broiler when you broil fish? Then that maddening sticking is out. Serve broiled fish with tartare sauce and lemon.

16 A fish ball stops being a fish ball when it is rolled in flour and egg and crumbs. Fish balls are creamy and lovely inside, dropped from a spoon in hot deep fat and come out crisp and brown and every one different in shape. Those are fish balls.

17 Ever come across something you never dreamed of? I have. There's a toasted almond all dusted up with a mixture tasting of garlic—other things too. Belongs with the appetizers for that before-dinner hour.

18 Going back to rice pudding, as we weren't. Two schools quarrel over this. There are the raw-rice and the cooked-rice devotees. Use rich milk, either way. Raisins? Yes. Stir while cooking? But definitely. Meringue? If you like it.

• • • • • •

FAREWELL TO BELINDA

Belinda, Belinda, the spring's on the way.
Now I must leave you who cannot hear or see.
Shall I find you again on a fairy lea
Where the little people frolic the livelong day?
Shall I find you in the greenwood or find you never?
Belinda, beloved, is it good-by forever?

19 Everybody stuffs dates. So good for the children, my dear. (But the children are lucky if they get a tooth into one!) Sometime try stuffing them with highly flavored hard sauce. Walnuts or pecans or not, the hard sauce is the gimmick.

20 Tuna fish with sour cherries, dressed with mayonnaise and garnished with sliced olives, all nested down in lettuce cups, is a salad to charm the sisters. Maybe the males could be induced to dip a fork too.

21 What a vegetable is cabbage. To run up a mess, have it cold, chop it fine, season and add a little mace. Add 2 beaten eggs and cream enough to hold it. Fry it in bacon fat (or salt pork), turn like an omelet, brown, and they'll eat their cabbage.

22 Get yourself some thin ginger and chocolate wafers. Come in tall tins. Make into sandwiches with cream cheese and crystallized ginger chopped fine. For tea the most snappy mother-in-law will welcome these.

23 A waffle iron that turns out a perfect waffle is a helper to be counted on. Always make sure that your tools are in good shape.

24 Having scrambled eggs on toast—and who doesn't? If it's supper, try a little grated onion, mix with the eggs, season well, add some grated cheese, cream and butter, and scramble in the double boiler. Keep them soft and serve them hot.

25 Little Lima beans come up smiling if done with parboiled green pepper, chopped, a little chopped chives and—can you bear it?— some minced parsley.

26 One who is crazy about apple-tapioca pudding is this scribe. Converted to peaches (canned or frozen). I'm for that too. Plain cream is for this. And don't have the tapioca too thick. Give this a whirl.

27 Few things go along with a roast duck as do oranges. They're a natural. But—if with the oranges in your sauce you throw in a generous amount of black bing cherries, you have made grade A. And I mean A.

28 Make a boiled custard following the usual custard proportions. Flavor it with instant coffee. Delicious with chocolate pudding or cottage pudding.

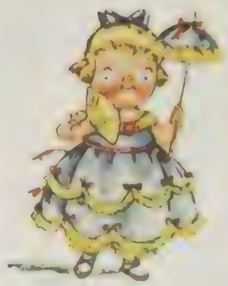
29 Serve chicken fricassee in buttered, toasted bread cases. Cut the chicken into small pieces, make the sauce with mushroom soup. Season it well.

30 I'm always mentioning stuffed tomatoes. We all fall back on them, more or less. Shrimp and mayonnaise? Of course. And add diced celery and chopped salted almonds. Maybe the girls haven't said how-do to that one.

31 So here we are once more. It's time to go, but I hate to leave. Happy March and good weather to all of you from one who doesn't care much for the month of March.

By Ann Batchelder

It's Chicken Soup New Orleans style!



Up from Creole kitchens comes a different and delightful chicken soup

Old New Orleans! Famous city of famous dishes, and one of the most famous of all is chicken gumbo soup. Have you tasted this excitingly different chicken soup—a soup of rich chicken stock and garden vegetables? As Campbell's make it today—adapted from an honored old Creole recipe—it's a delight from first delicious sip to last satisfying spoonful. Just to list the good things that go into Campbell's Chicken Gumbo Soup is to tempt your appetite. Its deep-flavored chicken stock is crammed with such delicacies as green okra, luscious tomatoes, fluffy rice and tender pieces of chicken—all seasoned with savory herbs.

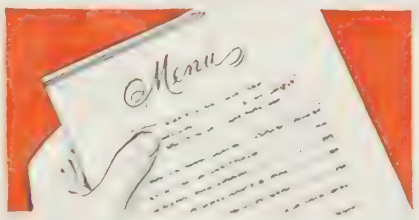
It's a different and delightful soup—a lift for your budget meals. Try this exciting soup of the Old South—soon!

I love my pretty party dress,
Love my parasol,
But Campbell's Chicken Gumbo Soup
I love best of all!

Campbell's CHICKEN GUMBO SOUP

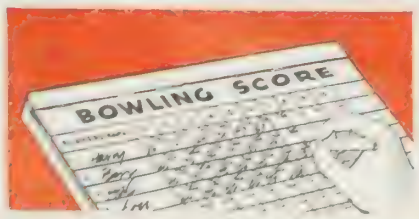
LOOK FOR THE RED-AND-WHITE LABEL

Lengthening His Waistline... Shortening His Life-Line



Like one out of every four people in our country today, this man weighs more than he should.

If he loses those excess pounds—brings his weight down to normal and keeps it there—he will look and feel better. Furthermore, he will probably live longer. Statistics show that if weight is more than 10 per cent above normal, life expectancy is usually reduced about 20 per cent.



Doctors say one of the reasons overweight tends to shorten life is that it puts an additional burden on the heart and circulatory system. It has been estimated that 10 pounds of extra fat require the development of a half a mile of blood vessels. To maintain this excess body tissue, the heart has to work harder. Fortunately, with good medical care, overweight can usually be corrected.

The first step in any weight reducing program is to see the physician, for only he is qualified to determine your best weight. A six-foot man weighing 185 pounds may be 20 pounds overweight if he has a slight frame, while if he has a large frame that weight could be considered normal.

Proper diet is essential for controlling weight. Most overweight occurs because the body takes in more food than it can use up as energy, and the excess is stored as fat. The doctor will limit food intake while making sure your diet contains enough essential elements to protect general health.

Some exercise is necessary, but one should not expect to reduce just by exercising. Doctors warn you would have to walk 36 miles to lose one pound. Strenuous exercise may also increase the appetite, and make it harder to reduce. So, rely on your physician to recommend the proper exercise.

By faithfully following the program your doctor suggests, it is generally possible to lose weight surely, steadily, and safely. For other helpful information on this subject, send for Metropolitan's free booklet, 39-J, "Overweight and Underweight."

Metropolitan Life Insurance Company

(A MUTUAL COMPANY)

1 Madison Ave., New York 10, N. Y.

TO VETERANS—IF YOU HAVE NATIONAL SERVICE LIFE INSURANCE—KEEP IT!

POINT OF NO RETURN

(Continued from Page 73)

"I suppose you're in this market like everyone else," Arthur Slade said.

"Yes," Charles answered. "It's all a question of when to stop, isn't it?"

He said that the market did not interest him as it did his father, and he began talking to Arthur Slade about his father, a safe subject because Arthur Slade would never meet him. Perhaps he spoke with the clumsy confidence of anyone his age, but whenever he thought of that lunch at the Parker House, he was never entirely sure that he had been clumsy. There was no reason to show himself in any sort of light or to strive to make a good impression; and besides, he did not feel like a callow young man from Rush & Co.

"There's no such thing as unbiased advice from an investment house that markets securities," Arthur Slade had said. "It's a little like selling patent medicine that can be used externally and internally, for baldness, dandruff, muscular pains and stomach-ache. Now in this investment-advisory thing of yours, doesn't Rush recommend its own securities? Of course it does."

It was true, of course, but Charles was loyal to Rush & Co. "If you believe in what you're selling," he said, "why shouldn't you recommend it?"

"Now, it's different in a bank trust department. We haven't got anything to sell."

"Don't you ever get stuck with anything in a bank?" Charles asked.

"Not usually," Arthur Slade said, and smiled. "Not in our bank."

As Arthur Slade was speaking, Charles saw his father walking toward them. "Oh," he said, "there's my father."

"Where?" Mr. Slade asked, but Charles' father was already at the table and they both stood up. John Gray smelled pleasantly of bay rum and he was smoking a cigar. "Won't you sit down and have coffee with us?" Mr. Slade asked.

"That's very kind of you," John Gray answered, "but I'd better be getting back to work. Perhaps I'll see you on the five-twenty, Charley." John Gray smiled and nodded and walked away. He had said nothing significant, but Charles was always glad that Arthur Slade had met his father.

"He looks happy," Arthur Slade said.

"Yes. Father is usually happy."

"It's curious how few people are," Arthur Slade said. "Have you ever thought of working in New York?"

"No," Charles said. "I like it pretty well where I am, but thanks ever so much for the lunch. I've had a very good time."

"Well, if you should be in New York, stop in and look me up. Just tell Joe inside the door you want to see me."

His father was keeping a seat for him in the smoking car of the five-twenty. He had evidently been shopping after the market had closed because there were packages on the rack above his head.

"I happened to see two silver gravy boats in an antique shop," he said. "Your mother has always wanted a pair, and then I saw a small radio. Who was that Mr. Slade you were having luncheon with, Charley?"

"He came to see Mr. Rush about something. He comes from New York. How did things work out today, father?"

John Gray tilted his hat away from his forehead. "Oh, everything went very well."

"I hope you're being careful."

His father laughed and slapped him on the knee. "As careful as a banker," he said. "I'm as sound as Electric Bond and Share."

It was strange to think how little seemed unusual in those days, perhaps because nothing seems peculiar in any present. Lindbergh had flown the Atlantic. Flagpole sitters were perched on their poles like Simeon Stylites, and marathon dancers were fainting in the clinches. They were all phenomena one could accept. Nothing was ever very peculiar at the moment when it happened.

He who goes with wolves learns to howl.
—SPANISH PROVERB.

Charles was not particularly surprised, for instance, at an extraordinary episode that occurred one Sunday shortly after he had met Arthur Slade. For years he had always gone to the Unitarian church with his mother and Dorothea, but his father seldom went with them.

When John Gray came down to breakfast that Sunday morning, he was wearing a new double-breasted suit.

"Why, John," Esther Gray said, "you didn't tell me you'd bought a new suit. You look as though you'd stepped out of something."

"It's a surprise," John Gray said. "A new leaf, Esther."

"You're not going to church with us, are you?" Dorothea asked.

"I don't see why I shouldn't. It occurred to me that a morning in church might do me good."

It would have been like any other Sunday if John Gray had not been with them. The church was a hundred years old, a beautiful church, and its white woodwork with the delicate moldings, consciously devoid of any clerical richness, gave a sense of repressed peace and of serene plainness that must have been a part of an older, Puritanical tradition. There were not more than fifty persons in the box pews. Mr. Crewe had climbed the stairs to the pulpit and now he stood, a small figure high above them.

"Let us unite in singing," he was saying in his reedy voice, and the service began.

When it was time for the offering, the organ played wheezily while Mr. Howell, Mr. Meader and Mr. Blashfield walked to the table in front of the pulpit. Each of them picked up a wooden contribution box and walked down the aisle with precision. Charles' mother and Dorothea were opening their purses and he saw his father draw a wallet from inside his new coat. It was a pigskin billfold, aggressively new, and his father flipped it open carelessly. Mr. Blashfield halted at the pew and pushed the box impersonally in their direction. Then Charles saw Mr. Blashfield's back stiffen. His father had taken a bill from his wallet and had dropped it in the contribution box. It was a hundred-dollar gold treasury note. Charles heard his mother draw a sharp, indignant breath. In a little while, perhaps even before the sermon was over, everyone would know about the hundred-dollar bill.

Outside the church, in the September sunlight, everyone spoke to everyone else agreeably.

"Well, John," Mr. Blashfield said, just as though he had not passed the contribution box, "it's nice to see you in church."

"I suppose I should go more often," he heard his father answer. "I really suppose I should."

"John," he heard his mother say, "we have to be going now or dinner will be late." She did not speak about the hundred-dollar bill until they were on Dock Street. "If you wanted to do that," she said, "at least you might have put it in an envelope."

"I know, Esther," John Gray answered. "It was vulgar ostentation. I apologize to everybody. I'm sorry."

"You're not sorry, because it's why you came."

"That's true," John Gray said. "I've always wanted to do that, Esther, ever since I was a little boy. I know it's childish of me, but I don't suppose I am sorry."

At least it was a general expression of something which nearly everyone must have wanted to do at some time. He could, of course, deplore many sides of his father, but usually his memories ended with a faint, reluctant admiration.

Whenever Charles heard the expression "wish fulfillment" he always thought of that bill in the contribution box and the ression on his father's face after luncheon hat Sunday afternoon. The doorbell rang efore the dishes had been cleared away. His ather must have been expecting the interuption, because he pushed back his chair.

(Continued on Page 83)

(Continued from Page 80)

"I'll go, Esther," he said, and then they eard him calling: "Esther, Dorothea, Charey, will you come here for a minute?"

There must have been a new note in his oice. At any rate, it was all like a dream, he Great American Dream. They were all here in the doorway staring out at Spruce Street, and beyond the fence stood a long naroon phaeton, and Mr. Robert Sweet, the Cadillac agent, was standing beside it.

"How about taking a ride?" John Gray sked. "Robert will drive us, won't you, Robert?"

They must have all guessed before he told hem that he had bought the car.

"Get in, Esther," John Gray said, "and ve'll all go for a ride. Take us along Johnson Street, Robert."

"John," his mother said, "it's too big. Why didn't you get a little one? You know what everyone will say."

"Yes," John Gray answered, "of course I know. That's exactly why I bought it. I don't want a little one. What's the matter, don't you like it, Charley?"

"I don't know," he said, and his father laughed, and Charles never forgot what his father answered.

"You'll learn to like it. You'll be surprised how fast you'll learn, and we'd better start in learning now."

It was remarkable how quickly one could adapt oneself to change. It must have been that evening that his father told him that he was almost two hundred and fifty thousand dollars ahead of the game. That was the way he put it, as they sat upstairs in his father's study that evening.

Act well at the moment, and you have performed a good action for all eternity.
—LAVATER.

"There's no reason to tell the women yet, Charles," he said. "It would only make them difficult and I'm not through just yet. Just remember, any time you want some money, Charley. There are a lot of things I want to do, but just ask me any time."

It was like the pony all over again. Of course Charles should have asked him, but he never did. Instead he talked about a trust fund for his mother and Dorothea.

"We'll attend to that later," John Gray said. "There are a lot of things we've got to do." But of course he never did any of those things.

CHARLES must have conceded, at least in a measure, that his father had some pretty good ideas. The truth was that his father was very good at something that nearly everyone was doing, for even in Clyde they were beginning to buy common stocks that autumn. Mr. Thomas, everyone knew, had begun, in a cautious way, and the word came from Wright-Sherwin that Mr. Stanley was doing the same thing. Uncle Gerald Marchby had bought some General Electric, with results which were getting happier all the time. Johnny Gray was doing so well that he did not have to go into Boston every day. Everyone knew, because he said so himself, that he could often do as well by sitting at home and calling up his broker, and everyone knew that he had a telephone of his own upstairs in his study for just that purpose.

Charles had bought his own small list of stocks with the money his aunt had left him. Once or twice he asked his father for advice and it was good advice, too, for a time when the market was running wild.

"Don't be too anxious," he remembered that his father told him. "Play it high, wide and handsome."

But he never had the temperament, and this may have been why he knew enough to get top in time. At least he was able to get out and stay out and he was never proud of any part of it and he never wanted to speak about it later.

Nevertheless, he must have learned a great deal. When Jessica and Mr. Lovell came back to Clyde in the middle of October, he was not the same person he had been that sp Jessica called him after supper on th they arrived and asked him to come Charles was wearing a new suit of he bone worsted, the sort of suit that very well at Rush & Co.

WHEN he met Jessica in the front did not look the way he thought sh He was not exactly disappointed seemed to him that her twee her low-heeled shoes and her ligh camel's-hair sweater were too much country. She had not acquired a veneer by taking that trip abroad as by staying at home.

"Why, Charley," she said, and the for a second looking at each other tainly. He had an unexpected feeling o straint until he took her hand, and then she grasped his hand very tightly the straint was gone. "I was so frightened," s said later, when they had a chance to ta "I was afraid you didn't love me any mor

There had been an instant, just before touched her hand, when everything have been ready to fall one way or the o If Mr. Lovell had been there in the hall her, denying them those few moment gether, it might have been worth his to have taken her abroad, but now it n have been better for Mr. Lovell if Je had stayed in Clyde.

He knew that Mr. Lovell and Miss Ge anna were waiting for them. Although h not hear a sound, he was sure that they in the wallpaper room listening.

"I loved your letters," Jessica said so "I loved yours," answered.

"Well," she said, "co on. Father's dying to you," and the corners her eyes wrinkled as smiled.

Miss Georgianna look nervous as she sat in corner of the sofa. Mr. Lovell stood b the fireplace.

"Good evening, Charles," Miss Georg anna said. "I've been telling them ho thoughtful you've been, coming so often t call while I was here alone."

"Hello, Charles," Mr. Lovell said. "You look as though the summer had done yo good."

"Well," Charles answered, "it's been quite a summer."

"I was sorry to hear of your aunt's death. I hope your father got my letter. He didn't answer it."

"He spoke of getting it. I didn't know he hadn't answered it. My father's been pretty busy, with one thing and another."

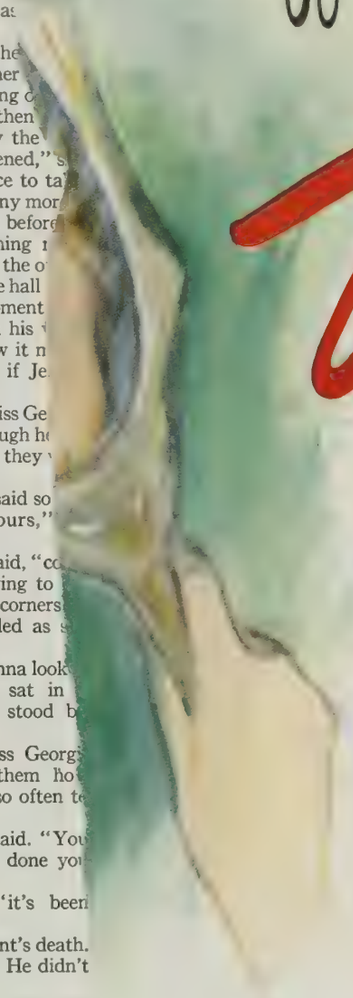
"There's no reason why he should have written and perhaps his letter never caught up with us. Sit down for a minute or two, Charles. What's the news? I don't suppose there's any chance of our friend Al Smith's winning the election?"

"The betting's against him."

"I imagined so." Mr. Lovell smiled. "And the market's still going up, isn't it? I'll have to go into Boston tomorrow and see if my list of things is up to date."

He was the one who had changed, not Mr. Lovell. He knew that Mr. Lovell disapproved of him, but he was no longer disturbed by his disapproval. "It's better not to try to do anything with the market, sir," he said. "All the trustees are moving very slowly."

"They always do, don't they?" Mr. Lovell said, and laughed. "March Associates take care of my things—the details. In the last analysis I like to rely on my own judgment, and I don't think I've done so badly, either, by and large, have I, Georgianna?"



"No, you haven't," Miss Lovell said. "You have very good judgment, Laurence."

"I think I have a little of my grandfather's business instinct," Mr. Lovell said, "an instinct for survival," and he laughed again. "I'm still feeling the motion of the ship. It was rough the last day out. Well, I think we ought to get a good night's sleep. You should especially, Jessie. You've been very nervous all today."

metic effect of Vitality

shoes

Really exciting values . . . these newest designs in the gentle-lady fashion theme, so delicately wrought by Vitality! Thrill to their "cosmetic effect"- the way their matchless fit shows in a radiant smile, an inner glow of good feeling that comes out in your walk, your very expression! Buy wisely and well — buy Vitality more-for-your-money shoes. You'll be glad you did! See the entire selection in the newest spring colors and rich materials. We'll gladly send you the name of your nearest Vitality dealer.

TWICE AS SMART, more-for-your-money
VITALITY SHOES $10.95 • $11.95 • $12.95
Complete range of sizes and widths

ly Open Road Shoes and Campus Wear, 5 • $8.95 • $9.95

louis-heeled san- stunning! Softly front and sub- med!

e—the new- y-lady

5

6

NAL SHOE COMPANY, ST. LOUIS 3, MO

The holiday you've waited for...

Rio harbor . . . with Sugar Loaf rising in the distance

a glorious luxury cruise to the wonders of

South America

Treat yourself to zestful travel experiences . . . to shore excursions to the excitingly beautiful cities of South America . . . to the superb shipboard comforts and gala cruise activities that await you on the 33,000-ton luxury liners of Moore-McCormack Lines' Good Neighbor Fleet. Whatever the season the South Atlantic is delightful.

Styled in the brilliant modern manner, delighting you with superb American cuisine . . . flattering you with perfect service . . . these ships offer every feature the most demanding traveler could ask for. Complete entertainment and activities programs combine with lazy hours to make this the cruise of a lifetime.

S. S. BRAZIL
S. S. URUGUAY
S. S. ARGENTINA
Sailing Fortnightly from New York

38-day Cruises

to RIO · SANTOS
SAO PAULO
MONTEVIDEO
BUENOS AIRES
and TRINIDAD

For Information Consult our Authorized Travel Agents or

MOORE-McCORMACK Lines
5 Broadway New York 4

Offices in:
BALTIMORE · BOSTON · CHICAGO
DETROIT · LOS ANGELES
PHILADELPHIA · PITTSBURGH · SEATTLE
PORTLAND, ORE. · SAN FRANCISCO
WASHINGTON, D. C.

(Continued from Page 84)

they were like the roseate clouds of a summer sunrise. There had to be a happy ending.

They walked back to the car. He put his foot on the starter and at the same time he switched on the lights. The sound of the motor was strong and reassuring. The car moved deliberately and slowly until it was in second, and then it was in high and the crunching of the gravel beneath the wheels was louder than the sound of the motor.

"Jessica," he said, "will you marry me? I wish you would."

"Why, Charley, what made you think of that just now?"

"Why, I've been thinking about it all the time."

"Well, so have I," and there was a catch in her voice. "Oh, Charley, of course I will."

He felt the blood rush to his cheeks. He could never have described everything he felt, but relief must have been a part of it, deep relief that the waiting was over.

"But we can't get married right away."

"No, not right away."

"We wouldn't have anything to live on, would we? That's what father keeps saying."

"No, not now, but we will have by spring."

He told her that he was making only thirty dollars a week at Rush & Co., but he would get a raise on the first of the year. He might be getting fifty dollars a week by spring. Besides, there was the five thousand dollars his aunt had left him, and now it was twenty thousand. He would not be afraid to marry her now, if she were not afraid, but he hoped to have fifty thousand in the spring and if he did he would stop. The income from fifty thousand dollars, safely invested at five per cent, would be twenty-five hundred dollars, and if he were making fifty dollars a week that would be five thousand dollars a year. The prospect had a desperate quality, but with Jessica there listening he could believe in it implicitly.

"It's got to happen," he said. "Jessica, please go on and keep believing."

"Of course I'll keep believing, but, darling, we'd better not tell anyone—and certainly not father yet. He might stop me from believing."

By the time Charles had left the car in Rowell's garage, the lights were out in the house in Spruce Street except in the front hall and in his father's room at the head of the stairs. He could see his father sitting in front of his table adding a column of figures.

"Oh, there you are, Charley," his father said. "You didn't smash the car, did you?"

"No, sir, nothing happened to the car."

"How was Clarkson—and the Shore Club? You know, I rather like Clarkson. I'd like to have someone like him looking out for me. I'm tired of carrying my own clothes down to Dock Street to be pressed." John Gray leaned back in his chair and pushed away his papers. "We really ought to have a couple to look after us. There's no reason to have these old Irishwomen in by the day. We'll need another bathroom if we have a couple. We need more bathrooms, at any rate. We can put two of them up on the third floor, one for the couple and one for you, and I suppose Dorothea ought to have one too. I'll get Sid Stevens in here to measure them up tomorrow. I wonder how many bathrooms the Lovells have."

"I don't know," Charles said.

His father was glancing again at the papers on which he had been working. "I always wonder why I'm doing so well, Charley, until I remember this is the first time I've had any real working capital. You see, I'm pretty well up in the System now. Just between you and me—don't tell the women yet, it will only make them nervous—as of today there's three hundred and fifty thousand in the kitty."

"I don't like being out at sea in a canoe with just one paddle," Charles said. "When will you have enough, father?"

His father picked up a pencil and tapped it on the paper. "You know, I'm going to say something that may relieve you, Charley. I've been seriously thinking that there's an end to everything. I really think that perhaps I ought to make a limit. I think I'll

Your loveliness is Doubly Safe

because

Veto gives you Double Protection!

So effective . . . Veto guards your loveliness night and day—safely protects your clothes and you. For Veto not only neutralizes perspiration odor, it checks perspiration, too! Yes, Veto gives you Double Protection! And Veto disappears instantly to protect you from the moment you apply it!

So gentle . . . Always creamy and smooth, Veto is lovely to use and keeps you lovely. And Veto is gentle, safe for normal skin, safe for clothes. Doubly Safe! Veto alone contains Duratex, Colgate's exclusive ingredient to make Veto safer. Let Veto give your loveliness double protection!

Veto lasts and lasts from bath to bath!

If you are over 25

Beware of Dry Skin

FROM ABOUT 25 ON—the natural oil that keeps skin soft and supple gradually decreases. Even before 40—a woman may lose as much as 20% of this oil skin needs.

Little signs warn when dry skin is creeping up on you. Watch for flaky spots—for tiny, dry lines. They say your skin needs more care—more oil.

Replacement help is at your fingertips with Pond's Dry Skin Cream. Three features make it extra softening. 1. Rich in lanolin—most like your own skin oil. 2. Homogenized to soak in better. 3. A softening emulsifier.

Arrests Dry Skin Two Ways:

Lanolin-Softens by Night—after your regular cleansing, smooth rich-in-lanolin Pond's Dry Skin Cream generously over face. Leave a few minutes, then wipe off lightly so a soft film is left to help your skin all night. Your dry skin seems to "drink up" this rich cream. See how tiny dry lines are smoothed so they don't show.

Lanolin-Protects by Day—smooth on a very light touch of Pond's Dry Skin Cream before you make up. Protects your skin against dryness all day. Keeps your skin soft, smooth looking.

Mrs. George Whitney, Jr. says:

"It's the best help I know for dry skin"

Get this truly remarkable dry skin corrector—today! You'll find lanolin-rich Pond's Dry Skin Cream never leaves your skin sticky. Instead—it smooths in with a delicious softening feeling. Use this cream generously every day for a week. See if this isn't the finest help for correcting dry skin you've ever used. Get your jar of Pond's Dry Skin Cream today.

Dry Skin? This is the Answer

stop all this and cash in—when I have a million dollars." It was the ultimate end, the mathematical symbol for security and happiness. "Well—good night, Charley."

Everyone must have been talking about the Grays that winter, including Mr. and Mrs. Meader and the Masons and all the family's particular friends. They would all say when they met him, "Why, Charley, we haven't seen you for a long while. I suppose they're keeping you busy in Boston"—but they were not thinking about Boston. They were thinking of what was keeping him busy in Clyde. They were saying that he was "attentive" to Jessica Lovell. Everyone was watching the Lovells, too, and someone must have heard the Thomases and the Stanleys and other people on Johnson Street say that Mr. Lovell did not like it. He wanted Jessica to do better. After all, she had come out in Boston and the Lovells were always down on the Shore, but then he could not do much about it if Jessica liked Charley Gray. The Grays were doing very well. They had a couple working for them and a Cadillac and the house in Spruce Street had been redecorated and they had put in three new bathrooms.

The Grays had not been asked to the Lovells' for a meal and Laurence Lovell and Miss Georgianna had not been to call on the Grays, but then Clyde was never a hospitable place. However, when his mother finally asked her, Jessica Lovell did go to supper at Spruce Street.

Charles had somehow been reluctant to talk things over with his mother. A curious sort of pride prevented his saying anything until it could be more definite, but one December evening when he came home from Rush & Co., his mother and Dorothea were waiting in the parlor.

Of earthly goods the best is a good wife; a bad, the bitterest curse of human life. —SIMONIDES.

"Charley"—his mother smiled—"Dorothea and I have just thought of something that we think might be nice. Don't you think it might be nice to ask Jessica Lovell for supper on Saturday?" The expectant way they watched him explained the uneasiness he had felt the moment he entered the parlor.

"I don't see any particular reason for it," he said. "Why should you suddenly ask her to supper?"

"But she's never been inside the house, dear, after all this time."

"After all what time?"

"Oh, Charley," his mother said, and she looked hurt.

"We know about these things better than you," Dorothea said. "It looks queer not having her. Don't you know that everybody's talking?"

"If anybody so much as looks at a girl around here," Charles said, "everybody starts talking."

"Now really, Charley," Dorothea said, "have you only just been looking at Jessica Lovell?"

Charles felt his face grow beet-red.

"Charley, dear," his mother said, "there's nothing to be so upset about. We all think she's a very nice girl and we're very happy about it."

"I'm not upset about anything at all, mother," Charles began. "I only think ——"

"Then don't you think, dear"—she was speaking in the soothing tone she had used when he was much younger—"that it would be nice to have her for supper on Saturday night? I'd love to ask her myself."

Charles shrugged his shoulders. "Oh, all right, if you have to have her, go ahead and ask her." He did not mean to sound ungracious, but he hated to think how it would be, with the family knowing everything and yet not saying anything.

The new silver candlesticks and a new Canton-china dinner set were on the table—his father loved Canton china—but there was no reason for Jessica to think that zing

MRS prom
Palm for l and a Mrs. inatin of cig

Overnight, a little green bottle with a magic wick started a new domestic habit. Overnight, an age-old problem was solved! Overnight, air-wick made clean-smelling air possible all over the house.

air-wick has banished cooking odors from millions of kitchens, chased smoking odors from millions of living rooms, become an essential fixture in millions of bathrooms. In fact, air-wick lends a helping hand everywhere... makes indoor air seem country fresh.

Today air-wick is a national habit... a natural habit... as natural and familiar as soap and water, broom and dust pan... as important as a clean floor, a sparkling window pane, a spotless table cloth.

These are the reasons why air-wick is such an amazing success. These are the reasons why millions of American families use air-wick in their homes every day.

*air-wick deodorizer and household freshener is fully protected by U.S. Pat. 2,326,672 a trademark of Seeman Brothers, Inc., New York 13. Tune in air-wick's two coast-to-coast radio programs. Sunday, full ABC network. Saturday, full CBS network.

Dis
preciate the doesn't stick people prefer P a longer, coole
Herbert Tareyto

THERE'S SO

The holiday you've waited for...

Rio harbor . . . with Sugar Loaf rising in the distance

a glorious luxury cruise to the wonders of

South America

Treat yourself to zestful travel experiences . . . to shore excursions excitingly beautiful cities of South America . . . to the superb shipboard comforts and gala cruise activities tha await you on the 33,000-ton luxury lin of Moore-McCormack Lines' Good Neighbor Fleet. Whatever the season the South Atlantic is delightful.

Styled in the brilliant modern manner delighting you with superb American cuisine . . . flattering you with perfect service . . . these ships offer every fea the most demanding traveler could as Complete entertainment and activitie programs combine with lazy hours to make this the cruise of a lifetime.

For Information Consult our Authorized Trave

S. S. BRAZIL
S. S. URUGUAY
S. S. ARGENTINA
Sailing Fortnightly from New York

28-day Cruises

to RIO · SANTOS
SAO PAULO
MONTEVIDEO
BUENOS AIRES
and TRINIDAD

MOORE-McCORMACK Lines
5 Broadway

Offices in: BALTIMORE · BOSTON · DETROIT · LOS ANGELES · PHILADELPHIA · PORTLAND, ORE. · WASHINGTON

then be it right away!

can't be beat s-cleaning chore!

uicker with—
EX®
4 ounce size.
per for time and station.

a special effort was being made. In fact, it was almost like a family meal.

Elbridge Sterne was there and everyone gathered in the front parlor, which looked very well with its new curtains and the new furniture. Everyone tried to talk about ordinary things, but his mother and Dorothea kept moving about straightening ornaments or going out to the dining room to take a last look at the table.

Then the doorbell rang. "It must be Jessica," John Gray said. "You'd better let her in, Charley."

Her cheeks were glowing from the cold and she spoke a little breathlessly, saying she hoped she was not late. She wore a new green dress, and at first Charles had a sinking feeling, but when she stood beside him in the parlor he suddenly felt proud and happy and glad that she had come.

When he walked home with her, she said she loved the family. She loved his mother; she was so pretty and she seemed to be so happy. The whole place was so alive, and she liked the way Dorothea and he kept arguing, without ever getting angry. He would never know, she said, how lonely it was to be an only child. She liked Elbridge Sterne, too, though he had not said much.

"No one says much," Charles told her, "when father starts talking."

"I hope he likes me," Jessica said. "Charley, do you think he does?"

"Didn't you see him showing off? Of course he likes you."

"Darling," she said, "it seemed so—well, so ominous when I was standing ringing the bell, and now I'm awfully glad. I feel just the way I ought to feel." And then she sighed. "Father's got to get used to it," she said.

Charles was not surprised when Mr. Rush sent for him on the afternoon of January second. First they talked about the weather, and then Mr. Rush shifted the papers on his desk and looked embarrassed. He always had a hard time with personnel relationships. The partners, he said, had been having a talk about everybody, a routine, end-of-the-year talk, and they had agreed that Charles was getting to be part of the family, and he hoped that Charles liked the family. He did not want to encourage Charles too much, but he wanted Charles to feel happy and contented so that the good work could go on. As of the first of the year Charles' salary would be sixty dollars a week.

There was never again in his life anything exactly like that moment. As of that moment he was making three thousand dollars a year. It was possible, barely possible, that he could marry Jessica Lovell on three thousand dollars a year.

If one man says a thing is good, or a thousand men say it is good, if you wish to know if it is truly good, ask three old men.
—CHINESE PROVERB.

He must have still been riding on the wave of that elation when he met Malcolm Bryant in a snowstorm one night after a call on Jessica.

"Hello, Charley," Malcolm said. "Come on back with me. I haven't seen you for a long while. I've been up in Cambridge, getting all the material whipped into shape. We ought to be cleaned up here by March or April. This is a terrible town."

"You always used to like it."

"I must have been crazy. Well, how has everything been going with you? Where have you been? Calling on Jessica?"

"Yes."

Malcolm said, "I suppose I have a mercurial disposition, but when I first see a thing, I love it, and then when I get it worked out I'm ready to move on. After all, my job is field work. I don't know whatever put it in my mind to ask for the G. Price Fellowship."

"What's the G. Price Fellowship?"

"It's one of those stupid lecture fellowships. Well, if they don't want me, they don't have to have me. Frankly, Harvard's a provincial place and I should have known it."

When they reached his rooms at Mrs. Mooney's, Malcolm switched on the light above his drawing board. His locker trun and bedding roll were both opened. A rubb poncho and a mosquito net were drap across the couch, and a collapsible rubb basin, a desert water bag and a pair of binc ulars lay on top of them.

"I'm just checking up on everything Malcolm waved at the locker as he wriggl out of his overcoat. "There won't be ma stores along the Orinoco."

"I'm sorry you're going away, Malcolm

"Are you?" Malcolm's deep-set eyes h a kindly look. "That's nice of you to say s Charley. You're a nice kid, Charley. Nc when I get to the Orinoco —— Charley, hc would you like to get away from all th and come with me?"

"That would be fine," Charles told hir "but I don't see quite how I can work now." He was thinking of Jessica Lovell ar Rush & Co., of a house and children of the own, of Jessica meeting him when he car home.

"The biological urge. I suppose you reali you're a victim of the urge."

"Yes, I suppose so."

"Oh, my God," Malcolm said. "Excu me, Charley." His meaning was clear. I was asking what a pedestrian life amount to, a material plodding through the yea but then there was always Jessica Lov and there was nothing plodding about J life; and then he thought of Malcolm's li as much as he knew of it. It seemed to spread out on the floor, between the fc locker and the bedding roll.

Charles was shaking hands with Malcol He had always liked M colm Bryant and someho he felt that this might ve well be his last talk wi him.

All the elements of h life were moving as th should that spring. Fir there had been that raise E.P.Rush&Co.; then the was his brokerage account, starting with th five thousand dollars he had received from h aunt. Like other members of the team, he ha done his trading through E. P. Rush, sin it would have been disloyal and deceitful have placed his business elsewhere. Also, I had had the good sense to speak to Mr. Ru about it personally. Mr. Rush told Charl he would probably lose it all, but if he did would be a lesson to him. It was not his bu ness what Charles might do with his mone but it was his business when employees us office time worrying about their own affa and standing around the ticker and looki at the board. Charles was careful never use the office time. He watched the quot tions only during the lunch hour.

It was his own judgment that put him in Radio and a few other equities that were b ing purchased without any regard to ear ings but because of future prospects. T future was boundless that spring, in the lig of mass hysteria.

Charles did not believe in the future. I was sure that buying power would not co tinue with inflated credit and he sold out May, during one lunch hour, just as he ha told Jessica he would, in the midst of a risir market. His account with E. P. Rush, le commissions, showed a balance of fifty tho sand dollars. He bought Governme Fours, and when they were delivered I rented a box for them in the State Stre Trust Company and then he did somethir he had never done while he was in Rush Co. He called Jessica from his extension du ing the noon hour. When he met Jessi that evening, he was Jason back with th golden fleece, and at one and the same tin he was the small-town boy who had mac good and the embarrassed young man wh would have to speak to Her father. He w also the gilded youth of the Jazz Age in h high-powered car, and Jessica, bareheade in her print dress, was a part of the age, to and so was the spring evening.

"Charley," she said, "don't drive so fast but he knew that she did not really mind

(Continued on Page 90)

why air-wick is such an amazing success!

why risk offending ?

air-wick kills unpleasant indoor odors in 1 kitchens

2 living rooms
3 bathrooms
4 bedrooms
5 smoke-filled rooms
6 nurseries
7 musty closets
8 sickrooms

Overnight, a little green bottle with a magic wick started a new domestic habit. Overnight, an age-old problem was solved! Overnight, air-wick made clean-smelling air possible all over the house.

air-wick has banished cooking odors from millions of kitchens, chased smoking odors from millions of living rooms, become an essential fixture in millions of bathrooms. In fact, air-wick lends a helping hand everywhere... makes indoor air seem country fresh.

Today air-wick is a national habit... a natural habit... as natural and familiar as soap and water, broom and dust pan... as important as a clean floor, a sparkling window pane, a spotless table cloth.

These are the reasons why air-wick is such an amazing success. These are the reasons why millions of American families use air-wick in their homes every day.

*air-wick deodorizer and [illegible] is fully protected by U.S. Pat. 2,326,672 a trademark of Seeman Brothers, Inc., New York 13. Tune in air-wick's two coast-to-coast radio programs. Sunday, full ABC network. Saturday, full CBS network.

NEW!

Craftspun Kitchenaires
just wipe them off!

"PLAID" Design

● They're new! They're smart! They're sensational! Craft-spun Kitchenaires*, designed by Lurelle Guild, famous decorator, add a gay note to your kitchen table and windows. Table Covers wipe off as easily as your kitchen counter—a time-saver for family meals. No laundering is ever needed! Seams and hems are heat-sealed for permanence.

The matched ruffled curtains, for kitchen or breakfast nook windows, wipe free of dust and grease in a jiffy—no washing, no stretching, no ironing. Table Cover about $1.69; matching Cottage Set about $3.95.

*Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

CRAFTSPUN Kitchenaires

ALSO CRAFTSPUN LACE [illegible] • WINDOW CURTAINS • SHOWER CURTAINS

SEND FOR FLOWER ARRANGEMENTS FOR LACE 25¢

Recent fully illustrated book on Flower Arrangements by Mrs. W. Cameron Forbes, colonial expert, tells why, for years, lace curtains have been favorites for creating a setting for flower arrangements the year 'round.

SCRANTON LACE COMPANY, Dept. L-1, Scranton, Pa.
Please send me "Flower Arrangements for Lace"; I enclose 25¢ in coin.

Name _____

Street _____

City _____ Zone _____ State _____

(Continued from Page 88)

They drove down Johnson Street to the main road and then over the causeway to the beach, because she said she would like to see the ocean, and they stopped where the road ended, just between the sand dunes. It was still too early for the small houses along the beach to be occupied so they were all alone, looking at the sea that grew continually darker in the twilight.

It was a queer place to be mixing love with bookkeeping, to be so conscious of the sea and of Jessica in his arms and at the same time to be talking about the Radio Corporation of America. He remembered that he told her that he was tired of hiding in corners with her, and she had said that she had liked it in the corners.

"Jessica." He stopped. He wished he did not sound so portentous. "I suppose I ought to speak to your father. We can't go on like this."

"Oh, Charley." He heard her draw a sharp quick breath. "We don't have to tell him just yet."

"We'll have to do it sometime, we'd better do it now."

"Oh, darling," Jessica said. "Suppose he——" Her voice trailed off into a wretched silence, but it was too dark to see her face. "Charley, why are you starting the car?"

"Because I'm going to take you back," he told her.

"Charley, you're not going to speak to him tonight?"

"I'm going to get it over with."

"Oh, Charley, I wish you'd let me talk to him first. It's—it's going to hurt him."

"No, I'll have to do it, Jessica."

"Well, at least I've got to be there with you, and if he says anything, don't be cross or I won't be able to bear it."

She did not seem to be beside him in the car. He was planning what he would say to Mr. Lovell and it did not do much good to plan. Experience was seldom present when you needed it, and it was always too late when you had gained experience.

"Back so early?" Miss Lovell called to them from the wallpaper room when they entered the front hall, and Mr. Lovell in the library said the same thing.

"Back so early?" Mr. Lovell was sitting in one of the heavy leather armchairs, leaning backward comfortably, but he had dropped his newspaper.

Somehow Charles was not able to introduce the subject gracefully. "Mr. Lovell," he said, "I want to marry Jessica."

After all, it could not have been news to Mr. Lovell that he wanted to marry Jessica, yet suddenly Mr. Lovell looked deathly ill and raised a trembling hand to his forehead.

"Jessie," he said, "would you mind getting me a glass of water, please?"

"Oh, father," Jessica began, and she ran to him across the room.

"It's all right, Jessie," Mr. Lovell said, and smiled. "Just a glass of water."

Charles heard the door close as Jessica left the room and for a second neither he nor Mr. Lovell spoke.

"I'm sorry you feel this way about it, sir," Charles said, "but I thought I ought to tell you."

Mr. Lovell pushed himself forward and spoke in a steadier voice. "Of course you should tell me, Charles, but someday, perhaps, if you have an only daughter who is everything in the world to you, perhaps you'll know a little of how I feel." He sighed, but before he could go on Jessica was back with a tumbler of water. "Thank you, Jessie dear," Mr. Lovell said. "Sit down, Jessie. Sit down, Charles. We'll have to talk this over, won't we?" He took a sip of water and placed the glass carefully on the candlestand beside his chair. "Well," Mr. Lovell said, "I've naturally known for some time, Charles, that you and Jessica were interested in each other, but I never believed it would quite come to this. Naturally, I've always known that Jessica would marry someday and I've always hoped—well, of course I'm prejudiced. This is no reflection on you, Charles. You mustn't blame me for wanting Jessie to have everything she's been used to. Now we'll have to think what you can do for Jessie, Charles. I know you're doing well at Rush & Co., but how much are you earning there? You don't mind my asking, do you?"

"No, sir. Sixty dollars a week."

"Well, well. That's splendid, but you can see, Charles, that a girl like Jessie——"

"Yes," Charles said, "I know."

Mr. Lovell looked at him triumphantly but kindly. "Now, Charles, you know that wouldn't be enough for Jessie. It's hardly the time to talk about marrying Jessie, is it?"

"I've got fifty thousand dollars besides that," Charles said, "in Government bonds." It sounded strangely primitive, as though he were buying Jessica, and Mr. Lovell suddenly looked blank.

"Well," Mr. Lovell said, "well. Did your father give it to you?"

"No, sir."

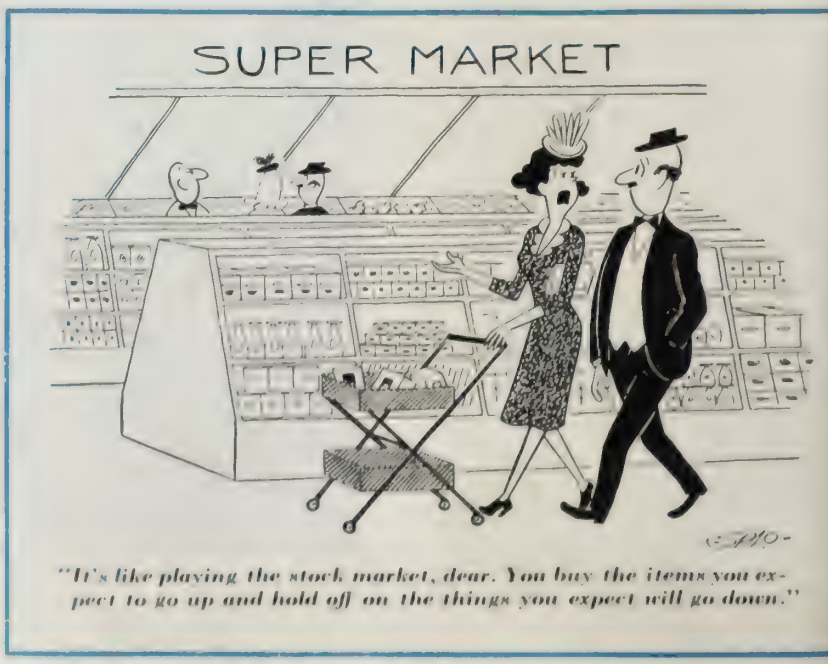
"Did you make it on the market, Charles?"

"Yes, sir."

"I can't say I like that."

"I don't either, but I wanted to marry Jessica."

"Money is one thing," Mr. Lovell said "and stock-market money is another."



"There may be a difference, but as long as you don't lose it, it's money."

"It's not the same," Mr. Lovell said, "as inherited money."

"Father," Jessica said, "it really doesn't make any difference, does it?"

"Jessie"—there was a new edge on Mr. Lovell's voice—"please be quiet. If I had thought there was any chance of this happening——" Mr. Lovell pushed himself slowly out of his chair. "I can't say that I like this, Charles. I don't like being presented with an accomplished fact."

(Continued on Page 92)

"It's like playing the stock market, dear. You buy the items you expect to go up and hold off on the things you expect will go down."

The center of attraction at our house!

INTERNATIONAL HARVESTER REFRIGERATOR

—draws friends and family like a magnet—it's so marvelous! Extra-big inside to hold more . . . special features for extra convenience . . . food protection!

It's love at first sight! This big, handsome 8-cubic-foot model makes e-v-e-r-y-b-o-d-y happy! It's the cold refrigerator with the warm heart! And it's got everything—pedigree, personality, purpose—this International Harvester Super De Luxe! Absolutely the quality refrigerator because it's built to IH perfection-standards. Extra-big inside to hold large economy amounts of food. And so easy to live with, for the IH flexible shelves adjust to fit your family's food-habits. Here's more shelf area . . . more crisper-storage space . . . bigger freezer-locker . . . roomier meat-drawer . . . "Tight-Wad" mechanism operates for a pittance, under a 5-year protection plan, another International Harvester extra.

IH REFRIGERATOR RECIPE

French Strawberry Pie

Add 1 cup sugar to 1 quart washed capped berries; let stand in refrigerator 1 hour. Soften 1 envelope gelatin in ¼ cup cold water. Press half the berries, all the juice through sieve. (Add water to make 1½ cups.) Add ½ cup sugar, 2 tablespoons lemon juice; heat to boiling point; add softened gelatin. Add red food coloring. Chill till mixture begins to thicken. Arrange remaining whole berries in baked 9-inch pie shell. Cover with gelatin mixture. Chill until firm. Top with sweetened whipped cream.

For Refrigerator Recipe Book, write International Harvester Company, Dept. E, 180 N. Michigan Avenue, Chicago 1.

INTERNATIONAL HARVESTER FREEZER

How to cut your kitchen time in half! Not a riddle, a reality! This huge 11.1-cubic-foot glamor-girl of home freezers puts meals on your table that taste divine. And quicker than you can say, "Soup's on!" Yes, you can whip up dinner on the double, or any meal, in a matter of minutes. Because, beneath this glacial glamor you keep 385 pounds of meat, vegetables, fruit and other food that you freeze and store right at home. Save time and enjoy fabulous food, thriftily—this easy IH way!

See International Harvester Refrigerators and Freezers at your IH dealer's today!

Listen to James Melton on "Harvest of Stars," CBS, Wednesday evenings

INTERNATIONAL HARVESTER

Refrigerators • Freezers

COPYRIGHT 1949, INTERNATIONAL HARVESTER COMPANY

Look for this brand name when you buy cream cheese

PHILADELPHIA BRAND PASTEURIZED CREAM CHEESE
3 OZS. NET WEIGHT
KRAFT FOODS COMPANY
MANUFACTURED · CHICAGO, ILLINOIS U.S.A.

Never Sold in Bulk

...for a cake that's utterly different!

SUPREME CHEESE CAKE

¾ pkg. zwieback
2 tablespoons butter or Parkay Margarine
2 tablespoons sugar
* * * *
½ cup sugar
2 tablespoons flour
¼ teaspoon salt
5½ 3-oz. packages Philadelphia Brand Cream Cheese
1 teaspoon vanilla
4 eggs
1 cup cream

Roll zwieback into crumbs; blend them with the butter or margarine and 2 tablespoons of sugar, and press onto bottom of a 9-inch spring pan. • Blend ½ cup of sugar with the flour, salt and cream cheese. (Philadelphia Brand surely—for its richness and delicately fresh flavor!) Add vanilla. Add the egg yolks, one at a time, mixing well after each yolk is added. Add cream, mix again. Fold in stiffly beaten egg whites; pour the mixture on top of the crumbs. Bake in a moderate oven, 325°, about 1 hour, or until "set" in the center. Serves 8 to 10.

Far more food shoppers buy Philadelphia Brand than all other brands of consumer packaged cream cheese combined.

THERE IS ONLY ONE "PHILADELPHIA" CREAM CHEESE
. . . THE BRAND THAT'S MADE BY KRAFT AND

Guaranteed Fresh!

(Continued from Page 90)

"Oh, father," Jessica said, "you sound as if Charlie and I—father, please!"

"I'm sure I don't know how I sound," Mr. Lovell said, "but I expected a rational discussion and instead it's an accomplished fact. Very well, you can be engaged, but I don't want any public announcement until we get to know each other better. And now I'm feeling very tired. Good night, Charles. Good night, Jessie, dear."

"Oh, father," Jessica said, and she threw her arms around him. "You know you'll get used to it in time."

Dorothea and Elbridge Sterne were married in the Unitarian church that June. May Mason, who had married Jeffrey Meader and who already had two children, was matron of honor, and Elbridge asked Charles to be best man, instead of his brother, who came on with Elbridge's mother from Kansas City. Dorothea wanted Jessica to be a bridesmaid, but they had not asked her in the end—because it had not been announced. Nevertheless, the Lovells did come to church, probably because Mr. Lovell had thought it would be more conspicuous had he stayed away.

It was a very large wedding. "The bride," the Clyde Herald said, "wearing her mother's wedding veil, a family heirloom, was exquisitely gowned in a white satin dress from Bendel's, the well-known New York dress house. . . . The flower girls were the Misses Edwina and Malvina Meader, daughters of Mrs. Meader, the matron of honor. . . . The gifts to the bridesmaids were exquisite gold compact boxes and to each of the ushers was given a gold cigarette case. The music for the reception was furnished by the fife-and-drum corps of the Pine Tree Veteran Fire Company. Refreshments and a buffet luncheon for the numerous guests at the Gray residence on Spruce Street were supplied by the J. E. Crowell Catering Company from Boston. . . . The bride and groom left for the wedding trip in a Dusenberg convertible automobile—a gift of the bride's father."

Better to have bread and an onion with peace than stuffed fowl with strife.
—ARABIC PROVERB.

The reception was so large that there were tables both in their own and the Masons' yards. John Gray had insisted on inviting everyone and everyone had come.

"Well, Charles," Mr. Lovell said, "this is quite a day for you. This is really a most original wedding party."

"I hope you're enjoying it, sir."

"Of course I'm enjoying it." Mr. Lovell smiled. "Especially the fife-and-drum corps."

"You know how father is about the Pine Trees," Charles said.

"Yes, indeed, I know."

A minute later Charles was standing alone with Jessica. "You're not angry with father, are you?" she was asking. "He's never nice in crowds."

"Angry?" He laughed at her.

"Charley," she asked, "does all this make you think of something?"

"What?" he asked.

"Why, the firemen's muster. Charley, what'll we do tonight? Let's go somewhere and be alone."

It was wonderful to think that such a thing was possible.

THE time had come when Mr. Lovell had to face the inevitable fact that there could not be an indefinite status quo. It must have been in late August, because Charles could remember the singing of the crickets. He was sitting with Jessica in the summerhouse in the garden. They often loved to sit without talking, and they were not talking when Mr. Lovell called to them from the house.

"Oh, Jessica," Mr. Lovell called, "are you and Charles out there?"

"Yes, father," Jessica called back. "Don't you want to come out with us?"

"No, Jessie, but I wonder whether you and Charles would mind coming in. I'd like to speak to you both for a minute."

Mr. Lovell led the way to the library, which meant that he had something serious to say. As he stood with the books behind him Charles had an idea that Mr. Lovell must have been rehearsing what he was going to say.

"Jessie, dear, I wish you'd sit down, and you too, Charles. The time has come—I did hope it wouldn't come so soon—to talk seriously about you and Charles."

"Oh, father," Jessica said, "has anyone said anything?"

MR. LOVELL cleared his throat. "Yesterday I happened to run into Francis Stanley on Dock Street and he asked me, out of a clear sky"—Mr. Lovell lowered his voice—"if I were to be congratulated. Of course, I've always known Francis Stanley—I've always known the Stanleys were not real friends of ours, in spite of the amenities—but there you are."

"But father," Jessica said, and she laughed feebly, "I don't see anything so bad in that. It's just the way Mr. Stanley always says everything."

"I suppose it is," Mr. Lovell said. "Let me make my point—it does show where we have drifted. If Francis Stanley felt himself free, and he did feel himself free, to ask me such a question even jokingly, it shows what other people must be saying." Mr. Lovell paused and seemed to be looking back over what he had said. "Now this is every bit as embarrassing and as difficult for me as it is for you. If I had been consulted in time, we would not have this problem. Instead, I have to condone it, because it was an accomplished fact. I had hoped if you were thrown together you both might have seen some of the things that are so painfully obvious to me, but not. This is where we've drifted," he told them.

"Father dear," Jessica said, "I've told you and I've told you you won't lose me. Charles doesn't want to take me away from you. Don't be so unhappy, dear."

"I know," Mr. Lovell said softly. "There's only one thing to do, Jessie. If you feel by the middle of, well, November as you feel now I'm afraid a formal announcement will be necessary. This will have to be clarified somehow."

"Father dear," Jessica said, "you're awfully sweet," and she threw her arms around him. It made Charles feel like an intruder when Mr. Lovell kissed Jessica's forehead gravely and softly.

"I'm glad if you're happy, dear," Mr. Lovell said, "and, Charles, I'm glad we've had this talk. Shall you and I shake hands?"

It was hard to be elated in the face of Mr. Lovell's deep sorrow and he honestly tried to put himself in Mr. Lovell's position when he shook hands.

"And now, Jessie," Mr. Lovell said, "why don't you take Charles out to the garden again? I'd like to be alone, just for a little while."

Jessica closed the door softly, leaving Mr. Lovell standing on the hearthrug, head bent, alone with no company but his shattered dreams. If it seemed to Charles over theatrical, it was not his place to say it.

"Darling," Jessica whispered, "it's so hard for him. I wish he didn't love me so much," and then she began to cry.

"Don't, Jessica," he said, and he put his arm around her and gave her his handkerchief.

"I wish everything wouldn't hurt him so," she sobbed. "I wish he had ten children and every one of them a girl. Charley, he wasn't nice to you at all."

"He can't help it," Charles said. "I don't mind as long as you love me, Jessica."

"Darling, if I didn't I couldn't stand it," she said. "It won't be so long till November will it?"

During all his later business experience many otherwise reasonable people kept resurrecting the details of the crash of 1929. They discussed it, apparently, for the same reason that old ladies enjoy describing surgical operations and sessions with their dentist. Sooner or later they always asked Charles

(Continued on Page 94)

Mother's Love IS NOT ENOUGH

WHEN A CHILD IS FRAIL AND NERVOUS

Here's something practical you can do to help him--today!

READ WHAT FOOD-VALUES
YOU GET IN OVALTINE
MIXED WITH MILK

HIGH-QUALITY PROTEIN—essential in building body and nerve cells.

HIGH-ENERGY FOOD—needed for keen vitality.

IRON—necessary to maintain good red blood.

VITAMIN B_1—required for good appetite, digestion and healthy nerves.

VITAMIN C—necessary for healthy gums and all connective tissue throughout the body.

VITAMIN D, CALCIUM & PHOSPHORUS—all needed for straight, strong bones, good teeth.

VITAMIN A—a deficiency prevents normal growth—affects vision—may cause night blindness.

NIACIN—for normal functioning of nervous system and digestive tract.

VITAMIN G (Riboflavin)—essential to normal growth—and health of eyes and skin.

The more you love him, the more desperately you want him to be tall, strong and happy. So it is well to remember, when a child becomes frail and nervous or underweight, the most common correctable cause is faulty nutrition. And this cause is one which you, the mother, can do something about.

In situations like this, many mothers are now turning to Ovaltine. For Ovaltine, mixed with milk, is a rich supplementary food—a protecting food that fills in the gaps, the chinks, and the loopholes of an otherwise "good" diet. It contains, in addition to essential high-quality proteins and quick-energy foods, the important vitamins A, B_1, C, D, G, Niacin, and the valuable minerals Iron, Calcium and Phosphorus.

You must also bear in mind that a child needs proportionately 2 to 3 times as much protein, calcium, iron, vitamins B_1, C and Niacin as an adult. That's another reason for a supplementary food like Ovaltine—to give the under par child extra amounts of the protecting things he needs in extra amounts.

It is also important to know that Ovaltine is specially processed to make it very easy to digest. A child with a "delicate" stomach will usually digest and absorb Ovaltine very readily. Ovaltine even makes milk more easy to digest.

So when you give 2 to 3 glasses of Ovaltine in addition to everyday meals, you can be certain that you have done just about everything you can do to improve your child's nutrition.

A New Flavor

Ovaltine is available in plain and in an improved, sweet, chocolate flavor which children really like. So, why not give your child Ovaltine every day for thirty or sixty days and carefully note the results.

FOR ADULTS—Ovaltine is also widely used by adults, as a protective supplementary food to guard against deficiencies in the diet.

OVALTINE

THE PROTECTING SUPPLEMENTARY FOOD-DRINK

Beauty is my business—

SAYS ALMA WOODS
Glamorous Cover Girl

And SweetHeart Beauty Baths Make My Skin Look Softer... Smoother... Younger—HELP PREVENT CHAPPING!

• "You wouldn't see me on magazine covers if I had rough, chapped skin. So I put aside casual skin care. And I decided to use only gentle SweetHeart Soap for daily baths and complexion care that help prevent chapping. In one short week my skin felt satin-soft. And it looked so much smoother and younger—with a sparkling freshness!"

You see, SweetHeart's soft, creamy lather has a Floating Lift action! Countless bubbles bathe the outer pore openings. Lift off—float away—dirt and rough skin flakes. One week after you start SweetHeart beauty baths, you'll notice an amazing difference! Yes, your skin looks far softer . . . smoother. . . . younger!

Beauty is my business, too!

• Patricia Callahan, 11 months old, has started her modeling career! And pure, mild, fragrant SweetHeart Soap has always been used for her baths.

For baby's bath—for your family's tubs and showers—you can get SweetHeart Soap in the new, large bath size.

NEXT WEEK HAVE A LOVELIER COMPLEXION!

• Begin with special care! Every night and morning, cleanse your face with SweetHeart—only lather. Rinse with cool water—then pat. This gentle SweetHeart Care cleanses, stimulates—helps prevent chapping.

SWEETHEART
The Soap that AGREES with Your Skin

(Continued from Page 92)

where he had been working then and whether he, too, had been long on the market on that particular day in October. He always said that he had been in Boston with E. P. Rush & Co. and nothing much had happened to him. He had made some money out of the market the year before and had put it into Government bonds. It was in a trust fund now and his mother was living on the income derived from it.

He never told the whole truth to anyone except to Nancy and Arthur Slade, and Arthur Slade may have told some of it to Tony Burton at the Stuyvesant Bank, but Charles was never sure. Naturally his mother and Dorothea and Elbridge Sterne knew part of the truth, and Jessica Lovell knew some of it. There were some things which were better not told.

When the drop occurred in September, that minor break which nearly everyone considered a normal readjustment, considering the market's phenomenally unbroken rise, he had seen it for what it was—the first rumblings of a landslide, an ominous shift of stress and strain that would never strike a balance until the whole structure broke. He knew this was the beginning of a greater break long before Mr. Rush, after a partners' meeting, called him in to help compose a letter advising customers of Rush & Co. to sell their holdings of common stocks.

While he was waiting for the letter to be typed, Charles wandered over to the row of leather armchairs before the tickers and the board. Although Rush & Co. was essentially an investment and not a brokerage office, a large group was there, as there had been all that summer. He was looking at the last quotation for Telephone when he saw his father standing near the tickers. He was surprised to see his father, because John Gray had never done his trading at Rush & Co.

> A wise man among the ignorant is as a beautiful girl in the company of blind men.
> —SAADI.

"I've been feeling a little lonely, Charley," his father said. "I thought I would drop into the cloisters here. There's an atmosphere bordering on hysteria down the street. I'm seeking conservatism. There doesn't seem to be a rally yet, does there?"

"No, not yet," Charles said. "I thought that you were staying at home on the side lines."

"I thought I was until I telephoned, and then I got Will Stevens to drive me in, just to see the show. Is the ticker much behind?"

"I don't know. I've only been here for a minute." He was not a customers' man and he had given up all interest in the mechanics of the market.

John Gray took his hands out of his pockets. "I think I'll see whether Moulton's busy. Willie can drive us back home if you'll be at Post Office Square around five o'clock."

"Father," Charles began.

"Don't say it," his father said. "We'll talk about it driving home." He walked away between the rows of chairs toward the ground-glass doors of the partners' offices.

MR. RUSH'S door was open, as it usually was in the late afternoon, so Charles did not knock when he brought in the draft of the form letter half an hour later. Mr. Rush was using the bottom drawer of his roll-top desk as a footrest and he sat tilted back in his swivel chair. John Gray was still there with him.

"All right, Johnny," Mr. Rush was saying. "I only know what I think. If you're out, stay out. Go home and read Boswell."

"And three days from now it will be up again," his father said. "Do you want to bet me, Moulton?"

And then Charles gave Mr. Rush the draft of the letter.

The Cadillac was parked in Post Office Square in a space where there was supposed to be no parking, because his father had learned that the traffic officer on duty there was interested in common stocks.

"Thank you, Tom," his father said to the policeman. "and don't forget what I told you. This is my son Charles."

"Pleased to meet you," the policeman s
"Just leave the Caddy here any time, Gray."

"Tom is very reasonable," his father as they drove off, "but I wish he would call it a Caddy." He leaned back on the leather cushions and half closed his e
They had reached the open road and W
Stevens was driving faster.

"Father," Charles said, "haven't done enough about beating the Systen

"Now, Charley, let's not spoil this driv

"All right," Charles said, "but what ab that trust fund?"

"I'll attend to it next week," his fat said. "Now drop it. I really don't know
I like you, Charley."

CHARLES did not drop it, although he to speak so loudly in the car that his v became hoarse and dry. What was the eart use in taking any risks, he was asking, w he had everything, enough, too much everything? The market was shaky. Any could see there would be a break. It egotism, it was childish, it made no sense.
father had said himself he was not sleep well. What was the use in going on with he did not need any more? There would only one end to it.

His father folded his hands when Cha had finished and was silent for almost a ute before he answered. "You're quite r about that trust fund, Charley. I'll atten it right away. You remember that ten th sand dollars of your mother's and that of Dorothea's? Well, they wanted me t a little something with it. I thought perh I'd better not tell you, but I've done so thing, quite a lot, and really is time I saw ab
that trust fund."

He undoubtedly planning to attend to The papers were e drawn, as Charles fo
later, for a fund of a h
dred and fifty thous dollars. The papers were all there upst in his room, but his father had ne signed them. It was one of those details t taken up when he had the time.

The day when the market first broke October must have started for everyone way it did for Charles: as a part of the o nary routine of living. Work went on with much interruption in conservative off like Rush & Co. It was only when the d went on the next day and the next and w the tickers lagged farther and farther bel the trading that Charles began to obse that all the faces in the office were stan with an expression that began to erase dividuality.

Jessica had come to Boston on the mor of the break and they were to have had lu together, but he called her up at her au house to say that he felt he had better at the office. Yet at home for the first da so he could not notice any change and th seemed to be no more connection betw home and E. P. Rush & Co. than there had been.

That first evening, before supper, his ther said it would be nice if Axel were to some cocktails because it had been quit day in Boston and Dorothea and Elbri were coming to dinner. It was impossi to read anything on his father's face, bu soon as they had a moment alone toget
Charles asked if everything was all right, his father looked very cheerful.

"I wish you wouldn't try to look lik doctor," he said, "and I wish you would think of me as a widow or an orphan. Ha everybody been expecting this? Of co
I'm all right."

The next afternoon Charles left Rush & for an hour to go with Jessica to look at gagement rings, and whenever he saw a mond in a platinum setting from then on thought of those faces and the tickers.
could no longer tell what you might get f common stock when you sold it. Quotat had no meaning because the ticker was s behind. Yet there was not a flurry at ho

(Continued on Page 96)

New! Pond's Angel Face

foundation and powder — all in one!

Fresh-tinted, flawless, enchantingly young and genuine—this is the Angel Face look!

5 superb shades—complete with puff
89¢ plus tax

Easier to apply! "The easiest make-up imaginable! No greasy fingertips. No watery sponge. Angel Face gives a soft, velvety look that's never shiny, never drying."
MRS. ANTHONY J. DREXEL III

Stays on! "Wonderful, smooth, all-in-one make-up! Pond's new Angel Face stays on much longer than powder and never spills!"
THE COUNTESS JEAN DE CARAMAN

Perfect in your handbag! "I always carry Angel Face! It smooths on a complete, flattering make-up in just a few seconds. Never spills over my handbag or clothes."
MRS. NICHOLAS R. DU PONT

(Continued from Page 94)

The next day was terrible, but it was reassuring that his father had not bothered to go to town. He said there was no use going until things cleared up, and of course he was right. He was more interested in his new velvet smoking jacket of a deep burgundy color, which had come that morning, than in the news, and he wore his jacket to supper.

"Why, John," his mother said when she saw it, "you never told me about it."

"I still like to surprise you, dear," John Gray told her. "You always look so pretty when you're surprised. I hope you won't mind if I ask Axel for cocktails, and I've asked for champagne at supper."

"I don't see why it should be a party," his mother said. "It's just an ordinary supper."

"Charley looks tired," John Gray said. "You don't want to take these things too hard, Charley. Everything goes up and down."

Charles felt deathly tired that night, but his father did not seem tired at all.

"John, dear," his mother said, "I'm so glad you got all through with everything before this happened. Do you know what he's been doing all day, Charley? He's been at the library reading about the South Sea Bubble."

Charles was always up by seven in the morning in order to be in time for the eight-three train and the family always had breakfast together. His mother was already at the table and the coffee was there, in the new silver coffeepot, when Charles came down next morning.

"Charles, dear," his mother said, "I wonder whether you would mind going up and knocking on your father's door. He always likes to be with us at breakfast."

"If he's asleep," Charles said, "perhaps he'd like to sleep."

"No. You know he always likes to be down for breakfast."

There was no sort of warning or premonition. As Charles walked upstairs he heard the sound of a horse's hoofs and the rattle of wheels on Spruce Street. It would be the ice company.

For years his father had slept in the small room to the right of the stairs, because he liked to go to bed when he pleased without disturbing anyone. Charles remembered the freshly painted panels and the brass latch of the old thin door. The latch was brightly polished. When he knocked, the ice wagon was still rattling down Spruce Street.

"Father," he said, "are you awake?"

There was no sound on the other side of the door and he opened it instead of knocking again. The window was open and a cool breeze was blowing the new chintz curtains. His father was lying on his narrow spool bed. His Bible was on the bedside table and beside the Bible there was the bottle of sleeping pills which his brother-in-law had given him. There was nothing to explain the spasm of fear which shook him except his father's utter stillness. He was out in the hall again, closing the bedroom door very softly, before he faced the full realization that his father was dead.

A MOMENT later he was in his father's study and had closed the door behind him. When he saw his father's private telephone he must have given the operator his Uncle Gerald Marchby's number from instinct rather than reason. It was still early and his uncle would be at home. He told him to come to Spruce Street as soon as he could, to open the door without ringing, and that he would be waiting in the hall.

Instinct again rather than reason made him realize that his mother had better not be in the house when Doctor Marchby called. There was that dreamlike feeling of hurryin without being able to hurry, but he called u the Masons' house and asked for Mrs. Maso He wanted her to call up his mother and think of some reason to ask her to come ov and to please keep her there for a while. I must have said that something serious ha happened and that he would tell her late Then he walked downstairs.

"Here's your coffee, dear," his mother sai "Was he asleep?"

Yes, he must have answered, he w asleep. He remembered the taste of the coffe He wanted to drink it in a gulp, but inste he drank it slowly. He had not finished t coffee when the telephone rang, and h mother said not to bother, that she wou answer it.

"IT's Margaret Mason," she said. "I' sure I don't know what she wants so early the morning."

"She probably wants to talk," he hea himself saying.

He was waiting in the hall when his Unc Gerald came. Charles followed him up t stairs, but not into the room. He waited the landing until his uncle came out.

"Charley, you c come in now," his un said. His uncle sto near the bed holdi his black bag, and the bottle on the table w gone. "He died in sleep," his uncle said. was a heart attack. T Gray heart, Charley."

"Yes, sir."

"Where's yo mother?"

"She's over at t Masons'."

"Does she know?"

"Not yet," Charl told him.

"How did she get ov there?"

His voice was hoa when he answered. asked Mrs. Mason ask her."

Their glances met a neither of them spo for a moment.

"I'm glad you thoug of that," his uncle sa "I'll go and tell her guess you'd better call up Hugh Blashfie Charley."

"Yes," Charles said. "I guess I'd bett Uncle Gerald."

Neither Charles nor his uncle ever sp again of that moment when they had st at the head of the stairs outside his fath room; and as far as he knew, no one heard anything about it. No one ever he but certain people may have guessed. least he was sure that his mother and D thea had never learned the truth. His fat had died of a heart attack, brought on strain and worry, and perhaps it was just well. He never liked to think of his fat trying to face what was left.

A note came from Jessica that same mo ing: "Charles, dear, I feel so sick and so for what you must be going through. Ple come and see me, dear, as soon as you you can."

He telephoned that afternoon and told the family needed him and he knew would understand. His mother and Dorot were not seeing anyone just yet.

The doorbell was beginning to ring. never forgot the sound of the doorbell. never forgot the hours in that room of father's with Mr. Blashfield and Elbri Sterne, the closed door, the opening drawers, and the stacks of papers. There no way of keeping Elbridge out of it and was glad he had not gone through with alone with Mr. Blashfield.

When he called up Boston, he said would come in at once with his father's la yer, but even before they left they had so idea of the figures, and the fewer people knew, the better.

(Continued on Page 98)

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

The Old Wife Speaks

By Leonora Thornber

Once I was young and fair,
Who now am old;
Golden and bright my hair—
Where now that gold?

Once I had strength and grace,
Who now am bent;
Once I'd a lovely face—
Beauty is spent.

Once I'd a lover true,
And still we love!
All that the years undo
Undoes not love.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

TINY DIAMONDS OF LUX

keep undies "trousseau-lovely" 3 times as long!

This buttercup-yellow petticoat—inexpensive yet lovely enough for a bride—will keep trousseau-lovely with gentle Lux care.

Don't trust your nice things to anything less mild than gentle LUX Flakes!

Richer Suds! These richer suds last and last—don't die down. They float away soil and perspiration without harming color or fabric. Wonderful, even in hard water.

Don't risk harsh suds! Believe your hands. If harsh suds leave your hands rough and dry, think what they may do to undies! Lux care is gentler—keeps undies lovely 3 times as long.

ter Suds! The minute you turn on the water se tiny diamonds billow up into thick, active s. They work fast, leave undies sweet, fresh l lovely in no time.

THESE TINY DIAMONDS OF LUX ARE ANOTHER TRIUMPH OF THE WORLD-FAMOUS LEVER LABORATORIES

"Soaping" dulls hair— Halo glorifies it!

✓ Not a soap; not a cream—cannot leave dulling film!

✓ Quickly, effectively removes dandruff from both hair and scalp!

✓ Gives fragrant, soft-water lather even in hardest water!

✓ Leaves hair lustrously soft, easy to manage—with colorful natural highlights!

Yes, "soaping" your hair with even finest liquid or cream shampoos hides its natural lustre with dulling soap film

✓ Halo—not a soap, not a cream—contains no sticky oils, nothing to hide your hair's natural lustre with dulling film. Made with a new patented ingredient, Halo brings out glossy, shimmering highlights the very first time you use it! Its delightfully fragrant lather rinses away quickly, completely in any kind of water—needs no lemon or vinegar rinse. For hair that's naturally colorful, lustrously soft, easy to manage—use Halo Shampoo! At any drug or cosmetic counter.

Halo reveals the hidden beauty of your hair!

(Continued from Page 96)—

"Charley," Elbridge said, "I don't see why he did it."

"He couldn't help it." That answer explained everything, but excused nothing. "And no one must ever know."

"I don't see how you're going to stop it," Elbridge said.

Of course there was one way to stop a part of that inevitable talk. He could put his own Government bonds into the assets. He would have to tell Hugh Blashfield, the Lovells, and Elbridge would know, but there was no reason why it should go any farther. He could never give himself much credit for his decision, because it was the best way out of it and it was something he owed to the family.

"I'll get along all right, Elbridge," he heard himself saying. "Mother will have to have something and we can get her to put it into a trust."

All he wanted, all he could do, was to have everything look as well as possible. His father had said that he was being conservative and careful and he had expressed that conservatism by protecting himself with what he considered a ridiculously large margin. When he had been sold out at the market the previous day the account had come close to breaking even. It was even possible that it might be slightly in the black when the final figuring was completed, but even so there was almost nothing left.

He called on Jessica that night, just for a few minutes, because he did not want to leave his mother or Dorothea too long. When he reached Johnson Street it was late and he was glad that Mr. Lovell had retired. Somehow all the day was still with him and there was still so much to do that he felt strangely impersonal when he kissed her. She knew, of course, how he had felt about his father, but he hoped that she did not think that he sounded cold and practical. He might have put off until later telling her about adding his bonds to his father's estate, but it seemed to him that she should know right away.

> Better keep yourself clean and bright. You are the window through which you must see the world.
> —GEORGE BERNARD SHAW.

"You see, don't you?" he remembered saying. "It's the only thing to do."

"Oh, Charley dear, of course it is." They sat there in the wallpaper room, holding hands.

"You and I can get on. We can be married just the same."

"Darling," she said, "of course we can. I'll never marry anyone but you."

"I'm awfully glad you're with me," he said. "I don't know what I'd do without you."

"Of course I'm with you, dear. I'll always be with you."

"You see why I don't want anyone to know," he said, "but I suppose you ought to tell your father."

They kissed again in the front hall before he opened the door, and it never occurred to him—there was no possible way he could have told—that he would meet Jessica Lovell only once again.

The Lovells were at the funeral, but they sat in the back of the church, not near the family, and Charles had no opportunity to speak to them afterward. After the service at the grave at the old North Cemetery, Jessica sent him another note. Her father was going to New York for a few days, she told him, and wanted her to go with him and she really felt she should. They would be back on Monday or Tuesday. She would call him the minute they were back.

He wished that he might have seen her before she left, and he was as much surprised as one could be at such a time that she had not asked him to stop at Johnson Street instead of sending a note, but it was sensible for her to go away. There would have been no chance for them to be alone together. He was much too busy putting things in order.

Elbridge Stone had left Wright-Sherwin, and the rooms they could all move to Kansas City the better, now that they had definitely made up their minds. Still there were all those final farewells and repeated explanations. His mother could not be expected to leave immediately. She could not cut the ties all at once, but Elbridge's job in Kansas City could not wait indefinitely. It was as though she were leaving the house to go on a visit and always returning for some odd o end she had forgotten.

In the end Charles was the one who had to make the decisions. Mrs. Mason and all his mother's friends kept telling him they did not know what his mother and Dorothea would have done without him, and his mother and Dorothea were always saying the same thing. He was the head of the family and in every detail he had to represent the family. There was the stone in the North Cemetery; what furniture his mother and Dorothea wanted to take to Kansas City and what was to be done with the rest. What was to be done about the Cadillac, and what about the couple and the bills and the donation his father had promised to give the hospital? His mother was so relieved that he had left something so that she could have her independence. She wanted to give a little of it to the library as a John Gray Memorial Fund.

He was tired of seeing people. They were continually calling at Spruce Street, and whenever he was not talking to Mr. Blashfield his mother was sending word for him to come downstairs and meet them. She had never known how many friends they had and how kind they all could be. Everyone had been to call except the Lovells, but the Jessica and Mr. Lovell were out of town.

By the time the Lovells were back, he had been through so much that Mr. Lovell was only another problem—at least he always hoped that he had given Mr. Lovell that impression. He and his mother and Dorothea and Elbridge were in the park discussing everything in an aimless way, saying the same things over and over when Axel knocked on the door and said that Mr. Lovell wished to speak to Mr. Charles on the telephone.

"Do you mean Miss Lovell?" Charles asked.

No, it was Mr. Lovell, and the telephone was still in the hall below the stairs.

"Good evening, Charles," Mr. Lovell said.

"Good evening, Mr. Lovell. When did you and Jessica get back?"

"This afternoon. I wonder if you would mind coming over for a little while; that is if you're not too busy."

Of course he was not too busy and he had thought that Jessica would surely be at the door to meet him, but instead Mr. Lovell opened it himself.

"Good evening, Charles," Mr. Lovell said. "Shall we go into the library? There's a fire there."

"Where's Jessica?"

"Upstairs, but she'll be down in a few minutes. Charles, I haven't had the opportunity to tell you how sorry I am for you and for everything."

Mr. Lovell seemed relieved as he always did when he reached the safety of the library.

"Have a comfortable chair, Charles," he said. "Take my chair, over there by the lamp."

He did not sit down, as Mr. Lovell asked him, because as soon as they were in the library he had some premonition of what Mr. Lovell was going to say and he could feel some force within himself gathering to meet some immediate shock. "No, thank you," he answered. "I've been sitting down all day."

"I don't exactly know how to begin," Mr. Lovell began, "but I think that frankness has been the basis of our"—he paused—"our previous relationship, don't you?"

"You've been frank, sir. Maybe I should have been franker myself." He was always glad that he said it in just that way.

(Continued on Page 100)

Textron's nylon tricot wonder slip. About 7.00

Matching bra, about 2.00 and pantie, about 3.00

Cool Pool Blue Beauty—

IN TEXTRON TRICOT OF NYLON

Light as rippling water, smooth as tile—Textron's new blue slip of wonderful, beautiful nylon tricot. It doesn't bag or sag, doesn't cling or shrink . . . washes and dries like sheerest nylon stockings. Made entirely of nylon from shoulder straps to sturdy stitches. Also in Snow White, Pink Angel, Black, or Buttercup.

Slip, sizes 32 to 42 in average and tall lengths. Pantie, sizes 4 to 7.

Bra, sizes 32 to 36. At leading stores throughout the country.

TEXTRON INC., Textron Bldg., 295 Fifth Ave., New York 16, N. Y.

TEXTRON

BLOUSES • HOSTESS COATS • MENSWEAR • WOVEN LINGERIE • TRICOT LINGERIE

(Continued from Page 98)

"Now, Charles," Mr. Lovell went on, "nothing that I have to say, please believe me, reflects on you personally. You have behaved magnificently. Everyone is saying so. Everyone has more than sympathy for you. They have respect."

"Perhaps you'd better tell me what you have on your mind, Mr. Lovell," Charles said.

"Now, Charles," Mr. Lovell said, "I want to be kind, but I wish I did not have to be cruel to be kind." Mr. Lovell sighed. "Jessica told me what you have done toward settling your father's affairs. It was what a generous and dutiful son should have done, and I respect you for it, but, Charles, there's a change, and an unavoidable change, in the whole situation, and I am not referring to its financial aspects. I wish I didn't have to be so frank." Mr. Lovell cleared his throat. "I don't mean there's anything verging on, well, scandal, but there's a shadow. In a way, there will always be a shadow of doubt as to whether something was not concealed."

Charles did not answer. He never would be able to avoid that doubt. Perhaps there was a shadow, but it never would have been as deep if the Lovells had stood behind him.

"I've thought this over carefully, Charles. I've been over it thoroughly with Jessica. It's an impossible situation. We must end it."

He had been ready for it, but he was thinking that Jessica should have been the one to tell him, not Mr. Lovell.

"Jessica," he began, and his voice was hoarse and he hated to have Mr. Lovell see him so upset. "Does Jessica want it this way?"

"Jessica's very unhappy," Mr. Lovell said, "but I wouldn't have spoken to you if she did not want it this way. It's only fair for her to tell you so herself. If you'll wait a moment I'll get Jessica."

He must have stood alone in the library for a minute or two, but he was not conscious of any period of waiting until he saw Jessica in the open door with Mr. Lovell just behind her.

"Oh, Charley," she said. Her voice shook him because she seemed to be crying out to him as though she were hurt.

"Now Jessie," Mr. Lovell said very gently. "Just control yourself for a minute and tell Charles and then it will be over."

He seemed to have been waiting for a very long time before she spoke.

"Charley, darling," she said, "I can't go on. I can't marry you with both of you feeling the way you do."

Of course, it was the final truth and it had been between them all the time. She was almost asking for forgiveness, and she was hurt as much as he was. He wanted to tell her not to cry, he wanted to quiet her sobs with her head on his shoulder, but at the same time he knew that he did not care to go any farther either. He wanted to tell her not to bother to explain, but she was still speaking through her sobs.

"I'm so, so torn, Charley," she was saying. Though Mr. Lovell's arm was still around her, she was talking as though he were not there at all. "You see, don't you, that he's given up everything for me? I have to do what he thinks best."

"Now, Jessie," Mr. Lovell said, "it's all right. It's all over, Jessie dear," but it was not quite all over.

"Oh, Charley," Jessica sobbed, "it doesn't mean I don't love you. I do still love you."

There were all those reflexes of pain. He knew that she wanted him to believe she loved him and that she wanted to believe it herself. It was just what Mr. Lovell had said, it was over. Charles did not want to go on with it any further. As long as he lived, he did not want to see Jessica or Mr. Lovell again.

"That's all right, Jessica," he said. "Please don't cry." There should have been something more for him to say, some sort of farewell speech, but he could not think of any. "Well, I'd better be going now."

He did not want to stay in Clyde any longer, but perhaps the main reason why he went to New York was that he wanted Jessica to be sorry.

(To be Concluded)

★ ★

Ask Any Woman

BY MARCELENE COX

"You must admit, mother," refuted a young girl, "that the slang I use is really refined."

Husbands are lucky—they have wives.

Note to women at tea parties: Move toward and away from the refreshment table as if on a conveyor belt.

No man will ever know what it means to have his speed slowed down by an apron pocket catching a doorknob.

News item: Miss Caroline Reed entertained Mr. John Elliot decently at her home.

Memory . . . Some of us recall how if our silk stockings seemed too thin our mothers made us wear heavy cotton ones underneath, and instead of being permitted to see Theda Bara, the only movies we were allowed starred Mary Pickford.

Child's description: "When the cat saw the dog her back shingled."

A liberal education to many college students these days seems to mean a generous allowance.

When a couple is elected to marriage there's no telling which one will eventually assume the presidency.

Home: Life's undress rehearsal.

"The only interesting thing on the program," confided a daughter, "was a juggling act. But you can't really enjoy a juggler, mother; you're always worrying for fear he'll drop something."

No one ever entirely gives up the ownership of a place if he has planted a tree there.

There's nothing more inviting than an old chair whose seat has been worn hollow by the in-and-out tide of family life.

*War*atory: peacetime propaganda.

When my dinner guest is to be a man, I start the dinner before setting the table; if it's a woman, I set the table first.

"I don't call it laziness," said one mother, referring to her fourteen-year-old, slow-moving son. "I just call it growing."

A child who has never licked a dish from mother's baking has not completely been a child.

The best thing about being a farmer is that a man never reaches the age where he has to retire.

Note to husbands: There's an old story about a man who married a woman as a business proposition but he did everything a loving husband should do and found, to his surprise, that he'd fallen in love with his wife.

We've taken the sighs out of size

Warner's 3-Way-Sizes fit comfortably whether you're slim or five-by-five!

You needn't put up with the old-fashioned, breath-taking squeeze of standard sizes. Now, in Warner's 3-Way-Sizes, you can be a lovelier you in the comfiest way.

- First you pick your exact size, then choose your length, hip size and just the control you want from over 300 styles and sizes.
- Even short-waisted women can find what they want in Warner's. For instance, if you usually take half-size dresses, you'll bless the day you slip into a Half-Size corselette designed exclusively for you by Warner's. Incidentally, Warner's Half-Size corselettes are 3-Way-Sized, too, for perfect fit.
- So if you're looking for the answer to your prayers, look for the Warner's that's planned just for you . . . 3 Ways. Girdles begin at $3.50. Corselettes at $10.00.

n your size. . . . . your correct length

/arner's go to any length to please you. Now you can ıoose from short, medium, long or extra long lengths . . . ıe just right for you. ıncidentally, only Warner's make alf-Size corselettes, like the one shown here. They're ng on comfort, if you're short-waisted.

. . . . . your correct hip size

You don't mind taking a trimming where hips are concerned. But a girdle that's too small at the hips causes unlovely thigh bulges. One that's too wide ripples down the sides. For the smoothest trimming ever, Warner's girdles and corselettes are hip-sized; straight, average, full.

. . . . . your choice of control

You'll be hugged but never squeezed in your Warner's . . . whether you choose the easy-does-it control of light, mesh elastics or the stronger control of tightly woven elastics. Incidentally, Warner's corselettes are ABC cup-sized just like all famous-for-fitting Warner's bras.

Among Warner's 300 styles and sizes is the Le Gant "Half-Size" corselette #270½B, in pink, $18.50

Girdles · Corselettes
Pantie Girdles · Bras

WARNER'S*

WORLD FAMOUS FOR LE GANT* • WARNERETTE* • STA-UP-TOP* • ABC* ALPHABET* • A'LURE* "FREE-LIFT" • REDFERN* *Reg. U. S. Pat. Off. The Warner Brothers Co., New York 16, Chicago 6, San Francisco 8

Now! Have the latest styles for half what they'd cost in a store!

A BEAUTIFUL NEW SINGER WILL HELP YOU DO IT!

JUST WHEN CLOTHES are so expensive, when sewing can save you half—along come the finest SINGERS ever!

Designed not just to sew, but to sew beautifully, surely, easily. Choose the model of your dreams tomorrow!

Your SINGER SEWING CENTER is ready with lessons, notions, services to help you sew the newest, smartest styles.

● SINGER® Featherweight Portable does work of a full-size machine. Weighs only 11 lbs. Comes in handy case. Outsells any other model in the world!

● A SINGER is so easy to use! Saves basting; sews over pins. Has wide range of speeds, non-glare sewing light, quick threading, tension indicator.

Dress at right is made from Vogue Pattern #S-4920. Jacket from Vogue Pattern #6672.

● Select a style that suits your home. SINGER has many beautiful models in period and modern design. Matching stool available with De Luxe Desk.

● Set of basic attachments comes with every new [illegible]. Zipper foot, [illegible]

● You're sure of dependability with a SINGER! And service is as near as your nearest SINGER SEWING CENTER. Queen Anne model is one of the favorites.

● There's a price to fit your purse: SINGER Machines start at $89.50. Easy budget terms. Liberal trade-in allowances. Above is newest console.

● Best notions in town! Your SINGER SEWING CENTER has them. They'll make buttons, buttonholes. Give sewing lessons as gift with new machine.

*Reg. U. S. Pat. Off. by THE SINGER MANUFACTURING COMPANY

FOR YOUR PROTECTION SINGER Sewing Machines, Vacuum Cleaners, and other products are sold only at SINGER SEWING CENTERS, identified by the Red "S" on the window, and never at other stores.

Above is SINGER SEWING CENTER at 115 Main St., Suffolk, Va. Hundreds from coast to coast. For address of your SINGER SEWING CENTER see classified phone directory. SINGER SEWING MACHINE CO.

SINGER SEWING CENTERS

THERE'S ONE NEAR YOU TO SERVE YOU

PUBLIC AFFAIRS . . . SERVICE STATION

(Continued from Page 23)

Sometimes the best work was being done by persons and groups unaware of anything unusual about their results. To make certain of each piece of information we have presented through these pages, we have traveled over 100,000 miles in this country and in Europe, visiting scores of communities, investigating programs, talking to leaders. Our findings have been studied, sifted, classified. Today there is a wealth of reports, pamphlets and clippings out of which we can give advice and help to readers who want to participate in community workshops.

The first two years have not produced any magic formulas. There is no real short cut for successful community action. But we have rediscovered the fact that the most rewarding work any club can do is to study its own community. Nearly every community has problems to solve. We have proved that there is no more successful method than the co-ordinated efforts of women's groups when they have faith in their goal. We have been happy over the growing partnership of professional workers and laymen who encourage and support the social-service agencies. But even with the best-laid plans, there is no substitute for work and more work.

If we do not have peace within ourselves, it is in vain to seek it from outward sources. —LA ROCHEFOUCAULD.

From the stimulating flood of letters on community problems so many stand out. There was one from a mother in West Point, Mississippi, who sought our help. She wrote, "We live in a rather large rural community, closely bound by a school, three churches, a store. The school is our main trouble. Built fifty years ago for one hundred pupils, it now houses two and a half times as many students. No real additions or repairs have been made in fifty years. It is a death trap in the eyes of almost every parent. How can a group of mothers build a new school?" Today these mothers are on their way toward a modern, well-planned school building.

At Dillingham, Alaska, mothers felt that school children should be provided with appetizing hot lunches. Mrs. Polly Kallenberg, secretary of the parent-teacher association, asked us to find out how other small communities had solved a similar problem. Our editors asked advice from Government agencies and schools all over the country. Finally, we were able to introduce the plan used by Fruitland, Idaho, a small community with one of the best hot-lunch programs we could discover. Fruitland's example is helping many other towns to start hot lunches in their schools.

From Harvel, Illinois, came the plea: "A woman member of the school board? It was unheard of. People laughed when my name was put up. But I received twice as many votes as my opponent. At the age of thirty, with a daughter, ten, in the fifth grade and a son, five, ready to enter school, I find myself a full-fledged member of the school board. Now I want to be sure I am living up to my new responsibilities. I have read the School Code of Illinois from cover to cover. I want to do the best I can to make my town's schools provide effective education for our children's life ahead." The Public Affairs Department provided this young mother with the Ascension Parish (Louisiana) plan to bring schools and community together.

A closely knit organization of women volunteers was needed in Evansville, Indiana. Mrs. W. C. Bussing was one of the first JOURNAL readers to write our new department for advice as to how Evansville's new Civic Club might work more effectively. She explained: "After having carefully studied your article and several others, our policy and steering committee has put together this skeleton of ideas on what we want and what we need to perfect a smooth-running volunteer agency. We want your frank opinion, your comments, criticism and ideas."

Today, Evansville has a very excellent Citizens' Participation Bureau with one paid staff director and a growing list of "participators" in community life. It is an excellent pattern of community cooperation. No one wishes to take entire credit. The down-to-earth planning was done by the Civic Club, the Junior Service League came forward with financial support, and the Evansville Welfare Council provides housing and direction for the project.

Many fine projects have come to our attention. We wish we could list each one. There's a family camp at Phoenix, Arizona, sponsored by the Y.M.C.A., where parents and children can take a holiday together at prices young married people can afford. In Toronto, Canada, the Junior League has sponsored and financed a "Kindergarten of the Air" which brings through radio to isolated homes a plan of preschool activities. At the Scottish Rite Hospital in Decatur, Georgia, crippled children are kept abreast of their school studies through the efforts of fifteen Red Cross Grey Ladies, all ex-school-teachers. In Cincinnati, the Craft Shop for the Handicapped has guided hundreds of blind, deaf, crippled or mentally deficient workers toward useful occupations.

There are many others. The two years have provided many encouraging experiences. The battle for a decent and peaceful world goes on. There have been growth and progress—there must be much more. But this much is true: women all over the country are awakening to a new sense of citizen responsibility. Their determination to help their towns and their country is making its mark.

And the Public Affairs Department—its growth proved, its being justified—will continue to place every means at our disposal to help our readers achieve results.

COMMUNITY HOUSEKEEPING

(Continued from Page 23)

wn town. Here are some of the most pressing n many communities:

- Full-time health department
- New school buildings
- Recreation program
- Better salaries and working conditions for teachers
- Family-counseling service
- Mental-hygiene clinic for children and adults
- Child-health clinic
- Accident prevention
- Living war memorial
- Children's court and detention facilities
- Fellowship House (interracial)
- Improved hospital facilities
- Merit system in local government
- Sex hygiene in public schools
- Vocational-guidance service
- Slum clearance
- Visiting Nurse Association
- Homemaker service
- Little theater
- School lunches
- Enforcement of child-labor laws
- Modernized city and county charter
- Parent education
- Public library
- Old-age recreation and counseling
- Citizens' advisory council
- Maternal-health center
- Day care for children
- Foster homes
- Revision of outmoded state constitution

Once you've decided what your town needs, consider how and where you can begin your work. Find out if another organization is already interested in your goal. Talk to other people who feel as you do. If you have had

(Continued on Page 105)

Such charming buttons! Simple buttons, decorative buttons, finest quality buttons . . . buttons for every conceivable fashion, in every price range. Ask for La Mode at your favorite Button Department and you'll get the best in buttons.

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

B. BLUMENTHAL & CO., INC., 1372-82 BROADWAY, NEW YORK 18, NEW YORK

THE WORLD'S GREATEST SELECTION OF FASHION BUTTONS

"Fine fabrics are the foundation of fashion"

Like STERLING on fine silver
. . . like 14K on things of gold . . .
so does the Juilliard fabric name enhance the prestige and value of fashions that bear it.

You'll find Juilliard fabrics in a wide variety of beautiful fashions . . . the finest of woolens, worsteds, corduroys, velveteens and rayons . . . identified by the Juilliard label.

Juilliard Featheroy

Luscious FEATHEROY, Juilliard's fine-wale, vat-dyed, combed yarn Corduroy . . . dramatically contrasted in Spode Red and Navy.

Juilliard 100% VIRGIN WOOL

The fine woolen in this distinguished coat is a superb BROADCLOTH by Juilliard . . . the color Fleur de Lis.

Juilliard

Glowing JUILLIANA, new rich worsted silk and rayon blend by Juilliard

Where To Buy Them . . . For names of the stores nearest you featuring these fashions, write today to A. D. Juilliard & Co., Inc., 10 West 47th Street, New York, N. Y.

THE DAYS OF
"anonymous fabrics"
ARE PAST!

During and after the war, you had to take almost anything you could get . . . and grin and wear it! But today, with fine fabrics once again plentiful, more and more leading stores are guiding you to the finest . . . by featuring the Juilliard label. Be sure to look for it!

Juilliard

Reg. U.S. Pat. Off.

WOOLENS • CORDUROYS • RAYONS

(Continued from Page 103)

no previous experience, offer your services to an established group. Join in, participate.

You may wish to become a working partner in the work of:

1. A nonpartisan group—neighborhood-improvement associations, parent-teacher association, civic clubs; or

2. A political group—you cannot hope to improve your party unless you familiarize yourself with its organization. Get to know your precinct captain—become active on his committee. Only interested workers can arouse their party to community needs.

Even if there is no local civic organization to which you wish to belong, you are not helpless. You can

1. Establish a local League of Women Voters, form a new Municipal League or a Woman's Civic Club. (Write to this department for helpful details.)

2. Invite people interested in civic progress to your home, school or church for informal discussions. To get them started is a test of your ingenuity. Beware of discussion and more discussion. Keep them to the point.

Next comes teamwork—perhaps the most important step of all. Don't try to do your work alone. Seek out the advice of your social planning council—if there is one. In rural areas, it is sometimes expedient for several communities to join forces. But before you start, find out what has been done before and what is left to be done.

"Do I have the time?" asks a busy young mother. Ask yourself, "Is there time not to work for better conditions for my children to grow up in?" Aren't good schools, better playgrounds, good civic government part of the care you owe your children? Every thoughtful woman knows that only as she concerns herself with community problems can she be certain of the influence the community will exert upon her family.

Good communities need good housekeepers. And it's every woman's job.

THE APPLAUSE OF THOUSANDS

(Continued from Page 38)

sked her to lunch and she had a noon exam. he had never met Chan's family.

She dropped down on the bench in front of er dressing table and stared interestedly in ie glass. There sat a girl in a green-linen ress with a violet belt; her curls stood up ll over her head and needed brushing.

She jumped up and slid down the short anisters. Although she was a college senior, ie often felt about seven years old. She aulted off and walked sedately to the front oor. A wistaria vine framed the doorway nd one of the pendant blossoms made a urple-black shadow swaying, very slightly vaying, on the flagstone walk. That was too eautiful to bear. Shadow on a rock—what d it mean? Across the street, quiet in the orning sunshine, was a row of Lombardy oplars, straight and tall. She had never oticed before how lovely they were, how raight, how green. She sat down on the top ep to wait happily for her mother.

Alicia Cavell, too, paused at the top of a ght of steps and looked into the June morn-

Who is first silent in a quarrel springs from a good family.
—TALMUD.

g. This was a city street th rows of brick houses i either side, and conant traffic. She noticed spindling elm, with delate branches and fragile aves, growing out of the iewalk. That little tree will alive a year from now, she thought; it can't ink or move, but it will breathe. Someone will nd on these steps and think it is a pathetic little e, just as I am thinking. She looked down e street where she had hurriedly parked her an hour ago; it seemed as though there ould be about it an air of quiet, of abeyce, of shock. But no, nothing had changed. After Doctor Fairfield had told her that e was going to die, he had said, playing th a pencil, not looking at her sitting there, eady so remote, in an easy chair beside his sk, "Do you remember before Hervey was rn you were told not to worry about it, or en think about it, it was a perfectly natural ocedure? With the few reservations that d been made for you, you were told, let ture take her course. Well, I repeat that vice now, and please do not think I am rdhearted. Do what you feel like doing, cept for the reservations I have made; n't think about it. Death, after all, is a fectly natural procedure. We hate to adt it, but it is."

"I know it is," she said quietly. "I have t very close to death, in a way, since I lost ance. It is absolutely true that I am not a afraid to die. It will just be another exience that he and I have shared." But oh, thought, what will happen to Hervey? "Is re anything else?" she asked. What else uld there be? She wanted to be alone now, think, to readjust each hope, each plan. t her have one day, just one day absolutely ne without any demands on her strength her emotions.

She was driving automatically now—France's car, the car operated entirely by hand; it was a part of her, that car.

She had had one perfect year. No one has a right, perhaps, to ask for more than that it was more than the majority of people ever had. Her future looked assured; she was playing Broadway and she was married to France. Hervey Francis Cavell. She loved the sound of it, she had loved everything about him. Young Hervey's birth had been planned, it had been exciting and joyful; they had wanted a baby. Then France had polio and for years he was practically helpless. His need of her had been so great that, her heart in shreds, she had given up the stage. I will never let him know how much it meant to me, she thought. I can act—and he shall never know. He had never known.

But she had known—every minute she had known. She saw everything as an actress sees it, through the alert and watchful eyes of an actress. Her friends were characters in a play; anything that concerned the stage—a playwright, an actor, a director, a scene shifter—was of vital and pressing interest. She read and studied plays. And never did she relinquish the hope, the conviction that ultimately she would do what she knew she was capable of doing.

After the death of her husband, after she had picked up the agonizing pieces, the time had come. She had just started writing letters and establishing contacts, she had been encouraging herself by rereading her scrapbook. She must start in a small way, she knew that—summer theater, perhaps, where her role could be the frivolous mother of the beautiful heroine, the caustic friend who drops in for tea, the enigmatic woman who runs the hotel. Later she had hopes, impregnable hopes, of her rightful place, of Shakespeare—of winning what she knew, with humility and certainty, she was capable of winning, she had a right to win: the applause of thousands. And peace with herself.

Now this was over. As suddenly as a stone—or a word—is dropped, it was over. She was a failure, a bitter, bitter failure. She closed her mind to the bitterness of it, the completeness of the failure. She did not have time to think about it now. She turned her thoughts to Hervey.

She had left the Boston traffic, she was on her way to the quiet suburb where she lived; she was driving along the Charles River Basin. The long shells were on the river, the brown bare backs of the boys bent to their oars. Young mothers wheeled their babies. The sky and the river were blue, the trees were green, it was June.

Does she really love that boy? Alicia thought. That is what I have got to know. I have got to know what is going to happen to her. She's through college, she has a cum laude—ah, my darling brat—she could support herself, with tch-ups with Avondale ion

lors

in-the-yarn, you get and stripes.

d with a rays n colors
ipes ough.

E woven-in...

suit ripes mer-your hing cut color uare

in one on 5092

"Fine fabrics are the foundation of fashi

Like STERLING on fine silver

. . . like 14K on things of gold . . .

so does the Juilliard fabric name enhance the prestige and value of fashions that bear it

You'll find Juilliard fabrics in a wid of beautiful fashions . . . the finest worsteds, corduroys, velveteer . . . identified by the Ju

Juilliard 100% VIRGIN WOOL

The dist sup

Juilliard . . . the Luscious FEATHEROY. Juilliard's fine-wale, vat-dyed, combed yarn Corduroy . . . dramatically contrasted in Spode Red and Navy.

Juilliard

Glowing JUILLIANA, new [illegible] and rayon blend by Juilliard.

Where To Buy Them . . . For names of the stores nearest you featuring these fashions, write today to A. D. Juilliard & Co., Inc., 40 West 40th Street, New York, N. Y.

e added little I'll be able to leave her, but I nt things more secure, happier, less grim for r than that. He has too much money, he ars his wealth more carelessly than any boy e ever known, but he has too much of it—too ich is almost as bad as too little. Oh, I must ow what her life is going to be.

She turned into her street, her quiet shady eet, and saw the roof of her own house. dubitably, irrevocably and with a wild spair she realized the finality of what had ppened to herself. I can get used to it, she ought, but I must be alone. Then she saw ervey, whom she had not really expected, ting there on the steps in the sun.

Hervey ran down the walk and threw her rms around her mother. "Chan is coming lunch! I have the whole day off!" She rew back and gazed at her mother. Alicia oked tired, but when she smiled, Hervey rgot it. "Isn't it wonderful!"

"Wonderful! Where is he?"

"Oh, in New York. They're flying. He's oing to stay over Sunday. They'll get here bout one."

"They?"

"His mother," Hervey told her. "Oh, I orgot—she's coming too. I asked them oth for lunch." As she spoke she realized she had not given a thought to his mother.

This announcement assumed in Alicia's exhausted mind the quality of an ordeal. She looked so overcome that Hervey was shattered.

"You wanted me to ask them, didn't you?" she wailed.

Alicia gathered herself desperately together. "Of course! We haven't much time to plan things out and collect lunch, that's all—Nonie's off for the day. And it's the first time we've met Mrs. Wilde. What were you doing, useless, lolling out there on the steps?" I must have a little time, she thought—give me a little time.

"I never thought about that," Hervey admitted. "I never thought about it."

Chan is the Wildes' only child, Alicia said to herself. He's going to inherit millions and Mrs. Wilde is coming to look us over. Why did it have to happen today?

"Let me plan things out," she begged as, heir arms around each other, they walked oward the house. "Let's plan things together. What do you want me to wear?" She thought, first, as an actress and not as housewife thinks.

"Wear what you have on," Hervey decided promptly. "I like you in a sweater and uit; it makes you look young. You are oung." She kissed her.

No, it's too casual—the first time she omes to the house, I mean. Let's see. I'll ear my violet print and match your violet elt and we'll look well together. That's ettled. I like your red shoes. Hervey"—she poke tenderly and lightly, but suddenly she ad to know how important it was to see his through—"are you fond of Chan?"

"Oh, yes."

"But you aren't engaged?"

"No." She looked sideways at her mother. He only said if I went out with another man e'd knock my little block off." She added, When I have an engagement ring, you'll be he first of anybody to see it."

"Thanks," said Alicia dryly. She dropped to a hall chair. It was important that ings go well—and very well.

"What shall I be doing, mother?"

"Let's see. Scoot up those stairs and do er the bathroom if it needs it. Be sure the ap and towels match." Death is a natural procedure . . . be sure the soap and towels match.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Light

By Jane Morrison

Thoughts are torches of birch that glimmer
A frail light down the paths of mind;
Happiness, a moon to shimmer
Through a forest, echo-lined.

Sadness is a beam so mellow
It flickers low, but love will start
Lightness firm and round and yellow,
Like a lantern in the heart.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Luncheon for four, she said to herself, concentrate on nothing else but that.

Alicia closed her eyes. After several minutes she called faintly, "How's this, darling? Come to the top of the stairs. Chicken broth—Nonie left some, it's delicious—then crab-meat salad in avocados. I've got the avocados. You can take the car and whip down to Minnie Johnson's and get scads of little rolls and—let's see—a lemon-meringue pie. Is that enough, with coffee? We can fill Chan up on rolls. No, that's a lady's lunch—we ought to have asparagus on toast. I'll telephone for the crab meat and the asparagus."

"That's frabjous."

"Well——"

It must be perfect and seem to be effortless, she thought. She stood up, hung her coat on the back of the chair and rolled up the sleeves of her sweater.

Hervey did what she was told, but she seemed remote from interest in the mechanics of the party until just before one o'clock. Then she came flying down the stairs and cast herself into Alicia's arms, her face distraught. "Oh, mother, do you think everything will be all right? I'd die if it wasn't.

Alicia's equilibrium broke into a thousand pieces. She felt as if she were going to bow her head on Hervey's head and weep. If she once started to weep she would weep forever.

Brace up, she said to herself, play the frivolous mother of the beautiful heroine, was the part you wanted. You will never play it on any stage, you will never have the chance, but you can play it in your own house to an audience of your own child.

She lifted Hervey's chin, the soft chin of one-and-twenty, kissed her wet eyes and heard a voice say, "Why, of course everything will be all right. Run along upstairs and fix your face," said the voice of the frivolous mother of the beautiful heroine.

Chan sprang from the taxi, looked eagerly toward the house to see if Hervey was about, handed his mother out and they came briskly up the walk together, Cornelia Wilde swiftly appraising the house.

"It was so good of you to ask us for lunch," she said to Alicia. "I've wanted to meet Hervey and her mother for such a long time."

As Mrs. Wilde took both of Hervey's hands—she did not kiss her—Alicia wondered what part each was destined to play in the life of the other. This tall, assured woman in the big hat, fitted suit and fashionable Swiss shoes—was she kind?

"Would you like something cold to drink, Mrs. Wilde?" Hervey asked in the living room, with the engaging air of the meticulous hostess.

Mrs. Wilde glanced inquiringly at her son.

"She usually takes lemonade," said Chan. "Is that O.K., Skip?" He had the naturally deferential air toward women that many very tall boys have. "Shall I help her make it, Mrs. Cavell?" He and Hervey disappeared together and for several minutes there was not a sound of cracking ice.

Mrs. Wilde, Alicia saw, had indeed come with a purpose—this was no what-a-charming-house, so-good-of-you-to-ask-us for-lunch engagement. She had already seen, without doubt, that the house needed painting, that the rug, though good, was worn out; she would undoubtedly note that the pottery and table linen were Italian and nice and—probably—that the soap and towels matched. The stage was set as Alicia wanted it set: This house, Hervey's house, is

(Continued on Page 108)

Make your own match-ups with Avondale

Companion Colors

Because Avondale fabrics are dyed-in-the-yarn, you get the exact same colors in solid shades and stripes.

Begin with a threesome . . . and end with a wardrobe. Avondale cotton chambrays in Companion Colors are made to be matched. The same stay-fast, dyed-in-the-yarn colors are woven into solid shades and stripes . . . and the patterns are woven through. Soft, Avondale chambrays are easy to handle, drape and sew . . . sturdy, they withstand washings and wear. And there are hundreds of patterns to choose from . . . Sanforized*, all-cotton . . . in a range of qualities and prices . . . in ready-to-wear and piece-goods.

Look for the green label that identifies these Avondale Marlin chambrays in Companion Colors.

AVONDALE

dyed-in-the-yarn fabrics . . . the stay-fast colors are woven-in . . .

58 Worth Street, New York 13

*Residual shrinkage less than 1%

Begin with a box bolero suit trimmed with mitred Marlin stripes —plus a hand-span striped cummerbund. (Try it with or without your own blouse.) . . . Take a matching bold Marlin stripe for a simply cut overblouse with the same solid color skirt. . . . Drape a matching square over your shoulders and carry an unusual money bag.

All these separates in one Advance pattern 5092

no work...no worry

No Moths!

no work . . . Simply put EXPELLO Hangers in closets, and sprinkle Crystals in chests and drawers . . . no worry . . . "ex-ray"* Vapor penetrates every seam and fold of a garment—spots not reached by sprays . . . no moths . . . all moth life is quickly destroyed by "ex-ray" Vapor. At leading department, drug, grocery and hardware stores.

Expello ex-ray vapor*

*Invisible . . . Penetrating

JUDSON DUNAWAY CORPORATION, DOVER, N. H.

want home fashions Help?

You'll find it at the 1949 Carpet Fashion Openings, March 1-10. Watch for your favorite dealer's announcements. Also write for "Colorama", beautiful color-idea book by Clara Dudley, famous color-consultant for Alexander Smith. Send 25¢ to Clara Dudley, Alexander Smith & Sons Carpet Co., Dept. LH-9, 285 Fifth Avenue, N. Y. 16, N. Y.

Alexander Smith

FLOOR-PLAN RUGS 1845 BROADLOOM CARPETS

© 1949 Alexander Smith & Sons Carpet Co.

(Continued from Page 106)

house of dignity and taste but not riches; in this house Chan is judged on his merits as an individual and not on his merits as a rich young man. When they all stepped into the kitchen to watch Hervey's fascinated manipulation of a pressure cooker of asparagus, Alicia felt it was a good thing that the elegant Mrs. Wilde should hear that cooker chirp. Things were too close upon them today for pretense—there is no pretense in a kitchen.

"The best asparagus in the world is grown north of Boston," Chan told his mother with a grin. "Hervey says so." The information, obviously, was important for that reason. "Mother," he asked suddenly, "did you know Hervey is graduating cum laude?" He was showing her off.

"I never knew a cum laude," said Mrs. Wilde generously. "It makes you practically an authority on anything, Hervey. . . . What do you think about Russia?"

"I think we should give her the benefit of the doubt," said Hervey. She was solemn. "But keep our eyes open." She looked so earnest and absurd Alicia wanted to tie a bib on her.

"Would you like to go to Russia, Skip?" Chan asked her.

"Oh, yes, I would."

"Well," said Mrs. Wilde lightly, "I think a cum laude should have everything she wants."

"Mother wouldn't believe that was good for me," said Hervey. They all laughed. "There," she said, "three minutes—it's done!"

The luncheon was a success. Chan absorbed a dozen little hot Parker House rolls and the last crumb of the lemon-meringue pie, and after coffee in the living room he and Hervey disappeared into the kitchen again, to do the dishes.

"This domesticating of my untamed son," Cornelia Wilde said, "is quite something."

That best portion of a good man's life, his little nameless, unremembered acts of kindness and of love.

—WILLIAM WORDSWORTH.

The moment, Alicia felt, had come. She steeled herself to meet it, praying for wisdom.

"I don't wonder he's in love with Hervey," Mrs. Wilde said. "She's charming. He's head over heels in love with her, you know, Mrs. Cavell—but they're both so young."

"Very young," agreed Alicia. What is coming next?

"Chan has lost a lot of time because of the war, like most boys," Mrs. Wilde went on. "Three years in the Navy. And after he finishes Yale, his father wants him to go to the Harvard Business School. Frankly—you don't mind if I'm frank?"

"Please be frank," said Alicia.

"Well, frankly, we hoped he would concentrate on his belated education and not on falling in love!" She looked at Alicia, who sat with one knee over the other, swinging her foot. "It's rather old-fashioned, isn't it, for the parents to be discussing this; but—well, Chan will inherit a lot of responsibilities and his wife will have to adapt herself to the idea that the business is important. I wondered how you felt about all this," she said.

"I think wealth is a tremendous responsibility, of course," said Alicia, "and by no means an unmitigated blessing."

MRS. WILDE gave her a quick searching look. "Chan would indeed like to hear you say that," she answered wryly. "He told his father it is a man's birthright to strike out for himself, where he feels he can do his best, and he is being deprived of his birthright. He told me today, Mrs. Cavell, he hopes to persuade Hervey to be married in July and to announce the engagement next week, before her graduation. That's why I broke an appointment in New York and flew up to talk things over—I hadn't realized they were moving so fast."

For a moment Alicia did not answer. "Neither did I," she said at last quietly. "Hervey told me this morning they weren't engaged, but they had evidently had between themselves what is known as an understanding. It seems to me they will have to decide things for themselves, ultimately. Hervey has never been in love before—never been remotely attracted. Still, such an early marriage, when they only met in February—I don't know—it's taken me by surprise." She made a quick and sweeping decision. "Mrs. Wilde, I think I am in favor of it and I will tell you why. My doctor told me this morning that I have a heart condition—no, no, please, it's nothing to worry about. I'm not worried about it at all—but still, since we are being frank, it would be a great satisfaction if I knew that Hervey—that her future was somewhat assured."

MRS. WILDE looked at Alicia with sympathy and concern. "I'm so sorry to hear that," she said, "so very sorry. Is there any possible thing ——"

It is probably automatic, Alicia thought, when you have so much money, to ask if there is anything you can do to stop the sun. "No, there isn't a thing," she said, "thank you. Except that I don't want Hervey worried unnecessarily." There it is, she thought—please be good to her.

Cornelia Wilde had been appraising Alicia as thoroughly as she had appraised the house. She is not what I expected, Chan's mother had been thinking; she seems to feel a little sorry for us because we have so much money. She isn't telling me what a wonderful girl Hervey is or how many other chances she has had. She's been forthright. This might be a gallery play about the doctor, but it isn't. She looks as though she'd been through hell today, but she never for a minute loses that grace, that —— I like the woman.

She said, "Of course! Yes, we had better let them make their own plans, I agree; as you say—they would anyhow, wouldn't they?" With tact and kindness she competently turned the conversation away from Alicia back to Hervey and Chan. She said in a very few minutes, "I had better be getting back to the airport, I think. I have a dinner engagement in New York. But I'll be seeing you again, very soon."

Chan and Hervey drove Mrs. Wilde to the airport in Alicia's car and Alicia, feeling remote, now that it was over, from every single thing that had happened, feeling exhausted, slowly climbed the stairs and lay down on her bed. She gazed at her husband's photograph for a long time. She had done her best and she could do nothing more. On the chest of drawers, just as France had left it, was a sketch of herself in the riding habit she had worn when she played New York. She turned her head away from it and closed her eyes. For the first time that day, her lashes were wet.

She heard Chan and Hervey return, she heard them enter the hall; there was a long silence when they went into each other's arms, and after a while she heard Hervey walk into the kitchen, heard the sound of water turning on and off. Hervey came back into the hall.

"Look at my hands, lovey," she said, and her young voice carried up the stairs, using an endearment Alicia had never heard her use. "I washed them good before we go up and show my mother my ring."

"They're beautiful," Chan said. "We'll go up and tell her we have a table for three on the Ritz roof, to celebrate."

What happened next was nothing—only a few words—but it was a talisman Alicia could hold for the rest of her days. It was a citation, it was her cum laude bestowed by the only one who was qualified to bestow it.

"Is this a picture of you, Skip?" Chan's pleasant voice asked. He had evidently been looking at the scrapbook which in the rush of preparation Alicia had forgotten to put away. "No," he said, "it's your mother."

"I hope I'll be like her as well as look like her," Hervey's clear voice answered; and then with the startling and intuitive wisdom of the young, she bestowed the accolade. "She wanted to be an actress, you know, but what she had to play was the part of a person."

THE END

Style notes for Silverware Shoppers

Hat by John Frederics. Here's a smart fact to keep under a smart hat: Holmes & Edwards is a finer different kind of silverplate, sterling inlaid with these to stay lovelier longer. Suit Vera Maxwell.*

Our patterns will more than suit you. You'll love them. Purse by Rosenfeld. It'll be a pleased purse too when it finds our prices have not gone up! Shoes by Saks Fifth Avenue. They're heading for the store that carries Holmes & Edwards Silverplate . . . are you?

*The most used spoons and forks of this silverplate are inlaid with two blocks of sterling silver at backs of bowls and handles . . .

HOLMES & EDWARDS
STERLING INLAID* SILVERPLATE

HERE AND HERE
It's Sterling Inlaid

MADE BY THE INTERNATIONAL SILVER CO.

Youth Danish Princess Lovely Lady

3 LOVELY PATTERNS! Youth, Danish Princess, Lovely Lady are among the loveliest ever made . . . made by The International Silver Co. In U. S. A.
GOOD NEWS! The price of Holmes & Edwards has not gone up . . . the beautiful 52-piece service for eight is only $68.50 with chest, also 76-piece service for twelve at $99.95. (No Federal Tax).
SEE AND ORDER your Holmes & Edwards at your jewelry or department store today.

Copyright 1949, The International Silver Co., Holmes & Edwards Div., Meriden, Conn. Sold in Canada by: The T. Eaton Co., Ltd. *Reg. U.S. Pat. Off. . .

French toast made from enriched bread (the kind a baker bakes) is an economical and deliciously different way to get the energy you need to start the day off righ

YOU NEED SOMETHING THAT A BAKER MAKES

to make each meal complete

You are eating a delicious combination of these good foods when you eat bakery foods. That's why you need something that a baker makes to make each meal completely satisfying; completely nourishing!

THE BREAD that helps balance your diet helps balance your budget, too!

Penny for penny, it gives you more of the things your body needs — more generously — than any other food you eat at every meal.

And bread is no more fattening, according to nutritionists, than any other food that gives you equal energy.

So eat more bread! Eat it for energy. Eat it for economy. Eat it for enjoyment — the enjoyment that you get from all the good things that a baker bakes for you.

Buy it Baked!

THE BAKERS OF AMERICA

who do your baking for you with the same high quality ingredients you would use; bake fresh daily with the same care you would take.

Sweet Rolls, Doughnuts and Coffee Cake are ot good beginnings for an energetic day. Good ways pick up energy between-meals, too! Enjoy them of And to double your enjoyment — to save yourself t and toil and trouble in the kitchen — buy them bak

Copyright, American Bakers Association, 1949

Come into my kitchen

By Dorothy Swenson

NO. 4 SERIES BY HOUSEWIVES

The day-by-day meals of actual housewives, cooking in their own kitchens, who have agreed to share the benefits of their experience with other JOURNAL readers. They make no pretensions, but do the best job they know how to do, to provide their families with healthful food, frequently on limited budgets.

PHOTO BY [illegible]

Savarin sandwiches, a favorite snack for Sunday suppers in the kitchen.

DO you do what we do? When you have a good meal in a strange restaurant, do you go home and see if you can figure out how it was made? Foreign travel opens the taste buds as well as the eyes and ears, and since two world wars have made Americans the most traveled people in the world, it is no wonder so many of us have collected table specialties from far-off and unlikely places. My husband and I didn't look for food inspiration in war-torn Poland right after World War I, but two of our stand-bys—cauliflower covered with buttered bread crumbs, and hot mushrooms with sour cream and melted cheese—were food ideas picked up in Warsaw and experimented with at home. One of our favorite quick meals is one we got on the fly between trains at a lunch counter in Penn Station. They call it a Savarin sandwich; we make it out of two good slices of hot fried French toast, soft inside from the egg it was dipped in, sandwiched with melting Swiss cheese, and slices of tongue and cold chicken.

Do you find there are foods which make you feel good, which give you directly a glow of well-being? We get a kick out of honey, and believe the ancient holy saying that a good land is one "flowing with milk and honey" is a tip which springs from deep wisdom and may be taken at its face value. We keep a honey pot in the kitchen. We believe honey must be good for older people just as milk is good for children. Scotch oatmeal, corn meal, fresh mushrooms and fresh orange juice all make us happy inside. We buy oranges by the crate from January to the end of May in order to feel that we can almost swim in orange juice.

If you want to eat well, have a garden if you possibly can. We plant lettuce early and late and have our salad out of our suburban garden six months of the year. Salad is a must, a way of life, with us. Always at dinner, at home or out, we have lettuce tossed with homemade French dressing.

My husband and I did our own cooking for years, even though we both worked for a living. We always preferred eating at home. We belong to the Dining Room School. The dining room is the prettiest in our house. Of course we don't always eat there. We have breakfast upstairs in the spare room, where dressing gowns and bathrobes are definitely worn. In summer we eat on the screened porch or in the garden. Sometimes we have supper down in the playroom, or in front of the living-room fire, or by the outdoor fireplace, or even in the kitchen.

We have the common problems of allergies, dieting and high prices. My husband is allergic to pork. I am allergic to nothing except the idea of getting fat so that my clothes won't fit, but I find a stern course of turning away almost completely from bread, potatoes and desserts for a few days now and then keeps things under control.

Here is a typical week of mealtime highlights at our house. The meals are rounded out with the usual salads, stewed or fresh fruit, vegetables, milk, coffee, tea, and so on. We have homemade bread or buy a homemade type of loaf. We vary the potatoes and often use noodles, spaghetti or buckwheat grits instead.

We like fish. We could eat it every day. It makes no difference what kind of fish, as long as it is fresh. Usually the freshest fish is that which is most plentiful and cheapest. We almost never fry fish, but usually broil it with lemon and butter and paprika, keeping the heat low, the time of cooking short, and serving immediately. When my husband's father used to say something tasted good, whatever it might be, he said in Swedish, "Det smaka Fisk"—"It tastes like fish." We would not want the turkey to taste like fish, but you get the idea. We like fish just as much as turkey or beefsteak.

Monday Lunch

Minestrone

Monday Dinner

Greek "Pigeons"
(meat balls in cabbage leaves with raisins)
Carrots in Honey Coffee Jelly

(Continued on Page 113)

Housekeeping Highlights

● Do you have an upholsterer's needle? It is a curved needle, shaped like a half circle (good size is 4 inches long), and very strong. Because it is curved it can be used on shaped surfaces where a straight needle would get in its own way. An upholsterer's needle is handy for putting a patch on a tight-fitting auto-seat cover without removing it—and very, very handy for sewing up a turkey after the stuffing is in.

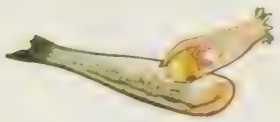
● When you make doughnuts your hands get covered with flour. Don't remove it. If hot fat spatters when you drop the doughnuts in to fry, the flour covering on your hands is a protection against a painful burn.

● If you are peeling only 1 or 2 tomatoes, hold them one at a time on the end of a long kitchen fork over the gas flame or the highest heat of an electric unit for less than a minute, until the skin begins to crack a little. The skin can then be peeled off by hardly touching the tomato, and without waste. This is much easier than pouring boiling water on the tomatoes to loosen the skins.

● A quick, neat, easy way to flour the meat or chicken for stews or braising is to put ¼ cup of flour in a paper bag with 1 teaspoon of salt. Put the pieces of meat in the bag, hold the top firmly and shake it up. And there you have it.

● When you bake a fish, put a clean piece of muslin or cheesecloth, oiled or greased, in the bottom of the baking dish. The cloth should be bigger than the fish so that the fish can be lifted out of the pan on the cloth and turned into the serving dish.

● For broiling, pan-broiling or frying steak and chops, take a sharp knife and cut through the outside fat and thin membrane. Cut as far as the meat, not into it. This prevents curling up during cooking.



Fish Dinners

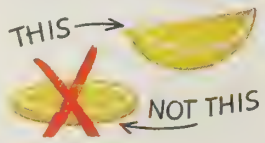
They can be marvelous—if you know these chef secrets!

Don't serve fish for economy's sake alone! It can be so wonderfully appetizing, if you prepare it properly. And, actually, that's easy as falling off a wharf. Just keep these points in mind:

1. When you buy your fish, make sure it's fresh: gills red, scales bright, flesh firm and elastic.

2. Fresh-frozen fish is excellent, too. (Just be sure you never let it thaw and then refreeze.)

3. Whether you bake, boil, broil or fry fish, rub both inside and out with fresh lemon juice. It's the perfect seasoning, and banishes most fish odor!



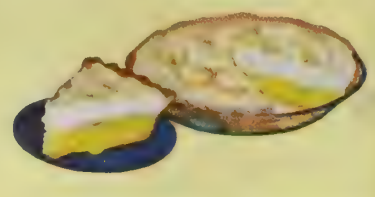
4. The biggest secret of fish cookery is:—Whatever recipe you use, don't overcook. That way you keep the rich juices and delicate flavor.

5. Baked fish sometimes tends to be dry. You can overcome that completely with this sauce. It's simple as can be, yet a real gourmet's delight:

FISH SAUCE A LA SUNKIST

½ cup mayonnaise
4 tbs. catsup
2 tbs. fresh lemon juice
2 tbs. chopped sweet pickle

Stir together, serve in bowl or pitcher. Serves 6-8.



6. No matter how you serve fish or sea food, garnish it with lemon. Every chef will tell you—"Lemon and fish—they were made for each other!" Serve your guests all the lemon they want. Not flat slices that are hard to squeeze, but thick, generous wedges and plenty of 'em. So that the tang of fresh lemon can enhance the flavor of every delectable morsel!

Good ideas from the Sunkist Kitchen

Another Lenten suggestion that's simple and delicious is this from the Sunkist Lemon Recipe Book (see below):

PACIFIC COAST FISH SALAD

Combine: 2 cups flaked tuna or salmon; 2 cups shredded lettuce; ½ cup finely cut celery; tablespoons minced pimiento; ½ cup Sunkist lemon pulp and juice. Serve with mayonnaise and lemon wedges.

HOW DO YOU SPELL SCRUMPSHUS?

Is there any dessert as good as a flaky lemon pie topped with fluffy meringue? One easy way to turn one out is just to buy some Sunkist Lemons at your market plus a package of Pillsbury Pie Crust Mix—and follow the lemon pie recipe that's on the package. Why not serve it tonight?

There are ten (10!) other lemon pies in that famous Sunkist Lemon Recipe Book, selected by our own Sunkist Home Economists.

FRESH LEMONS PROVIDE VERY SPECIAL HEALTH VALUES

Fresh lemons supply not only valuable amounts of vitamin B_1 but also rare vitamin P, and are among the richest known sources of vitamin C. Essential for youthful energy, sound teeth and gums, vitamin C is absent from most foods, scarce in most others. You need it daily. Whenever you add lemon you add health.

Have you discovered how fresh lemon juice livens the flavor of French dressing? Try it.

Eight out of ten tea drinkers prefer their tea with lemon. Don't fail to give your tea the extra flavor and bouquet that fresh lemon gives.

Lemons help in so many ways! You need them every day. Remember them when you shop!

For the best lemons, get Sunkist in trademarked wrappers. Finest from 14,500 cooperating California and Arizona citrus growers.

For scores of wonderful new recipes, and ideas that make good foods better and housekeeping easier—send for that famous Sunkist Lemon Recipe Book. Free. Just write Sunkist, Sec. 203, Box 2706, Terminal Annex, Los Angeles 54, California.

(Continued from Page 113)

o cover the fish. Sprinkle with salt and aprika. Cook in a moderately hot oven, 75° to 400° F., until fish is tender through- ut, about 25 to 30 minutes. Lift out onto latter. Sprinkle with additional paprika.

GINGERBREAD UPSIDE-DOWN CAKE

Melt 3 tablespoons margarine in bottom of ½" x 12" x 2" cake pan and take this op- ortunity to grease the pan. Sprinkle ½ up brown sugar over the bottom of the an. Peel, core and slice 1 pound apples. rrange evenly over sugar. Pour ginger- read batter over this. Bake in moderate ven, 350° F., 45 minutes.

Gingerbread batter: Blend ½ cup short- ning, ¾ teaspoon salt, 1¼ teaspoons cin- amon, ¼ teaspoon nutmeg and ¾ tea- oon cloves together. Add ½ cup sugar radually and cream together well. Add 1 gg and beat well, then add ¾ cup molasses nd blend. Sift 2¼ cups flour with ½ tea- oon baking powder and 1 teaspoon bak- ng soda, and add to creamed mixture, lending well. Add 1 cup boiling water and eat until smooth.

Wednesday Luncheon

Curried Shrimp
Rice—Chutney
Barbara's Old Grist Mill Cookies

Wednesday Dinner

Broiled Sweetbreads
Ten-Minute Beets

BARBARA'S OLD GRIST MILL COOKIES

or these cookies we buy stone-cut water- round whole-wheat flour from the old rist mill in our town.

'e put the walnut meats rough the food chop- r. Cream 1 cup butter margarine and 1½ cups rown sugar together. dd 2 eggs and 1 cup ound walnuts. Stir in 3 ps whole-wheat flour, teaspoon salt and ½ teaspoon vanilla. ut a moderate amount of dough into a ooky presser and press it through onto reased cooky sheets. You can get a cooky esser in any housewares store. Heart apes and other shapes are included. Bake minutes in a hot oven, 400° F. Tooth- me and dainty. Makes 10 dozen cookies.

> With proper care the human body will last a lifetime. —NORA McCARTHY.

TEN-MINUTE BEETS

ared or dice 1 bunch raw beets after peel- g. Put into a pan with a tight-fitting ver. Add a very little hot water (¼ cup), t with margarine, cover tightly and cook minutes. Season with a little salt.

Thursday Luncheon

Hot Thick Savarin Sandwich of French Toast, Swiss Cheese,
Tongue and Sliced Chicken

Thursday Dinner

Broiled Spareribs
Buckwheat Grits
auliflower With Buttered Crumb Topping (Salute to Warsaw)

Buckwheat grits are a good change-off om potatoes. They are the hulled, cracked arse buckwheat sold generally in delica- ssen stores, especially those which cater to ussians, who call this dish Kasha. It is good th a meat gravy or with a hot sauce of ushrooms and sour cream.

BUCKWHEAT GRITS

eak 1 egg into 2 cups buckwheat grits, hole or split, and stir until every grain is ated. Dry out in the oven or on top of the ge in an ungreased pan until all the rnels are separated. Put in a saucepan th 2 tablespoons butter, margarine or eken fat. Add 1 quart hot water and 1 spoon salt. Cover and simmer until all water is absorbed and the grains stand t. This can be done in the oven, but it s longer.

CAULIFLOWER WITH UTTERED CRUMB TOPPING

k a head of cauliflower ½ hour in salted d water, head down. Boil the cauliflower 15 minutes; drain and cut up into flower- ets. Melt ¼ cup butter or margarine in skillet. Add 2 tablespoons fine dry bread crumbs. Toss together. We use packaged crumbs for convenience. Cook slowly 2 or 3 minutes or until brown. Pour it over the cauliflower and serve.

Friday Luncheon

Canned Baked Kidney Beans
Canned Brown Bread, Toasted

Friday Dinner

Finnan Haddie
With Melted Cheddar Cheese, Thin Cream Sauce and Boiled Potatoes
Daisy's Custard

DAISY'S CUSTARD

Beat 4 eggs slightly, add ¼ cup sugar and a dash of salt. Scald 3½ cups milk and add to the egg mixture. Add 1 teaspoon vanilla. Cover bottom of a greased baking dish with ½ cup cereal (wheat and barley kernels) and ½ cup seedless raisins. Pour in the custard mixture. Sprinkle nutmeg on top to make a coating. Set in pan of hot water. Bake in a moderate oven, 350° F., until a silver knife comes out clean. Time depends on depth of baking dish. A 1½-quart round casserole takes 1 hour.

Saturday Luncheon

Tiny Pancakes
Made on a Swedish griddle
Vermont Maple Sirup

Saturday Dinner

Barbara's Chopped-Liver Canapés
Roast Chicken
Chestnut Stuffing and Usual Fixings
Mahogany Birthday Cake

BARBARA'S CHOPPED-LIVER CANAPÉS

Use ½ pound of any kind of liver—beef, calf's, lamb, pork or chicken—leftover or fried fresh in a little butter or margarine, taking care not to overcook. Chop fine by hand in a wooden bowl. Chop and fry 1 large onion in 1 tablespoon butter, margarine or chicken fat and rechop with the liver. Also chop in 2 hard-cooked eggs. Mix in seasoning to taste—a little dry mustard, salt, pepper and paprika. Work in 1 tablespoon chicken fat, butter or margarine to get a good consistency for spreading on crisp crackers. If more is suddenly needed, this recipe can be stretched by adding more egg and onion.

MAHOGANY BIRTHDAY CAKE

Beat 3 egg yolks until thick and lemon-colored. Gradually add ½ cup sugar and continue beating until very thick. Add 1 teaspoon vanilla. Mix well. Sift 1¼ cups cake flour with ¾ teaspoon salt and 1 teaspoon baking soda. Have ready 2 squares unsweetened chocolate, melted. The dry ingredients are added alternately to the mixture with 1 cup thick sour cream. (After the first addition of dry ingredients, add the melted chocolate.) Beat batter smooth. Then beat the 3 egg whites until foamy and add ¾ cup sugar by tablespoons, beating after each addition as if you were making a meringue. Fold this carefully and lightly—but thoroughly—into the batter. Pour into 2 greased 8-inch layer-cake pans. Bake in moderately hot oven, 375° F., 30 minutes. Cool and frost.

Midday Sunday Breakfast

Grapefruit
Fillet Mignon Big Baked Potatoes
Danish Pastry
Coffee With Rich Cream

Sunday Supper Snack

Hot Mushrooms Zakousky
Bacon Biscuits

MUSHROOMS ZAKOUSKY

(you pronounce this "zakonski")

Turn whole mushroom caps, which you have sautéed in butter or margarine for 3 minutes, into a greased casserole, and

A new dessert every day this quick slick way!

(WITH ANY OF THESE 5 SURPRISE PACKAGES!)

2-3

SOMETHING NEW IN RENNET DESSERT!

One minute to mix—one minute to fix . . . delicious Orange rennet custard with crumbled ginger snap topping! It's "milk and more" for small fry and grown-ups—easier to digest! 6 "JUNKET" RENNET POWDER flavors, or unflavored "JUNKET" RENNET TABLETS.

4

SOMETHING SUPER IN HOMEMADE ICE CREAM!

Smoother! Easier! More wonderful than you knew ice cream could be! No stirring while freezing! Now ice cream is "everyday easy" with "JUNKET" FREEZING MIX plus milk and cream . . . sundae-good with sauces! Four flavors—at your grocer's now. Try 'em all!

5

SOMETHING SPECIAL . . . DATE-NUT FUDGE!

Just 4 minutes to make—and no beating! "JUNKET" QUICK FUDGE MIX with butter and water added makes homemade fudge. Everyone can make it—everyone loves it! Chocolate or penuche flavors! Try adding dates and nuts . . . try it as icing—for sauces!

1

SOMETHING DIFFERENT FROM DENMARK!

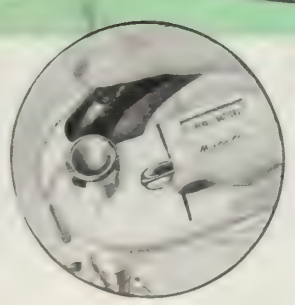
Tangy-sweet flavor treat from an old Danish recipe! Currant-raspberry combination in an all-new dessert! And so-o easy! Boil it one minute with water—then chill! Have it plain—have it with bananas and cream—but have "JUNKET" DANISH DESSERT soon!

for dessert variety serve

"JUNKET" BRAND FOODS

all different!
all easy, quick!
all delicious!

ONE-HAND PORTABILITY



makes it easiest to use!

$38.50

($39.25 West of Rockies.) Includes free-flowing juice extractor and two mixing bowls.

the New HAMILTON BEACH ...with Mixguide

Mixguide puts speed control right under your thumb. And right under your eye, magnified for flash reading, are these ten scientifically tested speeds:

1 SLOW MIXING
2 SLOW BEATING
3 HEAVY BATTERS
4 JUICING FRUITS
5 ICINGS, CREAMING
6 WHIP CREAM
7 WHIP POTATOES
8 CANDY, BEAT EGGS
9 COOKED ICINGS
10 ATTACHMENTS

HERE'S WHY the new Hamilton Beach is the easiest-to-use mixer on the market. Its beater unit glides off the stand for use anywhere. No tricky catch to release, nothing to detach. Only Hamilton Beach gives you one-hand portability! Easy off, easy on!

AND ONLY Hamilton Beach gives you one-hand operation. You hold the beater unit in one hand, set the speed with your thumb.

YOU GET still another Hamilton Beach exclusive in finger-tip bowl control. You blend all ingredients evenly by simply shifting the bowl while beaters and bowl are revolving.

LOTS MORE extras make Hamilton Beach the easiest of all mixers to use. Full power even in heaviest batters. Balanced handle that really fits your hand. Easy-handling mixing bowls, grooved to guard against slipping.

YES, IT does cost more to bring you all these work-saving features. But you pay no premium. So try the new Hamilton Beach at your dealer's and you'll agree it's America's easiest-to-use mixer. Hamilton Beach Company, Division of Scovill Mfg. Co., Racine, Wis.

the New HAMILTON BEACH Food Mixer

Made by the makers of top-value Hamilton Beach Vacuum Cleaners cover with sour cream. Season with salt and pepper. Sprinkle generously with grated cheese and bake in a moderate oven, 350° F., 8–10 minutes. The mixture should be luxuriously "runny" and "gooey" with cheese.

BACON BISCUITS

Sift together 2 cups flour, 3 teaspoons baking powder, 1 teaspoon salt and ½ teaspoon dry mustard. Cut in 4 tablespoons cold bacon fat. Add ½ to ¾ cup milk to make a soft but not sticky dough. Then roll out to ½-inch thickness on lightly floured board. Cut out with biscuit cutter. Place half the rounds on a greased cooky sheet. Brush them with a beaten egg. Put on top of each round a small square of partially cooked bacon and a square of cheese. Sprinkle with a little paprika or dry mustard; then cover with the other half of the biscuit-dough rounds. Brush the top again with the beaten egg and bake 15 minutes in hot oven, 400° F. This recipe makes 18 small biscuits. Serve piping hot.

DO STAY FOR DINNER

(Continued from Page 76)

occasions; or, if you please, on other occasions when there's company for dinner, unexpected maybe, perhaps planned for. In any event, it's nice to have ideas. Something different, you know. Something that will get you talked about—in a nice way, of course. And to that end I want to introduce on these pages one little dinner that will get you just where I have indicated. A dinner that is as outstanding as a man of distinction. And that's something, isn't it?

The question of soup. Not long ago I dined at a very nice home where good eating is a tradition, and we had onion soup. Having few, if any, manners, I piped up and said, "This is wonderful soup. How about letting me in on the making?" My hostess said, "Of course, my dear. It's as simple as it is hot. It came right out of a can. I contributed a little something-something, and some onions and that's all." I pass our kitchen-tested version of this on to you. Because I'm bighearted and like to tell what I know. Especially in a case like this.

CLEAR ONION SOUP

To 4 cups canned consommé add 2⅔ cups cold water and 3 cups sliced onions—takes about 3 large onions. (Anyway, it's 3 cups and onions are usually around.) Cover. Bring to a boil and simmer until the onions are tender. Strain. Season to taste. Garnish with a few sliced onion rings. This makes 1½ quarts. This soup is improved in flavor if it is made the day before serving—so the cooked onions may stay in the broth overnight—straining the next day. Heat, of course, before serving.

> Duties are tasks that we look forward to with distaste, perform with reluctance, and brag about ever after.
> —ANON.

All dressed up. The main attraction in the array of good things spread before you here is a platter of sweetbreads, rice croquettes, lemon and grapes. That all seems pretty obvious, but wait. Sweetbreads are a delicate subject, and I want you to think back to some of the many things I have written about them. How carefully they must be prepared before you can go ahead with making whatever dish you have in mind, and with what care you must select them to get them not only perfectly fresh, but the kind you should pick out. Market men are prone to look the other way when it comes to sweetbreads and palm off whatever their hand reaches for easiest, but don't you let them. Be sweetbread-conscious and sweetbread-wise, and you'll get what you want and no argument about it. So here's the receipt for sweetbreads—but just one of them.

SAUTÉED SWEETBREADS WITH LEMON BUTTER

Select 4 pairs sweetbreads for 8 people. If they are small (the sweetbreads, not the people), better plan on a few more. Prepare the sweetbreads in your usual way, removing the membrane and tubes.

(But wait a minute. Let's go over this once more. To prepare the sweetbreads: Get fresh ones, and only calves'. Don't let them palm off anything else on you. Put the sweetbreads in ice water for an hour. Put them on to cook in cold water, and when it boils, turn down the heat and let them cook 20 minutes or so. When tender to the fork, plunge them instantly into ice water for an hour. Now cut off all the fat and with a sharp, pointed knife peel off all membrane and remove tubes. Don't have anything left but nice, firm, clean sweetbreads. Then go ahead. If you have membrane or fat or any other thing on them, they're sunk. Takes a little time, a little patience, but it pays. Pat lightly with paper towels to remove all water.)

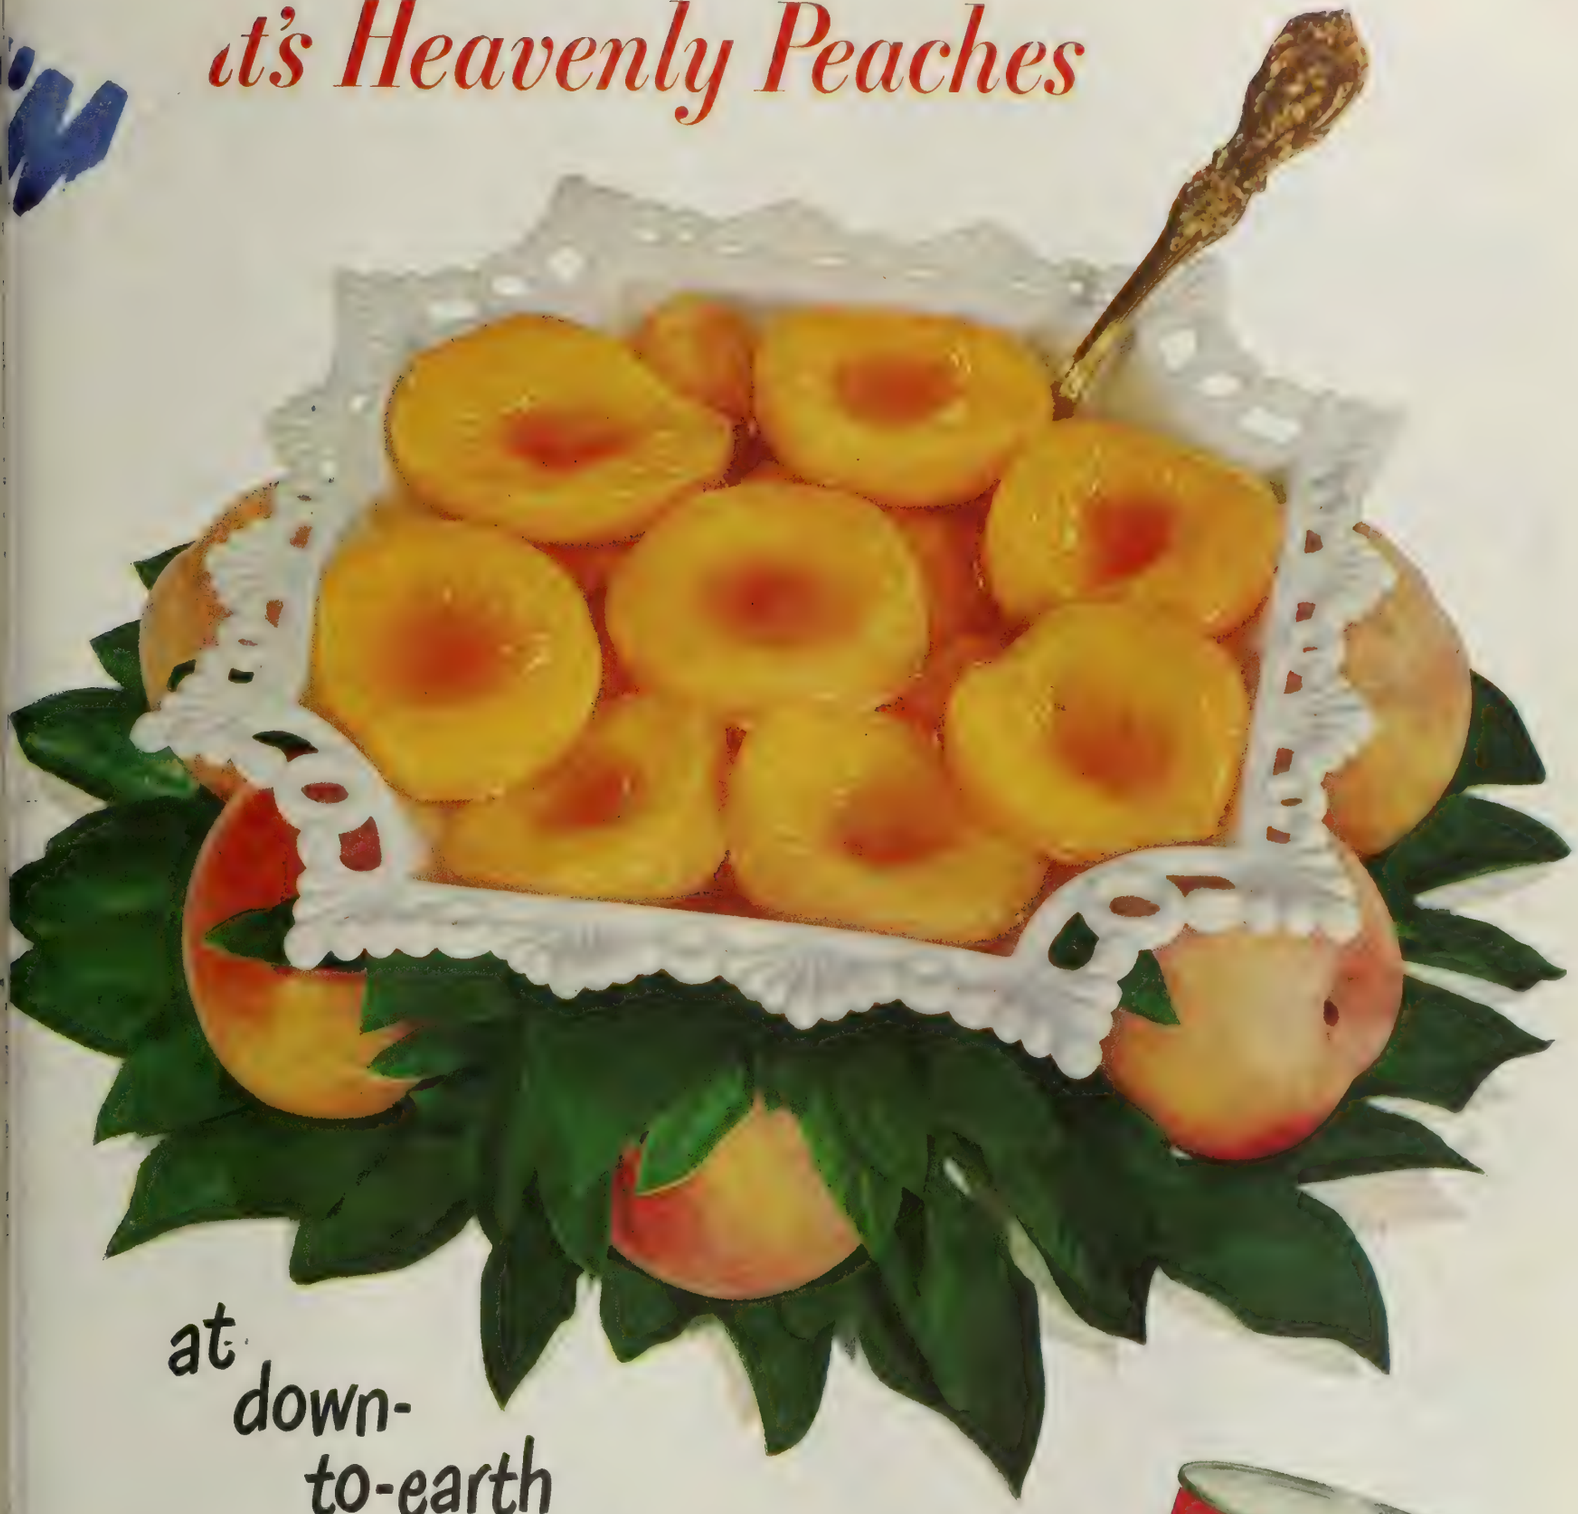
Season the sweetbreads with salt and pepper and dust lightly with flour. Sauté in butter until a light brown. Serve with lemon butter and chopped parsley, sprinkled over them.

For the lemon butter, melt 4 tablespoons butter, add the juice of 1 lemon. Let the butter and lemon boil up once. Then beat it well with a fork. It will froth like crazy and that's what we want.

Croquette Business. You know I love croquettes. There is no lukewarm affection or regard between them and me. It's the real thing. Take fish, chicken, vegetable or rice, and turn any of those prosaic ingredients into creamy, superbly seasoned and competently fried croquettes, and you may tuck my bib right in my collar and let me at 'em, any day, any time. But—they've got to be good. They can be spoiled, oh, so easily. But I'm sure that sad experience will never be yours. I feel absolutely sure of that.

Patience and time tell. Don't rush into the croquette business unless you have more than ten minutes to spare. The finest crust you'll get is by way of very finely rolled cracker crumbs. The crackers should be fresh and crisp and a little salty, and rolled fine, as I hinted. Have the fat clean and fresh and plenty of it in the deep-fat kettle. Croquettes were never meant to be pan-fried. It's deep fat for those babies.

Have the mixture as soft and creamy as can be handled—and then a little more so. You can do it if you spread out the mixture on a platter and let it really cool. But don't chill it. And now with these few words of wisdom, here's one way (there are others) to make one kind of croquette.



RICE CROQUETTES

Cook ½ cup unwashed rice in slightly salted boiling water until tender. Drain but do not rinse. Add 2 lightly beaten egg yolks, 1 teaspoon salt and 2 tablespoons butter. Mix well. Spread on a platter and chill thoroughly. When cold, shape into balls, dip in beaten egg, then in fine cracker crumbs. Fry until golden brown in deep fat at 375° F. Drain on absorbent paper. Dust lightly with fine sugar and serve with a dot of currant jelly on top of each croquette.

Variation on the bean theme. All winter we have faced the bean so often that I've noted a strange apathy among family and guests when even a handsome silver dish is handed round just brimming with string beans! No matter how neatly Frenched they are, the appetite sometimes stalls on just plain beans. (Why beans sliced on the diagonal should be called "Frenched" has often puzzled me.) However, since they are such handy things to have around it's time to do something about it. It's March, and where I live March is far from tropical, so let's make string beans a heartier dish. Go well with sweetbreads too.

(Continued on Page 118)

...t's Heavenly Peaches

at down-to-earth prices!

THE MOST tender-mellow, the most tantalizing peaches that ever won a big blue ribbon in any taste test — that's Hunt's Heavenly Peaches!

And that's facts! For in a series of recent professionally-conducted blindfold taste tests, Hunt's peaches were tried against all other leading canned peach brands!

And Hunt's Heavenly Peaches came out first — way up yonder first!

First for fuller, richer flavor — the sort of golden ripe goodness you get, fresh off the tree! And first for velvety smoothness — for luscious, heavy syrup.

And yet — for all their praise-winning, prize-winning qualities, Hunt's cost you less.

So, ask your grocer for the peaches with the Hunt red label — the most honest-to-heavenly peaches you ever had!

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

Hunt Foods, Inc., Los Angeles, California

Hunt's Fruits • Vegetables • Tomato Products

Hunt-for the best

BRING ON SWIFT'S PREMIUM BACON

and watch the family fall to! Swift's Premium has the rich nourishment your family needs to "stoke the furnace" for an active day . . . plus that famous teasing, tempting sweet smoke taste they can't resist. It's by far the best-liked bacon of all.

Brighter Breakfasts

. . . . give life a lift!

P-L-E-A-S-E COOK IT RIGHT: Place slices of Swift's Premium Bacon in cold frying pan. Do not overcrowd. Cook slowly, turning often. For crisp bacon, pour off fat as it accumulates. With the bacon, fry tangy pineapple slices. M m m!

Swift's Premium

The Bacon with the sweet smoke taste!

(Continued from Page 118)

ter tops and the space between the wall cabinets and counters. This is easy to clean, long-wearing and attractive. The material cost $63.21 plus $69.05 for installing.

The ceiling was papered with a red-and-white paper in a leafy design, and a painted band around the top of the walls gave a beam effect, especially nice in an old house.

The idea of papering the ceiling appealed to me especially. You can cover a rather weak ceiling with paper instead of tearing it down and replastering. And you can enjoy the gay lightness of paper without worrying about grease spattering.

The nylon curtain material was $1.75 a yard. Since Mrs. C. stitched up the curtains herself, she felt that nylon paid back in ease of care and lasting quality. Although the electrical changes were an important item of expense, they cost less done all at once than over a period of years. Four entrances required an unusual number of switches, but years of fumbling for pull chains with hands full of parcels had put switch controls on the must list. Also, more of the services might have been done by the family and more shaved off the cost. It all depends on how skillful the man of the house is—not every man can cut a new opening for a window, but the spice shelves could be built by any handy husband. The old table and chairs were refinished by the family and that saved a considerable amount.

Color gives any room enchantment, and in this new kitchen in an old house color is like the answer to the jack-pot question. For the yellow of the wooden cabinets is like spring jonquils in the morning sun, and the cherry red of the paper is echoed in the red-and-white nylon curtain material and on the chair cushions.

The deep blue of the china adds enough of a third color to gladden the heart. Last and best, a few pieces of the Bristol blue milk glass came from the parlor to bring the beauty of yesterday to this kitchen of today.

In the late winter sunshine, the old house has a welcoming look. And from the bright, comfortable kitchen comes the smell of fresh baked beans in the old brown bean pot. I'll stay to supper!

WHAT MAKES YOU HEALTHY?

(Continued from Page 52)

Hereford is the Texas community that aroused a stir when billed as "The Town Without a Toothache." There is less tooth decay in Hereford than in most American communities. The average for Hereford children is about 1½ decayed teeth. But what is more significant about Hereford, Texas, is the discovery that children who live there at least five years have better teeth than those who live there a shorter time. Evidently there is some factor in the climate or soil which develops a high resistance to tooth decay. Fifty-four children between the ages of twelve and fourteen, who had lived in Hereford continuously for five years, averaged only one decayed tooth per child. And three out of four of these children had no tooth decay at all.

When the foods grown in Deaf Smith County, where Hereford is located, were analyzed, they proved to be much higher in calcium and phosphorus than foods grown elsewhere. Meats had more calcium and phosphorus; milk had 30 per cent more phosphorus; vegetables had three times as much phosphorus; and flour had six times as much phosphorus, as well as being higher in protein. The water was different too. It had three and a half times as much magnesium as the rest of Texas drinking water, and around two parts per million of fluorine. Consequently, controlled experiments in which some children drink water with the same fluorine content as Hereford water, while others take their water straight, have been started in the vicinity of Kingston, New York, and Brantford, Canada. By 1954 the answers will be in. Meanwhile, the American Geographical Society, which believes that geographers and doctors can profitably work together in studying the geography of disease, is making a study of the amount of fluorine in American drinking water. Their only partially complete map shows that the highest concentration of fluorine in drinking water is to be found in a belt of Southwestern states extending from Texas to California, and in several Midwestern states, and that the Northeastern states (which had the fewest men with good teeth) are extremely deficient in fluorine.

If fluorine should prove to be the answer to tooth decay, it would be a most important discovery. Because tooth decay is one of the scourges of civilized man; 75 to 95 per cent of the peoples of civilized countries have it. The amount of dental work required by World War II soldiers was appalling; over 6,000,000 teeth were replaced by dentures and bridges, and 31,000,000 teeth were filled.

Texas health officials believe, however, that fluorine will prove to be only a partial answer to tooth decay. They point out that Hereford has a number of special and perhaps fortunate characteristics which may be contributory factors: 3600 hours of sunlight a year, plenty of fresh home-grown foods, an elevation of nearly 4000 feet above sea level and a soil impregnated centuries ago with volcanic ash. The hopeful thing about an outdoor laboratory experiment like Hereford, Texas, arranged by Nature instead of by man, is that if fluorine should not be the complete answer, the scientists can go right back and start looking all over again, because the answer is there.

It seems safe to say that what Hereford, Texas, has already proved is that mineral-rich soils and waters equal mineral-rich plants, mineral-rich animals and well-nourished human teeth which show high resistance to tooth decay.

Experiments have shown that when you take a group of children who have been somewhat indifferently fed and improve their diet, you almost always get some arrest in tooth decay, provided the experiment is carried on for at least a year and the food is of good quality. What is more, a diet that is not deficient in minerals, vitamins, protein or other food elements will help your child acquire resistance, not only to tooth decay, but to a considerable number of disorders and diseases. Among the seventeen defects among World War II registrants related either directly or indirectly to "malnutrition of nutritional deficiencies" were tooth defects, tuberculosis, mental disease, and the cardiovascular-renal type of heart disease.

Every wife thinks her own husband is particularly difficult, whereas all other husbands look easy to handle.
—ANON.

Sir Robert McCarrison, one of Britain's pioneer nutritionists, says that because of dietetic malnutrition, children have a lowered resistance to "measles, scarlet fever, bronchopneumonia, middle-ear disease, rheumatism and rheumatic disease, with their tragic associates, heart disease and chorea." Other symptoms he lists are an increased tendency to fractures, spinal curvatures, dental caries (tooth decay), nasal catarrh, septic tonsils, adenoids, inflamed eyes, defective vision, nervous instability and cardiovascular derangements.

The fact that both Col. Leonard G. Rowntree, chief of the Medical Division of Selective Service during World War II, and Sir Robert McCarrison believe that poor nutrition lowers resistance to the cardiovascular-renal type of heart diseases is interesting, because heart disease is America's No. 1 killer, and the death rate from this type of heart diseases is increasing faster than that of any other disease. Dr. Louis I. Dublin, of the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company, predicts that deaths from the

(Continued on Page 122)

Smith's "IRON-ON"
RUG BINDING

"Just Iron it on." No sewing—it's easy to bind rugs and carpets (with moderate iron) in a few minutes. Also repairs awnings, luggage, upholstery; articles of canvas, leather, cloth, rubber or other materials. Insist on SMITH'S, the heavy tape with the brown gum adhesive back that sticks to any surface.

AT DIME & DEPT. STORES
(NOTION COUNTERS)
1½", 15¢ a yard 2¼", 20¢ a yard
MADE IN 12 COLORS
Insist on Instruction Sheet with Purchase

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

Or mail remittance with rug ravelling for color (no C. O. D. please) to GILMAN B. SMITH CO.
907 Broadway, New York 10, N. Y.

WEAVERS, here is your opportunity!

Get ready for the big spring demand for hand-loomed rugs. Order immediately your supply of

MAYSVILLE WARP and RUG FILLER
Improved Quality—Bright Colors—Low Prices
Sold by leading dealers and general catalog of Sears, Roebuck & Co. Endorsed and used exclusively by thousands of members of the Guild of Home Weavers, a national association for improving the business of weavers and increasing their sales. No dues. No charges. Write for WEAVER'S Manual.
JANUARY & WOOD CO.
Dept. O, Maysville, Ky.
FREE—Samples of WARP and FILLER and information about looms on request.

Waterlilies
BRING COLOR AND FRAGRANCE TO GARDENS EVERYWHERE

Waterlilies are easily grown and should be in every garden. Put them in a tub of water if you do not have a pool and in a few short weeks you will enjoy beautiful blooms.
OUR NEW COLORFUL WATERLILY AND GOLDFISH CATALOG FREE!
Lists the choicest varieties of waterlilies and fancy fish for pools and aquariums. Write today for your copy.
THREE SPRINGS FISHERIES
2159 Main Road, Lilypons, Md.
411 N. 7th Ave., Suite 713, Dept. 2159, St. Louis, Mo.
333 N. Michigan Ave., Dept. 2159, Chicago, Ill.

BUIST GIANT ZINNIAS
Large 10c Packet 5c
Free Garden Guide & Catalog
Seeds • Bulbs • Fertilizers
ROBERT BUIST CO.
DEPT. K, 4 S. FRONT ST., PHILA. 5, PA.
SEEDSMEN FOR OVER A CENTURY

CARNATIONS
From Seed • • • SPECIAL OFFER
100 SEED, CHOICEST MIXED COLORS 10c
Send 10 cents Today for this Special Offer and I will include my 79th Annual Seed and Nursery Catalog absolutely FREE SHUMWAY SEEDSMAN Box 551 Rockford, ILL.

BEST for Home Popping
NO HULLS
JOLLY TIME POP CORN

Ten Western states that are relatively free from mental disease form a solid block. Why? The most obvious answer seems to be that the East is more heavily populated and has more big cities, while the Western states are sparsely populated. But whether this is actually a factor in the situation, it is impossible to say.

Another answer might conceivably be the fact that west of the 100th meridian, American soils contain more lime and other soil minerals. Psychiatrists have long looked for possible physical causes for various nervous and mental disorders. Two discoveries made in respect to animals and people are interesting. In cattle, severe copper deficiency affects the white matter of the brain. Food and Life, the U. S. Department of Agriculture Yearbook, for 1939 notes that: "In certain mental conditions, known as manic-depressive psychoses, the normal blood bromine (a mineral) is reduced to about half and remains low until there is an improvement in the pathological condition."

Curiously, it is not so easy to plot the geography of American disease as it is to map the geography of American health.

The South has been considered the classic disease region of the United States. But the draft statistics do not wholly corroborate this. Only one Southeastern state—South Carolina, which ranks thirty-eighth in incidence of physical defects—is considerably below the national average. However, Selective Service notes that a number of Southern states did not record minor defects as consistently as did other sections.

According to the draft statistics, the spectacular defect region of the United States is the Northeast. This includes Connecticut, Delaware, the District of Columbia, Maine,

When it pays better to talk than listen, change your company.

Maryland, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island and Vermont. The number of defects—for white Americans—was 1321 per 1000 men, 216 points above the national average. Also, the Northeast had 50 per cent more eye defects and over twice as many tooth defects as the rest of the country

The proportion of defects in the Northeast is astoundingly high. It may have been affected somewhat, as Selective Service notes, by "a greater tendency to record minor defects in some states of the Eastern region—the New England States in particular." It adds, however, that "such a tendency cannot wholly account for the difference."

It should be quickly added that not all the states of the Northeastern region are unhealthy. New Jersey is a healthier-than-average state, and the Mohawk Valley in New York State and Lancaster County, Pennsylvania, are famous for the fertility of their farms. The unhealthiest section of the Northeast is New England, which, according to a Department of Agriculture Yearbook, has never been able to feed its own people, due to lack of sun and soil. Lowest ranking states in New England, according to preliminary analyses of Selective Service statistics, are Vermont and Massachusetts.

The presence of many great metropolitan cities in the Northeast, such as Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Pittsburgh, may account in part for its poor health rating. With Kansas ranking first in respect to adult health, New York State ranked thirty-sixth, and New York City forty-fourth. Writing about the food supplies of our Eastern cities, Dr. Kenneth L. Beeson, former head of the United States Nutrition Laboratory, said: "Most of our great cities are located on the well-leached podsols (wood soils from which most soil minerals have disappeared). . . . The truck farms are of necessity located near the cities on the same soils . . . and large quantities of truck crops and fruits are shipped to these cities from localities where nutritional disorders due to mineral deficiencies in the soils have been noted in both animals and

"The BUY-WORD for Better Plastics" in HOUSEWARES
MADE OF STYRON Bright!
—in your own back yard

CALIFORNIA PICNIC SET—Molded and distributed by B. W. Molded Plastics—Cheery set of four sectional plates and cups. Mix or match red, blue, green, and yellow.

IRWIN DINNERWARE SET—Molded by Great American Plastics Company and distributed by Irwin Corporation. Tableware of unusual design in blue, yellow, red.

BEVERAGE PITCHER—Molded and distributed by The Burroughs Company—Gracefully designed, capacity is two quarts. In red, green or yellow.

STOWAY SERVICE DISH—Molded and distributed by Southern California Plastic Company. Beautiful and practical. Available in coral, green, yellow, blue and red opaque colors.

DISPOSABLE SPOONS and FORKS—Molded and distributed by Plastica Co. Smooth, easy to handle. Red or white in sets of eight forks or spoons.

Just like magic! Housewares made of STYRON (Dow polystyrene) transform your own back yard into a gay and color-bright picnic ground. You'll find them practical, too . . . lightweight, easy to handle and durable enough to stand the rough "wear and tear" of a picnic.

STYRON is the right plastic for a host of functional duties in today's active living—so always look for the STYRON label and be sure you are buying the best in plastics. Items shown are sold at all leading department stores, chain and variety stores.

DOW plastics

Plastics Division HP-6 • THE DOW CHEMICAL COMPANY • MIDLAND, MICHIGAN

Betty Crocker CHOCOLATE CHIP Chiffon

The world's most delicious . . . most sophisticated cake!

Here is Softasilk's new Chocolate Chip version of "Chiffon"! Light as angel food . . . rich as butter cake . . . plus a chiffon-like quality all its own! No other type cake equals Chiffon for flavor, height, delicacy, texture. Chiffon stays fresh much longer, too, and is quicker to make than ordinary cakes. Softasilk is the only cake flour Betty Crocker recommends for Chiffon. It's milled for cakes and cakes alone . . . gets greater rising action from baking powder and eggs—gives you a higher, lighter cake. Bake this sophisticated Chocolate Chip Chiffon today. Elegant in taste, texture and eye appeal!

General Mills

Betty Crocker Chocolate Chip Chiffon Cake

MAKE ONLY WITH SOFTASILK, says Betty Crocker. Don't risk failure with another flour, since proportions might not be right. Sift an ample amount of SOFTASILK Cake Flour onto a square of paper. Grate unsweetened or sweet chocolate on medium or coarse grater. Preheat oven (see pan sizes and temperatures below).

STEP 1 . . . . . Measure (level measurements) and sift together into mixing bowl 2¼ cups sifted SOFTASILK Cake Flour (spoon lightly into cup, don't pack)
1¾ cups sugar
3 tsp. baking powder
1 tsp. salt

Make a well and add in order:
½ cup cooking (salad) oil such as Wesson or Mazola
5 unbeaten egg yolks (medium-sized)
¾ cup cold water
2 tsp. vanilla

Beat with spoon until smooth.

STEP 2 . . . . Measure into large mixing bowl
1 cup egg whites (7 or 8)
½ tsp. cream of tartar

Whip until whites form very stiff peaks. They should be much stiffer than for angel food or meringue. DO NOT UNDERBEAT.

STEP 3 Pour egg yolk mixture gradually over whipped egg whites—gently folding with rubber scraper just until blended! DO NOT STIR!

Sprinkle over top of batter, gently folding in with a few strokes: 3 sq. unsweetened or sweet chocolate (3 oz.), medium or coarsely grated.

Pour into ungreased pan immediately.

Bake in: . . . . . 10 in. tube, 4 in. deep, 325° 55 min., then increase to 350° 10 to 15 min.
[illegible] in oblong pan, 350° 45 to 50 min.

. . . or until top springs back when lightly touched.

Immediately turn pan upside down, placing tube part over neck of funnel or bottle, or resting [illegible] Let stand until cold. Loosen from sides [illegible] Turn pan right side up and strike sharply on table to loosen.

GLOSSY CHOCOLATE ICING. [illegible]

[illegible] Send 10¢ for our "Betty Crocker Chiffon Cake Recipe Book". Address, [illegible] Box 1450, Minneapolis 1, Minn.

[illegible] and Betty Crocker are trade marks of General Mills, Inc. Copr. 1949 humans." Among the mineral deficiencies so far discovered in sections of the Northeast are iron, cobalt and manganese, which have a favorable effect on the blood, magnesium and fluorine, which are so abundant in Hereford, Texas, and boron.

If you think that the widespread mineral deficiencies which exist in the foods you eat are any less important than vitamin deficiences, remember: If you completely lack any mineral necessary to the human body, you die. If your child does not have enough calcium, phosphorus, iron, copper, magnesium, sodium or manganese, this may retard his growth. On Chincoteague Island and on the Shetland Islands, where the soil and pasturage are deficient in lime, phosphates and potash, the horses originally imported there have shrunk to the size of ponies.

Mineral deficiencies affect reproduction in animals, and may affect reproduction in human beings. The latter has not been proved. L. A. Maynard and J. K. Loosli, of Cornell University, have pointed out that sodium deficiency in animals disturbs reproductive factors; that copper deficiencies disturb the oestrous rhythm and may prevent conception, and that manganese deficiency may result in reproductive failure in both the male and female. Phosphorus, manganese, rubidium, copper and arsenic may play some role in human reproduction, but in no case is this role fully understood. The unborn child has manganese in his blood stream, and ten times as much copper in his liver as the adult. Rubidium is easily absorbed by protoplasm. The bromine content of the blood changes during menstruation, and the amount of arsenic is increased. During the fifth and sixth months of pregnancy there is three to four times as much arsenic present in the body as at other times. Bromine is present in high concentration in the pituitary gland. This is interesting, since the healthy functioning of the pituitary gland is necessary if a mother is to nurse her child. Congenital malformations are lowest in the Pacific Coast states, where soil minerals are high.

And, as everyone knows, lack of calcium, phosphorus, iron or iodine may result in rickets, anemia or goiter.

When one considers in its length and in its breadth the importance of this question of the education of the nation's young, the broken lives, the defeated hopes, the national failures, which result from the frivolous inertia with which it is treated, it is difficult to restrain oneself from a savage rage.

—A. N. WHITEHEAD: The Aims of Education
Copyright 1925 (The Macmillan Co.).

THE U. S. Nutrition Laboratory, a cooperative study being carried on jointly by the Government, Cornell University and the land-grant colleges, believes that we are today getting fewer minerals in our food than our Revolutionary ancestors did. The trouble with our ancestors was that they too often tried to mix pioneering and farming. The Chinese, Roman or Dutch farmer stayed on his farm generation after generation, knew it intimately, nourished and husbanded his soil, and was repaid by the fact that his land grew more fertile instead of less. The American farmer, of the type who moved west with Daniel Boone, too often chopped down some trees, ripped open a hillside with his plow, let the rains wash the good soil minerals into the nearest brook, and then, when the land stopped producing, wandered on angrily or hopefully to the next county or state. The heritage he left behind him in the East was mineral-depleted soil. It is also true, though, that not all the soils of the United States were equally good to begin with. The grassy plains of the Midwest were always more fertile than other sections, and Boone's hunch that it would be a good idea to keep on moving west was a sound one.

Fortunately, we have discovered that mineral-poor soils can be made rich and fertile again—and in a few years. The idea is this. Just as the major deficiencies of the American diet are calcium, the two B-complex vitamins, thiamin and riboflavin, and vitamin C, or ascorbic acid, so the major deficiencies of the American soil are calcium and phosphates. Increasing quantities of these minerals—the phosphate in the form of the new high-analysis products of TVA's Muscle Shoals plant—are being restored to the soil in what is probably the largest series of farm-scale experiments in the history of agriculture, conducted by the TVA in collaboration with the state agricultural services. Over 45,000 farmer-scientists are engaged in these "test-demonstrations," as they are called. They result not only in greatly increased per-acre crop yields for the farmer, but in qualitatively better food—richer in minerals, vitamins and proteins—for the people of the cities.

DR. GEORGE D. SCARSETH, formerly of Purdue University and now research director of the American Farm Research Association, believes that if the methods of these test-demonstrations can be generally applied, it will be possible for American farmers to do in ten years a job of soil building and soil conservation that would otherwise take fifty or a hundred years.

However, you do not have to wait for the gradual restoration of American soils in order to get the minerals you need to be healthy. Once you know that many of the foods you eat are likely to be deficient in minerals, you can correct this by selecting safe and wholesome mineral-rich foods which will increase your resistance to the many disorders related to poor nutrition.

Minerals and vitamins work in teams. You can give your child cod-liver oil or vitamin D all winter, but if he is not getting enough calcium and phosphorus, it will be of no use to him. The relations of minerals to vitamins are something which we do not as yet fully understand.

Twenty-five minerals are present in the human body. How many of them are essential to health is in dispute. Thirteen are necessary to the animal body: calcium, phosphorus, iron, copper, sodium, potassium, iodine, chlorine, fluorine, magnesium, manganese, sulphur and cobalt. Others such as zinc, bromine and arsenic are probably also required, but their roles in animal and human physiology are, as yet, little understood.

According to the United States Department of Agriculture, calcium is one of the four major deficiencies in the American diet. The soils east of the 100th meridian—which runs from Bismarck, North Dakota, through Laredo, Texas—are usually deficient in calcium.

To repair this deficiency, most Americans drink the American superfood, milk. All forms of milk except butter are excellent sources of calcium. The second-best source is leafy green vegetables.

Ninety-nine per cent of the calcium in the body is used for bones and teeth. Children need twice as much calcium as adults during their growing years, consequently they are usually given twice as much milk. Rickets in children can be caused by too little calcium, phosphorus or vitamin D, and also by too high a proportion of calcium in relation to phosphorus, or of phosphorus in relation to calcium. If old people eat foods too high in calcium and phosphorus, this may lead to pathological conditions like calcification. This does not occur if the food intake is moderate.

Seventy-five per cent of the phosphorus in the body is used for bones and teeth. Phosphorus appears to be fully as important for teeth as calcium. Dr. E. V. McCollum, Dr. Henry Klein and Dr. G. H. Kruse say "The quality of the saliva is the important thing in determining whether teeth will decay, and this is determined by the chemical composition of the blood. The saliva acts normally as a buffer so that the acid cannot accumulate and break down the enamel of the teeth. It cannot act as a buffer unless it contains a certain amount of phosphorus."

The other 25 per cent of the phosphorus is distributed through every cell in the body and is especially concentrated in the seeds of plants and the chromosomes of men and animals. No animal organism can function without phosphorus. When there is a phosphorus deficiency, the body uses up the phosphorus it has stored in the bones. If the phosphorus is all used up, the animal or human being dies.

The importance of phosphorus to animal reproduction is generally recognized. Said Dr. R. D. Sinclair, of Canada: "Any . . . deficiency of phosphorus in the pregnant female is apt to result in breeding troubles. Experiments carried out in different parts of the world show that phosphorus deficiencies result in sterility and abortion."

Most soils which were forested before the white man came are deficient in phosphorus. This is true of most Eastern soils, and is probably true for many of the soils in the Rockies and Cascades. If the soils where your foods are grown have only a minimum of phosphates, your foods will have only a minimum too.

Since phosphorus is quantitatively the second most important mineral in the body, it is probably important to be well aware of your phosphorus-high foods.

The U. S. Department of Agriculture lists the following foods as being excellent in phosphorus content: Protein sources: milk, buttermilk, Swiss cheese, meat, liver, poultry, fish, oysters, shrimps, lobsters. Vegetable sources: beans (common, Lima, kidney) and cowpeas. Grains: barley, rice polish, rice bran. Fresh corn and buckwheat contain much phosphorus.

It has long been known that iron deficiency in the soil and in food may result in anemia. It is now recognized that iron and copper work together as a team to make hemoglobin. Cobalt increases the red corpuscles of the blood.

Women need much more iron than do men, and get less. This is probably due to the fact that they eat four fifths as much food as men, and less meat. Since iron cannot be utilized by the body unless copper is also present, it is important to know the foods that contain both of these minerals. Top-ranking foods in this category are cherries, currants, liver and shrimps. Other excellent sources are whole grains and leafy vegetables. The Southern addiction to pot liquor made from mustard greens, turnip greens, beet greens and kale, and the Northern addiction to dandelion and water-cress salads and dandelion wine, represent excellent American food traditions, because they step up the health of the blood. If a child or adult drinks so much milk that he has little appetite for other foods, he may acquire a slight iron deficiency, since milk contains very little iron. This should be compensated for by the addition of iron- and copper-rich foods to the diet.

Since minerals work in teams, it is, in general, best to select foods that are high in a combination of minerals, rather than foods that are exceptionally high in a single mineral. Thirteen foods, obtainable almost anywhere in the United States, which rank very high in their combined mineral content are the following: navy beans, Lima beans, kidney beans, lentils, dried peas, currants, raisins, figs, dates, broccoli, Chinese cabbage of the pakchoi type, which resembles chard, water cress and French endive.

In addition to feeding your family mineral-rich foods, you can also contribute remarkably to their health by serving them as many different kinds of foods as possible. Although mineral concentration is a little higher than average in such foods as shellfish and nuts, small quantities of minerals are distributed in all types of plant and animal foods.

It is a remarkable fact that while Americans can buy two hundred different kinds of food in the stores of any fair-sized city, an individual family frequently eats not more than thirty to fifty of these foods in the course of a year.

Eating a wide variety of foods is like having a diversified investment in stocks and bonds; it's safer. Further, you are more likely to be eating the rare mineral, whose function is not yet known, or the as-yet-unidentified vitamin which will be the big news story of tomorrow. THE END

'LANTERS PEANUTS give more protein than et, fish or eggs. The ed peanuts all America
es! Oven-fresh.
s PLANTERS product is also made in nto, and sold everywhere in Canada.

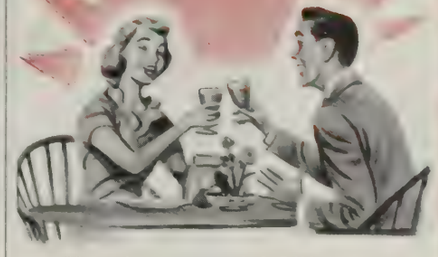
LANTERS
s the word for
PEANUTS

Pamper Papa!

Particularly when he's been working hard, he deserves pampering. Give him icy-cold Libby's the minute he opens one eye! Wonderful wake-up drink!



Bright idea for bright 'n' early!

Vitamins without coaxing!

How grown-up they feel with a breakfast coffee cup—full of hot Libby's. Just heat the juice—don't boil it—to protect Libby's precious Vitamins A, B_1, B_2 and C.

A toast before toast!

If you've never tried Libby's, you just don't know how good tomato juice can be! Libby's really rich-ripe tomato flavor hits the spot with meals and between times.

Hear radio's greatest morning show "MY TRUE STORY"—Mon. thru Fri. ABC Stations

Look to LIBBY'S for perfectio

Try Libby's Catchup and Chili Sauce! Made from the same fine quality tomatoes as Libby's Tomato Juice!

Betty Crocker CHOCOLATE CHIP Chiffon

The world's most delicious . . . most sophisticated cake!

Here is Softasilk's new Chocolate Chip version of "Chiffon"! Light as angel food . . . rich as butter cake . . . plus a chiffon-like quality all its own! No other type cake equals Chiffon for flavor, height, delicacy, texture. Chiffon stays fresh much longer, too, and is quicker to make than ordinary cakes.

Softasilk is the only cake flour Betty Crocker recommends for Chiffon. It's milled for cakes and cakes alone . . . gets greater rising action from baking powder and eggs—gives you a higher, lighter cake. Bake this sophisticated Chocolate Chip Chiffon today. Elegant in taste, texture and eye appeal!

General Mills

Betty Crocker Chocolate Chip Chiffon Cake

MAKE ONLY WITH SOFTASILK, says Betty Crocker. Don't risk failure with another flour, since proportions might not be right. Sift an ample amount of SOFTASILK Cake Flour onto a square of paper. Grate unsweetened or sweet chocolate on medium or coarse grater. Preheat oven (see pan sizes and temperatures below).

STEP 1 Measure (level measurements) and sift together into mixing bowl: 2¼ cups sifted SOFTASILK Cake Flour (spoon lightly into cup, don't pack); 1¾ cups sugar; 3 tsp. baking powder; 1 tsp. salt

Make a well and add in order: ½ cup cooking (salad) oil such as Wesson or Mazola; 5 unbeaten egg yolks (medium-sized); ¾ cup cold water; 2 tsp. vanilla

Beat with spoon until smooth.

STEP 2 Measure into large mixing bowl: 1 cup egg whites (7 or 8); ½ tsp. cream of tartar

Whip until whites form very stiff peaks. They should be much stiffer than for angel food or meringue. DO NOT UNDERBEAT.

STEP 3 Pour egg yolk mixture gradually over whipped egg whites—gently folding with rubber scraper just until blended! DO NOT STIR!

Sprinkle over top of batter, gently folding in with a few strokes: 3 sq. unsweetened or sweet chocolate (3 oz.), medium or coarsely grated.

Pour into ungreased pan immediately.

Bake in . . . . . 10-in. tube, 4-in. deep, 325° 55 min., then increase to 350° 10 to 15 min.; 9x13x2-in. oblong pan, 350° 45 to 50 min

. . . or until top springs back when lightly touched.

Immediately turn pan upside down, placing tube part over neck of funnel or bottle, or resting edges of oblong pan on 2 other pans. Let hang, free of table, until cold. Loosen from sides and tube with spatula. Turn pan over and hit edge sharply on table to loosen. 16 to 20 servings.

GLOSSY CHOCOLATE ICING. Melt together over hot water 3 sq. unsweetened chocolate (3 oz.), 3 tbsp. shortening. Cool slightly. Beat together until consistency to spread 2 cups sifted confectioners' sugar, 5 tbsp. milk, the melted shortening and chocolate, ¼ tsp. salt, 1 tsp. vanilla. For Allegretti trimming, beat until foamy 1 egg white. Gradually beat in about 1 cup sifted confectioners' sugar, then ½ tsp. vanilla. Using teaspoon, drip over top and let run down over sides in uneven lines.

Send 15¢ for the "Betty Crocker Chiffon Cake Recipe Book". Address Softasilk, Box 1450, Minneapolis, Minn

"Softasilk" and Betty Crocker are reg. trade marks of General Mills Copr. 1949.

humans." Among the mineral deficiencies so far discovered in sections of the Northeast are iron, cobalt and manganese, which have a favorable effect on the blood, magnesium and fluorine, which are so abundant in Hereford, Texas, and boron.

If you think that the widespread mineral deficiencies which exist in the foods you eat are any less important than vitamin deficiences, remember: If you completely lack any mineral necessary to the human body, you die. If your child does not have enough calcium, phosphorus, iron, copper, magnesium, sodium or manganese, this may retard his growth. On Chincoteague Island and on the Shetland Islands, where the soil and pasturage are deficient in lime, phosphates and potash, the horses originally imported there have shrunk to the size of ponies.

Mineral deficiencies affect reproduction in animals, and may affect reproduction in human beings. The latter has not been proved. L. A. Maynard and J. K. Loosli, of Cornell University, have pointed out that sodium deficiency in animals disturbs reproductive factors; that copper deficiencies disturb the oestrous rhythm and may prevent conception, and that manganese deficiency may result in reproductive failure in both the male and female. Phosphorus, manganese, rubidium, copper and arsenic may play some role in human reproduction, but in no case is this role fully understood. The unborn child has manganese in his blood stream, and ten times as much copper in his liver as the adult. Rubidium is easily absorbed by protoplasm. The bromine content of the blood changes during menstruation, and the amount of arsenic is increased. During the fifth and sixth months of pregnancy there is three to four times as much arsenic present in the body as at other times. Bromine is present in high concentration in the pituitary gland. This is interesting, since the healthy functioning of the pituitary gland is necessary if a mother is to nurse her child. Congenital malformations are lowest in the Pacific Coast states, where soil minerals are high.

And, as everyone knows, lack of calcium, phosphorus, iron or iodine may result in rickets, anemia or goiter.

When one considers in its length and in its breadth the importance of this question of the education of the nation's young, the broken lives, the defeated hopes, the national failures, which result from the frivolous inertia with which it is treated, it is difficult to restrain oneself from a savage rage.

—A. N. WHITEHEAD: The Aims of Education
Copyright 1925 (The Macmillan Co.).

THE U. S. Nutrition Laboratory, a cooperative study being carried on jointly by the Government, Cornell University and the land-grant colleges, believes that we are today getting fewer minerals in our food than our Revolutionary ancestors did. The trouble with our ancestors was that they too often tried to mix pioneering and farming. The Chinese, Roman or Dutch farmer stayed on his farm generation after generation, knew it intimately, nourished and husbanded his soil, and was repaid by the fact that his land grew more fertile instead of less. The American farmer, of the type who moved west with Daniel Boone, too often chopped down some trees, ripped open a hillside with his plow, let the rains wash the good soil minerals into the nearest brook, and then, when the land stopped producing, wandered on angrily or hopefully to the next county or state. The heritage he left behind him in the East was mineral-depleted soil. It is also true, though, that not all the soils of the United States were equally good to begin with. The grassy plains of the Midwest were always more fertile than other sections, and Boone's hunch that it would be a good idea to keep on moving west was a sound one.

Fortunately, we have discovered that mineral-poor soils can be made rich and fertile again—and in a few years. The idea is this. Just as the major deficiencies of the American diet are calcium, the two B-complex vitamins, thiamin and riboflavin, and vitamin C, or ascorbic acid, so the major deficiencies of the American soil are calcium and phosphates. Increasing quantities of these minerals—the phosphate in the form of the new high-analysis products of TVA's Muscle Shoals plant—are being restored to the soil in what is probably the largest series of farm-scale experiments in the history of agriculture, conducted by the TVA in collaboration with the state agricultural services. Over 45,000 farmer-scientists are engaged in these "test-demonstrations," as they are called. They result not only in greatly increased per-acre crop yields for the farmer, but in qualitatively better food—richer in minerals, vitamins and proteins—for the people of the cities.

DR. GEORGE D. SCARSETH, formerly of Purdue University and now research director of the American Farm Research Association, believes that if the methods of these test-demonstrations can be generally applied, it will be possible for American farmers to do in ten years a job of soil building and soil conservation that would otherwise take fifty or a hundred years.

However, you do not have to wait for the gradual restoration of American soils in order to get the minerals you need to be healthy. Once you know that many of the foods you eat are likely to be deficient in minerals, you can correct this by selecting safe and wholesome mineral-rich foods which will increase your resistance to the many disorders related to poor nutrition.

Minerals and vitamins work in teams. You can give your child cod-liver oil or vitamin D all winter, but if he is not getting enough calcium and phosphorus, it will be of no use to him. The relations of minerals to vitamins are something which we do not as yet fully understand.

Twenty-five minerals are present in the human body. How many of them are essential to health is in dispute. Thirteen are necessary to the animal body: calcium, phosphorus, iron, copper, sodium, potassium, iodine, chlorine, fluorine, magnesium, manganese, sulphur and cobalt. Others such as zinc, bromine and arsenic are probably also required, but their roles in animal and human physiology are, as yet, little understood.

According to the United States Department of Agriculture, calcium is one of the four major deficiencies in the American diet. The soils east of the 100th meridian—which runs from Bismarck, North Dakota, through Laredo, Texas—are usually deficient in calcium.

To repair this deficiency, most Americans drink the American superfood, milk. All forms of milk except butter are excellent sources of calcium. The second-best source is leafy green vegetables.

Ninety-nine per cent of the calcium in the body is used for bones and teeth. Children need twice as much calcium as adults during their growing years, consequently they are usually given twice as much milk. Rickets in children can be caused by too little calcium, phosphorus or vitamin D, and also by too high a proportion of calcium in relation to phosphorus, or of phosphorus in relation to calcium. If old people eat foods too high in calcium and phosphorus, this may lead to pathological conditions like calcification. This does not occur if the food intake is moderate.

Seventy-five per cent of the phosphorus in the body is used for bones and teeth. Phosphorus appears to be fully as important for teeth as calcium. Dr. E. V. McCollum, Dr. Henry Klein and Dr. G. H. Kruse say: "The quality of the saliva is the important thing in determining whether teeth will decay, and this is determined by the chemical composition of the blood. The saliva acts normally as a buffer so that the acid cannot accumulate and break down the enamel of the teeth. It cannot act as a buffer unless it contains a certain amount of phosphorus."

The other 25 per cent of the phosphorus is distributed through every cell in the body, and is especially concentrated in the seeds of plants and the chromosomes of men and

'LANTERS PEANUTS give more protein than t, fish or eggs. The ed peanuts all America
es! Oven-fresh.
s PLANTERS product is also made in nto, and sold everywhere in Canada.

LANTERS
s the word for
PEANUTS

animals. No animal organism can function without phosphorus. When there is a phosphorus deficiency, the body uses up the phosphorus it has stored in the bones. If the phosphorus is all used up, the animal or human being dies.

The importance of phosphorus to animal reproduction is generally recognized. Said Dr. R. D. Sinclair, of Canada: "Any . . . deficiency of phosphorus in the pregnant female is apt to result in breeding troubles. Experiments carried out in different parts of the world show that phosphorus deficiencies result in sterility and abortion."

Most soils which were forested before the white man came are deficient in phosphorus. This is true of most Eastern soils, and is probably true for many of the soils in the Rockies and Cascades. If the soils where your foods are grown have only a minimum of phosphates, your foods will have only a minimum too.

Since phosphorus is quantitatively the second most important mineral in the body, it is probably important to be well aware of your phosphorus-high foods.

The U. S. Department of Agriculture lists the following foods as being excellent in phosphorus content: Protein sources: milk, buttermilk, Swiss cheese, meat, liver, poultry, fish, oysters, shrimps, lobsters. Vegetable sources: beans (common, Lima, kidney) and cowpeas. Grains: barley, rice polish, rice bran. Fresh corn and buckwheat contain much phosphorus.

It has long been known that iron deficiency in the soil and in food may result in anemia. It is now recognized that iron and copper work together as a team to make hemoglobin. Cobalt increases the red corpuscles of the blood.

Women need much more iron than do men, and get less. This is probably due to the fact that they eat four fifths as much food as men, and less meat. Since iron cannot be utilized by the body unless copper is also present, it is important to know the foods that contain both of these minerals. Top-ranking foods in this category are cherries, currants, liver and shrimps. Other excellent sources are whole grains and leafy vegetables. The Southern addiction to pot liquor made from mustard greens, turnip greens, beet greens and kale, and the Northern addiction to dandelion and water-cress salads and dandelion wine, represent excellent American food traditions, because they step up the health of the blood. If a child or adult drinks so much milk that he has little appetite for other foods, he may acquire a slight iron deficiency, since milk contains very little iron. This should be compensated for by the addition of iron- and copper-rich foods to the diet.

Since minerals work in teams, it is, in general, best to select foods that are high in a combination of minerals, rather than foods that are exceptionally high in a single mineral. Thirteen foods, obtainable almost anywhere in the United States, which rank very high in their combined mineral content are the following: navy beans, Lima beans, kidney beans, lentils, dried peas, currants, raisins, figs, dates, broccoli, Chinese cabbage of the pakchoi type, which resembles chard, water cress and French endive.

In addition to feeding your family mineral-rich foods, you can also contribute remarkably to their health by serving them as many different kinds of foods as possible. Although mineral concentration is a little higher than average in such foods as shellfish and nuts, small quantities of minerals are distributed in all types of plant and animal foods.

It is a remarkable fact that while Americans can buy two hundred different kinds of food in the stores of any fair-sized city, an individual family frequently eats not more than thirty to fifty of these foods in the course of a year.

Eating a wide variety of foods is like having a diversified investment in stocks and bonds; it's safer. Further, you are more likely to be eating the rare mineral, whose function is not yet known, or the as-yet-unidentified vitamin which will be the big news story of tomorrow. THE END

Pamper Papa!

Particularly when he's been working hard, he deserves pampering. Give him icy-cold Libby's the minute he opens one eye! Wonderful wake-up drink!

Bright idea for bright 'n' early!

Vitamins without coaxing!

How grown-up they feel with a breakfast coffee cup—full of hot Libby's. Just heat the juice—don't boil it—to protect Libby's precious Vitamins A, B_1, B_2 and C.

A toast before toast!

If you've never tried Libby's, you just don't know how good tomato juice can be! Libby's really rich-ripe tomato flavor hits the spot with meals and between times.

Hear radio's greatest morning show "MY TRUE STORY"—Mon. thru Fri. ABC Stations

Look to LIBBY'S for perfectio

Try Libby's Catchup and Chili Sauce! Made from the same fine quality tomatoes as Libby's Tomato Juice!

New looks of many varieties give this garden its feminine flavor!

DESIGNED BY JAMES C. ROSE PHOTOGRAPH BY RICHARD PRATT

Lady's Garden

By RICHARD PRATT

BOUDOIR charm, living-room leisure and study seclusion make this garden a pleasant-weather outdoor room from June to June. New ideas have been designed into it which can be picked up and used piecemeal or placed all together as they appear in the picture. With lightness and airiness it achieves just the right protection from wind, glare and gazing. A wall of weatherproof plastic cloth, fastened to a frame, filters the strong afternoon sun that casts shadow forms from outside foliage on the translucent screen, while a sliding canvas curtain cuts the view from another side at will. A plain panel of mirror glass reflects the garden for its occupant while she sits at her potting table putting her plants in order—plants which in this case are tuberous begonias and variegated geraniums, easily handled indoors and out. An evergreen rug of ivy requires practically no attention, nor does an azalea growing from an empty space in the floor of square cement slabs. The inexpensive hammock is hand-woven by a woman in South Carolina, and hangs at one end from a weeping mountain ash, handsome in form and color at any season of the year. The pool is a shallow watertight tray sunk in a panel of the paving. The simple trellis structure, of used lumber, can be put together to fit almost any situation, and supports summer panels of yellow sailcloth for shade. All in all, it is a garden that in effect adds another room to the house.

IF YOU'RE LIKE NANCY...

You like shopping trips and sweet music and formal affairs. So, too, your sterling pattern will reflect your love of beauty . . . tastefully modern, yet based on tradition.

You'll find such a pattern . . . one to compliment your own personality . . . among the many beautiful Reed & Barton designs in finest solid silver.

Each is distinctive, each unique, each an example of Reed & Barton's time-honored craftsmanship.

REED & BARTON

STERLING

Six-piece place setting approximately $22.50 to $28.75, including tax, at leading jewelry stores and silverware departments.

Helpful Hostess Hints: For fascinating, valuable booklet, "How To Be A Successful Hostess," send 10c to Box 990, Dept. L, Taunton, Mass.

It was fate! There I was lolling on the Waikiki beach dreaming about the kind of man who would make my vacation perfect...when he stumbled over me and fell!

You dispense with forks and inhibitions at an Hawaiian feast! My hero plucked a wild orchid and presented it with a hand kiss! Funny, I couldn't eat a thing.

The ferns in Fern Forest grow 50 feet high! He held my hand (so I wouldn't get lost) and my heart zoomed 50 feet higher! The guide . . . just smiled Akala Falls! He kissed my hand again . . . this time for keeps! And I thanked Jergens Lotion for keeping my hands smooth and ready to be kissed!

No one warned me IT happens in HAWAII!*

They warned me that delicious, soft, smooth, white hands are kissable in any language! But they didn't say anything about Hawaii!

Oh! I'm not gullible . . . and Jergens Lotion doesn't promise a 6 foot George will kiss your hand. All they do promise is that rich, creamy Jergens Lotion will keep a girl's hand softer and smoother and ready to be kissed!

Mine was! And George kissed it . . . in fun. But when he kissed it again . . . it was for keeps!

* It? When he kisses your hand . . . in fun. Holds it a bit too long. Kisses your hand again . . . for keeps.

The skin on your hands is different . . . it needs the protection only a liquid can give.

Being a liquid, Jergens Lotion quickly furnishes the softening moisture thirsty skin needs.

Never oily or sticky. Today's richer-than-ever Jergens is still only 10¢ to $1.00 plus tax.

Now yours—Jergens Beauty Kit! Contains generous samples of Jergens Lotion, Powder, Face Cream and Dryad Deodorant! Send 10¢ to The Andrew Jergens Co., Box 6, Dept. 62A, Cincinnati 14, Ohio. Sorry, offer good in U.S.A. only, expires Dec. 31 1949.

More Women Use Jergens Lotion than Any Other Hand Care in the World

THE WILD HORSE

(Continued from Page 69)

s was a shambling, bumbling bore, and as in his cups with greater and greater uency. If only —— Her mind rolled rily along the monotonous groove—but never could count on Joe any more.

He had read somewhere that there was an ogy between drinking and horsemanship. were all right as long as you had control e horse, but if the horse took control you sunk. There was a picture on the stair- of her house, an old steel engraving h had belonged to her father—Mazeppa, ed to the wild horse's back, borne at a p through a nightmare forest, hurtling rd a still wilder unknown. She never ed at it any more without thinking of e started as Inky Potts brought her to the present, wagging a roguish fin- nder her nose. "Amy, stop it!" he said. an see you getting all worried. Old Joe's enjoying himself. Let him alone."

That's exactly what I'm doing, Inky," said patiently.

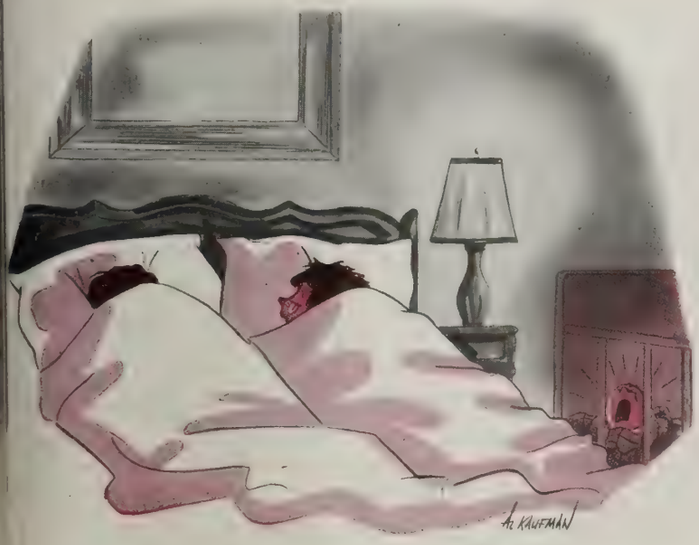
e finger wagged again and Amy wanted p it away. "But you're getting all set to er and take him in hand," he said archly. now you."

Nothing of the sort." She tried to laugh came up with a choking sound. "I'm g here minding my own business. Why you mind yours, Inky?"

Trouble with you, Amy ——" Inky be- -but Amy wasn't having any.

Trouble with me, Inky, I'm married to a k, that's all." It gave her a perverse sat- ion to see Inky's face fall apart at the d word, his little fish mouth purse into of shock. "You were going to say, ble with you, Amy, you ought to get a tight yourself.' Nobody ever says, ble with Joe, he's a drunk.' That's okay. Joe's doing fine. But the trouble with '—and you all go on from there. Now, ust call a halt on the trouble-with-Amy tment. I'm getting good and sick of it."

tood up. She must be out of her mind, g herself fly out like this. "Excuse me, I guess I'm just tired." She hesitated, nowing which way to turn, but bent on e. It was an enormous room and some- there must be a refuge.



m across the room Olive Hasty per- Amy's indecision and beckoned. Bless ! She was one in a million, understand- erything and saying nothing. Amy felt e of gratitude as Olive moved over to room on the love seat where she n't be able to see Joe. But even with ck turned Amy knew her ears would be for the inevitable crash of silver and Someone brought her a plate of water d cake . . . sawdust. Nothing had any these days. But it gave her something with her hands. Under the soothing music of Olive's voice, talking on of little things, Amy began to relax. They were right. She was nervous. She ought not to let it get her down. Some drunkards' wives seemed not to take it too hard.

She often wondered whether, if Joe were just plain sodden, like Johnny Maple, it might be any easier. There was no Jekyll-Hyde contrast with Johnny. Enid Maple knew right where she stood. Johnny was dull and stuffy, sober or drunk. The uncertainty undid Amy. Lately the prospect of any major social event upset her; the anticipation of disaster made her jittery days ahead. By the time they got to a party she had lived through the evening a hundred times. Might he choose to stay sober? How drunk would he get? If there were a business angle, would he muff it? And the drive home, the degrading argument for possession of the wheel after Joe had skittered away from the door! Why was she always such a fool, trying to save his face when their host knew it was sheer madness for Joe to drive?

There was the added strain of the lugubrious little game they played with the liquor supply. If Amy wasn't dressed and downstairs first, Joe would slip in a strong one before they left home. He was convinced that any drink Amy didn't see him take didn't count, and that his drunkenness was a figment of her imagination. It had driven him into what Amy called bathroom drinking. The contents of the decanters magically diminished during a quiet evening at home. Joe would make trip after trip through the dining room to the side porch—to let the cat in, to let the cat out, to check the outside thermometer, to regulate the thermostat. After they were in bed, he often went down to make sure the side door was locked, and each time the levels of the bottles descended.

Amy hated herself for watching, for checking, but she was powerless to desist. Why, she asked herself, why should she mind so desperately? The stigma was gone; drinking too much had social acceptance. But Joe? Joe was special. He was better, smarter than the rest of them. He was her Joe. And the children—the little girls deserved to know the real man, not Joe's pale, wavering shadow. Would a child be ashamed of a drunken father today? Would she take it as a matter of course? Her heart cried, No! Children were old-fashioned. Children didn't change much, let the mores come and go.

When Joe's plate crashed, Amy scarcely cared. She had anticipated it so long that she was drained of all emotion. She merely looked down and nibbled at her cake. Then the same horrid compulsion that made her creep in to look at the decanter drew her head inexorably over her shoulder. "Oh, Joe!" The exclamation, light as a feather, was torn from her heart. Joe the proud, Joe

"John, your son is crying!"

Compare Toni with any other permanent — any home wave, any beauty shop wave — you'll find there's no finer wave at any price!

The secret of lovelier hair is yours—with a Toni Home Permanent. For your Toni wave is so soft, so easy to manage, so natural-looking that people will probably ask if you have natural curly hair! But before trying Toni, you'll want to know:

Will TONI work on my hair?

Of course, Toni waves any kind of hair that will take a permanent, including gray, dyed, bleached or baby-fine hair.

Is it easy to do?

Amazingly easy! If you can roll your hair up on curlers, you can give yourself a Toni. It's so surprisingly simple that each month more than two million women use Toni Home Permanent.

Why do most women prefer to use TONI?

Because the Toni Waving Lotion is not a harsh, hurry-up salon-type solution. Instead, it's a mild creme lotion—made especially for home use. So gentle it just coaxes your hair into beautifully soft waves and curls. That's why your Toni wave looks more natural, even on the very first day.

How long will my TONI last?

Your lovely Toni wave is guaranteed to last just as long as a $15 beauty shop permanent . . . or your money back.

Will my TONI be loose or tight?

With Toni you can have just the amount of curl you want . . . from a loose, casual wave to a halo of soft ringlets. Just follow the exclusive directions in your Toni kit. You'll find them easy as A-B-C!

How much will I save with TONI?

The Toni Kit with plastic curlers costs only $2. You can use the plastic curlers again and again. So for your second Toni wave all you need is the Toni Refill Kit. It costs just $1 . . . yet there is no finer wave at any price.

Which twin has the TONI?

Lovely Frances and Bernadette Hanson live in New York City. Frances, on the right, has the Toni. She says: "I want a permanent that's soft and natural-looking right from the start. And that's just the way my Toni is! It's so easy to manage Bernadette can't wait to have one, too!"

NOW over ~~1~~ 2 million women a month use Toni

Drift into dreams in these beauties by

MUNSINGWEAR*

Slumber, my sweet! Munsingwear tucks you in with flattering shoulder detail... cuddles you to sleep in finest quality, cloud-soft Celanese* run-proof rayon tricot.

You'll even wake up dreaming about the comfortable fit this Munsingwear "Treasure Chest" trio gives you! Gown, pajamas and bedjacket, all in "Bouquet Colors"... all easy to care for. Reasonably priced... at fine stores everywhere.

*REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

Also ask for Munsingwear Underwear • Hosiery • Foundation Garments

the handsome, stumbling and pawing among the debris of his dessert, bits of icing stuck to his knees.

"Take it easy, Amy," Olive's voice came to her. "Don't think about it being Joe. It's just a man whose plate slipped."

Then Mabel Hunter was beside her. "Skip it, Amy," she said, smiling brightly. "It's just the second-best china. Joe's having a fine time and he's not bothering a soul." So might you speak of an idiot child. "Why, Amy, no one even noticed."

"In that case, why make a production of it?" Amy asked bitterly.

"Because you've got on that face, darling. You always wear it when Joe's having a little harmless fun. Don't take things so seriously. There's loads more food."

Amy looked over her shoulder. Biff was bustling about like a male nurse, giving Joe more dessert, taking his glass for a refill. She knew Biff's refills! She turned her head away and in the little burst of chatter just going into its swing, she heard the question standing isolated, as though there were parentheses around it, but clearly stated:

"Whatever became of Cynthia Vernon?"

It was like a slap in the face, an association of ideas so pat that it cut her like a knife.

Oh, no! she thought, a rising tide of shame for Joe flooding her face. Oh, surely not like Mr. Vernon!

It was as vivid as yesterday: the wide street, the lofty elms, and the cluster of little girls playing tag on the broad front lawn; then the electric coupé stopping at the curb, and Mr. Vernon's clerk hopping out, still in his alpaca coat. She could remember Cynnie's high treble scream, "Papa's here!" and the rush of her fat legs down the walk, and Cynnie standing tiptoe on the mounting block to peer into the electric. And then Cynnie coming slowly back, saying, "Let's go around to the back and play. My papa's been taken sick and Mr. Smith had to bring him home."

